LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

Tuesday, March 6, 1979, being the first day of the third session of the 31st Parliament of the province of Ontario for the dispatch of business pursuant to a proclamation of the Honourable P. M. McGibbon, Lieutenant Governor of the province.

TUESDAY, MARCH 6, 1979

The House met at 3 p.m.

The Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having entered the House and being seated upon the throne, was pleased to open the session with the following gracious speech.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Hon. Mrs. McGibbon (Lieutenant Governor): Pray be seated.

Mr. Speaker and members of the legislative assembly, we assemble for this, the third session of the 31st Parliament of Ontario, at a time of unprecedented challenge and promise. The circumstances that prevail in our province, in Canada and indeed on the international scene give rise to differing attitudes as to Ontario's prospects and expectations, for it is clear that not all the factors that shape our destiny lie within our control. Nevertheless, my government approaches the future, both immediate and long-term, with faith and confidence, trusting in our abundance of human and natural resources and in the resourcefulness and abilities of our people.

The challenge which our nation holds for all Canadians will not be fully met until firm choices are made about the kind of nation we are to have. Similarly, the economic well-being of our nation will be of paramount importance in determining the opportunity we all share as Canadians.

Le défi qui se pose à tous les Canadiens ne sera pas pleinement relevé tant que l'avenir de notre pays n'aura pas fait l'objet de choix définitifs. De même, c'est de la prospérité économique de notre pays que dépendent essentiellement les chances qui s'offrent à nous en tant que Canadiens.

Honourable members will realize, however, that security and prosperity for Ontario citizens are not pre-ordained, nor is the prescription for an assured future to be found in any known or readily available formula. Rather, we have learned over the years that the ingredients for progress are numerous and complex, encompassing many intangible factors, including the sense of confidence we possess in ourselves. My government calls on this assembly to provide significant leadership in advancing and shaping that spirit of confidence that is needed in Ontario and among its people.

At the same time, there is every recognition that if the full potential of our talents and resources is to be realized, effective management must be the hallmark of all areas of government operation as well as of the private sector of our economy. The measures to be introduced by my government at this session and other programs relating to the ongoing process of government will be consistent with the requirements of good management.

Some may wish to argue as to whether the primary emphasis of this session should be directed to improving the economic climate of Ontario or to improving the social services available to our people. In truth, extensive attention must be given to both, for it is clear that only if the economic circumstances in our province remain strong will we be able to maintain and develop the programs that contribute to a fair and balanced society.

Ontario's citizens are among the most prosperous in the industrial nations. However, this prosperity, of which we can be justly proud, faces a strong wave of international competition, not only in regard to the sale of goods and services, but also in the location of new and expanded production facilities.

It is the government's view that industry in Ontario will need to be carefully but aggressively supported in future years, as Canada adjusts to the new trading rules that will be established on the conclusion of the international trade talks in Geneva. Ontario will, therefore, be actively engaged in negotiations with the federal government on the outcome of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and would expect that there will be a fair apportionment of federal financial and technical assistance to our province.

While there must be prudent limits to the use of public funds to attract industrial jobs, the social costs of not maintaining our industrial strength cannot be ignored. These social costs and the risk of losing long-term jobs have motivated the government of Ontario to take firm action to ensure the cost competitiveness of the province in attracting new jobs for our labour force.

Thus, as a matter of first priority, my government will take specific measures that will ensure that the Ontario economy continues to expand in a positive and productive fashion. Such measures will not only bring the obvious benefits of increased employment opportunities and steady incomes, but will also add to the assured tax base of Ontario, thus contributing increased revenues from which important programs can be financed.

Primary among these efforts will be the establishment of an employment development fund to offer appropriate assistance to industry in our province and spur economic activity and employment. The allocation of funds, monitoring of shifting economic priorities, and co-ordination of job-creation programs will be the responsibility of a special board of ministers chaired by the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller). A single focus for submission, analysis and development of major proposals will be provided by the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Crossman), as vice-chairman of the board.

But if the Ontario economy is going to grow and bring with it expanded opportunities for our people, it will require more than government assistance. Private sector investors will look for other factors that contribute to effective operations and which ensure that they can remain fully competitive in the marketplace. It is essential, therefore, that we point to a favourable, receptive climate that offers such important features as skilled manpower, harmonious labour/industry relations, price and wage stability, assured energy supplies at competitive prices, fair taxation policies, and government determination to avoid unnecessary controls, regulation, and expenditures.

Progressive measures can be expected during this session in all these areas.

The present education structure does not meet fully today's need for highly skilled persons in the manufacturing and service industries. In answer to this need, my government will implement a comprehensive business and industrial training program, involving our secondary schools, colleges, organized labour and the business community.

This will mean a realignment of secondary school technical programs with post-secondary programs, innovative trade study courses, and an expansion of apprenticed trades as well as of the new employer-sponsored on-the-job training initiatives. Emphasis will be placed on providing guidance information on job market and training opportunities in the industrial sector. At the same time, efforts will be made to develop a more positive attitude among young people and their parents toward careers in the skilled trades.

Under existing arrangements a number of manpower responsibilities—job creation and retention, training, placement, counselling and the compilation and analysis of essential labour market data—fall within the jurisdiction of several ministries. To ensure that these activities are planned and implemented in the most effective way, both internally and in relation to federal programs, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Elgie) will be designated the Minister of Labour and Manpower, and will be given the appropriate mandate to guide and co-ordinate the government's manpower activities.

Continued high priority will be given to special programs for women in the public and private sectors. In addition to the ongoing programs of the Women's Bureau and the Women's Crown Employees' Office, the Ministry of Labour will establish an Equal Opportunity Advisory Committee, composed of senior labour and management representatives.

As an important step toward better labour/management relations, Ontario established, last fall, the first Quality of Working Life Centre in Canada. This unique co-operative experiment by labour, management and government will embark on a program of pilot projects and educational activities aimed at increasing employee participation in decision-making in the workplace, improving labour relations and enhancing productive performance. The centre will continue to be guided and assisted in its activities by an advisory committee of leading members of the labour and business communities.

At the last session, the Minister of Labour tabled a report of an industrial inquiry commission which identified problems in the process and structure of grievance arbitration. This session, the government will introduce amendments to the Labour Relations Act designed to reduce the costs for arbitration, to provide third-party assistance in resolving grievances prior to arbitration and generally to enable the process to be carried out in the fairest and most expeditious manner.

Despite the over 133,000 new jobs created in Ontario in 1978—a record high since 1974—unemployment levels remain unacceptable as more people are entering the work force than ever before. This creates a particular burden on the capacity of our economy to expand and embrace the many citizens who seek to earn their place within it. We are encouraged, however, by the fact that almost all of these new jobs were created by the private sector, which can be taken as significant justification for a policy of limiting public sector growth to allow the private sector to expand.

Some 2,000 labour contracts will come due for negotiation in Ontario in 1979. It is important that all parties to these negotiations show reason and moderation, if inflationary pressures on the economy are to be resisted. However, the battle against inflation, if it is to be fair and successful, must be fought at all levels. Prices and incomes, including executive salaries and professional fees, must all be restrained, if we are to break the momentum of self-perpetuating inflation.

The government will seek to set an appropriate example by following the precepts of bargaining in good faith, while insisting on recognition of the dollar value of job security, pensions and other fringe benefits in wage and salary negotiations with its own public servants. Nevertheless, as has been recognized at recent federal-provincial conferences, any successful effort to contain the problem of inflation must be undertaken as a matter of national priority. My government will, therefore, do everything within its power to co-operate with the federal government in combatting unacceptable inflationary trends.

Consistent with this commitment, Ontario will continue the effective steps already taken to manage government spending so that public expenditures do not in themselves contribute to rising inflation. Further, while recognizing the limits imposed on any provincial jurisdiction in controlling the general monetary situation, we are prepared to take further action.

Since food prices are unquestionably a matter of great concern to the average citizen, the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations will assist consumers in making informed choices by establishing a program to monitor and report on prices across the province. Significant market trends will be analysed as they develop and periodic reports will address specific problem areas.

Further, because of the particularly sharp price increases in many imported foods, caused primarily by the decline in the value of the Canadian dollar, my government intends to launch a province-wide campaign immediately to advise and assist consumers on ways to reduce their food costs by using Ontario-grown fresh and processed agricultural products. As well, an extensive campaign will be undertaken in conjunction with the Shop Canadian program to persuade the people of Ontario as to the merits of import substitution through the purchase of a wide variety of Canadian-manufactured goods.

It is clear that a determined move toward self-sufficiency in respect of basic goods and services will not only contribute to effective price stability, but will also increase the prospects of assured supply. In this context, government support of projects, such as that intended to demonstrate the productivity of greenhouse complexes through the use of waste heat from nuclear generating stations, takes on new importance.

Keeping in view the energy needs of industry and the private citizen, the government, through the Ministry of Energy, will continue efforts to ensure that options for Ontario's future supplies are as flexible as possible.

First, the government recognizes the primary importance of electricity as a source of energy for this province. Foreign political instability makes it mandatory that we continue policies and programs that safeguard and enhance Ontario Hydro's production facilities as a future guarantee of domestic supplies. What appears to be an oversupply of electrical energy today may well become essential to our continuing prosperity within a comparatively short period of time.

Transient and essentially unpredictable changes in demand may alter considerations of timing, but it would be highly irresponsible to weaken the province's commitment to the generation of electricity from nuclear power as a safe, secure and efficient means of protecting present and future generations of Ontarians. Energy security now and in the future will not be inexpensive; yet we will be able to finance this security at prices to the consuming public lower than in almost all other jurisdictions.

As part of the continuing search for alternative energy sources, my government hopes to conclude shortly a $58 million, five-year, bilateral cost-sharing agreement with the government of Canada to demonstrate in co-operation with the private sector new technology in energy conservation and renewable energy.

Through the Ontario Energy Corporation support will be given to energy-related business development, including projects using by-product power and energy from waste. Changes will be made in the financing and organization of the energy corporation to enable it to take a more active role in the achievement of energy and economic policy objectives in Ontario.

At the national level, the government will ensure that the interests of Ontario's industrial, commercial and residential consumers will be vigorously represented in matters relating to the export, transmission and pricing of natural gas and security of supply of other energy resources.

The driving force of our economic system is private enterprise and initiative. It is entrepreneurs in businesses, big and small, who create new products, new businesses and new jobs through the application of brains and skills, and their willingness to take considerable financial risks. It is vital to our economic future that we maintain a climate of opportunity for innovative and imaginative individuals. My government believes potential rewards must justify the considerable risks. Accordingly, measures will be introduced to encourage the flow of risk capital into new and expanding small businesses.

Likewise, Ontario's tourism industry, which experienced a 16 per cent growth in revenue last year, will be aggressively supported by the government in 1979. There will be a substantial increase in tourist promotional investment.

Phase two of the highly successful hospitality awareness program, "We Treat You Royally," will be launched in May. An important new element of the program will train 25,000 employees of the hospitality industry and make for better service and better business among participating operators.

If private enterprise is to operate effectively, it must be freed from obstacles created by excessive government regulation. Steady progress has been made since the adoption, just under a year ago, of a government-wide policy to improve the regulatory process. There can be, of course, no dispute that a certain measure of government regulation is essential. However, it is equally important that such controls be consistent, effective and administered without undue interference or excessive cost.

A significant share of the problems faced by small business can be traced to government regulation. It is a situation that must be corrected if this vital segment of the community is to thrive. My government will ensure that in implementing recommendations from various sources special attention is paid to items that affect small business.

In other areas of operation, continued efforts will be made to improve existing legislation, regulations, and administrative structures in an exercise which will affect all levels of government. Various legislative amendments will be proposed to clarify statutory requirements, remove oblique or obsolete references, and simplify procedures. Consumer legislation will be amended to give self-regulatory responsibilities, where appropriate, to industries, associations, or municipalities.

For example, the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations will introduce a program of self-regulation for general insurance agents and brokers that will permit them to serve the public as effective advisers and consultants, while continuing to provide the necessary financial and trust account control.

Major emphasis will be placed on the consolidation of regulatory authority for specific programs into single areas of responsibility. This will be one of the features of important new legislative proposals for the Planning Act, the aim of which will be to accelerate and streamline the process of community planning approvals.

The government also recognizes the need to give attention to the manner in which it serves the public, as being consistent with the need for appropriate and adequate legislation. To this end, new programs will be developed to ensure easier access to government by citizens who need information or assistance.

My government would consider these two factors as key to a relationship of mutual trust between people and government. It is important that there be the fullest possible access to government by the people. Government must also try to limit its regulatory function to such uses as are absolutely necessary and for the benefit and protection of those served. The degree to which these elements co-exist is itself a measure of the strength of the democratic process.

Ontarians can take satisfaction and pride from the fact that their productive efforts have made it possible to develop and maintain a large variety of social programs. Full educational opportunity, care and concern for those afflicted by illness and need, necessary representation in legal affairs, as well as many other important protections have become fundamental to our way of life.

By the same token, the high standard and the effectiveness of law enforcement in our province are a testimony to an orderly way of life based on an historical respect for law by the vast majority of our people. If Ontario is to continue to enjoy this high level of protection, there is a real need for full public support of the police function. That function is the protection of our people against all criminal acts by those who are not content to live within the law. The objective, simply stated, is the protection of society. It is a goal which will be pursued through continued emphasis on efficient management and a professionalism, tempered by compassion, in the administration of justice.

In pursuing efforts to secure full social justice for all members of the community, my government proposes several initiatives, which government alone can take, to assist specific groups of citizens. It is, of course, incumbent on us, particularly in times of fiscal restraint, to ensure that wastefulness, misuse and duplication of services relating to these programs are eliminated. Every effort is being made to achieve this end.

For the past two years, the Ministry of Community and Social Services, together with the Ministry of Transportation and Communications, has been providing special transit services for the physically disabled on a pilot project basis in five communities. Building on the success of this program, the government will take steps to make these projects permanent. Introduction of a gradual expansion to other communities will begin without delay. The program will continue to depend on volunteer involvement. At the same time, provision will be made for grants to municipalities through amendments to the Public Transportation and Highway Improvement Act.

The government will move toward a modest expansion of several pilot projects which were launched recently to provide special accommodation and necessary attendant care for the young physically disabled. These projects have been remarkably successful in enabling these young people to maintain a life in the community—in many cases going to work or school or working towards being self-supporting.

The Ministry of Community and Social Services will develop ways to ensure that social assistance programs provide positive incentives to enable sole-support mothers and disabled persons who wish to become self-supporting to take and maintain full-time employment. Improved part-time work incentives will be introduced to help disabled persons on social assistance.

My government has also been most concerned to ensure that young people are not disadvantaged in the search for work. For this reason, the government proposes to continue the Ontario youth employment program during the summer months.

The government will continue to pursue the reshaping of health care delivery services to ensure both excellence of service and effective management. Citizens may be asured, however, that Ontario's health care programs and other programs which now ensure adequate protection for those who may not always be in the best position to help themselves will remain solidly in place. For example, after careful review, the government has decided that the drug benefit program for senior citizens and other persons in need of assistance should not be altered. The social value to Ontario is too great to allow any diminution in the quality or quantity of such significant social advances.

Home-care services for chronically ill patients who wish to live at home but who require some nursing and other medical assistance to do so will be extended. A significant number of beds will be added to the system for persons needing long-term nursing home or chronic hospital care where need is identified through the health plan process. It is the intention to establish placement co-ordination services to ensure that patients requiring such care are placed in the most appropriate setting.

Outpatient services and day-surgery programs will be expanded in a number of hospitals. The Ministry of Health will work with local boards of health to upgrade their programs by developing standards for such public health services as immunization and family planning.

The government's many programs and policies to preserve and strengthen the vitality of rural and remote parts of Ontario reflect a concern that Ontarians, however far removed from larger or more accessible centres, must be enabled to share the opportunities afforded others of their fellow citizens.

With this aim in view, honourable members will be asked to consider a new local services boards act to address some of the needs of communities in northern Ontario that lack municipal organization. This will be in the form of enabling legislation so that those communities, if they wish, may give elected local bodies the power to raise revenues and provide basic services.

The Ministry of Northern Affairs will also seek ways to provide a greater range of television service for remote areas in order to overcome the sense of isolation that exists for many northern residents.

In the agricultural community, the government proposes to support the foodland guidelines policy adopted at the last session by establishing a modified grants program to maintain and enhance productivity on farms. The grants will be given mainly for water and erosion control projects, as well as to assist in construction of selected farm production facilities. Special attention will be given to the need to assure that farmers are protected by minimum farm machinery warranties and contract standards.

Agricrew, a popular pilot project of the Ministry of Agriculture and Food last year, will be expanded to a province-wide program that will provide students an opportunity for new training and employment. The program offers support to farmers during peak harvest periods and for improvements to farmsteads. At the same time, Ontario will press the federal government for continuation of the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Agreement or for a similar program as being of crucial importance to continued growth in northern and eastern Ontario.

A major new fisheries management initiative will be launched by the Ministry of Natural Resources to maintain fisheries resources throughout Ontario and indeed to rebuild some already lost in the southern part of the province. Efforts will be made to improve the stock in the Great Lakes by working more effectively with the International Joint Commission and the Great Lakes Fisheries Commission. The scope of the program calls for significant new policies as an investment in the future. The environmental as well as the economic benefits are paramount.

Over the past two years, the Ministry of Natural Resources has worked with the forest industry on bringing together the harvesting and regeneration phases. As a result of these consultations, the government will introduce amendments to the Crown Timber Act to provide for contractual arrangements with timber harvesting companies for the management of specific forest lands. The effect of these agreements will mean the transfer of much of the forest management work to the private sector, while the responsibility to maintain the productivity of forest land will remain with the government.

My government has taken into account the public comments on proposed amendments to the Environmental Protection Act concerning spills of toxic substances. Legislation will be reintroduced which will broaden the government's authority to order control, cleanup and restoration, with liability provisions for compensation for damages resulting from spills.

Ontario has made major advances in the water quality of the Great Lakes in cooperation with the federal government and with United States agencies through the International Joint Commission. Now that a new international agreement is in effect, the Canada-Ontario agreement is being revised with emphasis on the control of toxic substances and on pollution of the Great Lakes from land use and airborne contaminants.

Commitments have been made for research and analysis for better understanding of low-level environmental contaminants which can build up in living tissue. This new knowledge is being incorporated in a thorough revision of water quality programs, guidelines and objectives to be released shortly by the Ministry of the Environment.

Throughout 1979, the observance of the International Year of the Child offers a special opportunity to reinforce the awareness that our children are the single most important assurance for the future. Government initiatives that will be taken include an intensive immunization awareness campaign directed at the public and, particularly, at parents of young children. Specialized services, such as poison control centres, will be established in the children's hospitals.

Following on legislation two years ago giving all children equal status before the law, and recently enacted provisions for children's services, my government will introduce a second phase of the Children's Law Reform Act to recognize the best interests of the child in custody and access cases.

Foster care programs for mentally retarded and emotionally disturbed children will be expanded. Increased funding will be allocated to programs to counter child abuse.

These programs for children will be supported throughout the government and in the community by scores of other activities, many of which will be by way of celebration. In this vein, this year's civic holiday on August 6 will be declared Children's Day in all provincial parks.

My government is able to report steady progress in the provision of French-language services in Ontario, and will introduce enabling amendments under the Evidence Act to give appropriate status to Ontario statutes in French. This follows on last year's implementation of a system to prepare such translations.

The multicultural reality of Ontario is characterized by a tradition of fairness and harmony among its citizens. It is, however, a tradition that requires dedicated effort to ensure that multiculturalism remains the positive force that it can be in our society. Through our schools, through other social institutions and through individual example, we must develop attitudes that further the equality and dignity of all people.

My government sees its role in maintaining a harmonious society as one of leadership as well as of responsiveness. To this end, the government intends to restructure the Advisory Council on Multiculturalism to make it a more dynamic force in the promotion of cultural retention and sharing. As well, every effort will be made to enlarge the scope of effective communication between government and the various ethnic communities so they may understand and gain full participation in the Canadian way of life.

My government reaffirms its deeply felt commitment to a strong and unified Canadian nation, and renews its pledge to contribute in a positive and constructive manner to intergovernmental discussions which have as their urgent purpose a renewed constitution for Canada that will be in the best interests of all Canadians.

It is our firm conviction that a renewed constitution is a high priority of this nation, in order to provide a framework in which all citizens and regions can enjoy growth and prosperity within the context of a harmonious and flourishing country.

The general principles governing Ontario's approach in this respect are, we believe, supported by the people of Ontario. They are: preservation of the unity of Canada; preservation of a strong central government with adequate powers to pursue the national interest, and provincial governments that reflect the regional diversities that are the Canadian heritage; preservation of a union which ensures free movement and a free flow of goods, services, capital and people from coast to coast; preservation of an economic union underscored by a commitment of all provinces and regions to contribute to each other's well-being, and, generally, to share each other's endowments, on a privileged basis, as Canadians first;

preservation of the monarch as head of state for Canada; finally, to bring the constitution home as soon as possible so that Canadians, as proud inheritors of these traditions, can deal as a mature and independent people with their own self-governance.

My government believes that these principles are fundamental to a strong and united nation. In future constitutional discussions we will continue to build on them, sensitive always to the expressed and perceived concerns of our native people and of our partners in the Canadian Confederation.

However, the government places a caution unequivocally before the citizens of this province and of Canada as a whole: namely, that Ontario will not negotiate sovereignty association with the government of Quebec. We wish to work with the province of Quebec within the Canadian framework and we will strive to do so with vigour.

Our two provinces share similar experience and traditions as founding partners in the Canadian nation. We are compatriots and friends. My government has inherent understanding and support for the great French-speaking partner of our Confederation in its efforts to preserve the French identity, language, culture and heritage. Within our own province, we have pursued and accomplished significant measures, and will continue to develop further measures to recognize our mutual duality in language, culture and tradition.

It is the firm conviction of my government that, having full regard to the real and understandable aspirations of the people of Quebec, the interests of all will best be served by retaining the national boundaries that now designate the Canadian nation.

To this end, it is my government's intention to place a resolution before this House, in the hope that it will receive unanimous support and put on record the will of the legislators of this province.

Honourable members, the program presented for your consideration will seek to consolidate Ontario's position within Confederation; to promote efficient and effective management of government programs; to sustain economic stability and opportunity for the people of Ontario, and to advance their social well-being.

May Divine Providence guide your deliberations.

In our sovereign's name, I thank you.

God bless the Queen and Canada.

The Honourable the Lieutenant Governor was pleased to retire from the chamber.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: To prevent mistakes, I have obtained a copy of Her Honour's speech, which I shall now read.

Reading dispensed with.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

QUIETING TITLES AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. McMurtry moved first reading of Bill 1, An Act to amend the Quieting Titles Act.

Motion agreed to.

MOTIONS

THRONE SPEECH DEBATE

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor to this House be taken into consideration on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

HOUSE SITTINGS

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that commencing tomorrow, March 7, this House will not sit in the chamber on Wednesdays unless otherwise ordered.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that, notwithstanding any standing orders of the House, the following be the sequence in which private members' ballot items be listed and called for debate and that a new ballot be held thereafter: Messrs. Grande, Rotenberg, Peterson, Renwick, Johnson, Stong, M. N. Davison, MacBeth, J. Reed, Foulds, Handleman, Gaunt, Bounsall, J. A. Taylor, Van Horne, Makarchuk, Mrs. Scrivener, Messrs. Hall, Lupusella, Kerr, T. P. Reid, Lawlor, Watson, Epp, Charlton, Ramsay, G. I. Miller, Young, Rollins, Ruston and Germa; and that the first day for consideration of private members' public bills and orders be Thursday, March 29.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted, this motion does reflect quite honestly what you might call a positive, negotiated settlement—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Within the guidelines.

Hon. Mr. Welch: —to making the new standing orders reconcile with the desire shared by all members of the House to let each willing member have his turn putting forward an item for debate. It also reflects an acceptance of the traditional practice of having each of the three parties represented by every third item. So, in that connection, I do want to sincerely thank my colleagues, the other House leaders and the whips, for helping to resolve this matter within the framework of the new rules. In that connection, may I welcome to that group and wish the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere (Mr. Warner) continued moderate good health in his new responsibilities here.

Motion agreed to.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Davis, the House adjourned at 3:53 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, MARCH 8, 1979

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

RESIGNATION OF MEMBER FOR WENTWORTH

Mr. Speaker: I beg to inform the House of a vacancy which has occurred in the membership of the House since the last session by reason of the resignation of Ian Deans, Esquire, as member for the electoral district of Wentworth.

INTRODUCTION OF NEW MEMBER

Mr. Speaker informed the House that the Clerk had received from the chief election officer, and laid upon the table, the certificate of a by-election held on December 14, 1978:

Electoral district of Sault Ste. Marie: R. H. Ramsay.

PROVINCE OF ONTARIO

This is to certify that in view of a writ of election dated October 30, 1978, issued by the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor of the province of Ontario and addressed to Curtis A. Scott, Esquire, returning officer for the electoral district of Sault Ste. Marie, for the election of a member to represent the said electoral district of Sault Ste. Marie in the Legislative Assembly of the province, in the room of John R. Rhodes, Esquire, who, since his election as representative of the said electoral district of Sault Ste. Marie, has departed this life, R. H. Ramsay, Esquire, has been returned as duly elected as appears by the return of the said writ of election, dated December 27, 1978, which is now lodged of record in my office.

(Signed) Roderick Lewis, Chief Election Officer; Toronto, February 5, 1979.

R. H. Ramsay, Esquire, member-elect for the electoral district of Sault Ste. Marie, having taken the oaths and subscribed the roll, took his seat.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to you and to the House Mr. Russell Ramsay, who was successful in the electoral district of Sault Ste. Marie, who has taken the oaths, signed the roll and wishes now to take his seat.

Mr. Speaker: Let the honourable member take his seat.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

HURONIA REGIONAL CENTRE

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, the Ontario Provincial Police have completed an investigation into alleged incidents of abuse against residents of the Huronia Regional Centre for the Mentally Retarded in Orillia.

I want to share with members our conclusions about these allegations, and announce an initiative which we are implementing immediately.

In July last year, the administrator of Huronia regional centre reported that he had received letters from two former employees who believed, on the basis of their experience in the facility, that certain retarded residents were being abused by certain members of the staff.

Acting on the instruction of senior staff of the ministry, the administrator requested the police to conduct a full investigation.

Officers of the OPP's criminal investigation branch spent four months investigating the charges and, in the process, they interviewed approximately 120 persons.

The police report concluded that while there was some evidence to suggest resident abuse by, at most, a handful of the 1,400 staff members, there was limited or no corroboration of some allegations and nothing at all to substantiate other allegations. In some instances there was a substantial time lag between the occurrence and the police investigation. Some allegations related back to incidents in 1976 and 1977. In most cases, it became a question of the word of one employee, or former employee, against the word of another employee.

My colleague, the Solicitor General (Mr. McMurtry), advised me of the provincial police decision not to lay criminal charges against any individual. The OPP and the crown attorney in Barrie based this decision in part on the fact that the alleged victims were severely retarded and, therefore, could not themselves serve as crown witnesses.

Also, many of the alleged offences were common assaults and the statutory limitation for such charges had expired.

I received a copy of the final investigation report in late December and I have reviewed it in detail with senior officials of my ministry. Ministry officials undertook a further investigation to find out whether just cause existed for disciplinary action. We have concluded that there are not grounds to warrant disciplinary action against any individuals for basically the same reasons which led the police not to lay criminal charges.

There is limited evidence to suggest that some residents may have been abused by certain staff. There is not enough specific evidence, however, to enable the ministry to proceed with disciplinary measures against any employee.

It is a better course, I believe, to eliminate conditions which may create an environment in which abuse is regarded as acceptable behaviour by some individuals. For example, we must come to grips with the problems of stress which could lead an otherwise good employee to abuse a person in his or her care; and when we recruit and train staff to provide such care, we must accentuate, in all their complexity, the special qualities which it demands.

Accordingly, I am announcing today implementation of a co-operative program to improve the job environment for employees and the living environment for residents in our facilities.

Our network of residential facilities for the mentally retarded in this province had its origin in the natural concern of Ontarians to care compassionately for those with mental handicaps. That system also reflected the popular belief of the time that what the retarded needed most basically was simple sustenance and a secure protection against exploitation by others.

Our experience in working with the retarded over the past generation has taught us that such an evaluation of the retarded person underestimated seriously his or her capacity to learn, to enjoy a rich emotional life and to make a contribution to life in community with others.

Many of the initiatives in service undertaken over the past decade by the Ministry of Community and Social Services, and before us by our colleagues in the Ministry of Health, reflected our increasing appreciation of those abilities. The integration of many retarded people into our communities is a tangible and important example. It is crucial to the evolution of our service that our regional centres for the mentally retarded continue to reflect our concern for the personal and individual growth of their residents. A major component of our progress to that end will be the degree to which we can enable staff members with direct-care responsibilities to make their special contributions to that growth.

An essential part of that contribution is the protection of those in their care. A specific improvement has been made already in the reporting of alleged incidents of abuse, following the establishment last June of formal guidelines which direct the immediate investigation of each allegation. Those guidelines are being followed now in all of our facilities. They represent a crucial element in our efforts to ensure that protection of residents is achieved.

I am confident that all but very few of the 6,000 concerned and competent staff members entrusted with the responsibility of caring for the retarded feel both pride and purpose in what they have helped accomplish. While our principal objective of providing protection, care, comfort and skills training to the retarded must be maintained, we must emphasize an equally important commitment to create an environment wherein employees experience satisfaction in what they do and share a feeling of accomplishment in what they have achieved.

It is in that light that we are initiating a co-operative program to identify and establish improvements in the every-day life in our facilities, starting with Huronia and Oxford regional centre in Woodstock. This program will engage the talents and perspectives of our management officials, direct-care staff and residents to develop a model of sensitive and helping service which will be applied to all our facilities.

Mr. McClellan: What does this mean?

Hon. Mr. Norton: The style of the plan will be based on consultation with and participation of all levels of staff in our facilities. The plan will deal with such issues as internal communications, staff attitudes and behaviour, and management and supervisory practices. It is my belief that this initiative will benefit both staff and residents as well as our future endeavours in the care and development of the mentally retarded.

Mr. Breugh: This has got to be a new tactic to keep this government in power for another three months.

Hon. Mr. Norton: We have a clear responsibility to make whatever contribution we can to nurture and enrich the lives of those who depend upon us for help. The initiative

I have announced is, I believe, a vital aspect of my ministry's commitment to that goal.

Mr. McClellan: What does it mean? Why doesn't the minister tell us what it means?

TRANSPORTATION SERVICES FOR HANDICAPPED

Hon. Mr. Snow: I would like to enlarge on a statement that was contained in the speech of Her Honour on Tuesday last, a statement which referred to this government's commitment to financially support public transportation services for Ontario's disabled.

To begin with, let me point out that over the past two or three years my ministry has co-operated with Metro Toronto, Ottawa-Carleton, Sault Ste. Marie, Peterborough and Chatham in experimenting with such transportation, using specialized minibuses, vans, passenger cars, et cetera, for individuals physically unable to board conventional transit systems.

The option to experiment with specialized vehicles, rather than attempting to convert conventional transit vehicles now in use, was based on what we believed the most appropriate way to go. The experience gained has confirmed this opinion. Our neighbours to the south who did use modified systems also convinced us we were pursuing the appropriate course of action here in Ontario.

Another plus for the specialized system approach is that mobility can be provided almost immediately, rather than later if we were to modify existing systems. Therefore, because there will be no service limitations, the criticisms levelled during some portions of the experiment should be answered. In fact, the only material limitation will be a minimum fare similar to regular transit fares, which must be charged, and a provincial ceiling which cannot be exceeded.

In brief, the province will help municipalities applying for financial assistance for the kinds of specialized transportation services that I have noted, services which the municipalities operate themselves or contract out on their behalf. Such operators may, of course, include non-profit organizations, et cetera.

As the costs of this type of service are substantial, the province will contribute 50 per cent of the municipal cost incurred in providing services for the physically disabled, up to a limit rated on a per capita basis established as a result of our previous experience. This limit was arrived at by the extensive monitoring and study of the experimental services. We feel it will allow participating municipalities to operate services geared to local demand, or in other words similar to the transit service available to able-bodied individuals.

However, in that the mobility needs of the physically disabled are somewhat greater than those for the able bodied and their choice of transportation means is somewhat restricted, financial assistance will be available to municipalities with or without conventional transit services.

In order, then, to fully realize the potential which exists within Ontario municipalities, funds donated to a municipality for the transportation of the physically disabled may be considered to form all or part of the municipal portion in the expenses shared with the province. In addition, gifts in kind will not be evaluated as contributing towards the funding ceiling.

Provincial support will be available as of July 1 of this year and an explanatory policy summary will be mailed shortly to all municipalities known to have expressed an interest.

If any members who may wish to have further information on this new system of transportation for the handicapped would contact my office, we would be pleased to send them the full information.

STANDING ORDERS

Mr. Speaker: Just before we get to oral questions, I want to remind honourable members that we approved and passed the new standing orders on December 14 last. It was a decision taken unanimously by the House, and since we are about to approach the oral questions I want to draw honourable members' attention to a particular section of 27 which says in part: "In the discretion of Mr. Speaker, a reasonable number of supplementary questions arising out of the minister's reply to an oral question may be asked by any members." Similarly, in putting an oral question, "no argument or opinion is to be offered nor any facts stated, except so far as may be necessary to explain the same; and in answering any such question, the member"—which includes all ministers—"is not to debate the matter to which it refers."

So with that slight admonition we will go to oral questions.

ORAL QUESTIONS

HYDRO EXPANSION PROGRAM

Mr. S. Smith: I take it I have just been read my rights, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The last rites.

Mr. S. Smith: I would like to address a question to the Premier, Mr. Speaker.

Can the Premier explain to the House and to the people why he and his cabinet approved Ontario Hydro's expansion program, project by project, when he knew very well early in 1976 that the Treasury of Ontario had done a careful study which concluded that Hydro's growth forecasts were much too high?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think the Leader of the Opposition is perhaps oversimplifying the matter.

Mr. Peterson: Why don't you complicate it?

Mr. Breaugh: Do you want to read that rule again?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would say to the member for London Centre, it may be a little too complicated for me but it is obviously far too complicated for him, something he will never totally understand. Particularly with his stated objective of world price for oil; I will never understand that.

Mr. Speaker: That was not part of the question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, you are quite right.

Mr. Peterson: I am sorry I said anything.

Mr. Speaker: And shouldn't be part of the answer.

Hon. Mr. Davis: To try to deal with it as briefly as I can, to say that cabinet in fact dealt with this on a project by project basis, I think the select committee that has been involved in these discussions will understand the complexity of the process that Ontario Hydro has used. I think it is quite evident that taking the historical record of Ontario Hydro with respect to their load forecasts, and not getting into a debate today as to the validity of their forecasts in 1974, 1975, 1976 and 1977, this government has given to Hydro certain responsibilities which historically, in the history of their responsibilities in this province, they have discharged extremely well.

I recognize this is a matter of great concern and of great interest to the Leader of the Opposition. I would only say to him that this government has great confidence in the future economic life of this province. We are concerned about the international instability in terms of energy, the question of oil prices. The Leader of the Opposition may have greater confidence in what the Ayatollah may do in Iran; I don't. I'm prepared to put my confidence in an indigenous resource making available to the people of this province electricity in abundant supply so we can be competitive—

Mr. J. Reed: You don't even understand the question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —so that we can provide the economic base so we can have jobs for the people of this province. I'm not minimizing the difficulty but I say to the opposition, please don't try to simplistically put it on the government that we approved or disapproved of individual projects. We are in support of Hydro doing its job to the best of its ability.

An hon. member: It's ability isn't very good.

Hon. Mr. Davis: You can quarrel with its ability. You can quarrel with it.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say something else now that I have been provoked. It's great to second guess. We all have 20-20 hindsight. The Leader of the Opposition has this in abundance. But I would say to him that in spite of any overcapacity, the fact is the residential consumers in this province are still obtaining electrical energy at a lower price than in any competing jurisdiction in North America, with the exception of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Van Horne: In spite of that it's 40 per cent higher than it should be.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think that has to be re-stated time and time again. I look at the distinguished member to the leader's right who is concerned about Atikokan and I understand it.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: Is the Premier saying that the cabinet did not deal with this project by project, and does he not recall having to pass an order in council for every single project of Hydro. Did they not even consider it? Was it cabinet's decision to overrule the Treasury's forecast, which was considerably lower than Hydro's forecast at the time? If, when doing this, the reason the cabinet overruled the Treasury itself was because the cabinet anticipated difficulty in the Middle East, can the Premier possibly tell the people of Ontario what form of protection we get against the Iranian oil problem by having excess unused Hydro generation capacity? What type of substitution for oil does he anticipate will take place?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, one thing I'd make obvious to the Leader of the Opposition is that to a certain extent Hydro's generating capacity does relate to the price of oil—to a certain extent, and not Iranian oil, I acknowledge that. I would say to the Leader of the Opposition, who has expressed his concern about the overcapacity which means some cents per week for the consumer, under his policy of world price for oil, every time a dollar is put on the barrel it is $300 million to the consumers of this province. Why doesn't he start putting things in perspective and understand it?

I had no insights into what was going to happen in the Middle East; I don't think anybody did.

Mr. Van Horne: You should, you spent enough time travelling around over there.

Mr. J. Reed: You were there.

Mr. Kerrio: What did you go for?

Hon. Mr. Davis: But I think anybody who for the past four years has not understood that the world supply of energy, whether it's oil or natural gas or electricity, is vulnerable and is volatile, and that we should be making every effort to have security of electrical energy related to an indigenous resource available to the people of this province, I would say with respect to the Leader of the Opposition, is not discharging his responsibility in an appropriate fashion.

I'd say something else. We've had forecasts from Treasury; we've had forecasts from Hydro. It is the easiest thing in the world to start second guessing those people who have responsibility. It was not a question of overruling or disregarding the forecasts of Treasury at all. We take all of the information that is available to us, but under the existing situation, which was approved by the members of this House—

Mr. Warner: Hydro's out of control. Why don't you bring Hydro under public control?

Hon. Mr. Davis: —and I recall some of the debates in this House when the Power Corporation Act was passed, that responsibility ultimately lies with Ontario Hydro.

Mr. J. Reed: Guess who voted against it.

Mr. Warner: If you can't do that, you should resign; get out of here. Put it under public control.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I re-emphasize, Mr. Speaker, they have on balance, historically, traditionally, done it very well. And please, when the member goes to Scarborough West the next time, when he talks about rates, please tell the residents there the truth. Tell them that they are paying less than in Detroit, that they are paying less than they are in Cleveland, New York City; any competing jurisdiction in North America.

Mr. Makarchuk: But those are private enterprises.

Mr. Cassidy: Is the Premier saying that cents per day, per person in the province of Ontario are insignificant; because if that's the case, has he read the speech by his own Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) just the other day to the municipal electrical utilities, where he estimated that three cents a day was equal to overcharging by Hydro by $100 million a year because of misestimates in the past? Is the Premier saying there is nothing to be made of $100 million that people are paying in excess charges by Hydro today?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I will say this for the leader of the New Democratic Party and his party, at least there is some measure of consistency, unlike the Liberals on this issue.

I am concerned about three cents a day. I am concerned about 21 cents a week. I am concerned about anything the consumer is paying, but I do re-emphasize that the capacity of Hydro, in terms of forecasts, et cetera, one can debate in the House, but the fact remains the consumer in this province is still paying less than in most comparable or competing jurisdictions. Where I have great difficulty in understanding the policies opposite, is where they are prepared to go to world price for oil, which at $1 a barrel, and in today's market that doesn't seem too difficult to achieve, but in a matter of 48 hours represents $300 million to the consumers of this province.

Mr. J. Reed: It's obvious, Mr. Speaker, that the Premier has no conception whatsoever of the technical aspects of transferring, of using electric power—

Mr. Speaker: Question?

Mr. J. Reed: —as some kind of hedge against the shortage of oil. Now I have a question.

Mr. Speaker: Please put it.

Mrs. Campbell: I wish you would keep the Premier in order.

Mr. Speaker: It is not the responsibility of the Premier to ask questions. Just answer them.

Mr. J. Reed: Is the Premier not aware that his own ministry has done a forecast for electric power growth in Ontario a full one per cent per year lower than Hydro's forecast, which the Premier seems to accept holus-bolus? Does he not also realize that this jurisdiction, among all of the jurisdictions in North America, is the highest?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of all of the load forecasts in every jurisdiction in North America. I must confess that to the honourable member.

Mr. J. Reed: He should be aware of it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am aware that there is perhaps a differential in terms of the forecast of Ontario Hydro and the Ministry of Energy. I understand that the load forecast for Ontario Hydro is 4.1 and the ministry's is 3.7, something of that nature. I understand from discussions that took place in the committee that the committee itself hasn't really assessed the differential between the two load forecasts. I would say with respect, Mr. Speaker, the members of this House will look forward to being informed by the members of the select committee as to a rationalization.

As I recall the criteria that went into the load forecast of the Ministry of Energy—I can't speak for Hydro—there were some 1,500 assumptions that are made, I would say with respect to the very distinguished member, when you are predicting on the basis of 1,500 assumptions, some of which may not necessarily be right, that one has to be very careful in saying the Ministry of Energy is correct and Ontario Hydro is wrong. I think, with respect Mr. Speaker, surely that's not what the select committee is looking for in any event. Surely we are looking for a reasonable load forecast. For me to get up here and say that I have the exact figure, Mr. Speaker—unlike the distinguished member from Halton hills, I don't pretend to have that ability; and with respect neither does he.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Premier, since Ontario Hydro now has an excess generating capacity of upwards of 4,000 megawatts and the government has asked it to seek markets in the United States, if possible on a firm contract basis, in order to use this; would the Premier not agree that the government shares with Hydro the responsibility for building that excess generating capacity beyond its necessary reserves, because the government authorized each one of those plants, even in defiance of the lower forecast that TEIGA was presenting?

Hon. Mr. Davis: What the distinguished member for York South is suggesting is somewhat more understandable and logical than some of the observations I have heard on this issue to date. What I really think he is saying is, should we, out of general revenues, in order to retain the ongoing growth of Ontario Hydro, with the possibility that we may need it more rapidly than even some of the forecasters say and knowing the vulnerability of this jurisdiction with respect to energy supply, should we offset some of the costs to Hydro through general taxation revenues rather than through rates?

Mr. MacDonald: I didn't say that.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member was suggesting that. It was implicit in what he said. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that we await the select committee's recommendations.

Mr. MacDonald: Could I put my question? That's a good answer to a question I didn't ask.

My question is this: Since Hydro admittedly has a generating capacity of upwards of 4,000 megawatts beyond the reserve they need, and it is scrambling for markets for that in the United States so that the burden can be lessened on the consumers in this province; doesn't the government have to share responsibility for that excess generating capacity, because the government authorized each one of the plants, even though TEIGA's forecast indicated those plants wouldn't all be needed?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, let's be very realistic in this chamber. Whether we assume some responsibility or not, there are some members opposite who, for whatever reasons, sometimes politically motivated, will endeavour to give us that responsibility. I am a realist and I know the member for York South, being an objective, fair-minded chairman, would never take that point of view.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Well, who should be paying?

Mr. MacDonald: That's what I call a snow job.

CO-PAYMENT FEES

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my second question to the Minister of Health. Can the Minister of Health tell us, regarding his chronic care co-payment fees, whether in fact the government has now changed its mind with regard to levying this particular fee against psychiatric patients? What is the status of that plan?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact I have recommended to the cabinet, based on a review of the situation and the fact that there is no easy way to determine a chronic psychiatric patient in one of our psychiatric hospitals since they are all technically active treatment beds, that we drop the plans for this charge. Also, there is, of course, the fact that those who are in homes for special care who are longer-term residents do pay the same co-payment as both nursing home, and as of April 1, active-treatment chronic care.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, welcoming as I do this decision on the part of the minister, can the minister explain why it was he announced this plan in the first place? Did he not study these matters properly before sending all sorts of announcements out to the public of Ontario, frightening the people who are in hospital, frightening their families? Does the minister not take some time to study his plans and the recommendations of his ministry before inflicting them on the public; and then withdrawing them later, tail between his legs?

Mr. Bradley: And did he check with Frank Drea?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I hadn't noticed anything behind me. Mr. Speaker, I would have thought the honourable member would have commended any ministry that, on examination, finding the effect of a plan to be unworkable, did withdraw it. At the outset the purpose was to maintain fairness and equity between active physical care and psychiatric care. It was found to be unworkable without creating a great deal of bureaucratic nonsense in the psychiatric hospitals, so it has been dropped.

Mr. Breugh: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister, using the same fine rationale and for the very same reasons, would now get rid of his chronic care deterrent fee as well?

Mr. Speaker: That is not supplementary.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: May I answer it? I would love to answer it, Mr. Speaker. I would love to ask them to tell me about the caucus they had last October before their members signed the select committee report on behalf of the party. I would like to ask them what happened in the debate last November in this House on the select committee report. I would like to ask where that member was in the standing committee on social development—

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is the minister's function to answer questions, not ask them.

Mr. Conway: A supplementary on the psychiatric charge to which the Leader of the Opposition directed his attention: Can the minister point to any recommendation for that psychiatric charge that he did introduce?

I am aware of the recommendations that called for the chronic user charge, but where in the ministry or elsewhere was there a specific recommendation for that psychiatric charge that was made part of the package?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I would take the recommendation of the select committee, of which the honourable member was a member, to cover all types of care, inasmuch as you did refer to nursing home care, in which in fact special care residents are from time to time housed.

HYDRO LOAD FORECASTS

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question of the Minister of Energy. In view of the fact that the government is now estimating that the cost of overcapacity at Hydro is costing the consumers $100 million a year; and in view of the fact that Hydro says itself that a one per cent error in forecasting future growth demand will wind up costing the consumers of this province half a billion dollars a year in power charges; will the minister direct Hydro to produce forecasts of future demand which are much more reliable than those we have had revealed in recent weeks before Hydro makes its decisions about future system expansion?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Perhaps I could start off by pointing out—

Mr. Makarchuk: It's hard to stop you once you start.

Mr. T. P. Reid: You have got to rebuild the system.

Hon. Mr. Auld: —that the figures that are being talked about at the moment are not quite the same. That is the Ministry of Energy's forecast, so-called, members of the committee will recall, was not presented to the committee as an energy forecast but as an energy demand model for all kinds of energy in the province. That is being compared to Ontario Hydro's load forecasts for peak demand for the east system. There are a great many suppositions that are involved in those two things which are quite different and they are not comparable prognostications. In fact the energy demand models showed a number of scenarios, in the current jargon.

Moving on from that—

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Auld: As I say, Mr. Speaker, moving right along: I think Ontario Hydro's own forecasters, or main forecaster, has indicated that a forecast for a 20 or 30 year period is a very difficult thing to do.

Mr. Makarchuk: Is that the forecast of the first part or the forecast of the second part?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Start from the beginning, Jim.

Mr. Makarchuk: Start again.

Hon. Mr. Auld: That is a great straight line, but I'll avoid it.

In fact, our people and Hydro are looking at the suppositions that were made on which both forecasts—the electrical parts of our forecasts and the Hydro load forecasts—were made. I am sure that since the committee is also doing a forecast, and I see that Dr. Porter is going to be doing a forecast, we will have a variety to look at pretty soon.

Mr. Samis: You make Jim Taylor look like a piker.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Why don't you ask a supplementary?

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: I have listened with care to the obscure comments of the minister, Mr. Speaker. As I understand it, he is saying he rejects the forecast prepared by his ministry because it looked at all energy demands in the province, and that he prefers to look at a forecast prepared by Hydro because it only looks at electricity.

I would ask the minister does he, having rejected the advice of his own experts in the ministry, also reject the comments that were made just last week by the distinguished professor of electrical engineering, Dr. Arthur Porter, who was the chairman of the Royal Commission on Electric Power Planning, who said that he found Ontario Hydro's submissions on forecasting were inadequate on several grounds, not least because they were extremely difficult to understand.

If even Dr. Porter doesn't know what the devil Hydro is doing, will the minister say why the government is telling Hydro to go full steam ahead, on the basis of forecasts which are extraordinarily suspect and may well be grossly wrong, at a cost of billions of dollars to the people of this province?

Hon. Mr. Auld: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I was not talking about our Hydro load forecast; I was talking about the energy demand model—and they are different.

Secondly, I did not say that I was not accepting the advice of my own ministry's staff; I think it is quite competent.

Thirdly, there is a supposition around—

Mr. J. Reed: Just say you don't know.

Hon. Mr. Auld:—and the one set of figures that I haven't got with me is that of the various dates when the various projects which are being discussed were actually approved by cabinet. My recollection, though —and I'll correct it if I'm wrong—is that all of them were approved in principle prior to 1974.

The honourable members will recall that in the world of building large power plants—like a lot of other large things—from the time you decide that you should do it until the time you have got it finished is anywhere from 10 to 12 years.

In fact, in Hydro's experience, prior to environmental assessment and things such as problems in getting transmission lines built, they used to operate on a basis of about 10 years to start and, after they were down the road about two years to three years, the thing was committed. By that time they were into contracts and so on. In all fairness, we are now looking at decisions that were made at least 10 years ago. That's why I say seriously that the matter of forecasting is by no means an exact science.

Mr. J. Reed: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Isn't it true that the reason the ministry and the government have not imposed any kind of policy framework on Hydro is in fact that they can't, that the Power Corporation Act does not allow them to impose policy? And isn't it a fact that back in 1974—and I see the Premier shifting in his seat—

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'm not. I haven't moved an inch.

Mr. J. Reed:—he apparently stated in a press release that one of the first priorities of the directorate of Ontario Hydro was to accept government policy, and that, in fact, has never happened; that has not taken place since the inception of the Power Corporation Act; and that the government—

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Mr. J. Reed:—and that, because that is not there, the government has simply ignored Hydro?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

Ms. Gigantes: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister, has he taken account of the testimony of chairman Taylor of Hydro that, by his own admission, we may be into a vicious circle—this was also backed up by the testimony of Mr. Higgins, the load forecaster for Hydro—where we overproject demand for hydro, costs rise because we have excess capacity, then demand is lower because the cost has gone up, and so on and so on?

Has the minister taken a look at that theory of the vicious circle, which I believe we're on, and what is his feeling about that theory?

Hon. Mr. Auld: The honourable member is now really relating the energy demand model which I think she saw in the select committee—

Ms. Gigantes: No. Talk to Mr. Higgins.

Hon. Mr. Auld: —which looked at a number of the factors that could switch people from one form of energy to another, as well as the use. There are a great many factors; price is certainly one of them.

If I may get off the subject of electricity and use gas as an analogy, every time the price of gas has gone up we find that there are more reserves available because they now are economical to develop. The same thing works in reverse: As the price of one form of energy goes up, people move to another. That has happened in heating oil and gas, for instance. It has certainly happened in a great many fields.

PHYSICIANS OPTING OUT OF OHIP

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Health. Given that as of January 1, 1979, all the 35 doctors in the Peterborough Medical Clinic have opted out of OHIP, and given that a significant percentage of the remaining doctors in Peterborough are also opted-out has the minister any plans to intervene in that situation?

[2:45]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, the Peterborough situation is one that I follow very closely inasmuch as the member for Peterborough (Mr. Turner) is my parliamentary assistant. At this point, I would have to say there is no indication of a need to intervene in any way.

Mr. Breagh: Seventy per cent are opted-out, and there is no need?

Mr. McClellan: What's the limit? Ninety per cent?

Mr. Cassidy: A supplementary: Given the fact that about a year ago, on April 14, the minister said that "if the numbers of opted-out physicians begin to threaten the universality of the health system, then we will intervene," does he not consider that the fact that 50 per cent to 70 per cent of physicians in the Peterborough area, overall, are opted-out constitutes a threat to universality and therefore warrants intervention by this government?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: First of all, Mr. Speaker, let me comment on the accuracy of the NDP. If I stray a bit, according to the new House rules, I beg your indulgence, but I am getting a little sick and tired of the distortions coming from that party.

Mr. Mackenzie: We know the minister is sick and tired. He shows it in his actions.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I will grant, sir, that the level of opting-out in Peterborough county is higher than in any other area of the province. It is not 50 to 70 per cent. In point of fact, last month it went down a little bit, because a doctor opted back in, strangely enough.

Mr. Cassidy: What is it?

Mr. Foulds: What is it for the province?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I could perhaps talk about the press release that went out today from the member for Hamilton East. We had a call from the controller of the hospital he talked about, refuting what was said in that release. I could perhaps refer to the press release last week about the Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital, alleging certain things to have happened which did not happen. I am getting just a little sick and tired of this inaccuracy.

Mr. Samis: That is not in the question.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Let me just refer the member to his party's green paper on health care; this perhaps explains the whole thing. His party's green paper on health care says: "Notions of health must reflect human and political values." Clearly, all these distortions of fact that are coming from that party are reflecting his party's political values.

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker: I would ask the minister either to substantiate any comments like that or to withdraw that language, which is unparliamentary and should not belong here.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I would be delighted. Where would the member like me to start? Shall we start with the press release today on Hamilton? Shall we start with Hamilton?

Mr. MacDonald: With Peterborough.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Differences of opinion do not constitute points of privilege or points of order.

A new question.

Mr. Cassidy: A supplementary?

Mr. Speaker: No. A new question.

Mr. Cassidy: That was only my first supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: A new question.

HOSPITAL BED ALLOCATIONS

Mr. Riddell: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Health regarding the health cost restraint program and, more particularly, the hospital bed reduction part of his program; and I am pleased that the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Drea) shares our concern, according to a CFRB report this morning.

In arriving at his formula of 3.5 beds per 1,000 population, why did he not take into consideration such matters as the operational efficiency of those hospitals which have already trimmed any fat to the bone and the makeup of the population in the various areas of Ontario, firstly taking into consideration the higher percentage of senior citizens in areas such as Huron and Bruce, compared to the provincial average, and, secondly, the tremendous seasonal increase in the population of those areas, which attract thousands of tourists who also require the services of hospitals from time to time?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the honourable member perhaps take a look at the material which I believe was sent to all MPPs—or MLAs, depending upon the point of view—entitled The Active Treatment Bed Allocation Method. If he will look at that—I believe it was sent to his office—he will find that we do take into account, in the referral population compilations, age factors and, of course, the actual utilization of a given hospital from whatever municipalities surround it. With respect, if the member takes a look at that, he will see that is covered. So the actual utilization of a hospital is taken into account.

As regards the other part of the question—basically, the member is talking about the peer groupings among hospitals—we did, over the last year to year and a half, try to come up with some means of tying hospital budgets to the peer groupings that compare hospitals in terms of admissions per 1,000, in terms of average length of stay, in terms of staff days per patient and any number of things. Frankly, we weren't able to come up with something that wasn't going to be a bureaucratic nightmare.

Mr. T. P. Reid: What do you think this is?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: What we decided to do instead, recognizing, first of all, that the four beds per thousand standard in the south and the four-and-a-half beds per thousand standard in the north has been in place since 1972 and the 3.5 and four beds per thousand standard, in place for a year, was to begin this year to tie the budget to those bed-planning standards based on the referral populations and with reference to beds actually in service last fall and to ask the hospital association and the Association of Teaching Hospital Administrators to work with us in developing an entirely new budget formula. Again, if the member will refer back to my January 19 statement, we would like to build in more and more incentives to reward efficiency and to provide the incentive to find ways to save money. Clearly, many hospitals have shown and are showing that there are many ingenious ways, where the incentive is there, to save money.

Mr. Warner: While patients suffer.

Mr. Riddell: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: The minister sure hasn't convinced the hospital boards, the doctors, and other people in the medical profession that any rationale was used in that formula.

Mr. Speaker: Question.

Mr. Riddell: Does the minister not have enough faith in the hospital boards to permit them to make the decisions as to how they can operate within their budgets without penalizing them through hospital bed reductions? Is it his policy to prohibit any private financial support for the operation and administration of public hospitals so that beds might remain open and staff retained?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: First of all, the whole system depends on the volunteer hospital boards. Unlike the people to the member's left, we believe in—and I hope the member does too—the worth of the volunteer hospital board for each of the hospitals. In point of fact, the decision is left to each hospital board to determine how it will live within this year's budget.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Or die.

Mr. Nixon: Starve or die, one of the two.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: When we decided to tie it to the bed-planning standards, it was on the basis of taking off the top the incremental cost per bed—not the full cost per bed, because if we did that it would be somewhere in the order of $20,000 to $30,000, and in some hospitals $35,000, a year. We took it off the average incremental cost.

The decision as to how to operate the hospital and apportion it within the hospital is, in fact, with the individual hospital board.

I think it would be folly for any hospital to think it can plan to use private funds on a long-term basis. Clearly, the intent of the budget formula is to treat all hospitals in the province equally and equitably to maintain a high level of service.

Let me just say one other thing that bears repeating: In tying the budget formula to the bed allocation formulas, one point seems to be missed quite often by the media and by the rest of us. That is that we're talking about moving towards a reduced number of treatment beds, but making provision, as was mentioned in Her Honour's remarks on Tuesday, for expansion of chronic and/or extended care facilities where they are needed.

Mr. T. P. Reid: That's not taking place.

Mrs. Campbell: That doesn't happen.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: That work is already under way in most parts of the province.

LAKESHORE PSYCHIATRIC HOSPITAL

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Health. To quote the Reverend Frank Drea, "Enough is enough."

An hon. member: The irreverent.

Mr. Lawlor: "Budget cuts to hospitals are beginning to hurt the quality of service and it's time to start easing up."

Mr. Breough: We are with you.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege, that is not what I said.

Mr. Renwick: What did you say?

Mr. Lawlor: Does the Minister of Health disagree with his colleague's statement; and, in view of his own McKinsey report recommending the necessary retention of Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital, what justification can there possibly be for his arbitrary decision to close it?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege before the minister answers the question—

Mr. T. P. Reid: You're not a reverend?

Hon. Mr. Drea: —I don't know where the member got that from but I did not say that.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Check the tape.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I spoke in Hamilton last night. I was asked a question which particularly applied to hospitals.

Mr. Foulds: It is too bad you answered it.

Mr. McClellan: You should have kept your mouth shut.

Hon. Mr. Drea: What I said is, if a hospital, large or small, can demonstrate that its quality of service is being affected, then the Minister of Health, as he has done in the past, is prepared to make individual adjustments. That is why I am very proud that this government has the finest-quality health care in the world.

Mr. Warner: You can't wiggle out of this one.

Mr. Mackenzie: You shot from the hip again and you got caught.

Mr. Lawlor: It's a direct quote.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Health has the answer to the question from the member for Lakeshore.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I thought that sounded pretty good. Does that mean I can disagree with what the member said the minister said? I guess I can because he didn't say it.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: To go back to the statement I made on January 22, which I think is fairly clear, in outlining the steps which led to that announcement of the government's intention to close the Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital on September 1 of this year, I can only say, as I said then, it was not an easy decision clearly. But given the condition of the building, the capacity available in modern—in fact, new facilities—at Queen Street Mental Health Centre, additional capacity available at Hamilton Psychiatric Hospital, the fact that capital funds are not likely to be available into the 1980s for more than one hospital to be rebuilt—and both are in bad condition—and the fact that Whitby Psychiatric Hospital serves an area that goes as far east, if I remember correctly, as the Hastings-Peterborough county line and as far north as Victoria and Haliburton—

Mr. Eakins: A great area.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: A great Tory area.

Mr. Nixon: It may be federally.

Mr. Martel: Is there a difference?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —while it was a difficult decision, it seemed to me that the alternatives were not acceptable.

Mr. McClellan: It would have been easier if it was a Tory area, would it?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The alternatives were to leave the hospital as it is or to try to continue to patch up what is clearly an unacceptable facility.

Mr. Lawlor: Supplementary: Is the minister totally inflexible about this closing or would he be open to an alternative proposal with respect to a phased or staged replacement, say, over five years, of the facilities at Lakeshore?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Looking ahead to the future, it is difficult to predict what the exact needs are going to be in five to 10 years. If one had asked us, let us say 10 or 12 years back from now, what the needs would be, the chances are any prediction that would have been made would have been quite inaccurate. A decade or more ago, we had about 16,000 people in psychiatric hospitals in this province. We now have just over 4,000. So any prediction one might have made in 1967, 1968 or 1969 would probably have been dead wrong.

I don't like to seem inflexible, but let me just say that I don't see that the facts have changed. The capacity is still there at Queen Street and at Hamilton. We still have an antiquated building at Lakeshore. I don't intend ever to have another phone call, the likes of which I had last November at the time of the fire, in which a person died in that facility.

The capital funds are not going to be available into the 1980s to build two hospitals. Cabinet has agreed to make them available to build one. I don't see that the facts have changed.

Mr. Foulds: We can build hydro plants.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I just want to say the decision would have to stand.

Mr. Warner: The minister is inflexible.

Mr. Gaunt: I have a supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: Dealing with the Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital?

Mr. Gaunt: Dealing with the initial question of my colleague.

Mr. Speaker: That is what the initial question was. Do you have a supplementary?

Mr. Gaunt: The initial question was with reference to the statement of the minister, the member for Scarborough Centre, in which he stated that individual adjustments would be made.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I did not make it.

Mr. Gaunt: I want to relate my questions to those individual adjustments, if I may, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Go ahead. Try it.

Hon. Mr. Drea: They have been made.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Is the member for Huron-Bruce making an adjustment?

Mr. Gaunt: Since the referral population of Bruce county is 13.3 per cent, I believe, constituted of people over 65 years of age, and the same figure in Huron county is 12.9, would the minister, in view of the fact that the chronic bed situation across the province is not being relieved up until this point—

Mr. Speaker: That is not supplementary. That is really stretching it. I would have to disallow that.

[3:00]

Mr. Gaunt: What steps would the minister advise the hospitals to take in order to see that this chronic bed situation is relieved?

Mr. Speaker: No, a new question.

DOWNTOWN REVITALIZATION

Mr. Watson: I have a question of the Minister of Housing. In view of the fact that the Ministry of Housing is responsible for the downtown redevelopment policy and programs of the government and in view of the fact that the city of Chatham along with other cities in Ontario has made application to the ministry under this redevelopment program, could the minister advise the House as to the status of this program? Specifically, could the minister advise me as to the status of the application of the city of Chatham with regard to funds for this program?

Mr. Foulds: Darcy McKeough never had to answer questions like that.

Mr. Laughren: He went ahead and did it.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: The downtown revitalization program has been one of the most successful programs that we've implemented in assisting municipalities in redeveloping the downtown cores and trying to improve the assessment position.

Mr. Warner: You read that well.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: In the last two or three years we have allocated some 30-odd millions of dollars and, more specifically in the case of Cornwall, $8½ million in the redevelopment of that particular community.

At the moment, we have about 16 or 17 applications that are on our primary list for review and development. In the case of Chatham, and I might say Sault Ste. Marie, which are likely the two closest to being completed at this time, we hope that with the continuation of the negotiations between our—

An hon. member: That is a pork barrel.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I'll tell members, if it's a pork barrel, the opposition ridings have done very well out of it, I can assure them.

My ministry will continue to negotiate with Chatham and the others to try to come to a conclusion. Just today I was in touch with the city of Chatham and the council advising them that we hope they'll continue their negotiations and that the provision of funding will come forward very shortly.

FUNDING OF POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

Mr. Sweeney: I have a question of the Premier. Given that the federal government is going to be transferring to this government $88 million of new dollars for post-secondary education, how can the Premier explain that his government is only authorizing the transfer of $55 million of new dollars to the Ontario universities and colleges? Where did the other $33 million go?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I don't know what the member means by new money. We've been short-changed in our transfers from Ottawa for generations. I don't know that there's any new money.

I think the member should ask a very simple question and should take a position. If he doesn't feel that we're being fair to the universities and colleges in terms of our transfers to them, let him say so. Let him get up and say a Liberal government would give them 10 per cent at the same time as it would deprive others. We are distributing to the universities and colleges of this province an equitable proportion of that which we are spending on all our various programs. I would also say, contrary to the member's point of view, we think it is not only equitable, but it will give the universities and colleges the opportunity to maintain what is an excellent, high-quality, post-secondary system.

Mr. Sweeney: Where's the rest of the money? The Premier never answered my question. He never does. This change in funding mechanism means that the province will now only bear 45 per cent of the cost compared to 51 per cent last year. Since his government has the constitutional responsibility for education, does the Premier think that sharing is appropriate?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'll just remind the member of a little history in terms of post-secondary education in this province, history that relates to his party.

Mr. Sweeney: Is it appropriate or not?

Hon. Mr. Davis: His party was in the process some years ago under certain leadership whereby not only was there a per capita grant for students, but it was involved with the provinces in terms of technical and vocational training for the post-secondary institutions which we now call our community colleges. His good friends in Ottawa opted out and that left this province with the total responsibility for capital funding. We have done this for the past 10 years; we have assumed the total responsibility for all the capital expansion within the post-secondary field.

Mr. Van Horne: And who was the Minister of Education then?

Mr. Sweeney: We're talking about operating funds, not capital funds.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member's friends in Ottawa haven't provided a nickel. I don't know whether there is a surplus in terms of their transfer. All I know is the taxpayers of this province have provided the capital, they have provided the bulk of the operating expenses to the post-secondary institutions and they are receiving in terms of our priorities what we think is an equitable share.

If the member wants to argue with some of his colleagues on the front bench that the universities should get more and the hospitals less, let him do so at his own risk.

HOCKEY VIOLENCE

Mr. Martel: A question of the Attorney General: Because of the continued violence in hockey with fighting still condoned in many leagues and, I believe, the escalation of stick-swinging, cross-checking and slashing since the introduction of helmets and masks, would the minister agree with me that something must be done to reduce violence in hockey and to increase the development of skills?

Hon. Mr. Davis: How about verbal violence in the House?

Mr. Martel: I am never part of that.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, I received a fairly lengthy and a very powerfully written letter from the member recently and I must say that I share his concerns completely. Despite the efforts of some minor hockey leagues to improve the situation so far as the removal of mindless violence, unnecessary violence, is concerned, I think there is still some distance to go. I want to say that I welcome the member's concern in this particular area because I believe it touches the lives of many thousands of young people across this country.

Mr. Martel: Supplementary: Would the Attorney General consider the possibility of a select committee to look into violence and make recommendations which might be introduced to improve the quality of hockey in this province?

Hon. Mr. Davis: We are more concerned about violence in the media.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, it is not my position to determine whether or not a select committee would be the appropriate vehicle, but I do believe very strongly, as does the member opposite, that there should be a forum in this Legislature whereby the concerns of not only members of the Legislature but of many concerned citizens across this province could be expressed.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Does the Attorney General recall that a study was done by request of the Legislature arising from questions that I and others asked?

Mr. Nixon: That was the Patrick Reid study.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I forget who actually wrote the thing now; the name slips my mind. But does the Attorney General not think that the situation, far from getting better since that report, has, as my honourable friend says, in fact got worse, that the violence is a part of the very funny things that go on in the hockey system in the province of Ontario with six-year-old children having to have contracts and being traded back and forth and so on and—

Mr. Speaker: That's hardly in keeping with the original question.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Well, it's violence as well, Mr. Speaker. Does he not think it is time that he, perhaps with the Minister of Culture and Recreation (Mr. Baetz), did a study at least on their own into the whole system of hockey in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Again, Mr. Speaker, the report that the honourable member is referring to was prepared by one William McMurtry approximately five or six years ago. I commend it to all members of the Legislature as a very excellent report. I do this in the most impartial manner possible.

Hon. Mr. Davis: And I want you to be sure no royalties are payable.

Mr. Cunningham: I want to hear from Mickey.

Mr. Hennessy: That's right, you will hear some sense.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: This is really a form of violence against the clock.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: All I can Mr. Speaker, is that I would welcome any initiative that would help alleviate what I do regard as a serious and a continuing problem.

Mr. Speaker: Does the member for Fort William have a new question?

Mr. Hennessy: I would like to question by what right has this government to get into minor hockey and to have a select committee? There is more violence and hot air that should be investigated right here in this House, never mind about that.

Mr. Speaker: That was a statement, not a question.

GRAND RIVER FLOODING

Mr. Nixon: I don't want to interfere with a possible answer from anybody in the ministry, but under your direction, Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Natural Resources, notice of which I gave him, having to do with the flood situation on the Grand River which caused considerable damage on Tuesday, March 6. Can he explain why the conservation authority was not able to give sufficient warning to the community so that the people and their household effects could be moved out of the way of the flood, and why the conservation authority did not take an initiative or a responsibility to break up the ice jams that caused the flooding?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to thank the honourable member for the notice getting through. Perhaps you might permit me to read a brief report which has come to me through our conservation authorities branch from the conservation authority on the Grand River.

I am informed that the assistant general manager of the authority discussed the removal of the jam with municipal officials, recognizing the possibility of spring flooding in that area over the five-mile stretch between Paris and Brantford. The most recent meeting—there were several meetings I gather—was on Friday, March 2, when the possibility of ice rafting and river flow blockage was discussed and arrangements were made for local municipal police to maintain close surveillance.

Responsibility for issuing a flood warning was left with the municipality because flooding was expected to be local in nature and municipal staff were in a much better position to observe its development.

The January observation of the ice jam led to the conclusion that because of the extent of the jam, it was not feasible to attempt to remove it by dynamiting. Under low flow conditions which existed at that time, dynamiting was seen as merely transferring the problem somewhere downstream. As a matter of policy the authority does not undertake ice jam removal by dynamiting. In this particular instance, conservation authority officials discussed the advisability of this method of removal and left responsibility and liability with the municipality.

From the report I have from my staff, it appears that the municipality did not request assistance to cope with the flood emergency because it did not escalate beyond the capability of the municipality to deal with it.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary: Does the minister not agree that it is beyond the capability of a relatively small municipality to undertake the kind of dynamiting that surely would obviously lie with the responsibility of the river authority? It can't be done without their permission. Would he not feel, particularly since this has now happened a few days ago, that we should undertake some direction to see that it does not happen again, if this is possible, and that the government would give every assurance to the community of the kind of financial support that is going to be necessary to assist the people who were injured and had their goods damaged through no fault of their own?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I got this report a few minutes before I came to the House. I must say that in reading it the inference I take is that the authority discussed with the municipality what might be done, and was under the impression that the municipality was going to carry out whatever it was decided was necessary. However, it is not clear, and I had asked for a little further information about this, which I will convey to the honourable members as soon as I get it. If it appears there is something we should be doing in connection with the arrangements we make each year—as the honourable member knows, the minister writes to heads of all municipalities and all the conservation authorities—we give twice-monthly snow moisture content reports and we have a pretty good warning system, but it may well be that there can be some improvements made.

HURONIA REGIONAL CENTRE

Mr. McClellan: I have a question for the Minister of Community and Social Services, arising from his statement. Mr. Speaker, while it is difficult to get the sense of what the minister was saying in the first and sixth paragraphs on the first page, if you remove the subordinate clauses, he stated that the police report concluded that there was evidence to suggest resident abuse and there was limited corroboration of allegation. I want to ask the minister if he will table the police report, making provision, of course, for anonymity; but I want to ask him to table that report so we can understand what in the hell is going on there.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I have considered that possibility and, at the present time, I have been advised by the crown law officers that the status of the report is such that it ought not to be made a public document. I can assure the honourable member that the reference in that paragraph does relate to the fact that there were allegations. There certainly were allegations, as has been indicated for some time.

Mr. McClellan: You said it was evidence.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Well, perhaps that was a poor choice of words. But I suppose any allegation is some evidence; the question is, whether there is any corroborating evidence—

Mr. McClellan: What did the police report conclude, then? Was there evidence or not?

Hon. Mr. Norton: —which might have given rise, either to the laying of charges by the police, or to our ministry taking specific disciplinary action against an individual.

The answer to that is no, there was not sufficient evidence of that. There were allegations that would not support that action.

VEHICLE LICENCE FEES

Mr. Blundy: I wish to ask the Premier a question. Given the substantial difference in the cost of automobile licence plate sticker renewals between northern Ontario and southern Ontario, and given the fact that I have with me petitions with the names of over 11,000 people, which will be presented at the appropriate time, is the Premier giving any consideration to rectifying the difference in treatment of the people of southern Ontario and the people of northern Ontario?

Mr. McClellan: Does the Liberal Party support this?

Mr. Martel: I like that.

Mr. Cassidy: That is the end of your party.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Where does your party stand? Where do you stand?

Mr. Conway: It is the national unity plank scaled down.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I understand, Mr. Speaker, that the very distinguished member from Sarnia has indicated to his constituents—

Mr. Foulds: I can understand why they have so few seats up north.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —that it would be Liberal Party policy to have licence fees the same across the province. This is the report I get from that great municipality. In that I assume he is speaking for the Liberal Party. That party would, in fact,—

Mr. Eaton: What is the matter, Pat?

Hon. Mr. Davis: —not try to find some way to equalize opportunity in this province; would not try to find some way to recognize the transportation difficulties and the problems confronting the people in northern Ontario. His party is so oriented obviously, today, to Metro; tomorrow, who knows where, geographically?

I would have to say to the member for Sarnia, no, we are not contemplating it. The rationale is very simple. It is understood, I hope by all of us. We are attempting, as a government, and we are using this vehicle, to recognize that there are certain problems related to northern Ontario, which, unfortunately, your party has failed to recognize. And that's why you have one seat in the House here from the north; and that's probably all you'll ever get.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, two. Sorry. That's all you'll ever get.

Mr. Conway: Merle Dickerson is still in North Bay.

INTERNATIONAL WOMEN'S DAY

Mr. Bounsall: On a point of privilege, I am very concerned about the situation here today. This being International Women's Day, are we not going to revert to "Statements by the Ministry" so that the Minister of Labour and Manpower (Mr. Elgie) may announce some new legislative initiative in this field, none of which is planned for at all?

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member knows that is not a point of privilege.

VEHICLE LICENCE FEES

Mr. Blundy: I have over 10,000 names on a petition addressed to the Premier—including the name of the mayor of Sarnia, who was my competitor in the last election, running for the Tory government—and 400 letters from people on the same topic. I would like to present it on their behalf.

REPORTS

STANDING RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE

Mr. Havrot from the standing resources development committee presented the following report and moved its adoption:

Your committee recommends that the annual report of the Ministry of the Environment for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1977, be referred again to the committee in order that consideration of this report may be completed by the committee.

Your committee further recommends that the annual report of the Ontario Highway Transport Board for 1977 be referred again to the committee in order that consideration of this report may be completed by the committee.

Report adopted.

STANDING ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE COMMITTEE

Mr. Philip from the standing administration of justice committee presented the following report and moved its adoption:

Your committee begs to report the following bills with certain amendments:

Bill 74, An Act to establish a Code of Procedure for Provincial Offences.

Bill 75, An Act to amend the Provincial Courts Act.

Report adopted.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

MOTIONS

APPOINTMENT OF DEPUTY CHAIRMAN

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that the member for Humber (Mr. MacBeth) be appointed Deputy Chairman of the committee of the whole House for this session.

Motion agreed to.

APPOINTMENT OF STANDING COMMITTEES

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that the following standing committees be established for this session with power to examine and inquire into all such matters as may be referred to them by the House, with power to send for persons, papers and things as provided in section 35 of the Legislative Assembly Act:

General government committee: Messrs. Ashe, Charlton, Duzsza, Epp, Handleman, Hennessy, Hodgson, Laughren, Mancini, McCaffrey, McEwen, McGuigan and Samis, Mrs. Scrivener, and Messrs. G. E. Smith and Turner;

Resources development committee: Mr. Bolan, Ms. Bryden, Messrs. di Santo, Eaton, Foulds, Havrot, Johnson, Lane, McNeil, J. Reed, Riddell, Van Horne, Villeneuve, Watson, Wildman and Yakabuski; Administration of justice committee: Mr. Bradley, Mrs. Campbell, Messrs. Cureatz, Kerr, Lupusella, Philip, Renwick, Rotenberg, Roy, Sterling, Stong, Swart, G. Taylor, J. A. Taylor, Williams and Ziemba.

Social development committee: Messrs. Belanger, Blundy, Cooke and Gaunt, Ms. Gigantes, Messrs. Grande, Jones, Kennedy, Kerrio, Leluk, McClellan, O'Neil, Pope, Ramsay, Rowe and Sweeney;

Public accounts committee: Messrs. Germa, Hall, Handelman, Leluk, Mackenzie, Makarchuk, Peterson, Pope, Ramsay, T. P. Reid, Sargent and G. Taylor.

The report of the provincial auditor for 1977-78 and the public accounts for 1977-78 are referred to the public accounts committee.

The standing statutory instruments committee is appointed for the session, to be the committee provided for by section 12 of the Regulations Act, and has the terms of reference as set out in that section, and the said committee, in addition to those powers, shall review and consider, first, the role of the committee, with particular reference to the recommendations of the select committee on the fourth and fifth reports of the Ontario Commission on the Legislature, and the practices of the parliaments of Canada and the United Kingdom; and, secondly, the establishment of guidelines to be observed in the delegation by statutes of power to make statutory instruments and the use made of such delegated power.

The said committee is to report its recommendations to the House and, in addition to the normal powers of the standing committees to send for persons, papers and things, it shall have the power to employ counsel and such other staff as the committee considers necessary.

The committee shall be composed of eight members as follows: Messrs. Cureatz, M. N. Davison, Eakins, McCaffrey, McKessock, Rollins, Swart and Williams.

That the standing members' services committee be appointed for the session to examine the services to members from time to time and, without interfering with the statutory responsibility of the Board of Internal Economy in such matters, the committee is empowered to recommend to the consideration of the House matters it wishes to draw to the special attention of the board, and that the committee be empowered to act as an advisory committee to Mr. Speaker and to the Board of Internal Economy on the administration of the House and on the provision of services and facilities to members, and to draw the special attention of the House to such matters as the committee believes require it.

The committee shall be composed of eight members as follows: Mr. Bounsall, Mrs. Campbell, Messrs. Conway, Jones, B. Newman, G. E. Smith, Watson and Young.

Motion agreed to.

COMMITTEE SUBSTITUTIONS

Hon. Mr. Welch moved, unless otherwise ordered, that substitution be permitted on all standing committees, provided that notice of substitution is given to the chairman of the committee prior to the commencement of the meeting.

Motion agreed to.

COMMITTEE MEETING

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that the procedural affairs committee be authorized to meet concurrently with the House this afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

COUNTY OF MIDDLESEX ACT

Hon. Mr. Henderson moved first reading of Bill 2, An Act respecting the County of Middlesex.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Riddell: Is that pertaining to the good old court house, Lorne?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Yes, sir.

Mr. Riddell: That's the way to go.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this section is to vest the title of the lands described in the schedule in the corporation of the county of Middlesex in fee simple. The lands were granted to the county in 1868, subject to a trust that the lands be used for the purpose of a county jail and courthouse. The lands are no longer required for such purpose.

Section 2: this provision will enable the Minister of Government Services to make a grant to the corporation of the county of Middlesex to assist the county in financing the cost of restoring the former county courthouse.

EMPLOYMENT STANDARDS AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Bounsall moved first reading of Bill 3, An Act to amend the Employment Standards Act, 1974.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Bounsall: Mr. Speaker, this bill would establish equal pay for work of equal value and ensure that no discrimination, or differential in pay, can occur on the basis of sex.

The present Employment Standards Act establishes only that there be equal pay for men and women when performing substantially the same work. This bill therefore would eliminate the all-too-common situation where jobs filled only by women and which are of higher skill, effort and responsibility, have a lower pay rate than jobs filled by men working for the same employer. It would require an employment standards officer to assess the value of the work performed and would allow a differential to pertain between employees on the basis of seniority or quantity of production only.

This legislation is long overdue, Mr. Speaker. Discrimination in pay on the basis of sex must end.

[3:30]

NON-UNIONIZED WORKERS RIGHTS ACT

Mr. Haggerty moved first reading of Bill 4, An Act respecting the Rights of Non-Unionized Workers.

Motion agreed to.

An hon. member: Somehow I don't think that will pass.

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Speaker, the explanatory note for this bill is: The purpose of the bill is to provide a low-cost mechanism whereby a non-unionized worker may obtain a review by the Ontario Labour Relations Board where the worker is discharged or otherwise disciplined for cause and the contract of employment is silent on matters of discipline. At the present time, a non-unionized worker who is dismissed or otherwise disciplined for cause may have no right of action against his employer, notwithstanding the fact that the discipline is, having regard to all of the circumstances, unduly harsh.

The bill provides a two-stage process for reviewing complaints involving harsh discipline. Initially, a labour relations officer would be appointed to effect a settlement which would be reduced to writing and which would have to be complied with according to its terms. If no settlement is reached, or where a settlement is not likely, the Ontario Labour Relations Board would inquire into the matter. The board, if satisfied that the complaint is justified, will have the power to make an order substituting such penalty as is just and reasonable in the circumstances.

PITS AND QUARRIES CONTROL AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Warner moved first reading of Bill 5, An Act to amend the Pits and Quarries Control Act, 1971.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill is to provide power to the Minister of Natural Resources to fill in hazardous abandoned pits and quarries, and thereby redress a serious problem in the province of Ontario.

LABOUR RELATIONS AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Haggerty moved first reading of Bill 6, An Act to amend the Labour Relations Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Speaker, the explanatory note is: The purpose of the bill is to provide a mechanism whereby the Lieutenant Governor in Council can order a 60-day suspension of a strike or lockout and order a return to work where the strike or lockout constitutes an immediate and serious danger to life, health or safety, or seriously disrupts the economy of the province or any area of the province.

The bill provides that the Minister of Labour must appoint a conciliation officer where an order suspending a strike or lockout has been made and may subsequently appoint a conciliation board where the efforts of the conciliation officer to effect a collective agreement are unsuccessful. If conciliation efforts are unsuccessful, a strike or lockout may be resumed without a further strike vote. An order made under the bill would be enforceable as an order of the Supreme Court.

MOTION TO SUSPEND NORMAL BUSINESS

Mr. Speaker: Before the orders of the day, I have received a notice under section 34 of the standing orders from the honourable Leader of the Opposition that he wants to suspend the ordinary business of the House for a matter of urgent public importance.

The Leader of the Opposition, for up to five minutes.

Mr. S. Smith: The Premier has just said that he agrees to the suspension. If all three parties agree, then I don't have to make the speech.

Mr. Foulds: You've got to make your arguments.

Mr. S. Smith: I will continue with my speech.

Mr. Speaker: Under standing order 34, each party has the right to put up a spokesman for up to five minutes, at which time—

Mr. Nixon: The NDP has not agreed.

Mr. Speaker: If there isn't that concurrence, we will hear the Leader of the Opposition for up to five minutes.

Mr. S. Smith: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will try to be brief.

The members are undoubtedly aware that the motion of which I gave you notice, sir, says that the matter of urgent public importance is the failure of the province to provide the funds necessary to avert the fare increase of the Toronto Transit Commission. We regard this to be of urgency because of the decline in ridership, which has been noticeable for some time, and the fact that a fare increase is expected to accelerate that decline.

The falling ridership jeopardizes, in our view, the long-term viability of the transit system in Ontario's largest municipality, the decline of which would have serious energy use and financial implications for all citizens of Ontario.

The Metropolitan government has agreed to match the required additional provincial contribution. Toronto is asking, not for special treatment but for equal treatment with other large municipalities of Ontario. And, of course, without the additional funds, the fares will increase on March 12, 1979. That was the substance of the motion, Mr. Speaker.

What I would care to say, in defending the need for this emergency debate on the matter, is basically that the urgency stems from the fact that the fares are to go up imminently.

The fact of the matter is we have not had a chance in this Legislature to debate the question of this particular additional allocation of funds for the TTC. Although we have raised it, as you know, in question period, in press conferences, by newsletter, by open letters to the Premier and so on, we haven't yet had a chance to debate this matter. In view of the imminence of the fare increase, it seems to us an urgent matter to discuss in the House at this time.

During this few minutes while we debate whether or not we are going to have an emergency debate, I want to make clear that this is not just a question of the nickel which everyone has spoken about. Hardship as that may be for certain people in society, that is not the primary problem. The primary problem is that ridership has been declining in the Toronto Transit Commission situation for the last several years.

This declining ridership is not a situation which finds its parallel in some of the other large municipal areas in Ontario. Toronto is in a unique position because of its very size, because of its megalopolis-like character. The fact of the matter is we have experience in other jurisdictions which indicates that, once ridership begins to decline on a steady basis, a fare increase leading to a further decline in ridership might just be the signal indicating an imminent downward spiral.

What happens is that you increase the fares, ridership further declines and, consequently, the fare box revenue declines. That leads either to further decisions to increase fares or difficulty in maintaining services, or even conscious decisions to decrease services. Little by little, you have a downward spiral affecting mass transit.

Surely, when we are thinking now of problems for the future, when we think of the enormous amount of capital funds already put into the TTC by every taxpayer of Ontario, it does not make sense, in our largest concentration of population, to take the risk that there will, in fact, be such a downward spiral.

One final word before we get into the substance of the debate, should you, in your wisdom, sir, rule that the debate will go forward: I want to make it clear that in the situation before us in Toronto we are not, in fact, saying that the money should be given simply as a remedy for the situation. We know that it will take more than a one-year fare freeze to make any substantial difference in the declining situation in ridership. We know that what is required on the part of Metropolitan Toronto and the TTC is a bold plan, a pro-transit plan, a clear indication of where they are going structurally to make transit more appealing to the citizens in this large metropolitan area.

I would like to say therefore, that the sensible way we can, in fact, achieve this particular end is for the Metropolitan government to put forward the $6 million that it would be required to put forward, for the fares to be frozen for a period of time—I suggest one year—and for the provincial government to commit itself to its $6 million subsidy only on condition that there be a proper pro-transit plan brought forward from the Metropolitan government in the next six months. That, it would seem to me, is a sensible and reasonable approach which would accomplish all the goals that surely members of this House must desire. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker: Is there a spokesman from the New Democratic Party? The member for Riverdale, for up to five minutes.

Mr. Renwick: I would, as always, out of courtesy defer to the government House leader for his five minutes.

Hon. Mr. Welch: You know the order is established this way.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Go ahead, Jimmy.

Mr. Renwick: Oh, I see, it's this way today.

Mr. Speaker, in order to assist you in making your decision under the new rules as to whether you should be in favour of the proposed motion or not, I have four or five matters that I would like to comment about.

First of all let me say that we will abide by your decision. If you rule in favour of the motion then we will vote for the debate to proceed when that question is put. If you rule against the motion, we shall abide by your decision in any event.

You will have noticed, and I am certain that the other members of the House will have noticed, that on the order paper today standing in the name of the leader of this party is a resolution under standing order 63(a) under Part X of the standing orders relating to private members' public business. That rule, if I may draw your attention to it, Mr. Speaker, states that: "In any session upon proper notice, the official opposition is entitled to not more than three motions of want of confidence in the government; the third party is entitled to not more than two such motions and any other recognized party to one such motion." I rather regret that we're required to use up one of our two motions of no-confidence in the government on this particular issue when the official opposition has three, and I'm quite certain at the end of the session in all likelihood all three of their opportunities will remain available to them.

The third matter that I want to draw to your attention is that there is absolutely—

Hon. Mr. Davis: If you were wise you would keep yours for years.

Mr. Renwick: —that there is, I submit, no conflict whatsoever between the motion standing in the name of the leader of this party and the motion put by the leader of the official opposition. You will note specifically under the new orders that our motion is a substantive motion under standing order 37(a) which is under the heading, part VIII of the standing orders, Substantive Motions. I would like, if I may, to draw to your attention and to the attention of the House specifically the wording of that standing order.

Mr. Nixon: Are you suggesting the debate should not go forward?

Mr. Renwick: "A substantive motion is one which is not incidental to any other business of the House but is a self-contained proposal capable of expressing a decision of the House." I'd like to emphasize that it is a substantive motion and the conclusive words are, "capable of expressing a decision of the House." Of course, the motion put forward by the Liberal Party falls under the heading of Procedural Motions under part VII of the standing rules and is merely a procedural motion which permits a discussion with no decision. Or if we could use baseball parlance, it's all wind-up and no pitch.

Mr. Martel: It's called bluff.

[3:45]

Mr. Renwick: I simply want to submit, Mr. Speaker, that there is no reason whatsoever why there should be any ruling on your part that there is any conflict between the one motion which we have put, which is one of substance, and the motion of the Liberal Party, which relates merely to procedural matters.

Mr. Nixon: The motion is political posturing.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, the question for your consideration is: Does this matter proposed for discussion relate to a genuine emergency call for immediate and urgent consideration? It is such a matter. If it were not so, we would not be moving want of confidence in the government. It is for us a matter of confidence and also, a fortiori or a priori, whichever is the appropriate Latin expression, on a matter of this importance we have no alternative but to support the urgency of this debate. It is an emergency at this time because on Monday next the TTC fares will increase from 42-6/7 cents to 50 cents by ticket or token per ride, an increase of something in the neighbourhood of 17 per cent.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I therefore will simply say that I hope my remarks have been of assistance to you and that we will abide by the decision which you will make.

Mr. Nixon: Strike three.

Mr. S. Smith: Are you in favour or against?

Mr. Speaker: The honourable Premier, for up to five minutes.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I will deal with this very briefly. We are quite prepared to debate this matter. I listened very attentively to the Leader of the Opposition and his rationale, which I guess was relevant. We have a concern, and I will express this during my brief contribution. I wouldn't say for a moment that the Leader of the Opposition is concerned about the by-election in Scarborough West nor would I say this of the New Democratic Party, although I do find it somewhat difficult to understand its motion of no-confidence in terms of the fare increase when several months ago it was prepared to have the transit riders of Metropolitan Toronto deprived of service for who knows how long. In fact, if they had had their way, there might not be any service today. I do find that a little bit contradictory.

Mr. Martel: We find your position strange with respect to labour's rights.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, now come on, Elie, come on. Let's be very frank. Let's face it. You people are worried about Scarborough West and I understand that.

Mr. Martel: Don't be foolish.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Listen, Elie, when you were handing out those things to say call my office, and I had some interesting calls—

Mr. Martel: I wasn't here.

Hon. Mr. Davis: You weren't here? Who handed them out? Well, listen, whoever handed them out, why didn't you give them another slip of paper saying the province was giving an 8.4 per cent increase and the province put the TTC back in functioning order last fall when we as a party did what you weren't prepared to do? Why didn't you tell them the whole story, so that when I got the phone calls I would have got an objective analysis?

An hon. member: That would be honest.

Mr. Martel: You know Michael Warren.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh come on now, Elie. Mr. Speaker, I really don't want to use up the full five minutes but everybody else did and I think my observations are as relevant as theirs. I would only say to the Leader of the Opposition that I recognize he is put in the position where he has to do something. I would just read to him his communique from Sarasota. This was a transcript of his conversation with the CBC as he was studying public transit in that great community. Well, I doubt it.

Mr. S. Smith: At my expense, unlike your Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry).

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would just say to the Leader of the Opposition in that transcript he was thinking of no-confidence; today it's an emergency. I would only say we have been hard pressed to understand exactly what his position is, and I see some quotation where he suggested he wasn't sure until he consulted with the rural reeves of Ontario, something of that nature. I am looking forward to the contribution from the member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent), who isn't here, and the member for Huron-Middlesex (Mr. Riddell). I am anxious to hear their contribution in this debate.

An hon. member: And the member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. Watson).

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am very anxious. I will have some observations to make on the substance of it, but I don't want this House to feel that we are not prepared to debate this. We are. It's a very difficult problem these days in government to assess the priorities. I heard the Leader of the Opposition being correctly quoted yesterday I believe—well, I won't, I will save that for my 10 minutes a little later on. Mr. Speaker, we agree to the debate. We will leave it up to your good wisdom, your good judgement, to assess whether it is in fact an emergency and to deal with the two sides of the issue as presented by the member for Riverdale, which to me didn't indicate whether he wanted the debate to proceed or not.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the honourable members for their contribution, which assists me in making up my mind. I see and I am prepared to state that the notice given by the Leader of the Opposition does in general terms meet the requirements of standing order 34; the only thing for the House to decide now is whether or not the debate should proceed.

Shall the debate proceed?

Motion agreed to.

TTC FARE INCREASE

Mr. S. Smith: I want to be clear that as taxpayers of Ontario throughout the province, we have put an enormous amount of money into the mass transit system in the Toronto area. In fact, the capital costs have been truly staggering. As soon as you have to start building those facilities—which are either above ground level or subways below ground—you run into enormous costs. That is what happens in large metropolitan areas where the density of population is such that these measures are required.

Over the years I believe this province has done its part to support the transit system in the Toronto area. However, despite the best intentions on the part of the province, and despite I think reasonable intentions—although some perhaps questionable decisions in the planning of Metropolitan Toronto—we have come up against a problem.

The problem is not the question of a nickel fare. That is not the problem. Nor is in dispute the question that the extension of services would in itself increase ridership, because most would agree that extensions of services would increase ridership. The problem is that ridership has been declining; it has been declining now for several years consecutively. It is predicted that the fare increase about to be implemented will further cause a decline in ridership.

Nowhere can anyone guarantee that freezing the fare would stem that decline. It is quite possible the decline will happen anyway. Frankly, it is a very difficult thing to predict. The prediction is that the decline will worsen. The most conservative prediction I have seen is a decline of six million riders. I have seen it as high as 10 million with the fare increase, but even these predictions cannot be taken as gospel. I am the first to admit that.

But we are at a point where we might just find ourselves unfortunately propelled into a downward spiral which will be very difficult to rectify once it gains momentum. We may just be at that knife edge and we are warned by some experts that that could happen. We see cities in the United States where the policing costs of these white elephant transit systems are in many instances worse than the operating costs. People stop using it; people sleep in the suburbs and use their automobiles.

I know that the Premier shares with me the desire to see a healthy mass transit system in Ontario because a lot of money has been put in by his government, and I recognize that. The concern we have—and I hope it is understood to be a very sincere worry—is that the decline in ridership, if permitted to accelerate—

Hon. Mr. Davis: That's not how you expressed it.

Mr. S. Smith: —with this fare increase might lead us into that downward spiral where the fare box would be expected constantly to make up more and more of the lost revenue due to the decline in ridership. The fact that most riders will still continue to ride despite the additional nickel is not the point. Some will not and that decline in ridership will, of course, reduce the revenues. You get into a vicious spiral in which you either have to reduce your services, Mr. Speaker, or you have to increase your fares even further, and ultimately your services eventually start to crumble.

We put it to you, Mr. Speaker, and we put it to the people of Ontario, that we have put an enormous investment into Toronto already. It is by far the largest metropolitan centre we have in Ontario. Its problems are qualitatively different; and yet in terms of its operating subsidy—and I hope the Premier will not confuse operating with capital subsidy here—in terms of its operating subsidy it receives a percentage less than other large municipalities with a population of over 200,000. Seventeen point five is the percentage subsidy that comes from the province for other large areas, whereas in this instance it is 13.75 per cent plus the Spadina, which brings it to about 15 per cent.

If this could be brought up to the same level as other centres then we might be able to get this one-year fare freeze. Not a panacea, we recognize that, and not a guaranteed solution; but at least giving an opportunity for a proper transit plan to be presented to the people of Toronto and the people of Ontario.

The proper transit plan is a matter of some dispute. For sure, it has to involve new ways of supporting the idea of people riding the TTC rather than taking their automobiles. It is strange: just as we talk about energy crises in oil which we can do nothing about by building electrical generation plants, we can do something about by making sure that people use public transit instead of taking their own automobiles. Under these circumstances, it makes a lot of sense to support mass transit rather than see our tremendous investment in mass transit go down the drain just at the time when the oil crisis finally hits us; that would make the least sense.

The government would have a point, and I must say I have accepted some of them, in saying they want to see a good plan on paper for Metropolitan Toronto before the government's $6 million goes into that pot. I quote from the letter of Valentine's day in which it says, "A few tough decisions must be made before our government can responsibly consider additional subsidies."

My point would be that that is not an unreasonable position. If Metro is, as it has indicated, willing to put up its $6 million to begin with, then the government should accept that. It should allow the fares to be frozen and should demand a pro-transit plan from Metro as a condition for which the government would then provide its commitment of $6 million to make sure that the fares could be frozen. Then we could get under way with a good pro-transit policy, and not just delay it yet another year when it will require even more than a 14.5 per cent increase, because the ridership will have declined yet again and we will be going through this whole exercise all over again but with a smaller chance of eventual success.

I know that politically it is very easy to go around the rest of Ontario and say that the Liberals want to give something to Toronto. First of all, we want Toronto to get only the same percentage operating subsidy that other large centres get.

Hon. Mr. Davis: You are on dangerous ground, Stuart; you are on very dangerous ground.

Mr. S. Smith: Secondly, it should be very clear that most of the other large centres in Ontario do not have this problem of declining ridership, which is now imperilling the system in Toronto. Furthermore, the people from around Ontario have put a tremendous amount of money into the capital structure of this particular metropolitan area. It would not make sense to jeopardize their investment by letting this run down now; which is, of course, what the peril presently is.

What we say in summary—since I see that my time is running out and I don't wish to tax your patience Mr. Speaker—is this—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Whose patience?

Mr. S. Smith: The problem is that we have declining ridership in a very extensive system in Toronto. We must not allow mass transit to fail in Toronto. We must be totally dedicated to it. We need a new structure in Metropolitan Toronto supporting transit and making clear the determination that transit shall be the way of transportation in the future. We require that.

There is a chance that may slip from our grasp if there is a rapid ridership decline. If we can prevent that decline, and at the same time insist that Metro come forward with a good transit plan—which we can then have a chance to look at here in the Legislature—we have an opportunity to turn around a very frightening trend. We shouldn't wait until things hit us in the face. We should be able to anticipate the trends that are occurring and take the action required to remedy the situation.

Once again, it is not a question of the nickel; most people will be able to afford the nickel. It is a question of the health of the TTC, the downtrend in the ridership; and the fact that with the government subsidy coming after the Metropolitan subsidy, and that based upon a good plan of transit coming forward from Metropolitan Toronto, we have the opportunity to achieve both ends at once; that is possibly to stem the declining in ridership and to encourage, shall we say, the TTC and Metro to produce a genuine plan of action which will make sure that mass transit will be there in good shape, in good popular acceptance, when we will desperately need it—and we all know we're going to need it as the future evolves.

Mr. Speaker, that is the reason we believe the Premier should rethink his policy of refusing, under any circumstances, the grant which has been requested by the people of Toronto, by the governments of Toronto. We believe he should rethink this, and we say quite openly—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. S. Smith: We say quite openly that to have a $30 million election on a $6 million issue does not strike us as reasonable. The only way this could be an election issue would be if all centres of Ontario became very, very interested in the matter. But ultimately, as years go by, this may well be—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. S. Smith: —because no one is likely to have an election on one local issue in any locality, Toronto or any other. Therefore, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. S. Smith: —we will not support the no-confidence motion, but we put forward the request that the Premier change his view on this matter.

Mr. Cassidy: I'm glad to have the chance to participate in this debate, but sorry that it's only an emergency debate and that we could not go forward to the NDP's motion of no-confidence on this particular issue.

I have to put on record the fact that we asked today and the government refused to agree—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Are you breathing a sigh of relief?

Mr. Cassidy: —that this motion of no-confidence by the New Democratic Party would in fact be held tomorrow in order that we could test the temper of this Legislature before the TTC's fare increase was due to take effect on Monday. That was the government's fault. It was the resistance of the government House leader that led to that.

Mr. T. P. Reid: You weren't going to put it until the end of March. Talk about posturing.

Mr. Cassidy: I can say that the Liberal Party was not very enthusiastic either, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. S. Smith: I thought it was going to be the end of March. You changed your mind.

Mr. Cassidy: This is an issue which does not only affect transit in Toronto, but which affects transit operations in 58 communities across the province of Ontario. Because of its intransigence the present government is undermining public transit, not just in Toronto but throughout the province of Ontario.

Since the House rose last December, the city of Ottawa raised its transit fares on January 1. In Brampton the fares went up on February 12. In London they go up on March 12—that's next week, in fact. Metropolitan Toronto is raising its fares on March 12 and Thunder Bay is raising its fares in April. Mississauga is cutting its services by 10 per cent.

Ridership is down in Hamilton, Kitchener, Mississauga, Sault Ste. Marie, Thunder Bay and 10 other centres across the province right now. We have not been able to contact all of them.

This is not a one-shot affair, as the previous speaker has suggested. Metropolitan Toronto is talking about a steady, inexorable rise of seven per cent or eight per cent a year in TTC fares. The city of Ottawa is saying that with the current subsidy formula from the province of Ontario they're going to have to raise the fares annually in that city.

The chairman of the TTC is talking about TTC fares rising very quickly to $1 a ride. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, how is the ordinary transit rider in this city going to fare then? What are we going to do? When and at what point is the government prepared to step in and change its subsidy formula in order to ensure that adequate, affordable transit is not just the subject of speeches in the Legislature but is a reality in 58 communities in the province of Ontario?

When the Leader of the Opposition suddenly became interested in this issue a few months ago we thought we could use minority government in order to make the present government respond to the needs of the people who depend on transit in so many communities across the province.

On February 12 the minister announced that the government would refuse Metro's request for additional funds for a fare freeze while the TTC developed a pro-transit plan. In fact, what's happening is that the ministry is giving Metropolitan Toronto $6 million less in 1979 for transit than they gave back in 1977.

The announcement that they would not comply with the request, along with a constant refusal to look at the subsidy formula, showed that this government will do nothing more to deal with the problems of urban transit in Ontario.

When we announced that we would have a no-confidence motion on the transit issue we thought that we would have the support of the Leader of the Opposition and that the government would bow to the wishes of the people of Ontario and provide a new deal for public transit.

Mr. Riddell: Never quit dreaming about it.

Mr. Cassidy: I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that as far as we're concerned, in the Legislature you have to put up or shut up. You cannot wait until the whole province is aflame about absolutely every issue. You have to draw a line and say—

Mr. Eaton: Why don't you?

Mr. Cassidy: —“This is an important issue. We are prepared to go to the wire on this one.” If the other party joined with us then we know that the government would have backed down.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Want us to tell you what choice we would make?

Mr. Eaton: We're prepared to go to the people.

Mr. Cassidy: We know that there would not have been an election on this particular issue. We know that we would have got some sense from the government in order to ensure that transit riders were protected.

Mr. S. Smith: He is a good politician and he would know what to do with that issue, believe me.

Mr. Cassidy: I listened to the Leader of the Opposition as he says that we must be totally dedicated to public transit and we must not allow transit to fail. The fact is that the Leader of the Opposition moves faster than a Yonge subway car in getting off the rails when we are moving towards a motion of no-confidence.

Mr. Eaton: He was smart. You've got to give him credit once in a while.

Mr. Cassidy: He left the NDP to be the only voice for people who depend on public transit throughout Ontario. We regret both the retreat of the Liberals and also the stubbornness of the government.

Mr. Kerrio: Mike, don't you have any material of your own? Why don't you get on with the debate?

Mr. Cassidy: We ask how the government can have the confidence of the population of the province when it can't find $6 million out of the $15 billion budget in this province, and it's the same government that hands out hundreds of millions of dollars to corporations like Ford Motor Company, like Denison Mines, like Reed Paper and the companies which are going to benefit from this new incentive scheme.

As far as we're concerned, public transit benefits everybody in the province of Ontario. It saves energy, it saves capital expenditure on roads and allows more efficient movement of both people and goods. We say that public transit is vital to the health of our municipalities. We say it's about time to look to the transit needs of people living in the north who don't have any at all. It's about time there was transportation in those areas and not just in the major communities of the province.

We say it's not the time for the province to back away from transit. If the government had been willing to put some of the savings it realized from its declining commitment to capital expenditures into the subsidy formula, this debate would be unnecessary.

Throughout Ontario the fares are going up and in many areas the service is being cut back or is being frozen at a level that is less than adequate. We all know the trend. If high fares continue and the service is cut back, you get a decline in ridership.

The present situation is that, because of the lack of provincial leadership, the fares will continue to go up faster than inflation and the life of our cities, not just Metropolitan Toronto, is threatened right now because a commitment that may have existed once to public transit, in the days when Bill Davis was the Transit Man of the Year, is going the way of the dinosaurs in this province and the evidence is plainly before us in the government's failure to come through on this issue.

Mr. Eaton: Going the way of the NDP.

Mr. Cassidy: When working people are forced to put more and more of their income into public transit and the government does nothing about it, it deserves to be brought into account.

At least 40 per cent of the people who ride the TTC earn less than $15,000 a year and that's the pattern which we find across the rest of the province as well. People in those income brackets can't afford that increase. People in those income brackets also bear the cost of poor service because they're the most dependent upon public transit and often have to live in the areas that are the worst serviced.

Back in January, I sent a brief to the TTC and sent a copy along to the Premier. It registered not just the NDP's opposition to fare increases in Ottawa, in Thunder Bay, in Toronto and other centres, it also urged that there be a new formula for funding public transit that would encourage innovation and would encourage pro-transit policies in every community of the province. The formula should take account both of population and of the area served. It should take account of operating costs and of the quality and efficiency of the service. It should take account of the innovation of the service, and try to encourage it.

I urge the establishment of a transit ridership improvement plan so that local transit authorities could take action to cut their deficits by getting more people on to public transit. The fact is that many transit authorities cannot do that right now because they are strapped because of the financial situation in which they find themselves. The government has ignored my brief in the same way that they've ignored transit riders throughout Ontario. That's happening. This is all part of a concerted policy by the government of Ontario that extends far beyond transit alone.

How does the government ask a municipality like Hamilton to continue to pay 40 per cent or more of the cost of transit in that area when they are also loading on to that municipality the costs on property tax that are not being met because of provincial cutbacks on grants, because of provincial cutbacks on education, because of provincial cutbacks on social services and because of provincial cutbacks in the area of health care?

Now they are adding transit to the list. The TTC issue is like the tip of an iceberg because this government is dismantling the health care system, abandoning the schools and cutting back on social services. We are committed to fighting those kinds of cutbacks in every area where they are going to occur. We say that the priorities of the Davis government are dead wrong, whether they're applied to transit or to the other areas of services that are essential to people.

They're giving away the public's money to corporations without taking equity on the one hand, and without getting any job guarantees on the other hand, but they haven't got the money to invest in public transit.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Your friends in the UAW are unhappy with you now.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, you could say that it's extravagant for the New Democrats to use one of our two no-confidence motions on this particular issue, but we have decided that we won't shirk our duty to the people who elected us. We are not going to wait until our list of grievances against the government is this long; we're going to take them as they come one by one and use every device we can in order to bring this government to account.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Cassidy: I call on the official opposition to change their position once again and say that they will support our motion of no-confidence because if they do that between now and 6 o'clock today, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. S. Smith: Why did you change the date, Michael?

Mr. Eaton: You can be sure they won't on this one.

Mr. Cassidy: —I can tell you that the government will back down, that fare increase will not take effect on the TTC on Monday and we will have a fair deal for transit riders, not just in Metropolitan Toronto but in every part of the province. All it takes is a commitment from one of the other two parties and we'll give transit riders a fair deal. We need that action now.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I've got to tell you that I was so overwhelmed by the contribution of the member for Ottawa Centre that I really felt it was unnecessary for me to participate in the debate. He nearly had me convinced that if he carried forward with his no-confidence motion, we would change our minds. I've got news for him. You two fellows can get together, you can have your no-confidence motion, but unlike you people, we stick to those decisions we make. We think we've made the right one and we intend to stick by it. It's just as simple as that.

Ms. Gigantes: What about OHIP?

Mr. Swart: What about market value and reassessment?

Mr. Cassidy: Last April you backed down on OHIP. What about senior citizen's drugs? You've done as many flip-flops as the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have to say, after listening to the rather limp—if I can use that terminology—presentation by the Leader of the Opposition for this additional support, that he really didn't do it with enthusiasm today. I don't think he had his heart in it because his mind was slowly telling him that probably the position he was taking wasn't totally logical. I think he has reassessed it since he made those various statements that were more provocative than that today. I won't read them back to him; I had intended to do so but that would be a little unfair—

Mr. S. Smith: Transit man of the year.

Mr. Sweeney: Grandstanding.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —and I wouldn't want to be unfair to the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. S. Smith: Sic transit gloria.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would only say to the Leader of the Opposition who presumes himself on occasion to wish he were over here, and that's understandable that yesterday I couldn't have been more impressed by him.

Mr. J. Reed: Have you nothing to say on the subject of transit?

Hon. Mr. Davis: We were down signing that petition for unity—this was after he was saying how negligent we are—in the Lieutenant Governor's suite. The Leader of the Opposition came in and was in the far end of the room while the television cameras were there, filming the Premier and the Lieutenant Governor. He came around to the side of the room. I was going to call Forrest Gregg of the Toronto Argonauts to say here was a new middle guard for us, Dr. Smith, who was able to push himself into the front of the cameras to see what was happening, et cetera. I thought it was tremendous. He was getting so close yesterday that I was getting nervous.

Mr. J. Reed: Have you nothing to say at all on transit?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have something to say and, if the member for Halton-Burlington will listen very attentively, I will tell him exactly what it is.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Now back to the debate.

Hon. Mr. Davis: My reply to the Leader of the Opposition and to the leader of the New Democratic Party is very simple. They obviously don't know what it is like to run a government. They don't know what it's like to attempt to take positions that are responsible. I would say to those same people who raised with us health issues and the question of our hospitals that I have people in my office every day who wish to extract—no, not extract, that's not fair—who wish to have further support for their legitimate requests.

We have given the TTC an 8.4 per cent increase, probably a higher percentage transfer than to many other areas of government activity. We told them today, when they were in to see us, that we would sit down with them. We have staff available to help them, in terms of their study. The study should come first. We will look at the report; we will help participate in it. That's the way government should be run.

If you are going to give in to every—shall we say request—and I think it was you who said: "Any damn fool can give away money." I think you said that Tuesday night. Were you speaking about yourself?

Mr. S. Smith: Hayes Dana Corporation of New Jersey.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I can only say, we are human on this side of the House. I didn't mind all those telephone calls. It would be much easier for us to say to the general manager of the TTC, who is up here listening to all of these constructive suggestions—I haven't heard any yet—Your suggestion was a wild card "bust"; importation again of American culture from the city of Pittsburgh. We don't have a wild card system in our football league here. Tell your research people that.

Mr. Kerrio: You don't even have a football system, Bill.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, we don't. I will admit that we don't have a good one. It will improve.

We also said to Metropolitan Toronto, to its chairman and the heads of the boroughs, that we are prepared to sit down and look at the formula when the study is finished; when we have some solutions. This government is more committed to public transit than any jurisdiction in North America.

Mr. Warner: That's baloney and you know it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: You have studied it in the state of Florida. So have I. You have seen what has happened in Washington, in the Bay area. I can name you Chicago—you name it.

Mr. S. Smith: You won't land there. I know it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: What do you mean? I go a little further south, that's all.

This government's record in public transit is unparalleled anywhere in North America. You show me another jurisdiction that has done as much. Show me another one.

We are committed to it; but we are saying, simply, to Mr. Warren and others: "You have come up with a good report. It outlines the problem. Now, let's get together and find a solution and let's find the solutions in an intelligent, logical fashion."

We also said to Metro today, because I think it is important, that we are prepared to have a separate agreement with the proposed LRT line into Scarborough. We have said to them that we are prepared to look at it on the basis of density over a period of years, rather than a stated three-year period, when it may or may not reach the densities required to make it viable. We have communicated this to them, because we think, as a province, we should—

Mr. S. Smith: You are committed to Scarborough West. You would not be political.

Hon. Mr. Davis: If the Leader of the Opposition says he is opposed to it and doesn't agree with it, let him say so. Our job in government—and it is not very easy to say; I am not looking for sympathy; I am not looking for understanding—is we have got to allocate resources.

Mr. J. Reed: When are you going to start?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Certainly we could have given in to the pressure, no question about that. You people might have. But our job is to manage the affairs of this province intelligently, to listen to, and be understanding of, the specific requests that are made.

When you are giving an organization like the TTC an 8.4 per cent increase and you are asked for more, it is pretty hard to justify what you say to Sick Children's, Mount Sinai, Peel Memorial, Hamilton hospitals, or what have you. It is not easy to deal with; to be consistent and to be fair in the process.

Mr. S. Smith: Reed Paper.

Mr. Cunningham: Judy LaMarsh.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I can only say this: in terms of what, obviously, is a political posture on the part of the Leader of the Opposition—I understand: you have to do it.

Mr. J. Reed: You should understand. You are the master.

Hon. Mr. Davis: But the members opposite have to understand, as well, that the economy of this province is healthy; it is improving; but it is because we have been able to manage it and make the proper decisions and we will continue to do that.

If it means upsetting some people, I apologize. I don't like getting all these phone calls. Although I have to tell the leader of the New Democratic Party, who helped stimulate the phone campaign, he would be amazed at just how many people phoned and said: "Mr. Premier, you are right. You should say 'No.' You should say 'No?'" He would be amazed at the number. He may even have had a few in his office calling him telling him the same thing.

Mr. Cunningham: You said: "You are right, Frank, thank you for the call."

Mr. Cassidy: Did you ask them?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I know what every single rural member in your caucus was saying to you, because some of them were saying it to me. They don't agree with what you are doing here this afternoon. But they understand and they will support it. I understand that.

Mr. S. Smith: Oh, don't talk nonsense. Put that on the table. Don't talk nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Davis: What do you mean, "Don't talk nonsense."? I know the views of my colleagues in cabinet. I also understand that they are men and women of intelligence, logic, who understand that the government has to deal in an even-handed way with all of those people who make representations. That is part of our responsibility.

Mr. S. Smith: And so does the opposition.

Hon. Mr. Davis: In that my 10 minutes has lapsed and I do have other responsibilities, I reiterate—and I know the general manager of the TTC will take back again what I said this morning—this province is committed to urban transit.

We have had GO in this province, with increasing ridership year after year. I am sure that TTC will take a look at how we have managed to do that. We are committed to it. We are not going to see the TTC go down the drain.

Mr. Cassidy: It's been dropping for years.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I meant to say this earlier; I don't think the Leader of the Opposition, and I don't think any politician, does any of us a great service by suggesting that because this fare increase will go through that the TTC is going down the drain.

Mr. S. Smith: I didn't say that.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Look at their report. It says without question it will remain the highest ridership or the highest density of any system in North America. It happens to be the best, incidentally, and it's going to continue that way; and it will do so with the support of this government on a fair, equitable basis.

Mr. Swart: In spite of you.

Mr. Warner: In spite of you, no matter how much money you withdraw.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The members opposite can have all the non-confidence they want. I've got news for them; if they fought an election on this issue, even in Metropolitan Toronto it would be disaster for the New Democratic Party of the province, which might be a great thing.

Ms. Gigantes: We will look after ourselves, thank you very much.

Mr. Cunningham: You are trying to tempt them.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'm trying to tempt them; they are tempted, they're easily tempted.

They're tempted when they know that it ain't going to happen. I mean that's understandable.

Ms. Gigantes: Look after yourself.

Mr. S. Smith: So are you.

Hon. Mr. Davis: But so is the Leader of the New Democratic Party. So is he.

So, Mr. Speaker, I reiterate; we're committed to urban transit, we're committed to the TTC, we're committed to the other municipalities in this province; and no government has been and no government will be more committed to this concept than the government of the province of Ontario.

Mr. Mackenzie: Heaven help us.

Mr. Warner: Turn in your award.

Hon. Mr. Davis: While I'm enjoying participating in the debate, I'm sure that after the logic of my remarks gets through to the members opposite, they will agree the position taken by this government is right, equitable, fair, intelligent, and logical. Members may use any other descriptive words they may wish to use.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, the Premier has invited me and others to look at the logic of his position, and since he's leaving I would like to address myself to his position. He is looking at separate funding for the Scarborough extension, the Scarborough use.

An hon. member: It's by-election time.

Mrs. Campbell: The interesting thing is that he's prepared to do that in advance of locking at the whole transit plan for Metropolitan Toronto.

Hon. Mr. Wells: It is consistency.

Mrs. Campbell: It is consistent; it is consistent with Gray Coach, it is consistent with your whole approach.

Hon. Mr. Wells: It is consistent with the Spadina subway.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Do you not want the LRT?

Mrs. Campbell: Yes, it's consistent with the extension north into North York of the subway system.

You know, when you go back and look at the history of this transit corporation, when it was a city corporation it was managed in a business-like fashion. They did expand as they had the money to expand. Then this government imposed metropolitan government into this area in its wisdom. Of course because of that the transit system had to rapidly expand.

There was no overbuilding of the Yonge Street subway, if that's what was said.

Hon. Mr. Drea: The Toronto Transit Commission was broke because it built the Yonge Street subway.

Mrs. Campbell: Out of its own reserves.

Hon. Mr. Drea: That's right, and it was broke.

Mrs. Campbell: That's right.

Hon. Mr. Drea: And it was this government that saved it.

Mr. S. Smith: First you throw them into the water, then you throw them the rope.

Mrs. Campbell: What they don't seem to realize is, and they have actually taken the same position throughout, they have left that municipality to handle this matter of extension into the suburbs—and it should be extended, I have never questioned that; but it's that extension which has put us into the position in which we are today, basically. This is I think something that they should look at logically. I think it would be a tragedy if, as a result of these discussions, the decision had to be made to eliminate some of these extensions—although obviously not into Scarborough.

Hon. Mr. Snow: You have changed your mind; that was a quick change.

Mrs. Campbell: I was thinking of the minister's position, not of mine.

I do not think we should be dividing up this area into little units of transportation, but I have to tell the minister that the fare box is contributed to very largely by the citizens of the inner city, as it always has been. I do not think there is any dispute about that. What we are saying is, let us have the opportunity for that study without incurring any further problems to ridership. If the Premier finds that illogical, I suppose I have to understand it, since he has made a great statement about youth opportunities while he seems to be deliberately destroying Ryerson Polytechnical Institute. That is the Premier's logic, and it is logic we do not understand. I agree with my leader; this is not an issue to take to the public across this province. But if we are not able to do something at this point to try to protect that ridership, we will certainly be dealing ex post facto, and the Premier knows it. He wants to start making decisions about Scarborough before he sees an overall plan. Why doesn't he do what my leader suggests? Accept what Metro says; accept their donation to this system.

Hon. Mr. Snow: That's not what Paul Cosgrove says.

Mrs. Campbell: Paul Cosgrove, I don't think, is in Metro at this point in time.

Hon. Mr. Snow: He was.

Mrs. Campbell: He was; yes, he was. And so have those members in this House who were there.

Mr. S. Smith: Your subsidy on the GO train from Oakville is 97 cents a ride; the minister knows that.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Is it? I don't think so.

Mrs. Campbell: Let me say this to the minister: He knows this situation. He knows the decisions he has made which have hurt the Toronto Transit Commission. He knows what he has done as far as Metro Toronto is concerned. If they are prepared to put up this money, surely it is not unreasonable for the minister to ask for the study, which now apparently he has done—and we are so glad that the minister accepted at least that portion of our suggestion—but also to stand prepared to put up the equal portion asked when that report is in his hands.

The ministry, with its expertise, should be helping with that decision in that report, because it needs an overview; it needs to know where it's going in public transit right across this province. As in every other case, we are handling a situation in a totally unplanned way, in a total vacuum. Why can't the ministry, this time, actually plan and work with the TTC to try to develop something that will stand the test for other cities right across this province?

Apparently the minister wants to start things and then cut them off, simply because he doesn't look down the road.

[4:30]

Hon. Mr. Snow: Who is cutting off anything?

Mrs. Campbell: I am talking about the minister's general scheme.

Hon. Mr. Snow: No, you are not.

Mrs. Campbell: Oh, yes, I am.

Hon. Mr. Snow: You are talking about something you know nothing about. Let's be honest.

Mrs. Campbell: In real dollars at a time like this they need that additional money. And you know they do. You know it.

Hon. Mr. Snow: An 8.4 per cent increase is not cut off, and you know it.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order. Would the honourable member please address the chair?

Mrs. Campbell: I'm sorry. Would the Speaker please ask the minister not to interrupt?

Hon. Mr. Snow: You don't want to be kept honest, Margaret.

Mrs. Campbell: Is this gentleman suggesting I am dishonest, Mr. Speaker? If he is, I ask him to withdraw that remark.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to mean that the honourable member was dishonest. I was trying to correct the figures that she was giving in the House which I do not believe to be correct.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I don't recall that I gave any figures.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I've never heard you so vocal, Jim. You must be getting worried about this—

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, at this point in time, we do need to really study what is happening in this system in Toronto. We need to have the time to do it. Actually what we are talking about is time. There is no time when the fares are going up next week—no time unless there is a commitment from this government.

Ms. Gigantes: You could have made the time, Margaret.

Hon. Mr. Snow: How come you didn't mention this during my estimates?

Mr. T. P. Reid: Why are you so uneasy, Jim?

Mrs. Campbell: I don't recall. I think during the estimates—I am not quite sure—I was actually worrying about some of the other moneys the minister was putting in—

Mr. Acting Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mrs. Campbell:—which he shouldn't have been putting in at all. I suppose I can't deal with every subject in every ministry in estimates. Thank you.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, although I come from an area outside of Toronto, I rise to speak on this motion before us for two reasons: First, because I suggest the implications of this go far beyond the boundaries of Metro Toronto; what is decided with regard to provincial assistance to the Toronto transit system will have to be reflected in the other transit systems throughout this province.

I also rise because the issue of public transit—and this has already been mentioned by my leader—has never been more important than it is now. We are all aware of the escalation of the world oil crisis at the present time. Even within a few weeks or a few months in North America it is going to have a very real impact on our transportation systems, particularly that of the private automobile. And so the debate. In fact, a decision on the matter of greater assistance to public transit has never been more timely than it is at the present time. Any government that looks to the future, even the short-term future—even one, two, three or four years—will be taking steps to assure that there is a shift away from the private automobile to public transit.

The Premier, in his remarks, made the comment that no government had ever done more for the Toronto transit system and transit in Ontario than his government. He said they are committed to public transit. A number of years ago that statement was factual, but that statement at this time is not correct. There is on the part of the government an about-face on public services generally.

Shortly after I came into this House in 1975, there was a document tabled called, Special Program Review, more commonly known as the Henderson report. The document was a reprivatization of the economy in this province and the reprivatization of the services in this province. I would point out that the chairman of that committee that produced that report was the Honourable Darcy McKeough.

The fact is that in public transit, as in many other services, the government now is reducing its assistance to municipalities. From 1977 to 1978 the amount of public assistance given for transit generally in this province declined—by only $1 million or $2 million, but it was cut back—and the estimate is that in 1979 it will be down even further.

I suggest that the Ontario government and the Premier are reprivatizing the transportation system too. By their action in refusing to further subsidize the transit system in Toronto, they are privatizing it by putting more people back in their cars and away from the public transit system.

Coming from an area which has two small transit systems, I am as aware as anyone of the difficulties of public transit. I know how people like to use their own cars to get about; it is, of course, generally more convenient, particularly in the smaller places. I'm aware of all that. But I also say here today that a government has a responsibility to set up the overall policy. Any government now must put emphasis on greater use of public transit, not less. One way of doing it is by providing more public assistance to it.

Again, as has been pointed out by many of the people who have spoken on this issue, if you increase fares, ridership drops and the only alternative is to increase fares again. This shows up very sharply in the smaller cities throughout this province. The statistics we have on Toronto and elsewhere bear this out, that fare increases do cut ridership.

There can be no question about that. Therefore, if the fares are allowed to increase in Metro or elsewhere, this is going to cut the ridership in public transit from what it would otherwise be.

The Leader of the Opposition in his comments said that Toronto was different in this respect; he made the general statement that in the other areas of the province the ridership was not dropping the same as it was in Toronto. I would ask him and his party to take a further look at those statistics, and they will find that the ridership in the rest of this province is dropping or holding, or increasing slightly, at about the same rate as it is in Metro Toronto. We have to think about the whole province, not just Metro Toronto. That's why I'm concerned about Metro Toronto, because it is the key. If we can get more assistance here, I am sure we can get it elsewhere.

My time is rather limited and is going to run out, but I could point out that in a place like Welland at present they are getting less than 50 per cent of their revenue from the fare box. As they increase the fares again—and they will, unless there is greater assistance—that ridership is going to drop further, until ultimately we are going to kill those systems in many of the smaller cities in this province, at the very time when we should be encouraging their expansion.

The same thing is true in St. Catharines; ridership is increasing slightly, but deficits that were 30 per cent five years ago now are 50 per cent, or almost 50 per cent.

Mr. Haggerty: St. Catharines' streets are jammed with cars, and the buses are empty.

Mr. Swart: That's exactly what I am saying. We have to take more positive steps to get the people out of their cars and into the buses.

There has to be a reassessment of our attitude towards public transit, and here in Metro Toronto is the obvious place to start. We must ensure that the ridership increases. There is justification for using more public funds from the province. After all, the province in general, in their transfer payments to the municipalities, gives 50 per cent of the cost of building and maintaining the roads. The transit system, to a very substantial degree, is an alternative to building so many roads or the maintenance of the roads.

Hon. Mr. Snow: In your municipality what do the buses run on? Do they not have to run on roads?

Mr. Swart: Of course, they have to run on the roads. But if you can't—

Mr. McClellan: They don't have Krauss-Maffei in Welland.

An hon. member: I thought maybe down there they run on air.

Mr. T. P. Reid: They may run on gas.

Ms. Gigantes: That was the way you tried to build it.

Mr. Swart: I'm surprised that the minister is so far removed from the realities of the Welland area that he doesn't know that buses run on roads there.

I would also think he should know that if you can get 20 or 30 or 40 cars off the road at any given time, particularly rush hour, by having buses in their place, that you don't need as wide roads, and you don't need as many roads to transport those people who otherwise would be in those cars.

Hon. Mr. Drea: And how are you going home tomorrow?

Hon. Mr. Snow: The people of Welland won't want me to cut down on their roads.

Mr. Swart: At the present time the Ontario government—the ministry can correct me if I'm wrong—is still spending something like three times as much in subsidies to the municipalities on roads as they are in subsidies to public transit. I suggest that in this day and age that ratio may not be the proper one and we should be looking for a shift in that ratio.

Here, today, we have the opportunity—well, we don't have the opportunity, because all this debate is meaningless; we would have the opportunity if the debate were taking place tomorrow morning—to determine whether we really mean that we should give greater emphasis to public transit in the future.

I say to the government that the $6 million payment is justified; it's wise, even short-term but particularly long-term, because now is the crucial time that this additional payment should be made to the TTC and should be reflected throughout the rest of the province.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I would like today to clarify my ministry's position, my position, regarding the additional $6.2 million in operating subsidies that has been requested by Metro for the TTC. That is $6.2 million over and above the $33.5 million that has already been allocated to Metro. And I might say that is $33.5 million out of a total of $62 million for all of the province.

To begin with, let's clear some of the confusion which resulted from the statement that provincial grants to the TTC have decreased rather than increased. First, the charge that the total subsidy to the TTC has decreased is perhaps correct. But that includes the subsidy to the TTC's subway construction, which was dropped from $37.6 million to $34 million, because the only subway construction under way is the work remaining on the east and west ends of the Bloor Street extensions—the Spadina line, as you know, Mr. Speaker, has already been completed—

Mr. McClellan: All it needs is passengers.

Hon. Mr. Snow:—so naturally our capital subsidy has been reduced.

But the gut issue, that of TTC transit operating subsidies, that amount showed an estimated increase of $2.5 million, or as the Premier has already mentioned, 8.4 per cent increase over last year. That increase was allowed in that area despite the fact that other municipalities across this province were restricted to five per cent increases for many of their programs. That kind of treatment for Metro, I believe, indicates that my ministry, no matter what the opposition members claim, considers Metro and its transit system unique and special.

But, Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of getting into a battle of percentages and statistics today—or tomorrow for that matter. I'll leave that to those plastic people who like to throw figures around, figures that can be arranged to add up to almost anything the user wishes to prove.

Let's go back to the latter part of 1976, when my staff came down with a funding level designed to maintain the financial achievements of the various transit systems across Ontario. That funding level grew out of the Treasurer's concern for restraining general transit expenditures which, quite candidly, were rising at a fast rate. It was decided that operating subsidies in 1976 would not be more than five per cent greater than the previous year. Basically, that funding provided for a definite percentage of operating costs as the province's contribution.

In the latter part of 1977, the funding level and its application in Metro was agreed on by both Metro and my staff. It was also agreed at that time that this formula should be in place for the next several years, or until such time as the general fiscal climate had improved considerably. Now Metro and the TTC want to change the pitch, asking the provincial government to provide them with an additional $6.2 million which would enable them to hold their fares at the current level. At the same time, it would allow them to review their internal procedures while they seek a solution to their operating problems.

This is not a realistic position under the circumstances, nor is it realistic to expect the province to reassess its funding levels at this point in time. It further proves that the time for reassessment is not ripe. May I point out that provincial subsidies in such fields as health, education and social services have all been held to that five per cent level.

The funding level for transit was not simply a mathematical equation designed to limit our contributions to operating deficits. It was also designed to accommodate an incentive mechanism, meaning that if a transit system, through a more efficient and cost-saving program, reduced its operating deficits, the number of provincial dollars would remain constant. In short, the municipality would retain those subsidy dollars, thereby enhancing their overall financial picture.

Let's take a look at how the TTC itself sees this problem of the $6.2 million in 1979.

Some months ago, the commission came down with the Transit in Metro: Some Tough Choices report. I commend the TTC staff for the excellent effort they put into this report. This report reinforces the premise that the success of transit in any urban area depends on many interrelated factors, all of which, or any combination of which, can be critical. It also underlines that none of these factors can be addressed in isolation.

For any transit system to succeed financially and provide good service it requires an adequate arterial road system, proper land use, adequate facilities such as parking and maintenance yards, and personnel, for example. Most critical is the factor that the fare box must provide a realistic portion of the costs incurred.

Finally, the TTC's own report concludes that the $6.2 million additional asked for would only alleviate the problem the TTC faces for no longer than the 1979 year.

The next logical step is, "Who would make the necessary decisions to correct this situation?" I suggest to you here today that only the members of the city and the Metro councils, backed by the professional know-how of the staff of the TTC, can make such decisions. They will have to come down with solutions which recognize the reality of today's fiscal restraints.

For our part, in my letter to Metro Chairman Godfrey I outlined an approach designed to provide the TTC with maximum fiscal flexibility when considering their immediate needs.

First, it was proposed that replacement capital subsidies could be combined with operating subsidies enabling Metro to more fully manage their own system. Until now both were considered a separate item, but I think it's time plant replacement and maintenance and operating decisions should be considered as part of the entire process.

For example, our subsidies towards vehicle replacement costs have been estimated by the TTC to be $6.8 million this year and another $10.8 million for 1980-81. We proposed to Mr. Godfrey that these funds be available for whatever the TTC deemed proper over those next two years. We also proposed that in the future negotiations for any major facility or expansion project—and this is a totally new approach and has been mentioned today regarding the Scarborough line—both capital and additional operating costs be considered as part and parcel of the same project, or over and above the operating costs agreed to to cover the older systems which are already in place.

I further suggested the establishment of a joint Metro MTC-TTC steering committee. To this end I met with Mr. Godfrey and Mr. Warren on Monday of this week and this committee is now in place. It will actively pursue all available options with a single objective: to provide solutions which can solve the dilemma facing public transit in Metro and other places today. There are difficult choices ahead but please be assured that we will remain an active partner in this important venture with the TTC and with all the other 58 or 59 municipalities in the province that are running transit systems.

The government of Ontario has made and is making an immense contribution to the operation and development of transit across the province to the tune of $442 million during the last three years—1976, 1977 and 1978—of which Metro received over $316 million.

Lastly, I think it goes without saying that we want to work with the TTC and with Metro council in seeking ways to enhance the service and viability of their system. At the same time we'll be continuing to work in the same manner with the full 60 municipal transit systems throughout the province in addition to our provincial transit responsibilities through TATO.

Mr. Cunningham: Mr. Speaker, I'm particularly glad that you are in the chair in so far as I know this is a very urgent matter in Geraldton and other parts of Ontario, including Waterdown where I reside.

I do appreciate the very serious situation that we are in today. The previous speakers have characterized the situation as political and I suppose it has unfortunately degenerated to be somewhat partisan in a political climate. Frankly, I don't see how it is of major concern to the voter at this time, in so far as I don't think that five cents at this time makes a great deal of difference to many people. But in the period of a year I would submit that ridership would decline, and this falls into the doctrine of cheap-smart, cheap-stupid.

I think if we could in some way assist with the financing of this operation, with the moderate request that has been put forth by the city of Toronto and Metro, we might arrest the further decline in the operation of the TTC. As you may have heard, the decline in ridership last year was in the area of 17 million rides. We have no reason to believe that rather serious situation would not increase and that it might conceivably reach 25 million or 30 million, thereby further undermining the amount of money that we get from the fare box. At that point the province and Metro will be put in a very difficult situation, one that will require considerably more money than $6 million on the part of the province.

I am disappointed that this issue has been clouded by some element of acrimony. We should accept that the entire TTC system is one that primarily operates on a large fixed cost—costs that we don't have a great deal of control over but costs that somehow must be met. The arguments that the ridership will deteriorate and thereby place a further burden on people who must ride the TTC have a great deal of currency. I would suggest that if that trend continues it is not inconceivable that a ride on the TTC might be 75 cents or $1 in the not too distant future. Then we would see, in what is a pretty good system, a decline that would not be uncommon to cities like Boston, New York or San Francisco.

In many ways, I sense the presence of the former Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs is still lingering on in the cabinet. It almost seems that the book that Darcy McKeough never published, You Are on Your Own, was distributed prior to discussion of this particular issue in cabinet. This government is a great government for assisting with the financing to get you going but, once you are there, you are caught between a rock and a hard place, so to speak.

Mr. T. P. Reid: That is what this government has accused the federal government of doing.

Hon. Mr. Snow: You know that is not right.

Mr. Cunningham: I do know that it is right and you know that I do.

Hon. Mr. Snow: No way.

Mr. Cunningham: Certainly, I don't think there is an individual here in the Legislature who would suggest a freeze on TTC fares right now as a panacea for its particular problems. The problems are serious. There are a number of things they will do, and I think this current situation will in many ways prompt them to action which might not otherwise have been taken, or at least not taken as quickly. But, again, I say there is a very serious necessity to prop up, for want of another word, the TTC temporarily.

I am amazed at the strange sense of priorities the Minister of Transportation and Communications has with regard to rapid transit and the whole matter of public transit in Ontario. On the same day that the request by Metro was denied, the minister was quoted in the paper as warmly accepting the idea from the federal government that we should have a STOL airport on Toronto Island. What a perverse sense of priorities, in my view.

At the same time, we see millions and millions of taxpayers' dollars being funnelled into the continuation of UTDC, a system that I could suggest is not going to function in the interests of the province of Ontario and the people of Ontario. It is a large, government-operated company that, frankly, has no future at all, a company that is costing millions and millions of dollars to operate.

If I could put in context the amount of money being requested by the city of Toronto and by Metro into the perspective of revenue spent in the province of Ontario, we spend $3.4 million per day just to pay the interest on our debt in Ontario. The amount requested represents two days' worth of debt and then some—that is, of course, exclusive of Ontario Hydro's debt which is reaching possibly the same alarming situation.

It has been suggested by the third party that we have an election on this. I suppose a $30-million election on a $6-million request is indicative in a microcosmic sense of the economic policies we could expect from an NDP government.

Mr. McClellan: You don't understand transit issues at all.

Mr. Cunningham: The minister has just recently suggested in the course of this debate that the possible solution to this particular problem lies in the establishment of a committee of MTC and TTC to supervise the TTC's activities. In other words, we are going to see a committee to supervise the activities of a committee. That almost seems as if it is a bureaucrat's dream.

The minister mentioned there was a $33 million commitment out of $62 million spent on rapid transit. I suppose that is a significant amount of money. I have no doubt that it is. But it is also a tremendous amount of money put into an area where half the population of the province resides and where a number of people from outside the city of Toronto and outside Metro utilize the facility. I use the facility from time to time and I must say in many ways the ride I take on that is being subsidized by Metro taxpayers. Frankly, we think that is somewhat inappropriate at the time.

I can only conclude by saying that the amount of money that is being requested now is marginal in comparison to the amount of money that will be required from some taxpayers' pockets some time down the road if the ridership in the TTC is allowed to decline in the fashion that it has.

[5:00]

Mr. McClellan: I welcome the opportunity to take part in this debate, although I note the absence of the transportation man of the year. Time does fly, as he does. I note the absence of the Minister of Transportation and Communications.

Nevertheless, we are confronted with a major crisis in the Toronto Transit Commission, and those who argue that it is a question of a nickel obviously don't understand the problem that confronts the transit system either in Metropolitan Toronto or in this province.

As a Toronto member, I intend to deal with the issue from a Toronto perspective but it is not a Toronto issue or a Metro issue; it has to do with the future of transit development in this province, and the government has no more commitment to transit than it does to any of the other human services in 1979.

Mr. Johnson: That's not so.

Mr. McClellan: What is the crisis is very simple. The fare box cannot support the cost of the system. Up until 1970, the TTC was supported entirely out of the fare box. In 1970, there was a surplus of $1.9 million. By 1973, they were in a deficit position of $17.7 million. By 1978, in a deficit of $51.9 million. In 1979, a projected deficit of $65.5 million.

Those who stick their heads in the sand and say, "Take it out of the fare box; put the burden on the user; put the burden on the property tax; let's pay for it out of regressive taxation; let the poor pay for it; let those who can't pay for it pay for it," don't understand the issue. They don't understand what they are doing to transit in this province. They are doing the same thing in every other community across the province and they are not showing any commitment to urban transit whatsoever.

The transit system in Metropolitan Toronto is no longer a local transit service, it is a commuter service over vast areas of the municipality and the costs of that kind of a commuter service cannot be paid out of the fare box, period. Those who argue that it can and should be paid out of the fare box are doing a profound disservice.

Many speakers on the government side have thumped their chests about their commitment to urban transit and talked about the complexity of factors that go into the kinds of problems that the TTC is experiencing, and I don't deny that it is a complex issue. It is not, as the Liberal transportation critic seemed to imply, a question of five cents. It is an exceedingly complex matter. The government has done nothing on the other factors that have led the TTC into a position of overwhelming deficit, with the prospect of more deficit, more fare rises and more declining ridership down the line inevitably.

In February, the Minister of Transportation and Communications wrote to the chairman of the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto and talked about the four factors, the four variables that go towards making a viable transit system. I quote from his letter: "For a transit system to succeed: 1, The arterial road system must accommodate acceptable transit service. 2, Parking facilities and policies must be complementary. 3, Land-use policies must be co-ordinated with transportation planning. 4, The fare box should provide a realistic share of the costs of this important service."

So the minister set out some of the variables and said again today how he understands the complexity and their transit policies are dealing with the overall vector of forces that go into a viable transit system.

Let's just look at that; let's just look at that for a minute. The first point, the arterial roads system must accommodate acceptable transit service. So what's happening in this municipality, Mr. Speaker, is that the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto is proceeding with arterial roads in competition with the transit system. They are proceeding with the widening of Bathurst Street in competition with the subway, the new Spadina subway, a subway that was built at a capital cost of in excess of $200 million and the province is pouring its transportation subsidy money not into pro-transit policies, but into policies of road widening which compete with the subway. Brilliant. Brilliant.

Let's look at the second point that the minister has cited: parking facilities and policies must be complementary. The city of Toronto has argued and pleaded and stressed with as much urgency as it can muster that the province must intervene to make sure that the park-and-ride facilities are built at Glencairn south of the Allen Expressway and that hasn't been done; it hasn't been done since the Transit Man of the Year allowed the Spadina Expressway to be extended down to Eglinton—I might point out with the support and urging of the Liberal Party members, who are now wearing their rapid transit hat. Where was their transit hat in 1975 when they were clamouring for the extension of an expressway in competition with the Spadina subway? Where were they then? Urging that the expressway be built. So the parking facilities haven't been built, the second point of the minister's four factors.

Number three: land-use policies must be co-ordinated with transportation planning. I turn to page 15 of the TTC's document, Some Tough Choices, and there is a statement at the bottom of the page: "The Spadina subway was opened in 1978 and operating mileage increased as a result, but it did not follow a major demand path, as previous subways had done." What that means, in a nutshell, is that thanks to this government and its pals at Metro the Spadina subway was built in the wrong place; it was built in the wrong place. Another triumph of urban transit planning. Another little gem in the Premier's transit crown.

Finally, the fare box. The fare box, says the minister, must provide a reasonable share. For him it's 72 per cent. Seventy-two per cent of what? Seventy-two per cent of a horrendous operating deficit, a deficit that exists because of botched transportation planning over the last 10 years. That's why the deficit is as high as it is, because of mistakes made by this government, because of inaction on the part of this government and its friends at Metropolitan Toronto.

It now says to the people of Toronto, "Well, it's too bad that your operating deficit is approaching $70-million. It's just too bad. You are just going to have to take it out of the fare box." So we are stuck with the cost of the government's own mistakes, we are stuck with the price of the government's own mistakes, and the government says: "Oh, we're exceedingly generous. We are excessively generous. We are generous to a fault." They are generous to a fault with respect to lunatic schemes like the Krauss-Maffei project, which cost $55-million.

Mr. Cunningham: You people used to be in favour of that. You were in favour.

Mr. Swart: You can't have a straight face and say that.

Mr. McClellan: That's certainly not true, my friend; that's simply not true.

Mr. Cunningham: Look at the record.

Mr. McClellan: Who would be in favour of magnetic levitation which can't go around a corner?

Mr. Mackenzie: Only the Liberals would support it.

Mr. McClellan: Only the government would think of a nuts scheme like that to waste $55 million of transit money. I thought that couldn't be exceeded in the realm of lunatic, nuts schemes, but I was wrong. Now they have a proposal to run some kind of an electric train from Union Station to the CNE.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member's time has expired.

Mr. McClellan: What's the price tag on that one? Perhaps they could hook it up to the roller coaster. It would make as much sense as everything else they have done over the last 10 years which has led us to the present mess.

Mr. Johnson: Sit down.

Mr. Gaunt: Or one of Hydro's idle power plants.

Mr. McCaffrey: Mr. Speaker, may I start off by congratulating the member for Humber. You look very dignified in that chair. It suits you to a T, and I am sure you will do a fair job throughout.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Thank you.

Mr. McCaffrey: I can't start off by being dishonest and saying what a pleasure it is to rise and speak in this debate, because by and large I feel this exercise today is a shoddy use of this room and this place and the members' time.

Mr. Riddell: Of course, that is the way you look at most committees, too.

Mr. McCaffrey: I started off this morning, like I do most mornings—and this is the only reason that I am at all pleased to speak on it—because I am a regular user of the TTC and have been for some years. But this morning when I got on the Wilson Avenue bus on my way to the York Mills subway, I was joined by a neighbour who had read the Globe and Mail and was anxious to find out if it was true that there was going to be an emergency debate here and a possible vote of no-confidence in the government over this matter of the TTC. I assured him that was my understanding too, that in all likelihood that would be what transpired. He was, like most people—

Mr. T. P. Reid: You don't always understand, Bruce, but you got that one.

Mr. McCaffrey: —in my community, shocked that this silliness would have developed to this level. He went on to show, and the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere (Mr. Warner) will appreciate this, that he is about as well-versed in the intricacies of parliamentary procedure as I am, when he said, "Is there not provision, when silly things like this happen, for the government to move a motion of no-confidence in the opposition?"

Mr. Cunningham: It wouldn't carry.

Mr. McCaffrey: I said that wasn't true but that I would look into it.

Mr. T. P. Reid: That certainly lowers the tone of this debate.

Mr. McCaffrey: From time to time when I do get on the subway and come down here to this elaborate chamber, I talk to people in my own and neighbouring constituencies, and particularly in the last few weeks—

Mr. Warner: That is the $40,000-plus crowd. We know about your constituents.

Mr. McCaffrey: —this topic of possible fare increase has come up. By and large the attitude has been that even with the fare increase, meaning that the token would then cost fifty cents, it is the best half-a-buck in town. Most of the people of my area recognize that.

I was intrigued when the Leader of the Opposition spoke today. I find him always, quite frankly, a thoughtful individual. I listened quite carefully to what he said. I thought throughout he was both thoughtful and supportive of the government.

I am quite prepared to reread Hansard, but two or three things stand out in my mind. He supported the historical and significant financial support for the Metro transit system that this government has provided. He was very supportive of the Premier's very clear desire to continue to be a leader in the field of transit. He applauded this government's stated wish to see a broad Metro transit plan before any additional moneys were given. I couldn't help but think, as I listened to him wind up, that if I have difficulties with parliamentary procedure from time to time, I don't have any basic difficulty with the English language, I know what the word emergency means. How he could justify his theme today—and it is in Hansard—with this emergency debate, I find quite unusual.

Mr. Riddell: That was debated before the Speaker made a ruling.

Mr. McCaffrey: And to suggest, as has been suggested by some members of the Liberal Party, including the leader, that this would become an election issue only if all the other Ontario centres outside of Metro rose up in support, is frankly just a sad comment on the Liberal Party's near paranoia with Metro Toronto.

The member for Wentworth North (Mr. Cunningham), who—I wouldn't say this, but people who know him better than I say he is capable of being partisan from time to time.

Mr. Eakins: That's where you part company.

Mr. McCaffrey: I can't say I have ever seen that.

Mr. Eakins: Is that what sets you apart, Bruce?

[5:15]

Mr. McCaffrey: However, it was intriguing to watch his contribution today. The member for Wentworth North was only disappointed that this issue had become political, and he found that the third party's desire to have an election on this was somewhat disconcerting. Again I stand to be corrected, —and I would be anxious to go back in my own files—but I am confident that the Liberal Party not very long ago made it clear they were going to initially support a potential motion of no-confidence. They eased up on that. I wouldn't use the word "flip-flop," Mr. Speaker, I think that's sometimes over-used, but let's say that they just eased up—

Mr. Warner: Call it a reversal.

Mr. McCaffrey: —pretty significantly on what their position was three weeks ago is an understatement.

Mr. Eakins: Did you ever hit your head on a rifle butt?

Mr. McCaffrey: People have made it clear, I think, by now, and there has been a pretty extensive contribution to this, that a fare freeze by itself won't affect transit use in Toronto.

Mr. Cunningham: The reason you won't give it is you haven't got it. You've spent so much money over the years you haven't got it. That's the bottom line.

Mr. McCaffrey: The bottom line, it's a good expression.

There are a number of factors which have influenced ridership on the Toronto transit.

Fare level and fare structure are just two of those factors. The quantity and quality of the service has been a major factor. Auto ownership in Metro Toronto has been a major factor, and over the last five years the growth in owner-used automobiles to commute has accelerated. Population growth, on the other hand, has levelled off. The size of the work force and general economic conditions have a great impact on how many people use the TTC. The amount and the location of high-density development, parking policies, auto disincentives and land-use co-ordination are just some others. It is clearly not just the five cents, although some have used that while pretending not to use it to get an afternoon wasted in this chamber today.

The problem is significant and I think the record of this government proves their awareness of it. But to blame the TTC and the fare increases, and primarily those fare increases, for the woes of Metro transit completely misses the point. Most riders are aware of increased costs in fuel, salaries and equipment, and they can readily discern the need for a fare increase. What is more important, however, is that most riders are more sensitive to the quality of transit service than they are to its costs and from time to time the public do express their view and their concern, not so much with exorbitant fares but general service conditions.

Transit's own report, Some Tough Choices, advises that reasonable growth may be expected if certain actions are taken. A fare freeze, interestingly enough, is not listed as one of the prerequisites for this growth. Contrary to some who would leave a misinformation on this, the decline is not irreversible and the retention of ridership is not contingent upon the provision of subsidies.

Projecting a decline in transit usage due to increased fares assumes a loss of a revenue source. However, the net revenue increase, despite what some would have us believe, meets the 70 per cent target figure for fare-box contributions in relation to operating costs. The effect of the increase is not projected indefinitely and the downward spiral that has been referred to does not describe a cause-effect reaction involving fare increases leading to lost ridership. The spiral is much more complicated than that. One inescapable conclusion that can be drawn from the rationale forwarded by the fare freeze components is that they do believe it is the sole criteria upon which we are to judge the TTC success. The plain and simple fact, Mr. Speaker, is that the market for potential riders is not expanding.

On the average, each Toronto resident rides the TTC 156 times a year. This is the highest transit use per capita in North America and one has to question whether that number can be substantially increased without providing additional incentives to use the system, in the form, I would suspect, of better service. Even if the subsidy due to the TTC were increased by $12.3 million, spending these funds to hold fares down may not be the best way to retain ridership. Again the transit report itself suggests that future increases in spending of public money be used as an instrument to increase the level of service to attract riders, not to subsidize an inevitably declining ridership. This report, Some Tough Choices, outlines a number of factors which could possibly affect the number of transit users. Metro can encourage ridership without having to resort to larger capital expenditures and without going beyond the present financial commitments of subway expansion and light rail development. A land-use policy, including densification at appropriate subway terminals, is the obvious place to begin bolstering ridership.

Mr. McClellan: What is densification?

Mr. McCaffrey: However, a land-use policy does not fall within the jurisdiction of the TTC and, clearly, transit requires an official commitment from Metro.

Mr. Philip: What would you people know about land-use policies? You've never had any.

Mr. McCaffrey: Several other transit-related issues fall within the scope of Metro Toronto.

Mr. McClellan: You've already got densification.

Mr. McCaffrey: One is completion and improvement of the arterial road system.

Mr. Philip: Where are you going to have the density—in the Niagara Escarpment?

Mr. McCaffrey: We're not going to have it wherever there's an NDP council, that's a certainty.

Mr. Philip: Maybe we'll have a little bit of industry where there is an NDP government.

Mr. McCaffrey: Arterial roads are necessary to increase rapid transit efficiency. They are the feeder system for it. Larger transit subsidies coming from the Ontario government will not be offset by providing smaller subsidies for roads, not if the system is going to improve.

Mr. Conway: Reading speeches is improper.

Mr. Cunningham: Especially Darwin Kealey's.

Mr. McCaffrey: Of course, the more extensive use of surface vehicle priorities such as contraflow lanes—that's a good one—and also a Metro-wide parking policy would increase transit system efficiency.

Mr. McClellan: I don't know what you're talking about.

Mr. McCaffrey: But these and other issues remain unsolved because, like many things, they involve a trade-off and in some cases a sacrifice by residents in the immediate areas affected by a pro-transit policy.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member's time has expired.

Mr. McCaffrey: To blame fares and fares alone for this occurrence is irresponsible, misleading and represents the kind of buck-passing that is, in the long run, both detrimental to the TTC and unfair to the Metro residents.

Mr. Eakins: You sure threw your heart into that one.

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Speaker, I guess we have no rapid transit in Essex North or around Woodslee.

Mr. Eaton: They say you drive pretty fast through there.

Mr. Ruston: We do have a bus that goes by my door once a day, I believe, but since my car has 95,000 miles on it I suppose I should be able to speak a little about transit.

In some ways I have taken an interest in rapid transit, because I don't think there is any metropolitan city that can get along without a combination of more than one type of transit system, whether it's automobiles or streetcars or subway or whatever it might be.

Mr. Makarchuk: Bicycles.

Mr. Ruston: Bicycles, yes. That might come about in time too.

What I think we require to keep a metropolitan area viable is a good combination of more than one type of transit system.

I suppose I can look close to my own area, to a large metropolitan area, the city of Detroit, where they never did go into any rapid transit system. Of course, most people would say the reason they never did was because it's the automobile centre of the world and, with the automobile industry there, naturally they didn't want to see the car being second-rate, so they built a more or less ideal system of expressways. The only thing that caused a problem with that in the city was that the people then moved out to the suburban areas and the downtown area was blighted. They haven't got over that yet.

They may have thought they were helping themselves and the automobile industry—which I myself am very much interested in because in our area that's our main employer—but it just shows that you have to have some of both if you want a city to stay alive.

I have had the opportunity over the last 11 years to attend, I think, all the estimates of the Ministry of Transportation—it was called the Department of Highways for a number of years, but it's now the Ministry of Transportation and Communications.

I have had a certain amount of knowledge that it is one of the methods of transportation that has helped Toronto and the Metropolitan area, the subway system. My goodness, I would suppose it's one of the better ones in Canada and maybe even in the United States, built, of course, at a great deal of expense to the taxpayers of Ontario. We all know that. I don't know what the latest charge is for building a mile of subway, but I think it's become so expensive that there will probably not be any built in the future.

I think one of the figures I heard was $31 million a mile. Maybe someone could verify that. That certainly isn't cheap.

Looking at our area, we build highways a great deal cheaper and, of course, we make good cars, so naturally the people are going to use the cars.

I had a fellow tell me the other day that he was reading in the paper about the cost of taking people from Montreal to Ottawa on Via Rail. He works for Greyhound Bus Lines. He said the cost to the taxpayers of Canada by Via Rail was about $30. He said he can take the people on the same route for $11.50 on a Greyhound bus. Somebody is paying a lot of money to have somebody travel around. Maybe we should be looking around for the most economical method of transportation. This fellow, I suppose, had a conflict of interest, but that is what he was telling me.

As far as the subway system in Toronto is concerned there is another odd situation. I was talking to a fellow the other day who said he went down to buy tickets at the subway station. He threw down $2 or $3 and the fellow handed him back all these tickets. He looked at them and started counting them. He said, "That doesn't seem right." He turned to the fellow and said, "I think you gave me too many tickets."

The ticket issuer said, "Oh, no. That's the rate for senior citizens."

He said: "I don't know, but I'm no senior citizen. I'm only 57 years old." He said, "I just thought you were a senior citizen. You looked as though you should be old enough."

If they're doing that, they're losing a little income. That isn't the intent of that. I don't know who it was, but I heard this happened. Somebody had better start looking at to whom they're selling tickets. I hope it wasn't the present Speaker. I don't think he looks that old.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Could have been.

Mr. Ruston: The present Premier has a way of playing around in the political system. Someone mentioned the politics of it a while ago. The present Premier of Ontario has used transit more to his liking in politics than anybody else. He was named Transit Man of the Year. He was going to stop the Spadina Expressway in a great show in the 1971 election. He was doing great things, but nothing very much ever happened. That was just using it as an election ploy, and you couldn't get anybody who used it more than him.

My goodness, he ran the election saying, "Cities are for people." He said, "Stop the Spadina Expressway." We always called it the ditch. People would come down and they would say to me, "What's that?" I said, "That's the Davis ditch." He did put a little pavement part way down, and made a little road. They call it an arterial road now, I believe. They don't call it an expressway.

I've come down on it a couple of times, but when you're coming in from western Ontario, it's not much help. You come out on to Eglinton and make a lefthand turn and come down Avenue Road. It's still the Davis ditch as far as I'm concerned. He didn't really solve many problems with it.

Mr. Nixon: Should have gone right through to Buffalo.

Mr. Ruston: I suppose if the people from Windsor who make cars had been doing that, they would have made an expressway all the way through downtown, but there again, they would be interested in cars. That's what they would have done, I suppose, but it would have disrupted many areas of downtown Toronto. There's no doubt about that.

We have to have a viable expressway system as well as a rapid transit system. It is most important now that we look at rapid transit because we've got it built, and we've got to use it, because of the amount of money that went into the Spadina line—the latest one. Apparently, it's losing money terribly right now.

I understand we need rezoning in that area so they can build highrises along there and then we can get the passengers. This has to be done. After all, we can't be using the money of the taxpayers of Ontario to build a rapid transit system and then not see that the city and Metropolitan Toronto take their share to see that it's used properly.

I can agree that our leader is right, on a temporary basis right now. As I say, I have no interest in my own area. I think the two types of transportation have to be used in any metropolitan area if you want to have a good and viable city. That's why I'm speaking about it, Mr. Speaker.

I am very much interested in a good, alternative system of transportation. You can come in from the airport—and I've done it a few times—economically. You can get a bus to the Islington subway station, for $1 and then it is 55 cents to come downtown by subway. That's $1.55. That's pretty economical. That's very economical when you look at what we have to pay. I'm 20 miles from the airport in Windsor, and if you had to have somebody drive you there it's going to cost you $15, I suppose. That's what we have to pay out in the boondocks, as the former member for Sudbury, Mr. Sopha, used to call it. It's not cheap for us people in the boondocks.

[5:30]

Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to emphasize that we need a good rapid transit system in a city the size of Metropolitan Toronto. It needs some funds from all places to make sure it operates viably. The city of Toronto and metropolitan area are going to have to zone these areas so that the highrises will be built in an area where the subway is now built. Maybe it was built in the wrong place. I can't tell you that. But it's there now and you're going to have to use it. If it needs rezoning, then it should be done.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I rise to try to deal with some of the issues that have been raised this afternoon, and to answer some of the debating points, to the extent that they deserve an answer, that have been made against the position taken by this party.

I find it immediately ludicrous that the Conservative government, Conservative Party, and the Liberal Party are joined together in a common determination to avoid a vote in this assembly on the question of whether or not this small amount of $6 million would be available to the Toronto Transit Commission so that for a one-year period the working people in Toronto who use the public transit system would not have to bear an increase of 16 to 17 per cent in the cost of their transportation. I want to make that very clear.

The Liberal Party is on record in the press and in this House that it does not want a vote on this issue, and today the House leader of the Conservative Party, in consultation with the House leaders of the Liberal Party and of this party, has refused this party the opportunity to debate this issue in this assembly as a matter of confidence tomorrow, which is the last sitting day of this assembly before the fare increase goes into operation.

Mr. Sterling: You know what the result is.

Mr. Renwick: I want to say that again. I want it to be very clearly understood in this House and elsewhere in Metropolitan Toronto and in Ontario that the Tory government and the Liberal Party are frightened to have a vote on this issue in this assembly at this time. The House leader of the Conservative Party, the Deputy Premier (Mr. Welch), has said so by admitting that the vote will not take place on our motion tomorrow. Let's have that position perfectly clear.

Let me make a second point, and let me make it clearly because the Premier said that if there's one thing that this government does it is to stand by its decisions. Where did it stand by its decisions on real property tax reform in Ontario and in Metropolitan Toronto? Where did it stand on the question of the punishment that it was going to mete out to the citizens of the province on the OHIP increase? How firm were they in that decision?

Let me just pursue this for a moment. The net result of the failure of the Conservative Party to provide an equitable tax system in Ontario, particularly related to real property taxation, has meant that they played the age-old game of playing the users of public utilities in Ontario, in their capacity as users, against the same people in their capacity as property taxpayers. That's what has been done by the metropolitan chairman and by the metropolitan government. They have said, almost laughingly, when the chips are down they will make the user of the TTC pay rather than the property taxpayer because they want to make it certain that the property taxpayer in that capacity is the one who will get what little relief is available.

On a provincial basis, what this government should be headed towards doing is providing, out of the progressive tax revenues of the province to Metropolitan Toronto—from the contributions which Metropolitan Toronto makes to those general revenues of the province—the kind of money which will, for one year, provide an opportunity for Metropolitan Toronto in some way to get a handle on the TTC, to enable Metro to avoid the disasters which are going to accrue to the ridership of that system, if this government does not change its policy.

I want to say how disappointed I am in the Toronto Transit Commission. One need only read this report, Some Tough Choices, including the introductory memorandum from the chairman of corporate planning to the chief general manager, to see that it was begging. It was begging Metropolitan Toronto, and the government of the province of Ontario, to refuse the moneys which were required to freeze the fare box in the city of Toronto.

I don't understand all the sophistication of the figures about transit systems. But I do understand one thing: I do understand it when the people who use the public transit system are the ones being punished by this government, because in a large majority they come from the very kind of riding that I represent and that my colleagues in this assembly represent, namely those who use it for practical purposes because they have little, if any, other choice.

One need only look at this report about the use of the subway system and metropolitan transportation, both road and rail—the 1978 survey on attitudes and uses—to get some conception of the whole and total point which has been missed in the media, by the metropolitan government, by the Toronto Transit Commission and by this government, and deliberately overlooked and distorted in their presentations to the public. Let me just read from this report which would indicate that, in some way or other, it is an inconsequential matter.

“Among heavy riders”—those are the people who work and use the transit system for work purposes—“almost three quarters, 72 per cent, reported they used the TTC to go to and from their work and for other business purposes. Of secondary importance, 18 per cent were attending school and/or university.”

How do you distinguish a heavy user? Well, I'm not going to go into it at great length; it's right at the very beginning of the report. “Seventy-one per cent of heavy riders live in none or one-car families, while 49 per cent of non-riders are members of two-or-more-car families. Non-riders are found almost always among those whose annual household incomes are over $20,000 a year.”

So, when my friend from Armourdale uses an average figure of 150 rides per year, let me say this: what we are talking about, in this party, in placing our no-confidence motion on the order paper, is the people who use that system 500 and more times a year for the purpose of going to and from their place of work and for whatever other uses they may put it to. In that case, we are talking about $35 a year, at least, as a minimum increase.

All right, I've listened for some time to this talk about the nickel—only a nickel. I want to say to this government that unless it begins to understand that at the cash registers in the food markets and at the fare box ticket offices of the transit system, nickel-and-dime inflation is bearing so heavily on the people in the city of Toronto, it will not be surprising that there is a revolt. Whether it is focused on the property tax or however it is focused, let me assure the government that if it does not pay attention to the people who have to walk up to the wicket to buy those tokens and if it is not prepared to protect them, then I can be certain that we won't suffer any disaster in the call of an election in Metropolitan Toronto. The Tory government and the Liberal government will suffer that disaster here.

The proof of that is that I challenge the Tory government to reverse its decision, to permit this debate to take place tomorrow and to have the vote taken in order to determine on what side of the fence the members of the assembly stand.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, for some hours this afternoon, the various figures that are relative to the operating deficit, to the ridership and to the future of the TTC have been discussed. I would just like to put on the record, because there has been from time to time this afternoon some talk about cutbacks and so forth, that indeed there have been no cutbacks this year. As a matter of fact, there was an additional $2.5 million to meet part of the operating deficit of the TTC.

Mr. Nixon: That's not what John Sewell says.

Hon. Mr. Drea: The figure of 8.4 per cent in terms of that increase should be re-emphasized at a time when the general government increase in grants to meet operating costs of municipalities, for a very necessary social service to a great number of very vital parts of our community has been at five per cent. Indeed this government, as the Premier said just this afternoon, is more committed than ever to rapid transit, not just in the Metropolitan Toronto area, but in all the urban centres of this province.

Those who are providing just as vital services for the entire community in hospitals, in all the various social services and in a great many other areas that I have talked about might indeed say that the TTC this year is already a special case.

The record of this government not only in the promotion of but dedication to rapid transit in this province has been demonstrated in the past six or seven or eight years by many twenties of millions of dollars, not just going out to meet the operating deficit to prop up the sagging fare box, as some have suggested, for a short period of time, but to make rapid transit and urban transit a very viable operation.

The bulk of those funds have gone out to buy new equipment—not just subway cars, rolling stock, or buses for Metropolitan Toronto or Mississauga or the city of London, but throughout the province. The quality of the product throughout the province, as indeed the quality of the product in Metropolitan Toronto, is unsurpassed anywhere in North America. Everybody agrees to that. The reason for that is that the product has been put in place because the province of Ontario provided the bulk of the capital funds so that the transit rider—and I say this with all due respect to the member for Riverdale—has a first-class product to ride upon.

Today the question is, in order at this time—and I emphasize at this time—to avoid a fare increase, will the province provide at least an additional $6 million on top of the already more than $98 million it is providing to the TTC this year. But on the other hand I've heard more than one today very candidly admit that the fare box alone—and that's where that $6 million would go—is not the answer to declining transit ridership.

As a matter of fact, the fare in the city of Hamilton is remarkably low, and yet it has in proportion the very same problem that the TTC does in not being able to attract or to keep its present ridership. Indeed there have been mentions about smaller communities raising their fares. They are having the same difficulty, as the fares go up, in keeping their riders.

Even the TTC finds this in its own study, and I don't think its own study is begging. I think that here is a transit corporation second to none in North America standing up, analysing itself and the problems it is encountering, putting them down and saying: "Look, if we could make the decision alone then we would have done it." But it has to be done in conjunction with Metropolitan Toronto planning—

Mr. Renwick: They've stopped fighting for the riders.

Hon. Mr. Drea: It has to be done in conjunction with the provincial government and they're putting it out, some tough decisions to take and to make. They've outlined the problem, they talk about a sluggish economy and what it does to ridership.

Mr. Renwick: They treat the riders as statistics.

Hon. Mr. Drea: They talk about certain demographic factors—that there are fewer young people and what that has done to transit riders. They are quite candid about how in some years when they raised fares—and indeed the amount of those increases in those days—

Mr. McClellan: Finish the sentence, Frank.

Mrs. Campbell: Yes, go on.

Hon. Mr. Drea: —was just about in proportion to what this is—when they raised fares they actually attracted riders. They pointed out all of these things and they say there are some tough decisions to be made.

Mr. Cassidy: Not since 1975 Frank.

Hon. Mr. Drea: This is true, this is quite true. But the one thing that becomes overwhelmingly apparent is that it is not the fare box. It is not their operating deficit; it is not their fare. It goes far beyond all of this.

As the Premier said today, while the province is committed to urban transit the time has come for the province, Metropolitan Toronto and the TTC to find the solution to declining ridership; and it is not in the fare box. The argument has been said that you can buy some time by freezing, perhaps they won't lose as many in the short term as they might. If the fare box, by common admission, has extremely little bearing on declining or rising ridership, then I humbly ask how would putting more in—

Mr. Cassidy: So you'll charge a dollar a ride because you don't care; that's what you're saying.

Hon. Mr. Drea: —get down to facing the tough decision as how to attract riders. I don't mean just the people who may have departed from the TTC in the past year or so, but how to expand that market so that rapid transit does play its proper role in a balanced transportation system that is essential in a metropolis of the dimensions of Metropolitan Toronto and environs.

Mr. Conway: Stop picking up hitchhikers.

Hon. Mr. Drea: One way or the other, the person who rides the TTC and puts the token in the machine or the ticket in the fare box or pays cash, no matter what would be the decision today, he or she is going to pay the cost. They are either going to pay it in terms of what they drop into the box or they are going to pay it out of their own taxes.

Mr. Cassidy: That's under your government, yes. Why shouldn't the car driver contribute? Everybody benefits from that system. Why shouldn't they contribute to it?

Hon. Mr. Drea: One way or the other.

Mr. Renwick: Don't use that simplistic statement; it does you a disservice.

Hon. Mr. Drea: With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, I say to you that when the member for Riverdale feels I am being simplistic, then for the first time all day I feel very confident not only that I have touched a raw nerve, but also that I am absolutely correct.

It has been the government's position throughout the day that this whole debate over what would be the impact if one decision were made as against the other in terms of the fare box should have been directed towards the real problem, which is the declining ridership of the Toronto Transit Commission, the lack of utilization of the TTC services. The debate, while it has been meritorious and interesting, has really failed to come to grips with that point.

A debate in this Legislature, another subsidy, begging the question, or buying time isn't going to do it. Surely the time has come to end the controversy and the politics of controversy around the fare box and to put that energy into working with the TTC in Metropolitan Toronto to come to grips with the problem and with what we are going to do about it.

Mr. Sweeney: Mr. Speaker, I would like to pick up where the previous speaker has left off, because what my colleagues and I are trying to suggest to that government is that it is exactly that period of time, that period of grace, to do the kind of in-depth examination that he and other speakers in that party have spoken about, that we are asking for.

We are not asking for a fare freeze for ever. We are asking for a fare freeze for one year for the very groups of people that the previous speaker just talked about—this government, Metro, the TTC—to sit down together and examine clearly what the alternatives are. That's what we are trying to do. That's why we are having this debate this afternoon. That's what we are trying, again and again, to bring to the government's attention.

I fail to understand how members of the government party can get up, one after the other, and say they also believe that this kind of in-depth planning is needed if we are going to solve the problems over the long haul and yet not agree with us to give this one-year moratorium.

The previous speaker also spoke about the fact that transit in Toronto and in many places in Ontario is among the best in the world. That's partially true, and it also goes right to the heart of what we are talking about. If we have taken the time, the energy and the dollars of the taxpayers of this province and of this Legislature, if we have built something of which we are proud and of which we want to continue to be proud, then for heaven's sake let's not turn our backs at this point. In the grander context, we aren't talking about an awful lot. You can't dismiss $6 million; it's a lot of money. But it has to be taken in the broader context which is that what we have built is worth preserving. That doesn't apply just to the city of Toronto; it applies also to many other municipalities in this province.

In my own city of Kitchener there is going to be a fare increase this year. Our public transit system is going to be facing a deficit in excess of $1 million; they are seriously examining whether public transit can continue to meet the needs of people. That's a question that's being asked London, in Sarnia, in Ottawa, in Hamilton, in Kitchener and, yes, in Toronto. The very kinds of decisions, the very kinds of planning, the very kinds of hope for the future that could come out of this one-year moratorium could have an influence or an impact on those other communities as well.

There is a uniqueness about Toronto, however. Let's accept that fact. Downtown Toronto, in particular, to a large extent has been planned and structured because of public transit. The kinds of things that now can happen in the downtown core of the city of Toronto happened to a large extent because we do have a good public transit system. Are we going to let that go down the drain as well? Once again, we have accepted here in the city of Toronto, and we are beginning to get that model accepted in other larger urban centres in this province, that there is a life and vitality to the downtown core, and that we don't want our people fleeing to the suburbs and abandoning the downtown as a skeleton that operates simply during the business part of the day, such as is happening in many American cities that the Premier himself referred to earlier this afternoon.

That is a fact. But surely if we believe that is something that we want in our urban downtown centres, then we must also reflect that the vitality of the public transit system makes it possible. It won't happen by itself. Are we prepared to lose that as well? This is really what this debate is all about this afternoon. It is looking at the heart of what we believe we want to maintain. Everybody here says he agrees with that. Then, for God's sake, why don't we give them that moratorium? Why don't we give them in the broader context a relatively smaller sum of money? Why don't we give our cities and our public transit systems a chance to show that they can do it?

If a year from now they haven't come up with the answers, then we will have to start asking other kinds of questions. But I would suggest that the questions we are asking today, the issues we are raising today and the recommendations we are making today at least are worthy of consideration and at least are worthy of a year.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, I think the member for Scarborough Centre might appreciate this. He knows as well as I do what is about to happen to transit in Scarborough because of the decision of this government. As the fares increase, because of that fare increase we will not see any increase in the bus service in Scarborough. He knows that as well as I do. Further to that, he knows from the studies that were tabled along with some tough choices—the document from Michael Warren—that ridership will decrease with fare increases.

Mr. McClellan: That's what it says.

Mr. Warner: That is what has happened historically. We know that is going to occur. When it does, the TTC has no choice but not to increase service in Scarborough and in the other boroughs as well. What we're facing in Scarborough is deteriorating service not increased service. We don't have adequate service in Scarborough right now, and this government has made sure that we won't get any better service.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Scarborough is getting a new subway for $61 million and a new LRT. Everything comes to Scarborough.

Mr. Warner: What bothers me is that when we faced the hospital closing decision earlier, we knew that a combined opposition could force a reversal of the government.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Why don't you ask the Mayor of Scarborough? He thinks everything is just fine.

Mr. Warner: The Liberal Party knew that, but when we come to another circumstance where a bad decision of the government can be reversed by opposition pressure, what happens? The Liberals bail out faster than one can bat an eyelash. They are gone, and not only are they gone but they supported the arbitrary decision by the government not to allow this party to have the important vote on confidence, the important vote that needs to be taken tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Drea: You know if they hadn't, you would be defeated.

Mr. Warner: That arbitrary decision is going to haunt this Legislature for some time. You cannot tamper with the parliamentary system the way this government arbitrarily does and get away with it.

Hon. Mr. Drea: You are tampering with it.

Mr. Warner: I will close off. The government members like to talk about the five-cent issue. This government isn't worth a plugged nickel.

Mr. Speaker: The time for the allotted item has expired.

Mr. Cassidy: Let's have a vote.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: By agreement, there is no business statement today. I believe there might be one tomorrow. Before moving the adjournment of the House, I would indicate that tomorrow we will be dealing with Bills 74 and 75 in committee.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, I have a question on the procedure. The temporary government House leader or temporary minister has indicated we will deal with Bills 74 and 75 tomorrow. We do not normally deal with legislation on Friday. Is there some explanation for not dealing with the routine proceedings?

Mr. Speaker: There is really no explanation required. The government House leader determines the order of business in the House.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Grossman, the House adjourned at 6 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, MARCH 9, 1979

The House met at 10 a.m.

Prayers.

ORAL QUESTIONS

ENERGY POLICY

Mr. S. Smith: I'll ask a question of the Premier, who I see is just arriving, inasmuch as the Minister of Energy (Mr. Auld) and his esteemed assistant, who is making remarks on his behalf in Ottawa, are both absent.

I would like to ask the Premier why it is that the government of Ontario feels free to play rather cute politics with the question of energy at a time when the national interest is perhaps a little more important? Why is it that only Premier Lougheed, the government of Ontario, and Mr. Clark in the opposition are now objecting and referring to as dictatorial a bill which is almost identical in wording to a bill to which Ontario took no objection just a few years ago? I refer to Bill C-42 and the remarks that were made by the member for Durham West (Mr. Ashe), the parliamentary assistant for the Minister of Energy.

Given the fact that electrical energy cannot be redistributed by the federal government under this bill without the agreement of the province, what is the objection of the province of Ontario suddenly, now, to the allocation of natural gas and oil in the event of a national emergency?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I realize the Leader of the Opposition has read the act and assessed it with great care. Of course he has also read the observations made to the committee.

Mr. Nixon: Does the Premier want a copy? We have a copy right here.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, yes, I have a copy.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I know that the distinguished House leader for the Liberal Party has also read it with great care.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is not a debate, it's a question period.

An hon. member: It's a shouting match.

Hon. Mr. Davis: And, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest—

Mr. Nixon: The Premier's implication is that we have not read it.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, no, I'm just saying that I'm assuming the member has.

Mr. S. Smith: It happens that we have; so why doesn't the Premier answer the question for a change?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I guess after that heroic performance yesterday afternoon on the TTC, the Leader of the Opposition is feeling just a little frustrated this morning. I understand that. I have great sympathy.

Mr. Speaker: Order, the question dealt specifically with energy policy and I wish the Premier would confine his remarks to that.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I will certainly make every effort, although you must confess that the Leader of the Opposition's question was really somewhat provocative. There was some editorial comment suggesting that we were playing politics. I think that was the general suggestion in his question.

Mr. Kerrio: Perish the thought.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'm just saying that I—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Does the Premier have a response?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I think the minister himself will be here sometime within the next half hour or three quarters of an hour and he might like to deal with it in greater detail.

Just as a matter of general principle though, as a government we are concerned about some of the powers contained in that particular bill. I recognize the members opposite perhaps would like to take this issue in defence of the minister in Ottawa and the powers he wishes to obtain through this bill. The brief also pointed out—and I think it's really very relevant—that one of the concerns—

Mr. S. Smith: Yes, it's one country.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Do you want an answer or do you not want an answer?

Mr. S. Smith: You are only starting to answer the question now.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Does the Leader of the Opposition want a response?

Mr. S. Smith: I certainly do, but I wish he would have directed himself to the answer at the beginning of his reply.

Mr. Speaker: If you would stop interrupting, perhaps we might get a response.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think it's fair to point out that this is really a little broader than just the bill. The submission made yesterday pointed out the concern of this province with respect to energy policy generally. The submission pointed out that part of the rationale of this province over the past number of years is the fact that the government of Canada, in support of the Liberal policy of Ontario, was moving to world price, that we were looking for the guarantee of supply in this process and that we really haven't made much progress in this regard. That too, was a part of the brief. We don't see anything in the bill that really brings this about.

I'm the first one to support, as I have and as I did at the first ministers' conference, the ability of the government of Canada to act, I think the phrasing in the proposed legislation then was, in "a compelling national interest." I'm not sure this was the right phraseology; I'm not sure it shouldn't be done in some better fashion and I'm not going to argue that today. But we do not without any question move away from the fact that in times of national emergency or compelling national interest there should be involvement by the government of Canada. This point of view is contrary to that of the producing provinces, including Saskatchewan, although my guess is that they were prepared to accept, shall we say, that compromise sort of position. Alberta obviously was not.

Ms. Gigantes: Saskatchewan is a co-operative commonwealth.

Hon. Mr. Davis: What we're concerned about is some of the principles contained in the bill and just what they might mean in the long run. I think there is an implication in the bill that would give the government of Canada or the minister powers that really would usurp those normally discharged by the National Energy Board. The Leader of the Opposition may not read that into the bill, but I think the potential for that is there.

I think it's a very important piece of legislation. It's one that should be thought out very carefully.

Mr. Peterson: You have got the power to ration gas in the province.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would say with respect that maybe it shouldn't be rushed through during the dying stages of the administration that may no longer be administering the affairs of this country after the next election.

It does get into the possibility of rationing, although Mr. Gillespie himself has acknowledged that it would take weeks or months to bring any such situation about. Our point of view, and the minister may express this in different terminology, is that the bill is a very important bill. It has serious implications for all of us. It does get into the question of the rights and responsibilities of provincial jurisdictions. I think it would have been unfortunate if we had not made our points of view known.

Hopefully, those brief words will help the Leader of the Opposition. If he hasn't received it, I will certainly get him a copy of the presentation made by the province. It may be he'll find a lot in it with which he can agree; there may be some things with which he doesn't. I understand that.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, would the Premier please explain to the House why a bill is now found dictatorial and objectionable just before a possible federal election when the very same bill, virtually word for word, was found acceptable by Ontario just a few years ago? Does the Premier not agree that in the event that international allocations of oil and gas were required, a national government would have the ability to make those kinds of allocations within this country, notwithstanding the objections of the Premier of Alberta?

Hon. Mr. Davis: We have always taken the position that, in times of national emergency or compelling national interest, or whatever language one may wish to use, the government of Canada has not only a right, but also a responsibility.

There are some provinces which disagree with that point of view. This province does not happen to be one of them. What we are saying is that this bill, put in place on a permanent basis, does raise several matters of principle which we think have to be assessed very carefully.

It is the Leader of the Opposition who is putting this into a political context, who is putting it into the context of our objections prior to a federal election. We have not put it in that context. He may have more knowledge than I have as to when the Prime Minister of Canada intends to issue a writ. I have not put this into a political context; nor did the presentation to the committee in Ottawa put it into a political context. If he wishes to do so, if he wishes to say people are playing politics with this, so be it. We are not.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary question: I welcome the position taken by the government in this matter because of the very great concern that we had about the supine attitude of the government with respect to the emergency powers question two years ago and to the Anti-Inflation Board legislation.

My question to the Premier is, will he also provide us with a copy of the brief? And does the Premier, as the spokesman for the government with respect to constitutional change, in fact have background papers and a detailed position paper on the position of this government with respect to the doctrines of national emergency and national concern, which are obviously at the root of this question and led to the position taken by the government in Ottawa?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, this government has never been supine, as the member for Riverdale suggests.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Comatose, but not supine.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I certainly will be delighted to provide him with a copy of the observations made, together with a copy of the bill.

I am trying to think what material we might provide him with as it relates to the position of this province. What I think I can get for him is the documentation that was used for the first ministers' meeting, which documentation really sets out the areas of consensus as it relates to distribution, particularly as it related to the resource industry. I think I can get that material for him. When I say "consensus", this was as a result of the meeting of the ministers responsible here in Toronto. I emphasize "consensus", because Alberta was opposed to the suggested language. Saskatchewan, my recollection is, was less than enthusiastic; it preferred Alberta's position. I do not think I am being unfair in saying that.

We were prepared to accept, I think, if there had been unanimity by all the other provinces, probably the draft that was considered. Some of us were concerned about the exact phraseology of that draft and whether "compelling national interest" was sufficient to enable the federal government to move in times of difficulty or crisis—I do not like the word "crisis"—but it did not get that far. We did not reach any agreement as to whether the word "compelling" or some variation of that would be acceptable at all to Alberta, and as a result the discussions did not go past that point.

I will certainly get whatever material I can for the member. I will also give him an opportunity, perhaps during the throne speech debate or whenever, to discuss this in greater detail, but I will get it for him.

Mr. S. Smith: For the Premier's information, the phrase is "national emergency", and not "compelling interest"—just for his information. He might read the bill.

Hon. Mr. Davis: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker: Where is it? What is the Leader of the Opposition referring to?

Mr. S. Smith: Bill C-42, the bill to which the Premier is taking such serious objection; the words are "national emergency".

Hon. Mr. Davis: What I was referring to was the consensus that was reached. We are talking about two different issues here, if the Leader of the Opposition would listen. We are talking about the possibility of using the phrase "compelling national interest" in relation to the resource section of a new constitution. That is where the phrase "compelling national interest" emerged. That is what the documentation suggests. I did not suggest that the bill contained that phrase. I happen to know it does not.

USE OF HERBICIDE 2,4,5-T

Mr. S. Smith: I would like to ask a question of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Parrott), but he is not here again, so perhaps the Minister of Agriculture and Food might be willing to take this question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: He was here yesterday.

Mr. Bolan: So were you.

Mr. Peterson: And nobody noticed.

Mr. Conway: The Premier is so much more pleasant when his wife is with him.

Hon. Mr. Davis: If sometime you did the same thing, then you might be more pleasant.

Mr. S. Smith: I fail to see why the member for Renfrew North would wish to be with the Premier's wife, charming person that she is.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Or more likely, I have to tell you on a matter of privilege, it would be a lot better company than some he keeps in that caucus.

Mr. S. Smith: But to ask a question of the Minister of Agriculture: Given that the season for spraying the herbicide 2,4,5-T is almost upon us, or will be in a few weeks, is the Minister of Agriculture and Food planning in consultation with the Minister of the Environment to ban the use of this particular herbicide? In view of the unprecedented action by the Environmental Protection Agency in the United States, will he issue an emergency ban on the spraying of that particular chemical? Granting that in Ontario this chemical is used basically for bush control rather than on food-growing areas, nonetheless, given the hazard to human health, is the minister prepared to issue a ban for this season until he has some further information?

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, as the Leader of the Opposition knows, 2,4,5-T, better known as brush killer, is licensed by the government of Canada, not by the province of Ontario, and as soon as I heard about it, I instructed my staff to get in touch with the appropriate people in Ottawa to have some discussions on the matter. They will be the ones who will have to do any banning, right out of Ottawa. It's licensed under Ottawa agreements of course, as the member knows.

Mr. S. Smith: It is indeed. By way of supplementary: the provincial government also has jurisdiction in the use of these pesticides or herbicides in a sense, as the minister knows, and what I would like to know is whether the minister is aware that approximately 220,000 pounds of this substance containing dioxin, which is the single most toxic chemical known to man, were sprayed in Ontario in 1978? Is he aware that students were spraying it this past summer in large amounts under the Ontario Hydro right of way areas? The Ministry of the Environment has allegedly been studying this chemical closely for two years now. Given the resultant miscarriages in Oregon and so on, does the minister not feel that he has some responsibility to act and not just wait for some licensing arrangement to come through from Ottawa? The spraying is going to start in a few weeks, so doesn't he think he should be protecting the families and the people who may in other ways be affected by this spraying program?

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I've already pointed out that I have drawn it to the attention of my officials who have talked to Ottawa. The Minister of the Environment, who is not here, is the person the question should be properly put to and I've had discussions on it with his people too. We work together as a unit over here and we understand what's going on—

Mr. T. P. Reid: Then you should be able to answer the question.

Hon. W. Newman: —and we are talking with Ottawa on the matter.

EMPLOYMENT DEVELOPMENT FUND

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Ministry of Industry and Tourism, if he will care to find himself back in the House. I have a question right now for the—

Hon. Mr. Davis: He is there.

Hon. Mr. Welch: He was there all the time.

Mr. Foulds: He was hiding behind the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Brunelle).

Mr. Cassidy: He's gotten so short.

Mr. Foulds: I didn't think anybody could hide behind Rene Brunelle, but Larry Grossman can.

Mr. Cassidy: That's the fastest reappearing act we've seen for a long time, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The Leader of the Opposition gets cranky and you lose your eyesight, all in one morning.

Mr. Cassidy: In that case, I will ask a question beginning with the Minister of Industry and Tourism. In view of the fact that there are very serious problems in key sectors of Ontario industry, like the machinery industry and electrical products, can the minister explain why the government intends to leave it up to individual corporations to determine the province's industrial priorities on an ad hoc basis in the proposed new incentive scheme that was announced in the throne speech? Can he explain why the province is taking this patchwork approach to industrial planning rather than letting the province provide leadership in developing key sectors of our industry?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Firstly, as was indicated the other day, the details of the operation of the fund will be unveiled in the next few weeks and I would suggest to the leader of the third party that perhaps that might be an appropriate time at which to judge whether we are leaving all of this to the industries themselves. Having said that, I think I have gone to great lengths in the last few weeks to indicate that we do have certain priorities. One of those I have indicated has been the electronics industry and, following hard on the heels of the sectoral studies, we will be indicating some further sectors of the economy which on an industry specific basis will be those which will have some priority in terms of applications to the fund.

As well, we are going to be indicating which types of firms on a firm specific basis will within those sectors and across the board have priority in terms of their applications to the fund. I think this is a marked change for government in terms of indicating where its money can most effectively be used in terms of creating some long-term strength for industry in the province. In simple terms then, while the leader of the third party may, and I expect he will, take exception to certain of the priority areas we indicate both on an industry and firm specific basis, nonetheless, I do want to assure him that we do have priorities.

In fact, we do have certain strategies which we will be indicating in the next few weeks. Finally, I think any determination with regard to which areas should ultimately be the areas to which our strategy is pointed ought to await determination of the GATT negotiations because, obviously, any particular strategy we might announce today could be dramatically affected by tariff and non-tariff changes two or three weeks down the road.

After the GATT negotiations, we will be spelling out in a rather detailed fashion those areas of priority and strategies we have developed for long-term strength in the 1980s.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: If I can take just the city of Hamilton as an example, is the minister aware that employment in the machinery industry in Hamilton has gone down from 5,500 four years ago to 3,600 today and that employment in the electrical industry has gone down from 8,100 four years ago to 5,300 today? Will the government be giving priority to key building block industries, like machinery and electrical products, in order to rebuild our strength in areas that have been allowed to wither away under the Conservative government?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: With respect, I think it's ridiculous to suggest that this government had the slightest thing to do with the withering away of those particular sectors.

Mr. di Santo: It's true.

Mr. S. Smith: It's not your fault?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: These things have a lot larger implication than specific provincial policies. In fact, as we have tried to make clear—and I understand for political purposes that the leader of the third party would prefer to ignore it—the fact is that what we are attempting to do in this province is to move into some of the vacuum created by a lack of any co-ordinated federal government strategy of any sort whatsoever over the last few years. As well, we can't ignore the fact that international circumstances, which have given rise in part to what has happened in the federal government of this country, are creating a bit of a crisis of confidence. All of these things begin to build up over time to create a situation in which Ontario now must respond in specific sectors to help specific sectors out of some of these problems which, let's face it, have not been created by this government in this province.

It is facetious to argue that, and members opposite would reject any argument made by this government which allowed us to take credit for a similar increase in those sectors in terms of employment, if that had occurred over the past few years. If the leader of the third party is taking the position now that we ought to be only or mainly responsible for that decrease, I trust he will maintain that position, if we see an increase in certain sectors, and allow us to take full credit for any increases that occur over the next year which, by the way, I believe there will be in many sectors.

Mr. Breithaupt: Supplementary: While the minister is setting forward the guidelines with respect to the Ontario employment development fund, will he be able to advise the House as to the alternatives that that fund might assist? I am thinking particularly of the Budd situation in Kitchener where re-tooling or other opportunities for use of those funds might be of assistance, even though the marketing for the product that it so happens that company makes is a somewhat different circumstance, as the minister is well aware. Will there be the opportunity at least to have those alternatives dealt with as possible applications under this fund?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes, that's a very relevant question and one that we have been considering, specifically with regard to the Budd situation. To be fair to Budd, they have not asked for, nor indicated yet, any need for that sort of assistance. Their problem is, as you have indicated, a market for whatever product they might find themselves able to produce with or without some additional assistance.

One of the things we really want to take care the public is aware of is that the new fund is not one which is only aimed at, or perhaps even primarily aimed at, incentives to multinationals to locate in this province. In fact, I would expect a great deal of the funds out of that employment development fund would be pointed toward the Budd type of situation, provided that a new long-term market can be developed for a new product or process which will give us some assurance of stability for employment in that given community for a long period of time; not for two or three years, but for a generation or so.

If that company can offer sourcing in Canada, long-term stability, perhaps some export potential and some technological advancement, then that is a typical situation where I would conceive an application to the fund would be warmly received.

in two ways; firstly, to provide adjustment assistance to permit plants to convert into profitable operations and, secondly—and this is one of the reasons that a board of ministers is being considered and has been developed—the ability to respond quickly before large layoffs take place and a plant shuts down, which then is more difficult to rescue than operating before the fact. So, in summary, Mr. Speaker, the Budd type of situation is one which I expect would well qualify.

Mr. di Santo: Supplementary to the original question: Is the minister aware that the employment in the secondary manufacturing sector in Ontario has been decreasing gradually, year after year, because of lack of a policy of this government and not of the federal government or the GATT negotiations in Geneva? Secondly, what insurance can the government give that this new grant plan of financing selected and winning companies will not produce the same disastrous effect as the past fiscal policy of this government in exempting the machinery-producing companies from sales tax which has not produced one single job in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of course, I can't give you a total and complete assurance of the success of this program, or any other program that this or any other government, regardless of strife, is able to put forward. No one has any iron-clad guarantees of success.

What we do believe is that this program will give us some manoeuvrability in order, quite frankly, to avoid layoff situations and situations where governments historically have come in after the fact where we are trying to put the pieces back together again, after an industry has been permitted to operate on its own and finds itself, after many years, in a situation in which its goods or services or products are no longer competitive.

We are trying now to speak to firms which are doing reasonably well, but which we anticipate, through competition, tariff changes or whatever, may find themselves on the critical list in three or four or five years and in this fashion we can avoid coming in after the fact. Instead, we can come in before the fact and perhaps put those firms in a long-term healthier situation than if we had sat back and done nothing and waited until they applied to us as a lender of last resort to bail them out of a death-bed situation. I think in the long term this will provide a lot more job security than the old system which was more of a Band-Aid one.

Mr. B. Newman: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Can the minister assure the House that the assistance given to these various corporations will not be to the detriment of other Ontario and/or Canadian companies at present manufacturing a similar or almost similar product?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes, absolutely. I think, in fact, the selectivity approach will give us the flexibility that, in some cases, we didn't have earlier to try to look after that sort of situation. In any case, let me say to the member for Windsor-Walkerville in response to his question, we will continue to be as carefully selective as we were last June in the V-6 engine plant.

But quite seriously, the older system, the system which would have us respond only through the traditional ODC mechanism, was one more tied to universality and programs in which if one came within the four corners of the program one got the money. That put us in a position where sometimes we did have situations where a new endeavour, newly financed, would be in a somewhat competitive position. In this way, because we are trying to build up long-term competitive and industrial strength, we would be defeating our purposes if we helped one firm build up while at the same time we allowed another one to fall down as a result.

The answer to the question in simple terms is yes, we will be avoiding those types of situations.

HYDRO LOAD FORECASTS

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development. In an attempt to get a clear answer, after trying to listen to the Minister of Energy's (Mr. Auld) response yesterday on questions of Hydro's future plans—as I mentioned yesterday, a one per cent error in forecasting of demand growth by Hydro will cost, according to Hydro itself, consumers of Ontario half a billion dollars a year in extra payments for electricity in the 1980s—I would like to ask the minister:

In view of the contentions by several members of cabinet that the substitution of electricity for uncertain oil and gas supplies is going to raise the total rate of electrical demand growth, is that the government's position; and in that case, does the minister therefore reject the Ministry of Energy forecast, which indicates very clearly that if oil and gas supplies are uncertain that will, in fact, lower the rate of growth for electricity demand to a rate even lower than the ministry already forecast?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: The Premier indicated earlier that the Minister of Energy would be here later this morning, and I believe that question should be directed to him.

Mr. Cassidy: If I can ask a supplementary, Mr. Speaker, I will refer it back to the Minister of Energy if the minister insists, but I would like the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development to say whether, as Provincial Secretary for Resources Development, he is exercising any oversight over the failure of the Ministry of Energy to exercise any specific—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oversight? There are never oversights over here.

Mr. S. Smith: You overlook a lot of things.

Mr. Cassidy: —of course there are—whether the Ministry of Energy is exercising any control at all over Ontario Hydro's development program, or whether the government has simply decided to leave Hydro with its projections, with all the costs that will entail because of overforecasting for the Ontario consumer?

Mr. Nixon: Rene, tell us what you think; this may be your last chance.

Mr. Speaker: New question.

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, that question is referred to the Minister of Energy.

BOISE CASCADE DISPUTE

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour and Manpower in regard to the labour dispute between Boise Cascade and lumber and sawmill unions at Fort Frances and Kenora. Since this legal strike has been on since last September and there doesn't seem to be much movement on either side, from either the company or the unions, in resolving the owner-operator dispute, can the Minister of Labour and Manpower suggest if there is any new movement in settling this dispute and if he might be ready at this time to table the Joyce-Lewis report and its recommendations in order to bring the parties together and resolve it?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: First of all, I might take the opportunity to thank the member, as well as the Minister of Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier) and the members for Fort William (Mr. Hennessy) and Port Arthur (Mr. Foulds), for the excellent rapport there has been during this very difficult dispute. As I am sure the member for Rainy River knows, we have put a great deal of effort into trying to resolve that situation. I am pleased to table not only the original report of the disputes advisory committee, but a follow-up report which I just received yesterday. I will also forward copies of those two reports to the leaders of the opposition party and the third party and to the labour critics.

I think it would be fair if I could read, perhaps, from the final report I received yesterday from the disputes advisory committee—Mr. Stephen Lewis and Mr. Robert Joyce—in a selective way: "We still believe that the route of voluntary arbitration can be fair to both parties, especially if the arbitration board were constituted as originally recommended. We remain more than willing to intervene again, or to help in any way if it seems appropriate."

So, in more direct answer to your question: I have to say that the disputes advisory committee and I remain firm in the belief that both parties should seriously give thought to accepting voluntary binding arbitration as a means of solving an issue which at the present time I frankly find very difficult to see being resolved in any other way. I say that, having met with them personally on many occasions and having resolved every other matter in dispute—except that one remaining and very fundamental issue.

I would also like to take this opportunity to say that there has been great co-operation with the Solicitor General (Mr. McMurtry) in this regard, in that the Solicitor General was good enough to have members of his staff meet with union representatives. Policing arrangements and problems have been ironed out, to my knowledge, very satisfactorily. So I think it has been a good, co-operative effort to try in every way possible to resolve that dispute in as equitable a way as seems reasonable.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Supplementary, if I may: I would like to thank the Minister of Labour for his co-operation in regard to this.

Mr. Peterson: What's going on here?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: It is called "getting along," David.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: David wouldn't know what that was.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Do I take it, then, from the minister's answer that he will be formally contacting both Lumber and Saw and Boise Cascade and putting to them formally that they should accept voluntary arbitration, and that perhaps in the meantime, while that process—which I believe would take about three months—is going on, they would revert to the status quo? Will he do that formally?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: The original disputes advisory committee report recommended that there be a return to work, if the principle of voluntary arbitration was accepted. So that's in line with what the member has said. I certainly do intend, as a result of the report that I have just received, to write to both parties or to communicate with them in some other way, indicating our view that voluntary arbitration is something they should give serious consideration to.

EQUAL PAY

Mr. Bounsall: I have a question of the Minister of Labour and Manpower. Since the previous minister, the member for York Mills (Miss Stephenson), rejected the thrust of an internal ministry report, aimed at the introduction of legislation on equal pay for work of equal value, will the minister give a commitment to review that report, with the positive view of introducing as soon as possible into this Legislature for debate a bill on equal pay for work of equal value?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I think the member asked that question knowing full well that I do have a firm commitment to do whatever seems reasonable to try to redress the imbalances that have existed between women in the work force and men such as yourself, I am sure.

I want to tell the member, however, that I also made it clear yesterday in a statement before the Legislature that I would review what was going on in the Ottawa area and in Quebec with regard to equal pay for work of equal value, and that I would continue to have good rapport and discussions with groups that supported that view.

But it is not the only view. As the member knows, this government has taken several initiatives with regard to this problem: first, with the equal pay for equal work legislation, which may well be coming up for review; secondly, with regard to our affirmative action program, and thirdly, as recently as this week the Premier wrote to all ministers reaffirming the need for the ministries to be more actively involved and to help correct the imbalances that may exist within the civil service.

Mr. Warner: It is not good enough. It is not good enough, and you know it.

Mr. Mackenzie: Why is there no progress?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: If you want the answers, then be quiet. In addition to that, yesterday I advised through a press release and through a statement I made that we felt equal opportunity was an area that deserved particular emphasis at this time. I therefore had appointed a high-level labour-management advisory council on equal employment opportunities. It comprises: Terry Meagher, secretary-treasurer of the Ontario Federation of Labour; Lucy Nicholson, president of the Ontario Division of CUPE; Don MacLeod, president of Savage Shoes; Helen Slater, director of the Office of Equal Opportunity at Ottawa; Kay Sigurjonsson, executive secretary of the federation of women teachers, and Bill Winfield, the vice-president of personnel, Warner-Lambert. I suggest that these are earnest and honest endeavours to try to redress a problem.

Mr. Bounsall: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: First of all, would the minister table in the Legislature that internal ministry report on equal pay for work of equal value, plus any and all documents associated with it? And since that equal opportunity committee he has just mentioned is only to encourage equal opportunity in the industrial area of the province and within unions and to advise the women's bureau, and it intends to meet only about three or four times a year, surely the minister must see that is no new legislative thrust whatsoever.

He must see we have no commitment, in the throne speech or from him or anybody in his ministry, to introduce into this House anything like equal pay for work of equal value or what he is talking about in terms of this committee—contract compliance. Is he going to introduce any new legislation into this Legislature on women's issues or will this be another year of a big goose egg and nothing for women in terms of any legislative advancements?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, just so that the record clearly shows the concern this minister and this government have about women's issues, I would like to quote from a speech that I made yesterday to the confectionery manufacturers' association. I regard this issue as a vital work-place issue, much like several others to which I have given my attention in the past six months. There is no doubt about this government's interest and concern about women's issues and I have outlined what I think are positive steps that have been taken and that will continue to be taken.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, does the Minister of Labour and Manpower not recognize the fact that women have been studied to death on this issue and they need to have action? There is no point in continuing these studies endlessly; it's only a matter of stalling on the issue.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, I think the record clearly says that there is no stalling going on. We have been addressing the issues from time to time in a variety of ways. At the present time our ministry is carrying out a survey of some 25 industries to see just what the impact has been of our affirmative action program and then following that to consider and decide what measures should be introduced.

DEVELOPMENT CORPORATIONS

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Industry and Tourism. I received several calls from constituents of mine in the Belleville-Trenton area who have applied to the Eastern Ontario Development Corporation for assistance in expanding or setting up new industry. They have been told there are no funds available. Because of this all meetings of the corporation have been cancelled and no new applications, as well as many applications that have been approved, will not be dealt with.

Can the minister explain why, especially at a time when we are looking to expand and open new industry in eastern Ontario, a situation such as this should exist?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes; in fact I welcome this opportunity to clarify the situation.

Beginning about the time of the Ford plant transaction last year, business at the Ontario Development Corporations—EODC and NODC—all increased dramatically. As a result, in an attempt to respond to that increase in business, we were faced with a choice of trying to ask ODC to be more difficult in terms of those applications and slow down the mechanism; or suggesting to ODC that, notwithstanding the impacts on this coming year's budgets, they continue to respond to that unprecedented increase in applications. As a result, it turns out that the ODCs, through their current year's activity—that is the 1978-79 fiscal year—have now used up, or almost used up, all of the previously allocated 1979-80 money.

The honourable member will understand that commitments made in 1978-79 draw down funds which are allocated to us in 1979-80 and, if we have an unprecedented amount of business in 1978-79, that means that by the time we hit the new fiscal year we may have committed funds coming in our 1979-80 budget.

That has created a situation where we wanted the opportunity to sit down with the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) and analyse just which responsibilities the employment development fund would take over from the Ontario development corporations and which would be left in the Ontario development corporations, perhaps through restructured programs, to carry on.

For example, obviously one of the options that the ODCs will be looking at is whether they should shift more to guarantee programs with perhaps some interest subsidy rather than only the traditional loan programs. In order that there be no misunderstanding, though, let me say that I expect loan programs also to continue through the ODCs.

In any case, what has simply happened is a determination by the Treasurer and myself to sit down and put the two funds together prior to agreeing upon an increased allocation for ODCs next year.

The people who have called the member for Quinte will no doubt all have been in receipt of a letter from the development corporation, indicating not that the corporations have been wound up and not that there would be no moneys coming, but simply that until the end of this fiscal year—that is, the end of March—by which time the Treasurer and I will have reached some conclusions on this matter, the applications cannot be finally processed.

In order that any applicant will not suffer any financial harm as a result of this hiatus period, we have also indicated in each of those letters that anyone who has a severe financial problem, who really needs his application processed before that time, will in fact have his application processed immediately by the ODC.

Mr. O'Neil: Is the minister telling us then that, because of some of the larger loans that were put out to large corporations, some of our firms and companies in eastern Ontario will suffer because of this?

Is the minister aware that there are approximately 50 companies that have had loans approved but will not get them until after the first of the year—and likely not until some later date—and that there are many other applications on file that cannot be dealt with because he has no money?

We are worried in eastern Ontario. We want these loans to our smaller companies. We want some jobs created. We wonder what the minister is doing about it. We are worried that some of these larger companies will take away from some of our industries in eastern Ontario which need the money.

Mr. S. Smith: You gave it all to Ford; now you've got nothing left.

Hon. Mr. Davis: You would have given Ford 50 per cent; remember, Stuart?

Mr. S. Smith: I would not have taken it away from eastern Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Precisely what happened was that each and every dollar committed last year by the grant to Ford was over and above all the ODC money; it was extra money found, as indeed each dollar in the employment development fund is extra money.

I also want to make clear, in case the honourable member did not follow the important, I think, explanation I gave a moment ago, that there has been no reduction whatever in the 1979-80 allocation to the Eastern Ontario Development Corporation; in fact, there will be somewhat of an increase.

What has happened because we have responded to a great number of applications—more applications than we have ever experienced before—and given that money out, is that we have committed more money than ever before to eastern Ontario and are in a situation where we have already committed all of the moneys that were approved in the budgeting process and everywhere else for eastern Ontario through 1979-80.

We are analysing the cases that are pending from eastern Ontario and trying to decide which of them should be handled in the new employment development fund and which should be handled through the Ontario development corporations. That will be sorted out in literally a matter of days. The point I want to make, though, is that all of this means that there is substantially more money for eastern Ontario—

Mr. O'Neil: How much more?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That will obviously await the budget, but I can assure the honourable member that there will be substantially more employment for eastern Ontario and northern Ontario through the vehicle of the employment development fund and the Ontario development corporations.

It is because we have committed more than ever before and more than anticipated to eastern Ontario that we are currently in this situation.

BRANTFORD HOSPITAL CLOSURE

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Premier's irresponsible restraint program will force the closing of a Catholic hospital in Brantford as an active treatment facility, will the Premier ensure that interim funds are available so that the local health council can re-evaluate their decision and ensure that the hospital is kept operating as an active treatment facility; as is desired by thousands of people living in that area?

Hon. Mr. Davis: There's nothing irresponsible about any program developed by this government.

Mr. Warner: It's totally irresponsible.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I know that it's not always acceptable to the members of that party, who always believe there is an unlimited supply of money from some source.

Mr. Warner: Unlike you, we support the health care system.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would suggest to the honourable member that he perhaps has not totally understood the situation in the way that he has phrased the question. I'm sure the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) would be delighted to help in his educational process and explain this in greater detail to him next week. I will certainly alert the minister to be prepared for that particular question.

Mr. Makarchuk: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: In the response given by the Premier he has quite clearly taken the question as notice for the attention of the Minister of Health. I fail to see how you could have a supplementary to something where there is a commitment to answer it next week. Why don't you wait on the response next week and then give your supplementary to him?

Mr. Nixon: Would you permit a point of order?

Mr. Speaker: There's really nothing out of order. There hasn't been a formal response—

Mr. Makarchuk: He hasn't answered the question.

Mr. Speaker: That's right, he hasn't; he's taken it as notice. I'll hear a new question.

Mr. Nixon: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: There's nothing out of order in the question period.

Mr. Nixon: How do you know?

Mr. Kennedy: Because he said so.

Mr. Speaker: There's nothing out of order, because you give complete discretion to the Speaker as to how he will run the question period. I will provide ample—

Mr. Nixon: With great respect, we will not challenge your ruling.

Mr. Speaker: Thank you. I will now recognize the member for York Centre.

RAPE CASE

Mr. Stong: In the absence of the Solicitor General and Attorney General (Mr. McMurry), I have a question of the Provincial Secretary for Justice. As a result of the acquittal earlier this week of an accused charged with the rape of a prostitute, and more particularly in light of the succinct summary of your crown attorney who prosecuted the case, and who summarized the verdict as follows: "A prostitute becomes an unrapable person;" will you confer with your colleague and give instructions to the crown attorney's department to investigate the possibility of appealing this decision, which has all the earmarks of a perverse verdict?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I would be very glad to confer with my colleague, but I will stop short of that. I will leave it to him, as the chief law officer of the crown, to make up his own mind as to what further action he might take with respect to this matter.

BACK DISABILITY CLAIMS

Mr. Wildman: I have a question of the Minister of Labour and Manpower. Since, in the words of Dr. Ferrier of Sault Ste. Marie, the scarfing process at steelworks, "results in the application of tremendous force on the fulcrum of the lower back," and that scarfers are prone to lumbar sacro disabilities and a well-controlled study of the incidence of back disability among scarfers is long overdue; will the Minister of Labour and Manpower request the Workmen's Compensation Board to initiate such a study at Algoma Steel?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I haven't read that report; but I would be glad to review it, and if it is warranted I will make a recommendation to the WCB.

Mr. Wildman: Supplementary: Could the minister also investigate to determine why Dr. Chovil and his colleagues at the Workmen's Compensation Board would maintain to doctors and union representatives in Sault Ste. Marie that nothing in the literature indicates undue incidence of back disability in scarfers; even though Dr. Dowd of the Workmen's Compensation Board had carried out a study of this problem at Stelco in 1968 and employees there have been making claims for low-back disability, many of which have been accepted on an individual basis for over 10 years?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I will certainly be glad to look into that matter for the member and report to him.

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: There are no points of order.

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of privilege; I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I had a question that was referred by the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Brunelle) to the Minister of Energy (Mr. Auld) when he came into the House. Is it now possible to have that question referred to the Minister of Energy?

Hon. Mr. Davis: On Monday, Michael.

Mr. Kerrio: The member has had all his time-outs.

Mr. Cassidy: On Monday, okay.

Mr. Nixon: How come, Mr. Speaker, you accept points of order from the NDP but not from the Liberals?

Mr. Speaker: It wasn't a point of order.

Mr. Nixon: I think you're favouring them.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Don't pay any attention to him.

FAMILY BENEFITS

Mr. Peterson: You're really unfair to all of us, Mr. Speaker, so don't worry.

A question of the Minister of Labour and Manpower, Mr. Speaker: As chief custodian of human rights in this province, would he not agree with me that the Ontario Human Rights Code is being violated by the family benefits legislation in this province in that it does not give an allowance to a single male parent, with dependents, on the same basis as it does, for example, with mothers' allowance? Does the minister not agree with me that that is a clear case of legislative discrimination?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, that particular matter does not come within the scope of the human rights code. I'd like to refer that question to the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton) when he's here.

Mr. Peterson: Because it's a clear case of sex discrimination, could I ask the minister to look into that and report back to this House what his point of view is from the point of view of his jurisdiction?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I'd be pleased to review it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McClellan: A supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Try it.

Mr. McClellan: Since the issue relates to inadequacies in the code, may I ask the minister whether he intends to bring the code before us for amendments in this session?

Mr. S. Smith: That is clearly not a supplementary.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, it remains my clear intention to bring the code before the House for review. At the present time we're going through final drafts of proposed legislation, which will then go through the regular routine that all legislative matters receive; that is it will be reviewed by cabinet, by caucus, and then by the various policy fields.

Mr. MacDonald: Has the minister got cabinet support? It wasn't in the Throne Speech, why was it left out?

Hon. Mr. Davis: It was in last year; we don't like to repeat ourselves.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: It remains my intention to introduce legislation with regard to the human rights code to this House.

RESOURCE EQUALIZATION GRANTS

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Revenue in the absence of the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells).

I would like the Minister of Revenue to restate his commitment to the municipalities of this province that $8 million will be transferred to the municipalities that have lost out on resource equalization grants. Could he indicate whether the number of municipalities have been increased and whether that money has been decreased?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Speaker, this, of course, should be directed to the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs. I made the initial statement that the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs would examine and provide some funding, but the final amount of funding and the number of municipalities involved certainly come within the jurisdiction of the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs. I suggest the question should be directed to him.

Mr. Speaker: A new question. The member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman: A supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: The minister has taken notice of it.

Mr. B. Newman: Thank you.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES FOR WOMEN

Mr. McGuigan: My question is of the Minister of Labour and Manpower. In his new role as Minister of Labour and Manpower, will he be setting a target for the number of jobs to be created specifically for women in this province as a part of his overall employment strategy?

Mr. Mackenzie: It won't be worth much anyhow.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, as the member knows, this matter was just mentioned in the Speech from the Throne on Tuesday. Next Monday I'll be commencing some briefings on the various issues related to the eventual incorporation of manpower, as outlined in the Speech from the Throne. I'll be pleased to respond to the member on a later occasion when I have completed that review.

Mr. Mackenzie: It needs another study.

Mr. Cassidy: It has been studied to death.

WOMEN CROWN EMPLOYEES

Ms. Bryden: I have a new question, Mr. Speaker, but it's also to the Minister of Labour and Manpower.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It's your day, Bob.

Ms. Bryden: In view of the fact that the latest report on the status of women crown employees shows that the gap between men and women's average salaries in the public service of Ontario has been widening and that there has been no major improvement in the occupational distribution of women in the 1977-78 fiscal year, I would like to ask the minister to flesh out his avowal that he is working towards improving the position of women in the public service beyond mere letters from the Premier suggesting that something be done on this, and give the women who will be demonstrating Women's International Day tomorrow something to celebrate by committing himself to restructuring jobs in the Ontario public service and to more vigorous affirmative action, so that next year's report will show some progress?

[11:00]

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, it's all very nice to say that we do nothing but send letters, but I must tell the member that the Premier, in his most recent letter to all the ministers, was very firm in his direction. If I may read a portion of that to the member—

Mr. MacClellan: Dispense.

Mr. Mackenzie: Why is the gap growing?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: "I want to be assured that we are giving maximum support to the catch-up program for women employees, to which we are committed under the guidelines and directive approved by the Civil Service Commission and Management Board in 1977."

That's a very strong commitment and it's a commitment I give, too. It may be true that we tend to favour affirmative action programs in the hope that business and government, because it's rationally right to do so, will improve the lot of women in society—because it should be done. If it becomes necessary at some time to introduce legislation to achieve that, I'll be happy to look at it. That doesn't give me any problems.

Mr. Mackenzie: Why is the gap growing?

FARM STORM DAMAGE

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs

(Mr. Wells), I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture and Food. In the absence of his colleague, can the minister indicate whether cabinet has had the opportunity to decide upon recommendations in the matter of the Renfrew county disaster relief application; to make the adjustments that were called for by the local county agricultural committee, with respect to making the payments on a shared basis directly from that fund to the aggrieved farmers?

Mr. Ashe: Did you get up late this morning and forget your tie?

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, in answer to that question, which should go to the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs: as the member knows, I was very much involved when the disaster first struck in Renfrew county, along with the sitting member up there, Mr.—he's not here this morning, but certainly he was in touch with me right away on the matter.

Mr. Riddell: Who is he, by the way?

Mr. Nixon: What is his name?

Hon. W. Newman: Paul Yakabuski—a very fine person, and don't forget it.

Mr. Makarchuk: You had to think about it, though.

Mr. Kerrio: I've heard Paul say that himself.

Hon. W. Newman: I was involved in contacting Intergovernmental Affairs. The minister, I realize, has received a resolution—I have also received a copy of it—asking for a direct 50-50 payment. I think that's what the member is talking about. I think the minister's staff up there explained exactly how the emergency fund would work.

I have not had a response from the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs to the letter the member is talking about, at this point in time.

Mr. Conway: Supplementary: Would the minister, as Minister of Agriculture and Food, take into consideration the unique circumstances of this particular disaster, as it relates to a farming community scattered across a rather wide area in this instance; and would he make representation to the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs or the cabinet generally that a special provision be made for the future, so that this kind of difficulty does not arise on a future occasion and so that farmers so aggrieved will automatically be able to partake of this kind of assistance?

Hon. W. Newman: I would hesitate to say that's the best solution. If one goes the disaster area route that the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs was talking about it is quite possible that the farmers will receive a lot more assistance than they would get by going the route the member is talking about. That's what the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs is looking at at this point in time.

Hon. Mr. Davis: For all the farmers.

PETITIONS

TTC FARE INCREASE

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, I have some petitions from Scarborough, from more than 3,000 people, collected by Richard Johnston, the NDP candidate in Scarborough West.

Mr. Breithaupt: That's about all he will collect.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Saying, "Get us a better candidate."

Mr. Warner: These 3,000 people, and many more constituents in Scarborough, object to the Premier's fare hike which is now destined to take place on Monday.

An hon. member: What a phoney issue.

Mr. Grande: Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition signed by 224 transit users in Metro Toronto.

An hon. member: That's one bus or subway car.

Mr. Grande: This petition, before other members on that side of the House begin to talk about the 224 names—

Mr. Ruston: You can get more than that on one bus.

Mr. Grande: —is the effort of one and only one individual, by the name of Ms. Janice Crook, of Marley Avenue in Toronto, who became incensed at the stubbornness and uncaring attitude of this government regarding the TTC fare increases.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Is she one of your campaign workers?

Mr. Grande: The 224 signatures were collected over a six-day period only.

Mr. Makarchuk: It bothers you a bit.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member was loafing.

Mr. Grande: The petition says: "We, the undersigned, urge the government of Ontario to reconsider its decision not to turn over $6 million to the TTC so that no box fare increases will take place this year."

Mr. Speaker: I want to remind the member for Oakwood, and all honourable members, that any petition that prays for the expenditure of funds is clearly out of order.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

MILK AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. W. Newman moved first reading of Bill 7, An Act to amend the Milk Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. W. Newman: I just very briefly point out this is an act to allow the Ontario Milk Marketing Board, which is now holding their levies in trust, to pay them to the Canadian Dairy Commission. It really is a very long and involved legal situation, but all this really does is make it legal for them to send their funds on to the Canadian Dairy Commission.

TREES AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Auld moved first reading of Bill 8, An Act to amend the Trees Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Auld: The general purpose of this bill is to strengthen the provisions of the Trees Act relating to bylaws passed by counties and other municipalities to prevent the destruction of trees. In order to provide reasonable flexibility, the bill sets out some general exemptions from such bylaws and will authorize the municipalities to make exemptions from the bylaws in specific cases.

I would like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that the bill was introduced last session and the compendium provided at that time still applies. However, if either party has misplaced theirs, I can get that for them.

LIQUOR LICENCE AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Ziemba moved first reading of Bill 9, An Act to amend the Liquor Licence Act, 1975.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Ziemba: The purpose of this bill is to provide for a licence issuance suspension period during which the Liquor Licence Board of Ontario will cease to issue new liquor licences in Ontario. This would be a five-year period and during the suspension period the board will study the issuance of liquor licences in Ontario and make recommendations concerning the extent to which the issuance of liquor licences is consistent with the goals of public health and welfare.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

House in committee of the whole.

PROVINCIAL OFFENCES ACT

Consideration of Bill 74, an Act to establish a Code of Procedure for Provincial Offences.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Before we consider Bill 74, I would just take this opportunity to extend my appreciation to all of the members of the House for the honour they have bestowed upon me in electing me Deputy Chairman of the committee of the whole House. I realize that this is a position that requires impartiality and a firm hand. I will try to administer it to the best of my ability in keeping with the best traditions of this House.

Mrs. Campbell: Before we start with Bill 74, in view of the fact that some of us have just received the proper copy during the course of these proceedings, could we be assured that everyone entering the debate is debating the same bill?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: That sounds like a reasonable suggestion to me. Is there anybody who feels he doesn't have the correct copy of the bill? It's the one that has on the back of it "March 6, second reading." Are we all satisfied we have the right bill?

Mrs. Campbell: It is the bill reprinted as amended by the administration of the justice committee.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Right. Are there any comments, questions or amendments in connection with Bill 74?

Mr. Lawlor: I rise, quite facetiously I assure you, Mr. Chairman, to point out that this bill, if you just glance through it—and you were in the committee—has been so renovated and so totally changed from anything that previously emerged that we are dealing with a totally new bill.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Are you suggesting, Mr. Lawlor—

Mr. Lawlor: Facetiously.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: All right, because I think all the renovations that you are referring to actually went on in the standing committee.

Hon. Mr. Welch: The bill is certainly well fingered.

Mrs. Campbell: There are some amendments.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I have asked if there are any comments, questions or amendments. I gather the first question is one on section 6. Any comments before section 6?

On section 1:

Mr. Lawlor: I've got so many bills now, I can't—I have a question arising out of section 1(1)(f). We had before us a representative from the Justices of the Peace Association of Metropolitan Toronto, but then they withdrew and sent a letter. I have a letter in front of me of February 8. The last sentence says: "It is anticipated that such a brief will be submitted by the end of February 1979." Has that been done and is that available to us?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Can the parliamentary assistant answer that?

Mr. Sterling: We have received the brief from the justices of the peace association. I don't see any objection to making it available to the opposition critics.

Mr. Lawlor: Is it possible, without prolonging the agony, for the parliamentary assistant to give us a brief encapsulation of what they said? They were very much concerned before us as to the administration, where the whole weight, or a very great weight, is going to fall upon the justice of the peace in this province from here on in.

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Chairman, I cannot give a total view of the whole report that was submitted by the justices of the peace association but one of the main concerns related to the role of the justice of the peace under section 6, to which I will be proposing an amendment today. Basically their concern was the duality of their role both as an adjudicator and also as a defence counsel in cross-examining the prosecution or the police officer, which might be required under section 6. That was one of their major concerns in that report.

Mr. Lawlor: They don't object to the extent of the jurisdiction or number 2 with respect to some kind of guidelines being afforded to them to discriminate between serious and less serious and non-serious—and I'm not even serious—the various degrees and permutations of seriousness that go into this legislation?

Mr. Sterling: I'm sorry, I would have to take that particular question under advisement. I am not in a position to comment in relation to that aspect of their report. Perhaps I could give you a copy of the report at this time and then after we had finished with another section of the bill you could return to that topic.

Mr. Lawlor: I'm quite prepared to do that, Mr. Chairman. It's a matter of very considerable puzzlement to me and always has been and I am sure it is to you and I am sure to the ministry even—this whole problem of how to sort out where those justices of the peace who are pivotal to the whole works fit in. What is the subject matter? What is the meat that they are going to chew? They are in the dark. I'm in the dark.

We are putting through the legislation. There has been in the committee hearings a certain refinement, a certain understanding reached, because we were given very large folios of a multitude of offences under provincial jurisdiction which I didn't even suspect existed. It was most enlightening to know there were so many laws governing the most esoteric areas of our lives. But there you are and so it continues. Before I let the legislation go through, I thought this point ought to be pinpointed.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I also might be afforded a copy of the brief. I have discussed some aspects of it with the minister and with the parliamentary assistant but I would like to see the brief itself.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: We will return to section 1 later then. Are there any comments in regard to section 2? Anything before section 6? Shall sections 2, 3, 4 and 5 stand as part of the bill?

Sections 2 to 5, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 6:

Mr. Sterling: In relation to some of the comments made by the member for Lakeshore, I have had an opportunity briefly to go through the report. It doesn't appear they address the situation as to the seriousness of the offence or to that distinction between the varying degrees of offence. As such, I don't know whether it would help in that particular regard. However, I am most pleased to give both the member for St. George and the member for Lakeshore a copy of this report.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Sterling moves that section 6 of the bill be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"6(1) Where an offence notice is served on a defendant whose address as shown on the certificate of offence is outside the territorial jurisdiction of the court specified in the notice and he wishes to dispute the charge but does not wish to attend or be represented at a trial, he may do so by signifying his intention on the offence notice and delivering the offence notice to the office of the court specified in the notice together with a written dispute setting out with reasonable particularity his dispute and any facts upon which he relies.

"(2) Where an offence notice is delivered under subsection 1, a justice shall, in the absence of the defendant, consider the dispute and, (a) where the dispute raises an issue that may constitute a defence, direct a hearing, or (b) where the dispute does not raise an issue that may constitute a defence, convict the defendant and impose the set fine.

"(3) Where the justice directs a hearing under subsection 2, the court shall hold the hearing and shall, in the absence of the defendant, consider the evidence in the light of the issues raised in the dispute and acquit the defendant or convict the defendant and impose the set fine or such lesser fine as he is permitted by law.

"(4) This section applies in such part or parts of Ontario as are prescribed by the regulations."

Mr. Sterling: Could I add my congratulations to you on your appointment as Deputy Chairman? I think it is most appropriate that one of the first matters that you would be dealing with in your new position would be Bill 74. As members of the committee know, you had a substantial participation in the justice committee when this bill was before it. Further to that, the amendment to section 6 and the retention of section 6 can, I believe, be in a great part due to your participation in the debates in the justice committee, although there were many other members who supported the retention of this section.

Mr. Lawlor: That is just because you happen to be a Conservative.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I am glad the member for Carleton-Grenville said that. Being in the chair, I'll have to refrain from making comments, but it is only because I am in the chair.

Mr. Sterling: While section 6 was seen as a very innovative step in the whole administration of justice and quite a departure from the normal procedures carried on in the courtroom, it was also seen as an extremely useful tool for those people who were unable to appear in court to, in fact, be able to have a trial.

I think we all recognized in the committee that this section, which allows basically for a defence by a written dispute, will, in fact, allow people who live far away from the jurisdiction where the trial is being held a chance to dispute a minor offence. In the past, I believe that people who had been charged with a minor offence and lived some piece from the courtroom would, in fact, plead guilty when perhaps they did have a legitimate defence, just due to the economics of the whole situation.

This amendment basically takes the application of a written dispute out of the generic sense and restricts the application of the principle to a pilot project stage. First of all, it restricts the application of the section to a person or a defendant who lives outside the territorial jurisdiction of the court where the offence has occurred. The second main change is in relation to subsection 4 of the section, which basically makes it come in in terms of application by regulation. This will allow us the opportunity to attempt to try this particular section in one jurisdiction within the province so that we can properly monitor the people who will be, in fact, working with this particular section.

I think everyone who was sitting on the justice committee is aware of how important the education of the justice of the peace will be, in relation not only to this section but to the whole act. The monitoring of this particular section will be very critical in that there is a great deal of reluctance on the part of some members to depart from the old concepts of justice in the traditional sense of a trial.

I think that basically points out the two major changes in this section. It also tries to clarify what is meant by the person's written defence. It refers to it in the amendment as a dispute, and it tries to differentiate between the written word being evidence within the trial—in other words, it is trying to separate the fact that the plea or the pleadings, as one might want to describe this particular document in lawyers' terms, is not in fact evidence, but it is a dispute. It also points clearly to how the justice of the peace is to use that particular written document in the procedures that go on.

Those would be my opening comments on this particular amendment. It is an important section of the bill, as I have said before, and I am anxious to hear some of the debate on the matter.

Mrs. Campbell: I first would like to express my appreciation to the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry), his parliamentary assistant and his staff for their co-operation in meeting with me and assisting me with my very real concerns about this section. I am pleased, because one of the first things that concerned me was what I felt to be the ambiguity as to the status of the statement as it would be presented. I think there has been a very real attempt now to incorporate in this unusual way a pleading. Therefore, I assume that in referring to it as a dispute it now has the status of a pleading in a civil action, so at least it clarifies the situation.

I have to say that I have been concerned about this section right from the start, as I think you, Mr. Chairman, know. One of my concerns is that in a case of this kind if a statement is given in response to a minor traffic matter, and the statement should, really, indicate that a more serious charge should be available. I have discussed that with the persons to whom I have made earlier reference, and they have taken the position—and they may be quite correct—that it might be a matter of difficulty from an evidentiary point of view to establish it as some form of confession. It doesn't, however, entirely allay my concerns about this statement.

Secondly, I have had a concern right from the start about the duality of the role of the justice of the peace; and I expressed it—it seems to me ad nauseam—in the committee. Again, I am assured that, save and except in traffic court, there will be a prosecutor in the court. It doesn't satisfy me completely; it leaves it a little open.

The situation is that here you have someone who is going to adjudicate also possibly entering the arena and cross-examining a crown witness. It just doesn't appeal to me as a way to proceed and, with the greatest respect, I don't think it has been addressed in this amendment. I understand that is one of the major concerns of the justices of the peace as well, so I am pleased that I at least have that kind of confirmation of my concerns.

Mr. Chairman, I am not prepared to move against this section. I believe there are a number of people, including the committee itself, who seem to accept the principle of it, but I remain, I'm afraid, personally opposed to this section. I think it is capable of abuse, and I don't see it as having been that well clarified in the amendment.

Mr. Lawlor: Well, the amendment is welcome and a considerable improvement over the section it is replacing; there's no doubt about it. It is now reformulated on the basis of a pilot testing procedure to see how it will work.

The complaint has arisen out of this, I suppose, as this may be the most controversial section in the legislation. It is probably the most novel departure from the present operation of those courts in its criminal capacity. We have prated and talked about the decriminalization in this statute, and that is what it is all about.

Part of our difficulty, I submit to you, Mr. Chairman, is that despite what we say we are still under some kind of bias or cloud of the criminal. We think in terms of offences; we think in the way of the criminal law and its full panoply. We just have a very difficult time abstracting ourselves from that, standing aside and being able to judge it externally. This is, in the context of these offences not being considered criminal offences, a very worthy and worthwhile move on the part of the government to deal with the issue.

In the brochure that was initially issued by the ministry in explanation of all these sections and the philosophy, tenor and purport of the act itself, it says, "A further alternative to the existing system provides for those who, although convinced that they are not guilty of an offence, pay the fine out of court to avoid the inconvenience of a court appearance. It will permit a defendant to plead not guilty and to deliver to the court a written explanation or submission. This, in turn, will be considered by the justice."

The complaint arose that this was altogether too cozy, too private and too unexposed and that enormous power was reposed in the discretion of a single justice as to whether or not he would see fit to acknowledge that there was some weight and some real matter in the written submission or not. In the first instance, it was presumed he would exercise his power to call a hearing. If added evidence was necessary in order to back up what was being said in this written statement, then he would call a hearing. If he felt there was a moot point of law involved, he would call a hearing. And—this is the third step and the tricky one—if he felt there was no substance in what was being said, he would convict bang on the spot, and that was it. Arising out of that, there were appeal procedures of a fairly flexible kind and with fair ease to rectify any position that might be taken in that particular regard.

It got to the point because of these latter points that I mentioned that the section was to be deleted entirely. Again it was a hang-over from a criminal approach. If you don't take that approach, then it should be retained. So a compromise has been reached, one to which I give full accord, namely, that you are going to restrict it with respect to its territorial operation, namely in the county of York, and to cases that arise extrajurisdictionally, that is, somebody in Red Lake or somebody in Welland who is accused of the offence in Toronto may write in from wherever he happens to be outside the York jurisdiction and submit his case, thus saving a great many people the journey.

Many of us—I am sure every one of us in this House—at one time or another have gone ahead and paid the fine because it was too much of a nuisance to do anything else, nevertheless feeling that if we had the time and could sort out the other obligations we have, we would appear in court. On occasion, some of us did, in night court particularly, but when the House is sitting at night, of course that becomes a very difficult thing to do very often too. So you pay the fine and that breeds a disgruntlement, a real sense of grievance, in many people in this population. For a balanced jurisdiction, as we hope to be or are trying to be, that is an unnecessary irritation in the flesh of the Ontario population, and we want to obviate it.

I'll obviate it by half-measure, if I can't get whole. We will support the changes presently being placed before us.

Mr. Breithaupt: The comments made by the member for Lakeshore with respect to the historic background of the attitude that we're at in this section, I shall not repeat.

The section, as it was discussed in the committee, as I recall did bring forward a number of alternatives and suggestions with respect to making this proposal of being able to deal with an alleged offence in a much more convenient way to the public. We have seen some changes which have occurred in section 6. I do welcome the opportunity that this section will have to be applied to various parts of the province. I think that the best result of these proposed changes will be the opportunity to try to see if, as the member for Lakeshore has mentioned, the half-loaf approach is going to work.

I would have been much concerned about attempting to bring in a section like this and have it made applicable to the entire province at once. I think there really would have been a series of difficulties and problems which would have arisen that would have scuttled the benefit a section such as this may well have, once it has matured and is useful to the people of a region. If that region or county has the benefit of dealing this way and the results are beneficial, then I think the move to the entire province is an intelligent one on behalf of this Legislature.

I do share the concerns that the member for St. George has raised with respect to some of the difficulties that may come up in this section. It is not going to entirely answer those objections. However, I do feel that it is perhaps worth a try and we will be very interested when the monitoring has taken place over the next year or two to see whether those objections the member for St. George has made are in fact the ones that are likely to result.

I hope there is the opportunity as this section is applied to come up very quickly with an intelligent summary of the statistics which will be made available to the members of the justice committee on an ongoing—perhaps quarterly—basis. This would be an opportunity of keeping at least the critics for the respective parties, if nobody else, current with the results and expectations of the section. When changes do come they would then be more readily accepted by the House on the basis of knowledge which those two members particularly, and perhaps others of us, might have.

Mr. Lawlor: Just one other question arising out of the point about the training of the justices of the peace: have you devised your plan with this alteration of the section in mind? In other words, are county of York justices of the peace alone to be given instruction in this? Because this was the one with the greatest discretion reposed in the judicial officer. Or is it your feeling that you are going to clue in the other justices of the peace of the province in a preliminary way? How do you handle it?

Mr. Sterling: Perhaps I could answer that direct question immediately and then comment in general on the other comments that have been made.

Basically I would imagine there are many other parts of the legislation which will require extensive education of the other justices of the peace in this province. Section 7, for instance, will require that there be some education in regard to it—on the walk-in guilty plea. Probably because this section has been amended since the committee hearings, which only took place in mid-February, I don't know whether or not we have addressed the question whether there will be a special section dealing with those courts that will be imposing section 6 alone or whether we would include that in the overall education program.

Mr. Chairman: Before you go on with the other comments—

Mr. Sterling: I think probably what will happen is that there will be an overall education program with the justices of the peace dealing with the whole act. Then those who will be implementing this particular section would be taken aside and we would deal with that section in more depth; that would be the approach.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Chairman, I rise with a bit of trepidation because I believe all the others who have spoken on this are members of the legal profession. However, I will overcome that and make some comments—

Mr. Breithaupt: There is no reticence, surely?

Mr. T. P. Reid: All you need is common sense and that, unfortunately—

Mr. Swart: That's right. As a matter of fact, I'm glad you raised that. Perhaps that is not confined to the legal profession. I think the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk might agree with me on that from previous comments he has made.

Section 6 is a section that is the key to the whole bill. It's a section on which the committee struggled, as everyone here knows, and I think largely on a non-partisan basis. There are genuine concerns about it. Yet there is also the realization that this can provide some greater degree of fairness and perhaps justice in the province.

This amendment has been tabled by the parliamentary assistant and I think there is general agreement with that, but I want to hear some comments on one aspect of it.

What we struggled with was concern, on the one side, that at the present time justice is not being done because of the inconvenience that exists with regard to people charged with minor offences. They in effect just plead guilty when they're not guilty and pay a small fine, rather than fight for justice, because the cost of fighting for it is greater than by pleading guilty.

On the other side, there is the concern, mentioned by my colleagues, the member for Lakeshore and the member for St. George. That is, there's danger that justice will not be done by this system when you can't cross-examine and have the normal court proceedings. In effect, two changes, as I see it, have been made. I don't have the amendment in front of me, but my understanding is that two changes have been made.

One is going to be a kind of pilot project, starting in one place. Secondly, the ones who will be able to write in are only those people who are outside of that jurisdiction.

I'm in full support—because of the problems that exist—with regard to the first; that is, the pilot project. I also think I'm right in saying that by regulation this can therefore be extended, if it works well, to other parts of the province. It could be that within a year or two years it could cover the whole province. I think that is desirable.

But is it not right that you would not be able to extend it, without a change in the act, to provide that people living within a jurisdiction could write in in their defence? Therefore, it seems to me that this is some disadvantage. I would like to hear the parliamentary assistant comment on that. Why could you not allow people—if you want to start a pilot project—to write in a defence, even though they lived within the jurisdiction?

I would point out to you—as you are well aware—that in some jurisdictions they are very close to the court. It's not much of a penalty to have to go to court, perhaps. But in other jurisdictions they can be a long, long way from the court. It's more of a hardship for those people to have to go to court for themselves. They may have to travel 50 miles, or even more, to get to that centre of justice.

In addition, it is not just a case—as I think we all recognize—of the inconvenience of travel. It is also a case of the inconvenience of employment and, perhaps, having to take a day off from employment, even though they are close to the court.

I guess my question to the parliamentary assistant is: Why do we need that clause which gives this right only to those outside the jurisdiction? Why could we not have the pilot project within one jurisdiction, but allow anybody to write in their defence? If it works, then we can extend it to the rest of the province. To make that arbitrary division I think has some very real disadvantages.

I would like to hear your comments on it.

Mr. Sterling: Perhaps I can directly respond. Basically, I think we're dealing in terms of where does a greater inequity lie? I think the greater inequity lies with someone who lives outside the jurisdiction, who has no real opportunity to defend himself at all, with regard to this minor offence. In terms of inequities, it's much more disastrous for a person in general from outside to come to the jurisdiction to defend himself in a minor matter.

In picking a group of people who would benefit more greatly from the terms of section 6, I think the committee in general felt these were the type of people who would benefit most. I don't argue with the supposition that the people within the jurisdiction would also greatly benefit, but we're approaching this whole section and this whole concept with a great deal of caution basically, because it hasn't been done anywhere else. It's very innovative and, quite frankly, a lot of the members of the committee and, I think, of this Legislature are sort of caught in the balance.

As you said, this bill, in total I would say, was debated in a non-partisan way. I saw during committee hearings that members from all parties were wondering in terms of what views they took on a particular section. On this particular section I think the Attorney General felt, and I felt, that we were so close to the balance that to approach it cautiously at this point in time, and keep the numbers of these rights in disputes to it somewhat to a minimum so that we could monitor them well, is extremely important on this front end.

The other thing to remember too is that to open this bill, because of that caution that was expressed by many of the members of this Legislature in taking this quite innovative step, I think we basically owe it to those members to come back to this Legislature and amend the bill so that it would, in fact, apply to the people within the jurisdiction. I think we on the government side too often hear that we can regulate things in and regulate them out. With this issue being so touchy, let's say, in terms of the balance that we're achieving I think that we owe it to the Legislature to come back when we take that larger step, because I think, in that case, you will be dealing with many more people in the province. I think that this is the right balance at this time.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I could breach the rules somewhat by asking some questions that flow from the submissions of the justices of the peace association and which I didn't have the opportunity of asking before?

I note they are concerned about the statements and that their question is if this is regarded as a pleading, is it permitted to a person to, in fact, submit the statement in any language, or would it necessarily be in either English or French only? I would assume that while it isn't evidence, in view of the fact that there is provision for evidence to be given with an interpreter, that this would be permitted even though it has the significance of a pleading. I think it's an interesting point.

I would also ask this and they do pose the question: When a justice makes a determination as to whether a reasonable ground of defence has been set out in writing in this section, is this determination considered an administrative or judicial act and, therefore, should a record be kept? Would the statement become an exhibit?

I would assume that those questions are pretty readily answered, but I would like to have for the record just exactly what answer has been accorded to the justices of the peace association with reference to those matters.

I note they also have expressed other concerns with reference to the set fine and so on. I think those are pretty apparent from the bill itself.

I wonder if I could have an answer on those.

Mr. Sterling: Yes. Basically in relation to how the person could write in the dispute, it would be controlled by the Judicature Act. Therefore, in the designated areas of the province where French was acceptable in terms of dispute, it would be a legal document in those particular areas.

Also, it would be necessary to provide a translation service for a document that came in. We could not reject a dispute on the basis that it was in French and it was an area which wasn't designated under the Judicature Act. That's the feeling of the Attorney General on that issue.

Mrs. Campbell: What about other languages? Are they not acceptable?

Mr. Sterling: Whether or not they would be acceptable, there would be a notice of dispute. We would have to deal with that dispute one way or another. In fact, we would be forced to translate that dispute.

Mrs. Campbell: Fine.

Mr. Sterling: The determination is a judicial determination and there would be a record of the proceedings and, also, the letter would be an exhibit.

Mr. Ziembra: Mr. Chairman, this amendment clears up some of the concerns I expressed in the committee. Phasing in this streamlining process by limiting it to out-of-towners I think is commendable in this respect. I was very supportive of the bill when I first read it, but the more I thought about it, the more concerned I became about the other side; in other words, the police.

Here we have police out trying to make up their quotas every day, ticketing cars. The only check on that quota is the fact they know they're going to have to spend so many days in court when these summons eventually come to trial. This check, to my mind, was being removed by this streamlining process. In other words, because people would have the right to write in, most people would write in, expectation would be raised and hardly anyone would bother going to court any more. Police would be freed from courtroom duties and I'm sure their quotas would be expanded as a result of that.

Because we're phasing that in, I don't see that happening, and for that reason I'm prepared to support it at this time.

I have had an awful lot of complaints from people who have received tickets and they all blame the computer. They've received tickets from Hamilton when they work in Toronto, or tickets from all over the province. They don't know the reason these tickets are issued in error but they haven't got the time and they're not going to lose a day's pay by going to Hamilton. So this is welcome legislation.

Perhaps because we have an Attorney General who is also the Solicitor General and a parliamentary assistant who is perhaps parliamentary assistant to both—

Interjection.

Mr. Ziembra: You're not? Are you just the assistant to the Attorney General?

[12:00]

Perhaps what they could do—it could be a blessing in disguise—we could have all these police officers freed from court duty and assigned to community relations roles, where there is a sad lack of staff. Perhaps that might be a good thing in the long run if we can get some commitment from the Solicitor General that the police wouldn't be giving out that many more tickets. Tickets are getting darned expensive in this city of Toronto.

Mr. Philip: I know. I just got one yesterday.

Mr. Ziembra: You just got one yesterday? I have one right here which I will be talking about in a few minutes.

Mr. Philip: A five-dollar parking ticket.

Mr. Ziembra: That's cheap. That's a good deal, Ed.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will be speaking on section 19 of the bill, as well.

Mr. Philip: I found the arguments by the parliamentary assistant to be persuasive. I think that this amendment is far preferable to deleting the section, which is another possible alternative. I certainly think we will be able to get some experience with it and closely monitor what is happening to it, then gradually, if it is as successful as we expect it might be, phase it in in other jurisdictions.

I can see a real problem in areas of northern Ontario, for example, where the territorial jurisdiction is very large and where, in fact, someone may have to travel. I am sure the parliamentary assistant and the minister have thought about this. I have thought about it and I have no solution but perhaps he has already commented on it. I had to be at another meeting when the bill started to come under debate. But I am sure that it is something we will be discussing in estimates in the next few years.

I realize that by regulation you can, of course, expand the number of jurisdictions in which this is used, but we may in fact have to come back with an amendment at some future time to deal with the problem of distance within individual jurisdictions.

I would be in support of the government's amendment.

Mr. Stong: I rise very briefly to voice support of my colleagues with respect to the amendment to the act.

I might say that I am pleased to see, in fact, that this type of approach has been taken by the ministry, in terms of convenience and in terms of backlog and overload in our court system.

However, there is one concern I would express in relation to this section. I suppose it can be ironed out as the section is put into operation and the courts are set up. Again, it is a pilot project, subject to regulations, and can be changed.

The only concern I have is where a justice does in fact determine, after having received written submission, that it warrants a hearing. There is no indication when the hearing should be held; whether it be held immediately or whether a date should be set. Once he finds some validity to a defence or to a submission by a defendant, I would have preferred—although the committee did not go this route and I just voice this at this time—that where a justice finds a validity to a submission by a defendant, and he does in fact direct that a hearing be held then, perhaps, in addition to directing that a hearing be held and setting a date or time for that hearing, the defendant should be notified in writing and by mail that the hearing is to take place. This would then give the defendant an option in his own mind, if nothing else. He is not commanded to attend, but he is at least given notice that his submission warrants a hearing—and nothing more.

I had hoped that section would be covered in this section, although it is not in there. It is just a concern I have about it. Other than that, I think the section ought to be given a fair trial, as the ministry has set out, and I am in favour of it.

Mr. Lawlor: I have a couple of points. We are dwelling on this section because it is new and perhaps we should spend a few moments on it. I notice in the justices of the peace statement that they say: "We are reasonably sure that it will be difficult for a court, after having heard sworn testimony from the witnesses for the crown and just a written statement from the defendant, to come to any other reasonable conclusion in most cases but to accept the evidence as presented by the crown and register a conviction against the defendant."

I think there's kind of a fundamental misunderstanding involved in all that. We know—and this is regrettable from my point of view and I'm sure from many other points of view—that judges sitting in criminal matters particularly tend to favour the crown. There's a natural acclivity in those in office and those prepossessed with responsibility to support the other echelons of the system. This is in some instances to the detriment of the citizen.

The purpose here is that if you've got the written submission, it affords grounds for cross-examination and to check with the police officer, by asking, "Well, what about this?" so that it won't all go by the board without questioning while the statement made by the officer is taken at face value without more examination. I'm content with that; I don't think that that's something one should quarrel with at all. On the contrary, at least it gives a bit more representation than presently exists where the statement is taken carte blanche and nothing goes beyond it. If it's taken in that particular form, invariably a conviction follows. It just might be that on some blue moon in early December somebody might have justice done in this particular context because he can't afford the time, trouble or money to come to that court.

The other thing I would mention has to do with what was said with respect to notices going out. I think we brought this up in committee. Under the regulation, I would like some assurance that whatever rights flow from a particular position being taken be communicated to the person who is penalized or is in any way hurt by it and an indication given to that individual of what the remaining mode of redress may be. Again, I am looking at the justices of the peace statement which says: "The next notification the defendant would receive in relation to his case would be a conviction notice. At this time, the defendant will probably wonder if his submissions were considered"—this is one of the problems with the section—"or even if the letter was received. In addition, it might be expected that most defendants would close their letters with the point that if any other facts are required that the court should feel free to contact them."

All I'm saying is that I want to get a spoke in this wheel at the moment. No amendment is necessary in this context. Nevertheless, under the regulation in this particular, where a conviction is registered there should be some notation to the individual involved that he has a right of appeal and this set forth specifically for his attention.

Mr. Sterling: Perhaps we could answer a few direct questions now while they're still present in everyone's mind.

First of all, there is the point raised by the justices of the peace in relation to the dispute on the fact that in most cases there would be a conviction because the only evidence that will be presented in trial will be that of the prosecutor. I think that this was presented before. Perhaps they had the amendment to section 6 or they probably had not seen the amendment to subsection 6 as it now stands.

I think the amendment clarifies what the dispute is to be used for. It is to be used to cross-examine that police officer and get on evidence out of the police officer what the facts are in relation to the dispute that's been written to them.

The other fact is that they will be getting a notice after the dispute has been entered and has had a trial. The notice will say, "Your dispute was considered but does not constitute a defence in law." They will get that notice indicating that the dispute has been considered, so there will be acknowledgement that the justice of peace has received it and has considered it.

As to the appeal notice, I would hope that the regulation would point out the time limitations in relation to an appeal, and I'm assured by the Attorney General's staff that there will be a notice on the conviction notice as to the time element required for appeal.

As to the note from the member for York Centre (Mr. Stong) about getting a mail notice as to when the dispute would be heard, we did discuss this in committee. I think the member for St. George brought it up. However, a problem comes out of that. What you are doing is putting an extra step in the whole procedure. What you are saying is you get a double chance almost at the whole process, so that you mail in your dispute, they say you have or you have not a defence and then you get a notice about the trial. That's the only reason you would give a notice of the trial, so that the person could show up at the time that the trial would take place, and so really what you are doing is you are giving them two cracks at the process.

The whole idea of the bill is to streamline and provide this section really for those who feel that they cannot show up in court because of other commitments, where the offence is of a minor nature.

Mr. Chairman: Are there any further comments or questions on the amendment?

Mr. Sterling: Could I make a few general comments in relation to some of the other matters brought up by some of the other members? I think I indicated before that it was a very non-partisan committee and that the chairman, Mr. Philip, indeed contributed a great deal to the way the debate went during the committee and I congratulate him on this particular matter.

As I mentioned before, I think on this whole section it's a matter of balance and there isn't actually right or wrong in terms of deleting this section or putting this amendment in, but I think in the total balance it's probably worth the effort to go ahead, that there are injustices being done now, as the member for Lakeshore pointed out, and that we should proceed with the amendment and then review this from time to time within the estimates of the Attorney General and perhaps bring in an amendment later if it turns out as successful as we surely hope it will be.

Mr. Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Shall the amendment carry? Carried.

Section 6, as amended, agreed to.

On section 7:

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Chairman, again I am referring to the concerns expressed under this section by the justices of the peace association. They are concerned, and the committee was concerned it seems to me, that, "If it is the intent of the proposed legislation to implement the provisions of section 6"—and that is, of course, prior to its amendment—"should not the same privilege apply to a defendant under this section, because the penalty portion suggested is the same? It does not"—and I am reading from this brief—"It does not appear to be consistent that a defendant can plead not guilty in writing and set out grounds of defence along with submissions to sentence, in the event his defence is not accepted, yet a person who admits his guilt and saves the province the cost of a hearing and wishes only to speak to sentence is required to attend in person."

It is an interesting question raised, it seems to me, by the justices of the peace, and I think it appropriate that we should note it duly at this time. Perhaps the parliamentary assistant would like to comment on it?

Mr. Lawlor: Before he speaks, may I add a word so we can get the whole picture?

It is an interesting thing. On the other hand, I see that one of the reasons for not wanting section 6 was precisely because people would be addressing themselves to penalty and not to the gravamen of the offence itself and they didn't want that. And why not? Because I am sure everybody in the world would send in a written submission with respect to penalty. And why not? You might save yourself 10 bucks by writing a letter; you have to take your chances.

I suspect that you'd be swamped if it were fully operative; and if that happened then there would be some very considerable undermining of the very purpose, at least of section 6. Therefore, section 7 deals with a totally different situation: namely, one believes he's guilty but doesn't believe he's that guilty, and I can see no harm in him appearing.

I don't think the points being made here are well founded or well taken. Thank you.

Mr. Sterling: When going through this bill I wondered the same thing as the justices of the peace in relation to section 7. However, if a dispute does outline in some way why the fine should be mitigated, I think that the justice is well within his power to mitigate that fine if he should choose to so do.

Mr. Stong: May I just ask a question of the parliamentary assistant? What mechanism will be in place for the situation that may arise where the defendant has indicated that he intends to plead guilty, but wants to appear to speak to sentence, but in the interim has received some kind of advice that maybe he should appear and defend the charge? Will a date be set over? Will he be bound by his plea, so to speak? What mechanism or plans do you have for dealing with that type of situation where a defendant has indicated previously that he wants to appear to speak only to sentence or extension of time and in the interim changes his mind and wants to defend the charge, even though he has written in that he is going to speak only to the sentence?

Mr. Sterling: I would imagine that it would go through the normal court process. In other words, if in fact the dispute has been considered and there has been a finding and there is a judicial decision on it, then he would have to go through the appeal procedure to defend the charge.

If it was before that, I am sure he could appear before the court and move to have the dispute withdrawn and to proceed the other way. I don't see any problem in relation to that in terms of any other interlocutory procedure that might take place in the present system.

Mr. Lawlor: I want to argue with the parliamentary assistant. There is no mitigation. In subsection 2 we have made it very clear, with respect, that he should convict the defendant and impose the set fine—nothing less, that's it. Of course, in subsection 3, if he holds a hearing, then you have amended the earlier legislation and given him a much wider power. Again, I think that is the way it should be.

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry if I misled you in terms of what I said before. You are correct. If he directs a hearing he can reduce the fine under section 6(3), but he cannot reduce it under section 6(2).

Section 7 agreed to.

Section 8 agreed to.

On section 9:

Mr. Lawlor: A word on section 9(b)—this arises in a number of areas within the bill. The section reads: "Where the certificate of offence is not complete and regular on its face, he shall quash the proceeding." The question in my own mind after I read that is: May the justice of the peace then take it upon himself to alter an irregularity so as to keep the matter before the court rather than quashing the proceedings? What is the position on that?

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, as the parliamentary assistant prepares his answer, again one might refer to the JP's association. The justices of the peace seemed concerned as to whether the examination of the certificate in these particular circumstances is to be considered an administrative or a judicial act. One would presume that consequences will flow depending upon which theme it is considered the JP is following at that time. As a result, I am wondering what response the parliamentary assistant might have on that point?

Mr. Sterling: There is really no one at that point in time, as I understand it, who could move to amend the certificate of offence, and the justice of the peace is not given any jurisdiction under that to amend it. He only has the choice of quashing the certificate of offence.

Mr. Lawlor: What about the other point? Surely it is a judicial act?

Mr. Sterling: Yes, it is a judicial act.

Section 9 agreed to.

Sections 10 to 12, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 13:

Mr. Lawlor: This is my old bugbear—just to bring it up and run away from it. That wording in section 13(1)(b) is: "authorizing the use in any form prescribed under clause (a) of any word or expression to designate an offence." I still have misgivings about it. I want to put it on the record, the danger continues to be there, in spite of all the assurances in the world. I am sure it will only happen in the most recondite circumstances. Nevertheless, we are all terribly suspicious of government these days. If it didn't happen to get a particular matter set forth properly in the statute and the circumstance subsequently arose, then it is the easiest thing in the world to pass a regulation. The regulation could define the terms of the offence in such a way as to catch, in the net, what wasn't expressly done in the statute.

All I can say is that—Mr. Williams is not here this morning; the member for Oriole is in Baltimore. He's the chairman of the committee that is supposed to look over these things and pay attention as to whether or not this type of abuse might occur. I trust that they will do so.

Section 13 agreed to.

Section 14 agreed to.

On section 15:

Mr. Lawlor: I have just one word on that. That's the business of saying to the municipalities, "You are free, except when you're not," which is most of the time. I am not going to raise any amendment or fuss about the thing, particularly; I just point out that as against the earlier section, it now becomes mandatory, within a time limitation of two years, for all municipalities to opt into this legislation, whether they like it or not.

I think it is preferable to have consistency in the application of this particular court and its jurisdiction established universally, rather than to have an isolated municipality proceeding under its own bylaws. It is a good move, but it should be pointed out in this House that this is a change.

Section 15 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: The member for High Park-Swansea indicated that he had an amendment on section 19. Is there anything prior to that?

Mr. Ziemba: I did, Mr. Chairman. Perhaps I could ask you to stand it down for a moment. I am getting some copies made of my amendment.

Mr. Lawlor: I will speak on section 19.

Sections 16 to 18, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 19:

Mr. Lawlor: It is the same objection I had a few moments ago with respect to another section. This has to do with parking infractions: ". . . where the justice is satisfied that the certificate of parking infraction is complete and regular on its face . . ." The very broad powers do give this legislation a tincture of criminality. All borrowed from the Criminal Code of Canada, they repose in the court's infinite jurisdiction with respect to altering documents, changing words, altering even the offences involved—adding offences, producing things out of the blue. This whole procedure, I think, goes against the grain of this non-criminal statute.

In any event, the word "regular" bothers me. Can section 35, or any of that multitude of other sections be brought to bear to permit him, right there on the spot, to change something which would remove a defendant's defence?

Mr. Sterling: In case of a trial under this section, I believe that section 35 can be used.

Mr. Lawlor: Apart from that, where there is no trial or hearing, it can't be used.

[12:30]

Mr. Sterling: That's correct.

Mr. Ziembra: This is a very important amendment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Ziembra moves that section 19(1) be amended by striking out, in the first line, the word "fifteen" and inserting in lieu thereof "thirty."

Mr. Ziembra: Parking tickets are getting awfully expensive in Toronto. They've jumped the rates. They are a real hardship for people living in the inner-city area where there is nowhere to park on the street and where there are limited spaces, so the parking summons becomes kind of a licence, I suppose, to park. We are getting an awful lot of complaints from the inner-city area about parking violations.

I was assured in the committee, when I moved an amendment somewhere along near the end of this bill—section 19(3)—that the Attorney General's people were not that difficult to deal with. There were days of grace and "not to worry; 14 days is working out fine; it will continue to work out fine." Well, I found that's not the case.

I got a ticket in front of the Sir Nicholas Restaurant on Roncesvalles on January 14 of this year. It was $20 for "no standing at any time." So I sent in my $20 on January 28, exactly 14 days after I got the summons. Well, so much for your days of grace, Mr. parliamentary assistant. I got a very snarky letter back from a Mr. D. B. Chard, the administrator for the ministry of the Attorney General:

"Dear Sir or Madam: Your parking tag and payment are returned herewith because they were received late and cannot be accepted. The parking tag states clearly that it must be received"—underlined—"by the court office not later than 14 days from date of issue."

If we're going to charge people $20 for parking, then surely we can give them 30 days to pay it. It's a hardship to me. I'm sure it's a hardship to people who make less money than I do. I think that this relief is really called for at this point in the bill.

Mr. Philip: Mr. Chairman, I would concur with the amendment of my colleague from High Park. I think if we look at other forms of dealing with government, of appealing decisions by government, we find that certainly more than 14 days is allowed for an appeal.

Those of us who are dealing with any government body, be it an appeal with the federal government on a decision not to grant citizenship, be it a workmen's compensation case or be it decisions of the Ministry of Community and Social Services or what have you, all have a fairly lengthy time in which you can appeal a decision. I think, if we are going to be consistent, surely this is the kind of thing that we could extend an extra 15 days. It will in no way affect the processing. It simply means then that you backlog the block of work handled by those people in the courts who are processing it at that particular time.

So we're not talking about any additional costs to the operation of it. I would think the extra 15 days, considering some of the difficulties that our mail system has had at the present time and considering the way in which other matters dealing with appeals to the government are handled, would be a reasonable change.

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Chairman, we discussed this at length in the committee. Basically I think it was shown by the inter-relationship of the various sections within the act that a person after receiving his parking ticket had somewhere between 45 and 60 days, if he extended it to the total extent, that he could take under the existing act as it is now set out. If we add another 15 days, it will be either 60 or 70 days in which the person has to pay that fine.

I point out to the members of the Legislature who were not part of that committee, there are extremely generous sections within the act to have payment delayed for a period of time, just by asking the justice of the peace. There are also provisions whereby a person can pay it in periodic payments over a period of time. It's just a question of how long do you want the procedure to go on. It makes it more cumbersome administratively; as you lengthen the period out you have that many more people on file.

Some of the members of the committee felt that by lengthening the period extensively, what you do effectively is cause a problem for the person who is paying the fine. Some of us do better when we pay a bill or a fine when it is imposed; if we put it away we seem to forget about it. But that's notwithstanding what this Legislature might do.

Basically it's a 45-day minimum now. The member for High Park-Swansea wants to extend that to 60 days. Our position is that 45 days is enough, and if that isn't enough there are liberal provisions under the act where a person can walk in to a justice of the peace and get that time extended or make arrangements for periodic payments.

Mr. Breithaupt: The matter was discussed rather at length, as the parliamentary assistant has said, at the committee stage of the bill. I am quite content that the time frame he has suggested is a practical balance for the present time, and I would advise the chair that we would not support this amendment.

Mr. Ziembra: Perhaps there is just one point the parliamentary assistant might have missed. I am asking for 30 days for people who want to plead guilty and who do not want to get relief but find 14 days just not enough time to raise $20.

Mr. Sterling: They have that possibility within the terms of that act as it now exists.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: All those in favour of the amendment will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

Motion negatived.

Section 19 agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Any further questions or comments in regard to the bill?

Mr. Ziembra: Yes. Are we going section by section?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Yes, section by section. I want to know what section you next wish to speak to.

Mr. Ziembra: I have an amendment to section 132.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Are there any other members wishing to speak to any section prior to 132?

Mr. Lawlor: With respect to my own colleague, he has an amendment on section 132(2) which is applicable to section 23 of the present bill—or is it? Could I ask for a clarification on that?

Mr. Breithaupt: May I have a copy of the amendment so that I would know what is proposed?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I guess we all need clarification. Mr. Lawlor has asked a question. Whom are you asking it of? The member for High Park-Swansea? I don't think the chair is in any position to clarify it.

Mr. Philip: We are going to have a mini-caucus meeting.

Mr. Lawlor: I've raised the point in section 23. Perhaps my colleague could explain why not section 23, but rather section 132.

Mr. Ziembra: I felt section 132 was the appropriate place to talk about identification because that's the section that deals with arrests.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: May I ask in the meantime whether sections 20 to 22 shall carry?

Sections 20 to 22, inclusive, agreed to.

Mr. Lawlor: Can we go as far as section 30 and pause there for a moment?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Are there any questions on any section prior to section 30? Shall sections 23 to 30 carry?

Mr. Warner: No. I would think that as long as there remains some confusion as to what the relationship is between sections 132 and 23, it might be prudent to stand down section 23 for the time being until we can resolve this matter. In looking at both those sections, I can understand that an amendment may be necessary to relate section 23 to section 132. Perhaps we could stand down section 23 and proceed with section 24 and so on.

Mr. Hodgson: You are a professional stander-down, aren't you?

Mr. Warner: We've had a lot of experience.

Mr. Breithaupt: I've no objection, other than to say that in my reading of section 23 it only deals with the fact that the provincial offences officer may serve the person with a summons. Identification really doesn't come up in that light.

It can be stood down, if that's the wish of the committee. But I presume that the matter of identification as the point at issue would appear to fit into section 132 in the notice of reason for arrest and production of process. I would see no reason to stand down section 23. But if it's thought that it might have some beneficial effect, it's fine with me.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Are you content with that, Mr. Lawlor?

Mr. Lawlor: I accept the position of my colleague. I don't think section 23 should be stood down.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: All right. Are we agreed that section 23 has carried?

Section 23 agreed to.

Sections 24 to 29, inclusive, agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Does anybody have a comment to make on section 30?

Mr. Lawlor: My next reference may be section 42.

Sections 30 to 41, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 42:

Mr. Lawlor: You understand we've had three periods of evolution. Whether or not we've matured, I don't know. First of all we had a bill. Then before we had second reading we got a new bill with alterations. Then it was subsequently changed for the third time in committee. This section is one of those in which there is the third change.

I'm almost willing to suggest that for the purposes of the House, when the third change comes along, the one made in committee, some mention should be made of it and it be pointed out that this is not on all fours any longer, by any means, with the earlier legislation. Subsection 2 here has to do with the keepers of prisons and conveying prisoners to courts, et cetera.

I'm not sure if it makes a substantive change in the legislation. Perhaps the parliamentary assistant would spend a moment explaining that subsection. Why the change?

Mr. Sterling: Are you referring to subsection 2?

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, I'm referring to subsection 2. The only change has to do with reasonable charges.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Help is coming.

Mr. Sterling: I'm sorry. Could I stand that down in order to give you a reasonable explanation of your query?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed to stand down 42(2)?

Mr. Breithaupt: Perhaps the section, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: All right, that's better. We'll stand down the whole of section 42.

Sections 43 to 50, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 51:

Mr. Lawlor: Section 51 must be taken in conjunction with section 82. Just let me check with section 82 and see if there has been any change in that with respect to the new bill that came on our desks this morning. No, it's the same.

It was raised in committee, and I'm still wondering if adequate consideration was given to the position. We were a little jealous of the rights of the defendant with respect to counsel or agent to appear on his behalf. I'm still not satisfied as to the inter-relationship between those two sections. One of them, 82, appears to grant that as a right without any ifs, ands or buts, but 51, the one we're on, cuts back and gives the court a very considerable discretion as to whether the man will be represented by anyone or not.

If the court finds a person is not competent, that is, surely, a highly subjective judgement, in many instances. Sometimes it's quite clear that he isn't competent. Lord, that applies to lawyers too. But what an easy masquerade to exclude what would be a perfectly competent but totally obnoxious human being from the courtroom on the grounds of personal feelings because he didn't like the colour of his eyes. This is the danger.

Has the parliamentary assistant considered it since our committee? I raised it at that time and I raise it again.

Mr. Sterling: I can only respond in the way I responded in committee, that it was felt it was necessary for the justice of the peace or the provincial court judge to have some control over an irresponsible agent who was acting for a person, and that this was the way we thought would be the most suitable to give the judge control over an agent who wasn't acting in the best interests of his client.

Mr. Breithaupt: Would the parliamentary assistant not agree that a justice dealing with section 51(3) would, in fact, have to act judicially, and that if there were the rejection of a person to act as agent on a mere whim or caprice on the colour of that person's eyes, surely there are remedies available for review of such a decision that would, in fact, require a serious and judicial interpretation of this section by the person whose responsibility it is?

Mr. Sterling: Yes, I think we discussed that fully. Again, judges and justices of the peace have a lot of discretion and, especially under this particular bill they really are going to have a much greater control placed over their activities because appeals from anything they do within a courtroom, in most cases, will go directly to the provincial court judge who is over that particular justice of the peace. We think there are enough safeguards so that this will not be used unwisely.

Mr. Lawlor: I think subsection 3 is a very novel one. I know of no other area in law in which it is set out in such express terms. Of course I don't mean "the colour of one's eyes." It just tends to be a phrase that happens to be at one's fingertips. But it's very easy for a judge to say that the case is not being presented properly, the right questions are not being asked, the mode of approach is wrong. "He should have done it another way. If I were the examining agent I would present it totally differently. And he's incompetent." That really bothers me, but I don't know how to change it.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: You are not making any amendment then.

Mr. Lawlor: No.

Mr. Ziembra: I would like to speak to that. I believe this section was written with one individual in mind, Mr. Chairman, a Mr. Zoltan Szoboszloi. Mr. Szoboszloi appears in traffic court almost daily and some judges don't like him. The reason they don't is because on numerous occasions he has expressed the opinion that he doesn't recognize the Queen as the head of state. For that reason he was thrown out of court a couple of times. I don't know whether he still feels that way but I suspect that's why we see this section before us.

I just wanted to put on record that there has been one case where someone has been, I guess, in the court's eyes, obnoxious or objectionable—

Mr. Philip: "Traitorous" is the word to some of us who are monarchists.

Mr. Ziembra:—and they wanted to get rid of him. If the constitution is repatriated that problem won't arise and Mr. Szoboszloi would be able to continue appearing on behalf of people in night court without having that difficulty.

I agree with my colleague from Lakeshore that while it's objectionable, I don't see what we can do about it.

Mr. Breithaupt: To take that particular example, repatriation of the constitution will make us no less a monarchy, so presumably this individual's dislike of the style of cause of an action might well continue.

Section 51 agreed to.

On section 52:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: How far is the member for Lakeshore going to let us go?

Mr. Lawlor: Somewhere in this mess is an objection that I had with respect to appeal procedures.

At this hour of the day my mind is not clear as to what my objection was or what the appeal procedure might be. Did you meet and accommodate my request, whatever it might have been, within the terms of the amended bill we got this morning?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Is it with regard to section 52, Mr. Lawlor?

Mr. Lawlor: It could be 152, for all I know. That is why I don't want it to go much further without hitting it.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Well, we'll carry section 52 and we'll look to the House leader.

Section 52 agreed to.

Mr. Sterling: Could I comment on section 42 in relation to the amendment? That was the only one that was stood down. You were referring to 42(2)(b), I believe, is that correct?

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, to 42(2).

Mr. Sterling: The only reason we amended that particular one was to clarify where the expense of bringing the prisoner to court was going to lie. We were concerned that it not lie with the Correctional Services people. That was the reason for the amendment.

Section 42 agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I believe the only section up to section 52, and including 52, that hasn't been carried is section 1, and we have agreed to go back to that.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Welch, the committee of the whole House reported progress.

Legislature of Ontario Debates

Official Report (Hansard)

Third Session, 31st Parliament

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, MARCH 12, 1979

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

COMMONWEALTH DAY VISITORS

Mr. Speaker: If I could have the attention of the honourable members for a moment, I would like to draw their attention to the fact that today, the second Monday in March, is Commonwealth Day. It is being celebrated by countries, provinces and states throughout the Commonwealth of Nations.

Earlier today I had the honour of hosting a luncheon for members of the Commonwealth consular corps who are resident here in Toronto. Her Honour, the Lieutenant Governor, and representatives of all parties in the Legislature attended the luncheon. I am sure honourable members would like to welcome those distinguished persons who are members of the consular corps stationed in Toronto. They are in the Speaker's gallery this afternoon.

Would you welcome them on this occasion?

STATEMENT BY THE MINISTRY

USE OF HERBICIDES

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Because of the concern regarding the use of two herbicides, 2,4,5-T and 2,4,5-TP, in Ontario, I would like to update the members on the action my ministry has taken in this situation.

First, let me assure the House that use of such substances is strictly controlled under the terms of the Pesticides Act. Before a specific chemical is approved, its safety is carefully assessed. The ministry then continually monitors and reviews current scientific data that may affect its use.

Our experts are well aware of the recent report on the two chemicals released by the United States Environmental Protection Agency. They will be receiving a copy of that report shortly. In light of this new information, I have arranged to pass an immediate regulation to the Pesticides Act which will temporarily prohibit the use of these herbicides. This will give ministry staff and the Pesticides Advisory Committee time to completely review the data.

If careful examination of the report finds that specific uses may be acceptable, the regulation can always be changed. But if serious concerns are justified, I will take immediate action to have both chemicals permanently declared illegal for use in Ontario.

Mr. S. Smith: Good move.

ORAL QUESTIONS

WESTINGHOUSE CANADA

Mr. S. Smith: A question for the Minister of Industry and Tourism: When, if ever, did the minister first become aware of a study undertaken by Westinghouse Canada which may well result in putting 700 production employees out of work in Hamilton?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I don't have that information with me today but I believe we were informed of that just recently. I would be pleased to get the details for the Leader of the Opposition if he wishes. I will have it tomorrow.

I wonder if at that time the Leader of the Opposition might want to pursue for this House in question period some of the thoughts he was pursuing on Saturday night. I would be interested to do that as well.

Mr. Renwick: Shame.

Mr. Hall: It wasn't Saturday night.

Mr. S. Smith: When the minister is indicating a lack of familiarity with this matter and speaking of having received only very recent notification, I presume he is speaking of Friday or Saturday, which is when everyone else heard about it.

May I ask him why it is that his ministry did not follow up on the announcement in November 1978 by the president of Westinghouse Canada, an American gentleman? He said then that the role of Westinghouse Canada, as a branch plant, is becoming less viable. He also said the strategy for the future of Westinghouse in Canada was being developed by Westinghouse Corporation in Pittsburgh. This was in the public press.

Does the ministry not follow matters of this kind? Why was the minister not talking to Westinghouse about their plans—their so-called "rationalization" plans? Why was he not, in fact, alerting the people of Ontario, and the workers of that plant, to the kinds of decisions being taken in Pittsburgh affecting their future and ours?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: While the member has been expanding a bit, I located some information which indicates that the first contact with our ministry occurred in October of last year. There was further contact on February 22, at which time, by the way, the company reported 125 employees being recalled, not laid off.

Those conversations, I would presume, are continuing. I might say to the member that I suppose in my book I have exactly 62 pages of information regarding companies with whom we are carrying on discussions at any given time. Obviously, I can assure the Leader of the Opposition there are 124 members of this House who could rise and ask me a question with regard to our on-going discussions with any particular firm. I would obviously need to go back in our files and find out exactly what the status of those conversations is.

If the Leader of the Opposition wishes to raise this type of question, I think it is important that we be in a position to notify the House with regard to just what conversations have gone on. I would be happy to do that.

Perhaps he might follow the procedure that some of his colleagues have followed; that is to call us a few days in advance and say he would like to raise this particular question in the House. At that time, I might be able to give him all the details of those conversations. Having said that—

Mr. McClellan: What about getting notice from Westinghouse?

Mr. Hall: Wouldn't that be nice. Wouldn't that be nice.

Mr. Renwick: He is unprepared.

Mr. McClellan: You are right on top of things, aren't you?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Having said that, may I say that those types of conversations, which are exactly the type we have been talking about over the last few weeks, are the types of conversations we are going to continue to have with the American firms with branch plants in this country. We are determined to speak with those firms and try to identify situations where, instead of closing plants that have become unproductive, or for whatever other reasons they might have, they might put themselves in a better position to carry on business here in a rationalized way.

Mr. Mackenzie: You are totally unprepared.

Mr. McClellan: Do you sing and dance?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I might also take this opportunity to say to the Leader of the Opposition that I presume his community in Hamilton has benefited somewhat by the presence of that American multinational up until this time. I will say further: to suggest that for this government to go out and offer some incentive grants to locate those types of firms under certain conditions is a policy which should not be followed, is hardly doing anything to promote the corporate decision that Westinghouse or anyone else is going to make to locate in this province.

Mr. Warner: You are totally lost.

Mr. Martel: You haven't said a thing about the company yet.

Mr. S. Smith: Are we going to have to give them money to stay now?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: For example, when the Leader of the Opposition stands up and suggests that the reasons for our attempts to create employment in the riding of Windsor-Walkerville were in essence so that Tory cabinet ministers could attend a ribbon cutting—

Mr. Speaker: The honourable minister is going far afield in regard to the specific supplementary.

Mr. McClellan: The answer is he doesn't know.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, with respect, the Leader of the Opposition is raising a question about our relationship as a government with multinationals carrying on business in Canada.

Mr. Martel: A pox on both your houses. You would give the store away.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I think it's totally relevant. I hope he pursues it.

Mr. Speaker: Does anyone have a supplementary? The member for Hamilton East.

Mr. Martel: Does anyone have an answer?

Mr. Mackenzie: Is the minister not telling this House that he's totally unprepared to deal with the issue of Westinghouse and the potential layoff of 700 employees, which is another decision being made by a company that's not owned in this Canada, over which we have no control or say and which is going to directly affect the workers in this province?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That of course totally ignores, which is convenient for the member, the exchange the Leader of the Opposition and I have just had. If he wants to raise the question again before question period ends or if the Speaker will permit me to get the necessary information so that we may carry on an intelligent rather than a rhetorical discussion about Westinghouse, then I will be happy to do it. I might say that it's more easy for the member to jump on the multi-nationals which may have made some decisions, without having the facts before the House. I'll be pleased to obtain those facts. I'll have them before 3 o'clock. I'll tell the member what part my ministry and the Ministry of Labour have played in this situation.

Mr. Warner: The minister probably told Westinghouse, "We treat you royally."

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Then he can see if it's as easy to jump all over the multinationals and the attempts by this government to maintain those jobs as it is at 2:10, without giving us any notice of the question he was going to raise.

Mr. S. Smith: If I may have a final supplementary from this particular desk, does the minister not realize that what he is saying is that despite a public announcement in November that this type of decision was being contemplated, his ministry has still left him rather in the dark, considering the plans of this multinational which now will affect very likely 700 jobs in Hamilton? Doesn't he think it's time we had a code of proper corporate behaviour showing community and social responsibility for the foreign-owned corporations and, for that matter, domestically owned corporations in the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I would be really quite pleased to hear the Leader of the Opposition participate perhaps later today—one can never tell—by way of explaining what kind of corporate code he might talk about imposing in terms of moral suasion or whatever he intends to impose upon the American multinationals.

Mr. Mackenzie: Something better than Columbus McKinnon.

Mr. S. Smith: Will the minister adopt it?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Let the Leader of the Opposition issue it tomorrow morning and then ask some questions tomorrow afternoon, or indeed if he's ready to go tomorrow morning, let him get into it this afternoon and we'll be pleased to respond to it.

Mr. Nixon: Do you want notice?

Mr. Martel: Are we going to have a crash program?

Mr. Nixon: Back to city council.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I must point out that over the last many weeks we have been talking about things such as global product mandating, which is exactly the type of situation which will allow multinationals to carry on profitable enterprises in this province.

I must point out that we have been talking extensively over the past few weeks about the use of the employment development fund in order not only to give incentive grants where appropriate, but to obtain from the American firms appropriate undertakings with regard to such things as sourcing in Canada, research and development and technology. I have to say to the Leader of the Opposition that I know he's aware that we've been saying that, because he repeated almost word for word yesterday or the day before all—

Mr. Sargent: Time. Sit down.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —policy statements that this government has been talking about over the past two months, saying that if they were elected, that's what they would do. He's been reading those speeches very carefully, taking them over and trying to say the government is not doing them. I'll wait for tomorrow morning and hear his code of conduct for American firms.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Before this pathetic piece of self-justification by the minister comes to an end, is he aware, as I told him on Friday—

Interjections.

Mr. Cassidy: —that between 1974 and 1978 there have been 2,800 jobs lost in the electrical industry just in the city of Hamilton? What action will this government take now in order to protect the electrical industry and protect the 700 jobs now being cut in Westinghouse Canada?

[2:15]

Hon. Mr. Grossman: As I indicated, I will be happy to discuss the situation with regard to Westinghouse in Hamilton before 3 o'clock and secondly, as I indicated on Friday, we have had a task force investigating the electronics industry and we discussed it in estimates. If the member would ask the member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren)—

Mr. McClellan: Where have you been all that time?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —we got into it in detail and we will have more to say on the electronics industry after that task force report becomes public.

[Later (3:03):]

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I indicated to the Leader of the Opposition earlier that I would try to get some details about the Westinghouse situation before 3 o'clock. The Leader of the Opposition was kind enough to forewarn me that he did have to leave around 3 o'clock but, nonetheless, I know he will have wanted me to give whatever information I do have at this time.

I am informed by my staff that late on Friday we were in receipt of what was and is only a press release indicating that Westinghouse was indeed moving its switch gear and control division to, we are informed, other Canadian plants. We are informed that is due to the age of the particular plant and that this is part of a program of rationalization of their operation.

I must say I am rather disappointed, if the information I have is correct, in that as an ordinary matter of course our ministry is notified, not only formally at the time of layoffs, which we haven't been yet, but in most cases well in advance of layoffs so that we might work with the particular firm involved to see what other strategies might be involved in terms of that particular plant and also in order that the Minister of Labour might work with the employee group in question.

In any case, we are not in receipt of that formal notice at the present time. Notwithstanding that, arrangements had been made first thing this morning for our development officer in the area to meet with the executive of the Canadian Westinghouse early this week, which should be today or tomorrow. I will have a more formal statement to make tomorrow with regard to the outcome of that meeting and some further details surrounding the number of employees and what steps might be taken.

Mr. Speaker: We will add a further two minutes to the question period.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary to the minister's statement, Mr. Speaker: In view of the clear unwillingness of Westinghouse to be co-operative, as shown by the fact that they did not notify the ministry in advance, as the minister had said is customary: will the minister himself not be prepared now to intervene: to talk with the president of Westinghouse Canada; to talk, if necessary, with the heads of the international corporation in order to find out what's going on; to get clear answers about how many jobs will remain in Ontario; and to tell the corporation that this is not the way a multinational should deal with Canadian workers' jobs?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I should indicate to the House that I have asked my deputy minister to contact the head of Canadian Westinghouse. He has already done that. I think he has spoken with him within the past 40 minutes—since the question was first raised. By way of explaining the situation from our standpoint: I should add that the deputy minister and myself were tied up in a meeting in this building from 9 o'clock right until question period. As soon as that meeting was finished, the deputy went back and contacted the head of that company.

Now, of course I will be doing, in this case, what I have done in other cases, including the Budd case and others: that is, contacting the appropriate executive officers, both here and in the United States, to see what follow up is required at a senior level.

THAMES RIVER FLOODING

Mr. S. Smith: In the absence of the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Auld), I will direct a question to the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development. One has to ask the question anyhow. In view of the dreadful flooding on the Thames River in Dover township near Chatham, can the minister explain why preventive measures were not taken, such as dredging the mouth of the river properly, or breaking up the ice a short distance upstream with an ice-breaking vessel, and can he explain why it is that the Prairie Siding bridge gauge was not working, the gauge which is supposed to indicate a warning when the level comes up? Why was that not working even though the one up in Chatham was working? Does the minister know the answer to this and can he tell us how it is that the conservation authority seems so ill-prepared to deal with items of this kind which keep recurring in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, I know the Leader of the Opposition would like to have as much information as possible. I am advised that the Minister of Natural Resources will be here shortly.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: I think, rather than have the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development take it as notice, with the permission of the House, could we defer that question until the arrival of the appropriate minister? Is that agreed?

Mr. Makarchuk: No.

Mr. Speaker: The only thing is, if he doesn't make the statement prior to the end of the question period, there won't be an opportunity today. As we don't have unanimous consent perhaps the member could pursue it.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, when the minister eventually makes a statement, will the provincial secretary see to it that his colleague makes a statement regarding what can be done for the people who have been affected by this flood and what measures will be taken by the province of Ontario to relieve some of the very severe damage, much of which is not covered by insurance? Will the minister undertake to have a statement on that matter?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: I will be pleased to do so, Mr. Speaker.

[Later (2:40):]

Mr. Watson: A question for the Minister of Natural Resources regarding the serious situation in Dover township with the flooding this weekend: There have been many accusations made regarding the reason the Thames River overflowed. It did so much damage, the people in my riding would like some kind of official explanation. Would the minister responsible for flooding in this province, if I can put it that way—

Interjections.

Mr. Watson: —or would the minister, being responsible for flood prevention, which might be a better way of putting it—

Interjections.

Mr. Watson: —seek some type of report or inquiry so all the facts can come out as to why we did experience the disaster we did and what could be done in the future to prevent similar things from happening?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, perhaps with your permission, I might read a short statement I had hoped to read at 2 o'clock but I was delayed because of a luncheon meeting.

Mr. Speaker: Could we have unanimous consent to revert to statements?

Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: This will be deducted from the question period.

Hon. Mr. Auld: This has to do with Dover township, Mr. Speaker. At approximately 2:30 a.m. on March 9, earth dikes on the north side of the Thames River in Dover township were breached in a number of places. Twelve breaches have been reported. All except one of those breaks occurred in sections of the diking system that had not been reconstructed under the federal/provincial diking program.

Mr. Eaton: The feds pulled out.

Hon. Mr. Auld: We'll come to that. Extension of this program is being discussed now with the federal government.

The breaching was caused by an ice jam. This matter is being investigated and a further report will be given as soon as all the facts have been put together.

According to Ministry of Natural Resources staff, the Fanshawe, Wildwood and Pittock Dams, which control flooding on the Thames, were operated according to procedures for the conditions that existed beginning March 4.

The Lower Thames Conservation Authority has been monitoring flooding in the Thames and in the Chatham area since March 4 and also became involved in the Dover township areas on March 9 when it was learned the Ontario Provincial Police were evacuating some residents in the area. Up until this time, the authority was not contacted for assistance by the municipalities.

Since becoming involved, authority staff and Ministry of Natural Resources staff have been working closely with the—excuse me—OPP to help evacuate residents and have been patrolling the flood area issuing further warnings.

Mr. Peterson: There was no difference before and after you cleared your throat.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Fortunately, no lives have been lost but approximately 8,500 acres have been flooded. Township officials are still trying to get an accurate count of the number of homes affected. I add to this statement, Mr. Speaker, that I understand that the water has receded since the ice jam, which had moved to the mouth of the Thames, has been removed by dynamite.

May I also add, Mr. Speaker, that as far as disaster relief is concerned, I believe an application is being made by at least one municipality, if not more, to the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells) whose ministry deals with our disaster relief legislation. I assume he will be in a position to say something about that when some better idea of the amount of damage has been established.

To answer particularly the question of the member for Chatham-Kent, I would simply say it would appear that the various participants were acting according to their best judgement which may well have been the best judgement at the time. I would suggest it's necessary that the member municipalities of the authority, who have members on the authority, would have a meeting of the authority to get a report from the staff themselves rather than simply waiting for the next regular meeting. Certainly, if it appears that there has not been the best judgement exercised or there is some disagreement as to whose responsibilities were involved, that is the municipality or the authority, then we would conduct a further investigation.

I'll be in a better position to comment further on that, Mr. Speaker, when I've had an opportunity to get further hard information from the area. I think it's fair to say that the activities in the last day or two have been involved more in making sure that there were no personal injuries, or that those kinds of things were at a minimum, and also to reduce property damage, than to sit down and take a good look at what transpired and how the matter was resolved.

I know the concern of the member for Chatham-Kent and other members in the area and I would hope that perhaps by Thursday we would have a definitive answer in terms of approximate total damage and further information about the various actions that were taken.

May I only add at this point that I am informed by our own staff that dynamiting is not always the best answer because if it is effective and does not damage the downstream area, all it may do is move the problem farther downstream where the conditions might turn out to be worse. I think it's also fair to say that the fact that the repairs and sort of renovation of the dike which I believe is part of a municipal drainage system in the original instance are not complete. It's significant that 11 of the 12 breaches in the dike—and those breaches were what caused the flooding—took place in the area where the renovations had not been completed.

Mr. Speaker: In fairness, the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk had attempted to raise this on Friday and so had the member for Brantford so if they wish to pose supplementaries in that order, they may.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, you will recall that the Leader of the Opposition had also asked your permission to follow up with a question when the honourable minister had made a statement. I would certainly yield to my colleague.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Hamilton West, then, followed by the member for Brantford.

Mr. S. Smith: Basically, when the minister was a little late, I asked his colleague, who may pass on the question to him, but fundamentally it is simply this: Why is it that the conservation authorities never seem to be able to respond to these matters before they actually occur? For instance, why were they not dredging the silt away from the mouth of the river sufficiently? Why was there no ice-breaking tug used on this occasion as has happened in the past? Can you say why it was that the gauge that's supposed to indicate when a dangerous level is being reached was not operating at the Prairie Siding area even though the gauge was working upstream in Chatham?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I can't yet answer the question about the flood gauge. I can tell the honourable member that the Canadian Coastguard vessel and ice-breaker—I cannot remember now the name of the vessel—was standing by at Amherstburg, but apparently, in the view of the various parties concerned, it was not felt to be required at the time the flood was taking place.

The original ice jam was at a curve well above Lake St. Clair, some distance above, and well above Chatham, and the pressures that were exerted there on that part of the dike, which as I said had not yet been repaired, caused the original flooding and the main damage according to the reports that I have today. There is apparently some damage in Chatham but apparently not as great as that on the farmland and the fields in Dover township.

[Later (3:05):]

Hon. Mr. Auld: This may be a matter of personal privilege. A little further information came to hand about the Dover situation. It may well be—and I wouldn't want to imply that it was the federal government's fault—but that was a shared program, in that I think the owners or groups in that area would pay 10 per cent. They may have declined to go along with the completion of it. I'm not sure, but I just wanted to indicate that and find out more about it in the next day or two.

[Reverting (2:18):]

PHYSICIANS OPTING OUT OF OHIP

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I would like the consent of the House to postpone a question to the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) until, as I understand, he arrives in the House shortly. Perhaps I could stand a question down.

Mr. Kerrio: Forget it.

Mr. S. Smith: Same co-operation you gave us.

Mr. Cassidy: The Minister of Health is coming in now.

Mr. MacDonald: The late Dennis Timbrell.

Mr. Cassidy: Coming from behind the arras, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the recently arrived Minister of Health.

Mr. Breaugh: Soon to be departed.

Mr. Cassidy: On Thursday, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Health denied—

Hon. Mr. Davis: At least he has arrived, Michael. You haven't even arrived yet.

Mr. Cassidy: I am getting there; just you wait. On Thursday, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Health denied that 50 to 70 per cent of the doctors in the city of Peterborough have opted out of OHIP and I would like the minister to table in this House at once the full information regarding the numbers and the percentages of full-time practising physicians who have opted out of OHIP in the city of Peterborough and in other centres across the province, because the OHIP administration in Oshawa has today confirmed for us that at least 50 per cent, if not 70 per cent, of the doctors in the city of Peterborough are now out of OHIP and that this is also the case in the city of Orillia.

Mr. Mackenzie: Talk about the Hamilton General too, and see who is telling the truth.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I apologize for being a little delayed.

Mr. Warner: It would have been better if the minister hadn't shown up at all.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I can give the members the figures by administrative regions as at the end of February. I've got only one copy, so I'll get some copies made during the question period and send them to the member.

I can tell him, though, that for the Oshawa office, which includes the county of Simcoe, the region of York, the district of Muskoka, Haliburton, county of Victoria, county of Peterborough, region of Durham and the county of Northumberland—

Mr. McClellan: Why doesn't the minister answer the question?

Mr. Swart: Tell us about the city of Peterborough.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I haven't got those figures with me but I'll be glad to get them.

Mr. Martel: The minister said we were lying about Peterborough.

Mr. Mackenzie: Oh, he hasn't got them yet. He is slipping as much as the other minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If members won't give the minister the courtesy of answering the question, something as detailed as that—

Mr. MacDonald: The minister is not answering the question.

Mr. Speaker: —I'm going to insist that questions of that nature be put as an inquiry to the ministry requiring detailed information. If you want to hear what the honourable minister has to say and ask a supplementary, that's fine, but if you are going to continue to interrupt I have no alternative but to insist that questions of that nature be made inquiries of the ministry.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, as I say, I'll get this information for the member. We do not keep the figures on a city-by-city or town-by-town basis.

Mr. Martel: Then why didn't the minister just say he was wrong on Thursday?

Mr. Turner: You were.

Mr. G. Taylor: Fifty isn't 70.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: We have it on the basis of counties. I can get it for him on the basis of counties. Particularly, in that regard, the figures for Peterborough county are below 50 per cent; they're not 50 to 70 per cent. But I'll get the material for the member.

Mr. Mackenzie: The minister is satisfied that it is 50 per cent, is he?

Mr. Martel: He said we were distorting the figures.

Mr. Cassidy: A supplementary: Since the minister said on Thursday that I was wrong in saying that in the city of Peterborough it was more than 50 per cent, he obviously must have the figures. Will he table those figures? Will he table the figures for opted-out physicians in every county of Ontario? Will he do it now, so that the people of the province can judge whether or not there is a threat to the universality of medicare across the province because of doctors opting out with the permission of the government?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: It is not a threat to universality. It is not; it is not a threat.

Mr. Mackenzie: Why doesn't the Minister of Colleges and Universities go and find a throat specialist in Hamilton?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the member, he is mistaken as regards the Peterborough area. On the question of the universality of the system, as I said repeatedly, the act of opting out is not, in and of itself, a threat to the universality of health care, otherwise we would have a problem before now—

Mr. Warner: It is and the minister knows it.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: It is not.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Shhh.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —because we've had opting out as a fundamental element of the plan for more than eight years, I guess, now, and there is no indication whatsoever—

Mr. Warner: Boy oh boy, the expert of distortion.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —that at any point in that time, nor currently, has the universality of the system been threatened or is it being threatened. I haven't got the county-by-county figures with me. If the honourable member would like those I'll be glad to table those in this House. In the meantime, I'll give him the numbers that I do have by administrative region of OHIP, that show, for instance, that out of the Kingston office almost 95 per cent of the doctors are opted in. There are areas that are higher. The area that I started to describe is the counties and regions—

Mr. Warner: Tell us about Peterborough.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell:—that are served out of the Oshawa office, where 77.8 per cent of the doctors are opted in. It does vary across the province. I'll be glad to get that to the member.

Mr. Warner: What is the minister going to do about it?

Mr. Swart: What about Peterborough county?

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Since the minister now admits that in a seven-county area that is served by the Oshawa OHIP regional office 23 per cent of the doctors have opted out of OHIP, since the amount of opting out has gone up by 70 per cent, according to the ministry's figures, between April of last year and January of this year—that is, from under 11 per cent to just under 18 per cent—and still appears to be climbing, and since the minister said last April 18 that he is monitoring the situation, and since he is clearly keeping figures for his own benefit in order to reply to questions in the House, will the minister table all of those figures in this Legislature today so that the people of the province can judge for each part of the province and, hopefully, for each city just what is the situation and how great the threat is, because we believe it's very ominous?

Mr. Speaker: That is the same as the previous question.

Mr. Cassidy: No, Mr. Speaker. I asked for the specific commitment that the figures will be tabled. I have not had that from the minister yet.

Mr. Speaker: That commitment was made.

The second question from the member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: I take it, Mr. Speaker, that the minister's answer was no and I regret that.

Mr. Speaker: No.

RIDEAU REGIONAL CENTRE

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question to the Minister of Community and Social Services, Mr. Speaker. The minister is aware that Mr. Lyle Leeson, an employee of the Rideau Regional Centre for the Mentally Retarded, was acquitted February 22 on a charge of having sexual intercourse with a feeble-minded resident. Will the minister explain why Mr. Leeson has not been reinstated in his job now that he has been acquitted by the Perth county court?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, the matter is currently under review and I expect to have final advice from senior legal advisers within the very near future. I would like to get this matter resolved as quickly as possible, but I would also point out to the honourable member that the fact in itself of an acquittal on a criminal charge does not necessarily rule out any possibility of administrative action in some instances. That is the matter that I hope to have resolved very shortly.

Mr. Mackenzie: Supplementary: Was the party not found innocent? Did the witnesses against him not admit they had cooked up the story and lied? Has he not been suspended without pay since September 18? Since when in this country do we find somebody guilty in advance? Can we be assured not only that he will be reinstated in his job but that he will receive back pay for the period that he has been suspended?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I would point out that the finding of a court in this country is that of guilty or not guilty as opposed to the finding of innocent, as is the case in some jurisdictions, and I am well aware of that. The matter of the suspension and reinstatement is a matter I will determine as expeditiously as possible, as soon as the full information has been reviewed and I have had final advice upon it.

Mr. Speaker: Final supplementary.

Mr. Cassidy: Is the ministry saying that Mr. Leeson is being subjected to a form of double jeopardy because of administrative action by his ministry? If that is the case, can he defend why double jeopardy is being employed when the employee has gone through the whole mechanism of a trial by a court? Will he guarantee that when Mr. Leeson is reinstated he will get his full back pay for the period in which he has been out of a job because of action by the ministry?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I assure the honourable members opposite that Mr. Leeson will be dealt with in the fairest manner possible when I have all the information finally before me.

I am not suggesting there will be a difference in this case—please don't misinterpret what I am saying—but there is a difference in standards of proof and admissibility of evidence and so on between criminal proceedings and administrative proceedings before various tribunals other than courts that exist in this province.

I am sure the honourable members opposite would wish that I be very certain, in the interests of all parties concerned including residents, before a final decision is made in this case. I'm sure members would wish me to have at my disposal all of the information that was presented, in the courts and otherwise, and the very best advice I can obtain. That is all I am waiting to do. I do not wish that you misinterpret what I am saying. I don't believe in any event that this is a situation where what might happen one way or the other could be construed as double jeopardy.

RESOURCE EQUALIZATION GRANTS

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Premier. As the accumulated loss of equalization grants by the city of Windsor has been estimated at approximately $30 million over the years, as it is also substantial in relation to other municipalities, and as the previous Treasurer and Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs has admitted this inequity, can the Premier inform the municipalities at this time what the extent of that grant will be and when the cities can expect it?

[2:30]

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, if memory serves me correctly, one of the members opposite asked a comparable question related to some other municipality, I think on Thursday or Friday.

An hon. member: No, it was Windsor.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, was it Windsor? Somebody over there asked the same question on Thursday or Friday. I think the answer was given then but I certainly am quite prepared to repeat it.

An hon. member: There was no answer given.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, I think there was an answer given. As I recall, the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Maeck) referred it to the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells); the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs was not here, but there was an answer given to the question. I am prepared to expand on that answer.

The Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs is not here. He will be prepared to answer the question when he is here. But, in the interim, I would say to the honourable members that we are contemplating some interim steps to deal with this particular situation. Although I would point out to the members from Windsor that, in terms of equalization, while it does not appear in any grant formula, we have made available certain funds for capital works in the surrounding municipality to accommodate that very significant industrial enterprise called Ford Canada Limited, which apparently the honourable member's leader was not happy with over the weekend, even after he advised this House we should go it alone without the feds or at least 50 per cent, the logic of which I find a little difficult to follow.

I might also ask the member for Windsor-Walkerville, is he a part of the liberal or conservative part of the Liberal caucus of Ontario?

Mr. B. Newman: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: As the Premier would have provided equal assistance to any other municipality in Ontario, he did not treat Windsor any differently from the way he would treat other municipalities. But in the case of the grant structure—and the Premier believes in fairness—he knows he has mistreated the city of Windsor. The city of Windsor would like to strike a tax rate and is waiting and has been waiting for a substantial period of time, for an answer from his government.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I really was not being facetious. As a matter of fact, we are expediting certain capital works to assist the city of Windsor, and I guess that has some impact on the great county of Essex with respect to the Ford plant. I notice from the press that even the members locally disagree with their leader and think it is a great thing for the economy of that part of Ontario. But that does not surprise me; I have never expected logic from across the House.

Mr. Kerrio: We just hit the ball back.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, come on; my friend just wishes he had it. He knows how he was longing to get that in Niagara Falls. He remembers our conversation.

Mr. Speaker: Order. We are not talking about Niagara Falls.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Who is he kidding? Was he at the meeting on the weekend?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Sorry, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Van Horne: We're tired of your nonsense. Get on with it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would only say to the member for London North, if he can identify nonsense, he should have no trouble within his caucus—no trouble at all.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I would just repeat what I said in answer to the initial question: We are planning some interim solution to it and, as soon as it is available, we will inform the members of the House as well as the municipality of Windsor, a great municipality.

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, we already know in this House that the government has planned some interim measure. What we want to know is when the dollar figures are going to be announced. There was an $8-million commitment. I would like to ask the Premier, has that $8 million been changed, and has the number of municipalities that are to receive grants been increased? If so, that means Windsor will get considerably less than what the government originally promised.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, with very great respect, I do not recall the government committing itself to any particular number of municipalities. My recollection—and I am subject to correction—

Mr. Kerrio: Frequently.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, frequently. I notice by the press that the honourable member is part of the conservative wing of the Liberal caucus. How can he explain that to me? How does he explain that?

An hon. member: The whole bunch of them are.

An hon. member: He is what you call a progressive conservative.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Just ignore the interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The honourable member is blushing.

Interjection.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have got high blood pressure. I am not blushing; it is the heat of the lights.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Meanwhile, back in Windsor.

Hon. Mr. Davis: A great town to be back in.

As I recall, Windsor has made submissions over a number of years; the city of Sarnia also has made submissions, as well as two or three other municipalities that have become rather public. I think it is fair to state that this government never said that whatever interim measure we develop would be confined only to those municipalities that made submissions.

In any policy, the honourable member would understand that, even if a very small municipality is involved in the same difficulty as Windsor or Sarnia—you name it—it should receive the same degree of equity. So I think the honourable member can assume that whatever interim measure we introduce would take into account some logical rationale or basis for whatever new grant program is introduced. It might go beyond those municipalities that have been discussed in this House.

Mr. Warner: It's called equal punishment.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member could not dispute the equity of that. He wouldn't want to deprive some of the smaller municipalities of some assistance. He doesn't want it all for himself.

Mr. Cooke: I think you will find that we have lost $30 million.

Mr. Warner: Just because they didn't vote Tory.

CO-PAYMENT FEES

Mr. Wildman: I have a question for the Minister of Health, if he will return to his seat.

Mr. Makarchuk: Are you going to the meeting in Renfrew on Friday?

Mr. Wildman: Is the minister aware of the hardship that his so-called co-payment plan for chronic care patients will impose upon pensioners such as the elderly lady in my area who may lose her home in order to pay the $9.80-a-day charge for her husband's long-term hospitalization for his chronic illness? Can the minister explain why the co-payment plan discriminates against pensioners, since a family of two earning less than $15,000 a year is generally exempt from paying co-payments, while a couple over 65 and receiving OAS is not exempt?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: First of all, the honourable member, I am sure, has explained to that constituent that his party caucus supported that recommendation in October—

Mr. Wildman: No, no.

Mr. Cassidy: It is another distortion.

Mr. Warner: Stop distorting things.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am sure the member has also explained that at no point when the report was considered in this House or in the committee did they protest.

Mr. Cassidy: You are going to get Bette Stephenson's reputation.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I think the member will know that in arriving at the details of the co-payment we have been able, I think by and large, to avoid the kind of horror stories which the honourable member tried to describe. For instance, we have not, unlike other jurisdictions, included at any point in the calculations a consideration of the assets of the individual patient. So the home would not, in fact, be counted against the ability of that individual to pay. It would be counted strictly on the question of their pensions.

Mr. Wildman: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister saying that if indeed they are pensioners, they are treated differently than if they were married and under 65 and earning less than $15,000? If that is what he is saying, can he explain how this person is supposed to pay the $9.80 and still maintain her home when her income is only her pension and her husband's pension?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The material was considered by the select committee and by the other bodies which made this recommendation to us—the senior citizens' advisory council, the Taylor committee and the various other associations. They made that recommendation based on the principle that an individual is, at that time, receiving income to support him in the community. Inasmuch as he is not in the community, the principle is that that money should be applied against his support where he is—namely, in this case a chronic-care facility, or for that matter in a nursing home perhaps, or a home for the aged or whatever.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: It would appear that in this chronic-care charge there are a number of people who are in wheelchairs, who are chronically confined to chronic-care hospitals but who are still alert in mind and relatively young in age—still, in fact, in a position where they should be able, and ought, to participate in the community from time to time, go downtown, shop, go to a play.

Given that it costs about $50 or more just to get transportation for these wheelchair patients to go downtown, can the minister make some provision so that they are not reduced to $45 a month, which is what you are now allowing; so that the meagre alimony allowances or meagre pensions—which they may have built up during their years of employment—are not going to be taken away from them, thus imprisoning them in the chronic-care hospital. For those of active mind who need to participate in the community, will the minister try to make some special arrangement?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I will take a look at that and see if something can be done.

GRAND RIVER FLOODING

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I might say to the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon), who asked me a supplementary question on Friday I guess, that I did get some further information over the phone this morning from the general manager of the Grand River Conservation Authority regarding dynamiting. The full report is coming here by land, sea or air and has not yet arrived.

Mr. Peterson: It is coming by water, that is why.

Hon. Mr. Auld: "Sea," I said. Sometimes the mail takes a long time and you wonder whether it comes via the Suez or the Panama Canal.

The Grand River Conservation Authority—this deals with the area between Paris and Brantford—has no written policy on dynamiting to relieve ice jams. But it has been the practice of the former commission, and the present authority, not to dynamite ice jams but to eliminate their formation by flow regulation in the Grand River within the limits of the capacity of the existing reservoirs.

This latter method has proved to be successful. Dynamiting has been carried out by local authorities with or, more often, without the knowledge of the conservation authority. A personal inspection was carried out by the assistant general manager on January 11, and in a meeting with town officials he advised against dynamiting.

On March 5 town officials attempted to secure an expert on dynamiting the ice jam without success. In a meeting between town and conservation authority officials all agreed it was too dangerous to attempt dynamiting because of the potential for damage and possible loss of life.

The jam partially broke up of its own accord as a result of high river flow.

Mr. Makarchuk: In view of the fact the conservation authorities are dependent upon provincial funding for channel improvements and dike construction and repairs, will the minister ensure the conservation authorities have adequate funding to build the channels and the dikes they know they require now and therefore prevent these incidents from recurring in the future?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am afraid I couldn't give such blanket assurance. The honourable member—

Mr. Makarchuk: You are going to continue with a flood a year.

Hon. Mr. Auld: As the honourable member is aware, the conservation authorities were primarily set up some years ago to deal—

Mr. McClellan: Minister of natural disasters.

Mr. Makarchuk: That's right. And we all know they have to be repaired. And they've got the plans and the studies and everything.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question has been asked.

Mr. Peterson: Will you provide money to build an ark?

Hon. Mr. Auld: —with flooding and, in some cases, drought problems—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Are you part of the conservative or liberal wing?

Hon. Mr. Auld: —to regulate, within human capability, the water levels in the watersheds of the province. The conservation authorities and the local municipalities that put up varying percentages of the funds—

Mr. Makarchuk: They would be happy to do it, providing you put up your per cent.

Hon. Mr. Auld: —may decide, in their own judgement, generally speaking, the priorities of that authority.

Mr. Makarchuk: The priorities are floods now, repairs later.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I will undertake to pursue the matter of flood control again with the Grand River authority—

Mr. Warner: You guys are one big ice jam.

Hon. Mr. Auld: —and I would say we will certainly be pursuing the matter of federal reparticipation in the matter along the lower Thames.

Mr. Makarchuk: That is one every four years you are having now.

Mr. Speaker: It's my understanding that the Minister of Energy happens to be the same person who has the answer to a question previously asked.

Mr. Sargent: This time take the marbles out of your mouth.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, if he can understand the minister—is there something the matter with the sound system or something more seriously and personally wrong with me? I cannot understand him.

An hon. member: Half the time he doesn't know what he's saying either.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I sometimes need it myself, Mr. Speaker, as some people have suspected for some time.

Mr. McClellan: Try reading it upside down.

HYDRO LOAD FORECASTS

Hon. Mr. Auld: I have an answer to a question posed by the member for Ottawa Centre last Friday.

The question was: "Does the minister, therefore, reject the Ministry of Energy forecast which indicates very clearly that if oil and gas supplies are uncertain that will, in fact, lower the rate of growth for electricity demand to a rate even lower than the ministry already forecasts?"

The ministry's energy demand model was developed to help assess how long-term energy demand would be affected by changes in population, economic conditions, technology, or governmental policy. The ministry used the model for three scenarios—current trends, low energy use, uncertain oil and gas—which were developed to assess the potential for energy conservation and substitution—

Mr. Sargent: Throw in a couple of stories.

Hon. Mr. Auld: —and not to provide a peak electrical load forecast as the basis for planning Ontario Hydro's generation program.

Mr. Makarchuk: Let us know when you get to the punch line.

Hon. Mr. Auld: As the honourable members are aware, the ministry recently presented forecasts for those three scenarios to the select committee on Ontario Hydro affairs. The scenario referred to as current trends, forecasts annual growth in electrical energy demand as 3.7 per cent from 1976 to 1985. "The uncertain oil and gas scenario" referred to by the honourable member—

Mr. Martel: I surrender.

Hon. Mr. Auld: —was only one-twentieth of one per cent lower to 1985 and it was based on a stringent energy conservation assumption. This scenario did not assume actual shortages of oil or gas which could have significant effects on electricity demand. For the comparable period, the same 1976-85 period, Ontario Hydro's 1979 forecast of peak electricity demand indicates an annual growth of 4.1 per cent.

Mr. Sargent: Time, Mr. Speaker. Time.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Taking into account the different approaches and purposes they are, in fact, quite close.

Mr. Cassidy: Is the minister saying that in fact the Ministry of Energy forecast is a nice idea which gives some general indications but is not to be relied on? Because if that's the case, why did they do it at all; and will we ever get some accurate forecasts of future energy requirements from the Ministry of Energy which can be used in order to give clear indications of government policy to Ontario Hydro?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I really think I covered that when I said there were three different scenarios looking at three different possibilities.

Mr. Kerrio: Take your pick.

Hon. Mr. Auld: We were looking at different sets of circumstances—

Mr. Kerrio: Oh, yes. They pump in circumstances like you wouldn't believe.

Hon. Mr. Auld: —and using different assumptions, as I said the other day; some 1,500 to 2,000 assumptions.

Mr. Kerrio: Half are high and half are low. You're laughing.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I just want to repeat that this was not second-guessing Hydro; we were looking at quite different possibilities.

Mr. Speaker: Final supplementary, the member for Halton-Burlington.

Mr. J. Reed: A point of clarification, Mr. Speaker: The minister used the figure 4.1 per cent, and I believe that the Hydro load forecast, if I remember correctly, was 4.7 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Auld: No, for the period from 1976 to 1985, Hydro was looking at a longer period, as I recall.

NIAGARA RIVER POLLUTION

Mr. Kerrio: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of the Environment. I wonder if he is aware of the details in the planning of a dump site for Lewiston, New York, that would add poisons to the Niagara River including many dangerous chemicals—I won't list them here. I wonder if the minister is aware that the mayor himself, the mayor of Niagara-on-the-Lake and many citizens on the American and Canadian sides are most concerned. I wonder what involvement the minister has with the very, very dangerous situation which would exist if they put in place this plan to pump an additional two million gallons into the lower Niagara River, actually above the intake of Niagara-on-the-Lake. Presumably, if that were to happen, the member from there might have to get bottled water.

Mr. Makarchuk: They would probably bottle it and sell it as Ontario wine.

Mr. Speaker: That was directed to the Minister of the Environment, you said?

Mr. Kerrio: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: But you weren't looking at him.

Mr. Kerrio: No. I never do.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I had my hair cut on the weekend and I had a shower this morning; I really don't understand. In that case, I should address the member for Humber or somebody down here in reply.

Mr. Sweeney: It's called discrimination.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Yes, we are aware of that situation, Mr. Speaker. Through you to the member let me say that we are very interested. There are a few mistakes that the member over there has made—wherever he is. Oh, I'm sorry, there he is.

May I be serious on this item, because it is one of importance? I would like to back up just a little bit. The member used a couple of words that I think I would have to ask him to reconsider a little bit. They are treated wastes. That's awfully important: they are treated wastes.

Mr. Kerrio: Poorly treated, like the Love Canal. Questionably treated.

[3:00]

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Secondly, those treated wastes have been analysed. Before the company is allowed to discharge them into the stream, they will receive approvals. So we have a treated waste that will be analysed and then permission given. It will not be permitted to go into the waters until those permissions have been granted. I think that is awfully important.

Thirdly, we are looking at specific limits for certain chemicals. In other words, we will do a one-by-one analysis to make sure. We are in close contact with officials from New York State. I can assure the member we will be very sure that we do not negotiate away any of his health or the health of the citizens. Let me put that clearly on the line. We will be closely monitoring what is being done and we will assure him we will not tolerate anything but treated and analysed waste going into our water.

Mr. Kerrio: I certainly realize that the affluent is what is being discharged, but what we are talking about—

Hon. Mr. Davis: It is not the affluent, it is the effluent.

Mr. Kerrio: The water that runs out after it has been treated.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That's what you still are. You are affluent.

Mr. McClellan: He's always been a little guy.

Mr. Speaker: Do you have a supplementary question?

Mr. Kerrio: It is very difficult with all the interjections over there. The concern that I have is that while the treated waste—

Hon. Mr. Davis: We are just all jealous over here at your affluence.

Mr. Martel: That is where some of them belong.

Mr. Kerrio: I will start over again. Does the minister realize that 10 to 20 times more than the accepted levels of chemicals would go into the water? What we are concerned about are the accepted levels of the chemicals entering the water. The problem is the minister is going to consider just isolated areas, but if he keeps adding them together—

Mr. MacDonald: The water will sink.

Mr. Kerrio: —he has to realize that only 25 years ago there was commercial fishing in the Niagara River but it doesn't exist any longer because every one of them has been subjected to minimal—

Mr. MacDonald: You could walk on the water.

Mr. Speaker: Order. There has been no question so far.

Mr. Kerrio: The question then is—

Mr. Speaker: You had your opportunity.

Mr. Kerrio: The question is serious.

Mr. Ashe: Sit down.

CANADA METAL COMPANY LIMITED

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. I refer to the lead levels of Canada Metal's plant on Eastern Avenue in Riverdale riding, as reported in the ministry's reports for January and February and as reported in the Globe and Mail last Friday. My question is probably in four parts:

1. What lead level readings has the minister in his March report with respect to Canada Metal?

2. Why is there such a long delay, of anywhere from four to six months before his reports are issued with respect to the lead level readings?

3. What steps is the minister taking to enforce his standards or to penalize the company for having breached those standards as a result of the information shown in his reports?

4. What, in the minister's direct assessment and judgement is the continuing health hazard in Riverdale riding which has existed for so long about this plant?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I'll have to take some of that and reply to the member because part of the question, or one part at least, was certainly very specific. I'll try to be specific in reply.

The levels vary a great deal, as I'm sure the member is well aware. At the moment, we're convinced that the high levels—or the higher than desirable levels—are pretty well confined to the industrial park. So, regarding the member's question relative to the residents: I think we can assure him that the residents are in no hazard whatsoever. Very seldom is the reading in the residential portion of Riverdale riding at any level that would cause concern.

However, the level in the industrial park is an equal concern, so I'm not suggesting to the member that we're not concerned about that part of it.

We're finding that a good deal of the problem is in the operation of the plant and our staff is meeting with the company today, as a matter of fact. I guess the meeting's going on right now.

We met with them some time ago and we have had a good deal of discussion with the plant operators. We feel that a lot of it is in the operation of the plant itself. So we're meeting today to try to come to a firmer position with the company regarding better operation of their plant. I'll be glad to report the outcome of that meeting—plus the information that I should give you, as part of the question that I have not responded to—in the next day or two.

Mr. Renwick: I have a supplementary question. Is the minister aware that a block meeting of residents was held with a representative of his ministry on December 12, at which the latest information available to that meeting were the readings in April and May of last year? Is he aware that at that meeting there was assurance given that, in fact, the matter was under control, and yet the ministry's January and February reports indicate that the standard of five was exceeded at least eight times and was over the maximum of eight in those readings that are referred to in those reports?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think the problem is, Mr. Speaker, and through you to the member, that the necessary controls are there.

In theory, there should be no problem, but that doesn't prove to be the case, so again it makes what I was saying earlier true: that the problem is not with the equipment itself but how it is operating. Therefore, I think it was reasonable to say it's under control. It should be under control because the necessary equipment to do so is there, but making sure that there are no levels exceeding our standards is proving to be somewhat difficult.

We are meeting again—and I underline the word again—with the company and I will report on that. I will take what the member says very much to our concern because we share that concern that the operation of that plant should guarantee that we don't have the ups and downs of the levels that we have been experiencing.

TURKEY QUOTAS

Mr. G. E. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture and Food. Further to my representations on behalf of some of the farmers in my area to the minister, and I suppose it reflects concern from other farmers throughout the province, farmers who have been precluded from buying small numbers of turkey poults for their own use or for family use, prohibited by the turkey marketing board, could the minister bring us up to date on the situation as to how it stands at the present time?

Hon. W. Newman: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I believe this was brought to my attention and I want to thank the honourable member and some of the other members who have brought it to my attention.

An hon. member: There are some real turkeys over there.

Hon. W. Newman: Keep it up.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Sounds like another resources answer.

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, the turkey marketing board met last Thursday I believe, or Friday—I can't remember which—and made a ruling that they will give a free quota of 25 birds to any individual farmer in the province of Ontario who would like to raise birds. The Farm Products Marketing Board has declined that recommendation of the turkey board and will be back to the turkey board. It's not that they don't want a farmer to raise a few turkeys in his own yard, but there is some doubt about whether he should have to have a permit of any kind if he only wants to raise them for his home use.

Mr. Nixon: That's what happens with Tories.

Mr. Speaker: The time for oral questions has expired.

PETITION

CO-PAYMENT FEES

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, I have a petition that I would like to present today with the names of nearly 6,000 people from Windsor—5,942 to be exact—who oppose the $9.80 deterrent fee to chronic care patients. I think it's fair to say that the people of Windsor, through this petition, are saying to the government that they do not want a deterrent fee. They want universal accessibility to our health care system and a chronic home care program.

Mr. Wildman: We have never supported senior citizens losing their homes.

MOTIONS

COMMITTEE MEETING

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that the standing general government committee be authorized to meet concurrently with the House this afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

SITTINGS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that on Thursday, March 15, the House will adjourn at 6 p.m. and stand adjourned until 2 p.m., Tuesday, March 27.

Motion agreed to.

[3:15]

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

PORTUGUESE CLUB OF LONDON INCORPORATED ACT

Mr. Peterson moved first reading of Bill Pr2, An Act to revive the Portuguese Club of London Incorporated.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Nixon: You're losing the Portuguese vote.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S THEATRE ACT

Mrs. Campbell moved first reading of Bill Pr3, An Act respecting Young People's Theatre.

Motion agreed to.

GOOD SAMARITAN ACT

Mr. Haggerty moved first reading of Bill 10, An Act to Relieve Persons from Liability in respect of Voluntary Emergency, Medical and First Aid Services.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill is to relieve persons from liability in respect of voluntary emergency, first aid assistance or medical services rendered at or near the scene of an accident or other sudden emergency.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

THRONE SPEECH DEBATE

Consideration of the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor at the opening of the session.

Mr. Watson moved that a humble address be presented to the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows:

To the Honourable P. M. McGibbon, Lieutenant Governor of Ontario:

May it please Your Honour, we, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly of the province of Ontario, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has addressed to us.

Mr. Watson: Mr. Speaker, it is an honour and a privilege for me to have the opportunity of moving this speech from the throne of this third session of the 31st Parliament.

I would first, at the outset, like to say a word on behalf of all the members of the House in expressing appreciation to the Lieutenant Governor's gracious acceptance of a year's extension of her term. The people of Ontario have derived substantial benefits from her happy and compassionate dedication to her responsibilities and we are grateful for her continuing efforts on their behalf.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to express a sincere word of appreciation to you as Speaker of this House, for the efficient and competent manner in which the role has been carried out and for your personal guidance and encouragement to one who is a newly elected member of this Legislature.

The speech from the throne represents in broad terms the philosophy which this government, of which I am pleased to be a part, plans to follow during the coming session. Although I am a relative rookie to this Legislature, I am indeed pleased that I am able to accept and promote the philosophy carried out in the presentation made to us on Tuesday last.

I am particularly pleased to endorse the thoughts regarding Canadian unity and the part that Ontario will be playing in this unfolding development. It has been a source of pride and encouragement to all the people of Ontario to have recently witnessed the excellent leadership provided by the Honourable William G. Davis, Premier of this province, with regard to Canadian unity and with regard to explaining the position of Ontario to our neighbours to the south.

There can surely be no disagreement in this House on this province's stand on Canadian unity and it is good that our government and our leader have taken a firm position on a crucial question of Canadian unity.

Mr. Haggerty: Thirty years too late.

Mr. Watson: I feel, Mr. Speaker, that the example set by the Premier of this province in the recent meetings where Canadian unity was being discussed serves only as an example of the leadership capabilities of the Premier.

I am aware that it was some 20 years ago that the present Premier had the honour of moving the speech from the throne. I am aware that our Premier must have had some of the same feelings that I have when I come to this Legislature, as he was elected to replace one T. L. Kennedy, who for many years was Minister of Agriculture in this province and was for a short period Premier.

Mr. Cureatz: A great man.

Mr. Watson: I can identify with that feeling because I have the pleasure of representing the riding of Chatham-Kent in this Legislature, which for 15 years was held by the Honourable Darcy McKeough whose ability and philosophy are well known to all members of this House.

I therefore deem it a great pleasure to represent the riding of Chatham-Kent in this Legislature, realizing that I have a large pair of shoes to fill, just as I know the Premier of this province must have felt when he came to this Legislature knowing that he had a large pair of shoes to fill. I am certainly both pleased and proud to be a member of the government of this side of the House and to be able to stand in this Legislature as part of the team under the capable leadership of Premier William Davis.

Mr. Speaker, the speech from the throne not only represents the thoughts and philosophy of our Premier, but the various cabinet ministers who make up the present government. I should like to acknowledge the leadership given this province by the various ministers of this government and also to extend my sincere personal appreciation for the co-operation given to me over the past few months as I have become aware of the activities here at Queen's Park.

When I first spoke in this House last December I referred to the Ministry of Industry and Tourism slogan, "We treat you royally." I referred to that because of the fact that I felt the entire Legislature had given me that kind of treatment after having been elected here.

Mr. Haggerty: First time Royal Crown has been seen for a number of years.

Mr. Watson: I have not changed my opinion on that particular fact and perhaps it is somewhat of interest that I note that in the speech from the throne we are going to have phase two of "We treat you royally," and I hope that phase two can be extended to me in the coming months.

Mr. Haggerty: What happened to the trillium?

Mr. Wildman: Just ask Westinghouse.

Mr. Watson: I also would like to have it, as noted in the indication in the speech from the throne, that our tourist-oriented people can accept this spirit of goodwill and acceptance that I have experienced here.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that we will be dealing during the coming session with both matters of economics and social services. It appears to me that at a time when we all concur that we are in need of restraint in government that we must strike a delicate balance between those things which we might consider to be economic and those things which we might consider to be social.

It seems to me that common sense would tell us that to emphasize one without the other would be a mistake. We must also appreciate that all of these programs must be conducted within the overall general restraint program to which government is committed. Someone once said that money isn't everything, but it's away ahead of whatever is in second place, and I well realize that if we did not have any constraints on the budget expenditures it would be easier for everyone—

Mr. Nixon: Something else was on that list.

Mr. Watson: —to be a more popular politician in this province and in this country.

I am pleased that the government, as a matter of priority, will be taking specific measures to ensure the Ontario economy continues to expand in a positive and productive fashion. I represent an area of Ontario where this process has already begun. The initiative by this government to conclude the proposal whereby the Ford Motor Company located its new engine plant in southwestern Ontario is already paying off. Because the main Ford plant expansion is to be in Windsor, there have already been additional announcements by Ford for further expansion in the area of a casting plant.

I would like to point out that the second plant was located without any government assistance, and that there is little doubt that the location was decided by the fact the major plant was to be in Windsor. Similar examples in the economy can be cited throughout all of southwestern Ontario as suppliers to the automotive industry, both large and small, are thinking positively in terms of expansion and growth. This of course means growth of the economy in this province.

I was particularly pleased, in the speech from the throne, to see the apprenticeship and skilled trades programs were being revamped in the province. This development, to me, goes hand in hand with the encouragement for industries to locate in this province.

Mr. Haggerty: More talk, no action.

Mr. Watson: As a nation, we are told about the unemployed. As a politician in southwestern Ontario, I am told about the need for skilled tradesmen.

Mr. Haggerty: All talk, no action.

Mr. Watson: I am therefore pleased the emphasis is to be placed on this type of program. It will lower our unemployment rate in this province and in the country, and at the same time train people for jobs which will be available as our economy expands.

I would like to concur with the government in the speech from the throne when it refers to the efforts that are being made to have the federal-provincial programs renewed with regard to the ARDA and other similar programs. It is a fact in my riding that much of the land would be swamp and bullrushes if it were not for the drainage program and those kinds of projects.

Mr. Wildman: You have come out of the swamp.

Mr. Watson: Some of this land is in danger because the rebuilding of the dikes along the St. Clair, the Sydenham, and the Thames rivers has not been completed. In the township of Dover, which I represent, approximately 30,000 acres have to be pumped at the present time. When I left the riding of Chatham-Kent this morning, approximately 8,000 of those acres were covered with water. Part of the blame for this has to be attached to the fact that the diking project was not completed. We are told it is not going to be completed because the federal government has seen fit not to provide enough funds.

Mr. Wildman: That's restraint for you.

Mr. Watson: The flooding itself was very extensive. The flooding is the worst in the memories of many people who live in that area. I visited a house yesterday with at least five feet of water in it, up to the middle of the windows.

The cattle—at one farm it is difficult to get an accurate assessment of how many have died. I circled the area in the Ontario Provincial Police helicopter on Saturday. They have a large pile of ensilage and the cattle were crowded onto the top of that as thick as they could be. You could just see the tops of the posts in the fence-line feeders.

We have had all kinds of estimates: it would appear that 70 to 100 cattle lost is the most realistic estimate that I have heard. To show how rumours move, I have heard all the way from 40 to 700 lost; I prefer to think in terms of 70 to 100. But they do have over 1,000 cattle in that particular feed lot.

Mr. Riddell: Is that the Bradley estate?

Mr. Watson: That is the Bradley establishment.

I think it is terrible that this sort of thing would happen in one's riding. We have to make the best of things. One thing it points out to the people in Ottawa undoubtedly is the fact that this diking project has to be completed to prevent such things from happening again in the future.

As the member for Chatham-Kent, where the agricultural industry is so extremely important, I am pleased to endorse the policies outlined in the speech from the throne with regard to the promotion and eating of Ontario-grown food. Food prices are a topic for discussion in almost any group, and information to be provided to the consumers regarding food prices as outlined in the speech from the throne will be useful.

I think it should be pointed out to this assembly, and to the people of Ontario, that past programs of this government have been extremely useful in helping to maintain reasonable food prices. I am very sure there are those here, and certainly across Ontario, who consider beef prices much too high today. But I would like to point out there is no doubt in my mind that the price of beef would have been higher in Ontario today if it had not been for this government's cow-calf program back in 1975, 1976 and 1977.

This government had a program which allowed farmers to hang on, if I could use that expression, and protected them from the need to market their cows at that particular time. There is little doubt that because the price of beef at that time was ridiculously low farmers would have sold their cows and the steers and heifers that are presently coming to market would never have been born in this province. I am certainly well aware that the price of beef has gone up dramatically, but perhaps it is of some consolation to the consumer that the price would have been even higher if the government had not undertaken this cow-calf program in the past. I would hope that the examples set in the past will be continued in the future, as required by the situation.

I was also particularly pleased to note in the speech from the throne—and I would endorse them—the programs regarding the foodland guidelines, and as well an indication of a program for soil and water conservation. Perhaps it is a motherhood statement to say that we should be saving farm land. This statement can be interpreted in several ways. We can save farm land from urban encroachment, or we can save farm land from washing or blowing away.

I endorse the foodland guidelines which encourage the common sense use of land, which is our basic resource. I believe it would be a mistake to say that we should never take any farm land for other uses; but good planning can and will ensure that land that must be taken is put to its best use.

I could refer specifically to the problems in my immediate area. It doesn't matter which direction you go from Chatham or Wallaceburg, you are surrounded by excellent farm land in that area. It is, therefore, really not a viable argument to say that the lands on which cities must expand are the poor lands. We must, however, ensure that where annexation or industrial use of land does take place it is done in such a manner as to minimize the loss of our farm land in this province.

In a similar way, we know that land is being lost across this province by wind and by water erosion. The changing crop programs have had their economic benefit; but they are making our soil more prone to erosion from natural phenomena. I believe, therefore, that it is in the best interests of the agricultural community as a whole, in this province, to promote activities which would save our farm land; not only from urban encroachment where this is a problem in some cases, but in areas where soil is lost due to wind and water.

I believe that if the people of this province would think of our agricultural areas as a factory it might be put into some perspective for them. If we can think of each crop-producing acre—or hectare as some people now want to call it, and that's not a very popular term in the rural community—if we can think of each specific area as a factory we can have many points illustrated that were outlined in the speech from the throne.

There is a concern over the conservation of energies related to this factory, because this factory uses as a source of energy the sun; which was there yesterday, is there today and will be there tomorrow.

The process of producing food by means of this energy source is renewable and continuous from year to year. Contrary to many energy sources which are becoming depleted, our scientists, in co-operation with the agricultural community, are learning how to produce more food from an acre of land by means of this ultimate energy supplied by the sun. We do use some inputs—some help from commercial fertilizers, some machines to till the soil and the like—but I am pleased that reference was made in the speech from the throne to the fact that legislation would be considered to protect some of these very large investments in farm machinery which farmers must make by way of some kind of protection regarding warranties.

Our agricultural open-air factories in Ontario are very efficient. I like to think that these open-air factories in the riding of Chatham-Kent are the most effective and efficient in Canada. I am pleased that the government of this province will be supporting the agricultural industry and I would hope that, by recognizing how important our green-acre factories are all across this province, due consideration will be given by all ministries whenever their programs touch this very basic and important industry.

We do appreciate the efforts of the conservation authorities—and I did mention the one locally this past weekend—but in particular I would mention the St. Clair Region Conservation Authority and the progress to date of the W. Darcy McKeough Dam, which will allow the town of Wallaceburg to breathe somewhat easier every time the river rises.

Mr. Nixon: I haven't heard those words in that order for a long time.

Mr. Wildman: Did you say "Damn Darcy McKeough"?

Mr. Watson: I said the Darcy McKeough Dam.

I am reminded at this point of the two fellows in Florida at this particular time of the year who were discussing how they were there. One fellow said to the other, "I'm here because I had a fire." The other fellow sat back and said, "I'm here because I had a flood." There was a long silence and finally the other chap came back and said, "Say, how do you have a flood?" Well, some of the projects that are going on down our way by way of the W. Darcy McKeough Dam will let the people in Wallaceburg breathe a little easier during flood seasons.

As one who came to this Legislature from the public service of Ontario, I was personally pleased with the reference in Her Honour's address to the fact that attention is to be given to the matter of public servants in this province who serve the public. It is and was my personal philosophy that when an individual is given a satisfactory explanation regarding any decision or policy, the individual will at least appreciate the public servant involved, even though the decision may not be entirely as the individual would have liked it.

It is when people do not have access to information or individuals who make decisions that the bond of trust which should exist between citizens of this province and the public servants of this province starts to break down. I therefore heartily support the intention of this government to foster programs which will encourage mutual trust between people and the government.

I was proud to be a civil servant in this province for 20 years, and I know that there are many others in the public sector who are equally proud of their work and accomplishments in serving the government and serving the people. I therefore am convinced that programs to encourage trust between people and the government will be appreciated by those who are dedicated public servants in this province.

I would like at this time to refer specifically to the Ontario Provincial Police and their actions in my particular riding this past weekend. They came out as shining examples of public servants, in my opinion. They were there to do the helicopter lifts that were necessary. They were there with their boats late on Friday night—I was out where they were taking off from—prepared to go up and down the concession roads with the boats to take people out. They patrolled the area on a 24-hour basis to keep anybody out who had no business being there.

I would like it recorded that the people of Chatham-Kent, and in particular the people of Dover township who were affected, particularly appreciated the efforts of the Ontario Provincial Police in this disaster that we had.

I was particularly pleased to hear in the speech from the throne, and it was later outlined by the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow), that because of the success of the special transit services for the physically disabled in five communities across Ontario that services are to be made permanent and introduced on a gradual basis to other communities without delay.

Chatham was one of the five communities in which the pilot project was based. It was well received and considered worthwhile in our community. It was a program which considers the special difficulties encountered by the physically handicapped or disabled people. It is particularly gratifying to know that it will become permanent.

While addressing this assembly today, I should like to issue to everyone an invitation to visit Kent county, including the riding of Chatham-Kent and the riding of Kent-Elgin. I hope the member for Kent-Elgin (Mr. McGuigan) is paying attention to this because I want to give him a little credit here. We want members to visit our riding between September 25 and September 29, 1979, when Kent county is hosting the International Ploughing Match and farm machinery show. If they accept my invitation, they will be among approximately a quarter of a million visitors who will be visiting Kent county this September.

Those in this assembly who represent urban areas will have an opportunity to see the best farms in Canada first-hand. They will have an opportunity to see 130 acres of tilled city with the latest in farm equipment on display. Farming has become an extremely big business. This event will be an event where all members can see the tremendous equipment that is used on our farms today. It has been 60 years since the International Ploughing Match was in Kent county.

With regard to the event, I have compared Kent county to the expectant mother. Kent county is an expectant mother. There were a few problems in the conception of this particular thing. There was a bit of morning sickness but that is all over. The thing is now organized. There will likely be a few last-minute labour pains. I want to tell members that when the 1979 International Ploughing Match is born in Kent county on September 25, 1979, it is going to be the biggest and best baby that was ever produced in Kent county. It's going to be perfect in every way. All the parents, grandparents, cousins and anybody else who had anything to do with the bringing of this baby to Kent county are going to be awfully anxious to show it off. Therefore, members are invited to come to Kent county in southwestern Ontario and see our crops at their best.

The symbol for the Kent county International Ploughing Match this year is the To-Be Co-Be, which is a figure that has a tomato head, a chest of beef, a body of corn and feet of beans. I want to assure members those are only four of the products produced in Kent county for which we are known across this country. I want to assure them also that the International Ploughing Match this year is the outstanding outdoor farm equipment show in Canada. I do hope they will come and see us at that particular time.

I think it worthwhile to point out at this time that the city of Chatham has initiated a proposal under the downtown revitalization program that could serve as a shining example for downtown redevelopment across Ontario. The proposal includes the development of a nine-acre block of land in the downtown core of the city of Chatham. It is my hope that this government, through the Ministry of Housing and the downtown revitalization program, will see fit to lend funds to the city of Chatham under this program so that this project can be undertaken.

I would like to point out that the city of Chatham has already spent over $6 million without special government assistance on rebuilding its downtown section by way of a new civic centre and by way of an entirely renovated King Street, which is the main street in Chatham. The inclusion of the city of Chatham in the downtown redevelopment program will certainly enhance the downtown area of our city and serve as an example to other centres as to what can be done with the downtown area of a community.

The riding of Chatham-Kent has a great deal to offer for both work and pleasure. I mentioned earlier the spirit of optimism in our industrial community which prevails in my particular riding. Those who want to enjoy recreation might appreciate the duck hunting or ice fishing that Lake St. Clair is noted for. Several of our tourist establishments, such as the Wheels Inn in Chatham or the Oaks Inn in Wallaceburg, have special package programs for those who want to come and enjoy the recreational facilities that are available in our area.

As one drives through our rich farm land one cannot help but be impressed with the wall-to-wall crops that exist in our particular area, the ones that are so neatly tended and well produced. I am particularly proud to represent the citizens of the riding of Chatham-Kent in this Legislature and have been equally pleased and proud to be the mover of the speech from the throne.

In summary, I would like to say that the speech from the throne has many attributes with which I can identify. There is an element of share. This element of share, to me, means that we are going to give attention and resources to both economic matters and social problems.

There is an element of care. The matters discussed in Her Honour's speech from the throne indicate this government's concern for many matters, and particularly for those who are less fortunate than some of us who are able to operate on our own.

I also note with interest that there is an element of being fair—that's spelled f-a-i-r not f-a-r-e, by the way.

In an overall economic climate, or an overall climate where this government will, and is continuing, to practice restraint involving the use of public funds, there must be some type of rationing. The attribute of being fair expressed in this address will, therefore, make the proposals acceptable to the people of this province, and therefore I'm sure acceptable to the members of this Legislature.

In these elements of share, of care and of being fair, Her Honour's address is made acceptable to me, and I'm sure to the Legislature. I hope the legislation resulting from the ideas expressed in this speech from the throne will benefit the people of this province. Thank you.

Mr. Ramsay: Mr. Speaker, it is an honour and a privilege for me to second the motion that a humble address be presented to Her Honour, the Lieutenant Governor.

I rise at this time, in this House, with mixed feelings. Any pride or personal satisfaction or excitement is tempered substantially by the set of tragic and unfortunate circumstances that led to a by-election in Sault Ste. Marie through the untimely passing of an associate of mine, and a colleague of yours, who graced this Legislative Assembly and the government of this province with such a high measure of dedication, competency and wit.

I am sure I will find no dissenters when I refer to his distinguished career in public service, as first an alderman and then mayor of Sault Ste. Marie; and then his tenure as a member of this House, as a backbencher, a parliamentary assistant and the holder of three different portfolios. The Honourable John Rhodes had far too much to offer his riding, this province and this country when he was so suddenly taken from us.

He had maintained an excellent tradition of representation of the riding of Sault Ste. Marie established by Arthur Wishart, a former Attorney General of this government, and his predecessor as the member for Sault Ste. Marie the late Harry Lyons; I follow in their footsteps with a great deal of humility.

As the late Mr. Rhodes held this House, its traditions, its responsibilities and its members on both sides with great respect, I do likewise. I have observed the mechanisms of government, and both the achievements and the frustrations of this House, for many years. I have held in awe those men, regardless of their party affiliation, who seek public office and who, if successful, work diligently, usually at considerable personal sacrifice, to maintain the strength and character of a parliamentary system that is the equal of any in the world today.

I am reminded of the words of the late Indian leader Gandhi, who once stated that there are seven great sins existing in the world today: wealth without work; pleasure without conscience; knowledge without character; commerce without morality; science without humanity; worship without sacrifice; and politics without principle.

I understand that it is traditional for a member in his maiden appearance before this House to refer to his home riding. I will attempt to be brief, although there is much of a positive nature that could be said for the city of Sault Ste. Marie.

For those who have never been to our city and might think that we are far removed from the city of Toronto, let me point out that we are only 55 minutes away by air and are serviced by four flights daily each way. We are actually south of many areas in the United States.

US Interstate Highway 75 begins at the south end of the International Bridge at Sault Ste. Marie, and we can travel to Windsor, Ontario, over a four-lane express highway and nary a stop light along the way, in a trip normally no longer than five hours.

We are blessed with a community of many cultures, a city surrounded by the finest countryside and the clearest waters that one could hope to find anywhere in this great country today; and a city that has progressed so rapidly and has made so many exciting improvements, thanks to a municipal government and administration that has been far-sighted and the assistance of senior levels of government. Our waterfront on historic St. Mary's River has been almost completely reclaimed from the docks, oil tanks and marine operations that once occupied it. It now serves as the site for one of the finest civic centres in the country, a magnificent library; and a blend of commercial development, high-rise office accommodation, residential and senior citizen housing and a modern hotel.

We are blessed with an outstanding educational system from kindergarten throughout some of the finest secondary schools in the province, culminating in a highly successful community college and a struggling but productive university college. In fact, two distinguished members of this House, the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon) and the member for Algoma (Mr. Wildman), taught in our secondary school systems.

Mr. Nixon: For $2,800 a year.

Mr. Turner: You were overpaid and underworked.

Hon. W. Newman: How much did you pay in taxes?

Mr. Ramsay: Recreational facilities, both natural and constructed, are the envy of any city our size in the province. Our little theatre groups, our musical comedy guilds, our operetta and opera societies and our art galleries, all maintain a level of excellence that consistently results in recognition across this country.

We are blessed with a buoyant economy, largely attributable to the existence of one of the world's most efficient steel mills, the Algoma Steel Corporation Limited, which in turn is indebted to some of the most productive workers on the North American continent. Since 1973 Algoma has spent $325 million on expansion and modernization. In addition, $25 million has been spent in the same period of time on air and water quality control. Algoma Steel has continually turned its profits back into its operations and has recently announced expansion and modernization programs to take place in the next relatively short period of time that will total over $125 million.

While Ontario Hydro provides power to the city of Toronto at $26 per thousand kilowatts per month—as compared to New York at $82, Fredericton at $57, Vancouver at $33 and Detroit at $41—Sault Ste. Marie gets its power even more cheaply thanks to the Great Lakes Power Corporation Limited, which will commence building a new hydraulic power plant within our city limits next month at a cost of close to $100 million. That plant will assure the industrial stability of our city.

The Algoma Central Railway, with its headquarters in Sault Ste. Marie, has over the past few years completely diversified what was once almost exclusively a rail operation. They now own the second largest fleet of self-unloaders on the Great Lakes. They own a dry dock in Collingwood, a trucking company in southwestern Ontario and a helicopter company in Ottawa. They have redeveloped many of our waterfront buildings and properties: they operate a large and modern shopping mall, a hotel, office towers and a senior citizens' complex. They are now into the same type of planned development in Elliot Lake.

With a devalued dollar, the Sault Ste. Marie plant of the Abitibi Paper Company and the Sault Ste. Marie plant of Weyerhaeuser Limited are enjoying prosperous times, but this does not obscure the fact that Abitibi in particular is operating with aged facilities. Both companies have spent considerable sums of money as their share in maintaining the environmental benefits of our area.

We are a closely knit community and we look after our own. For example, the United Way campaign is one of the most successful, percentage-wise and per capita, on the North American continent, and has been consistently so for years. Fund-raising campaigns for hospitals, YMCAs, churches and other important community amenities almost without exception reach and exceed their targets.

I would like to take just a few moments and share with members information on a rather important natural resource our area has. It is not a secondary industry nor a primary industry. It doesn't help with our tax assessment, but we can derive a great deal of pride from it. What I am talking about is people, people who were born or raised in Sault Ste. Marie and have gone on to fame provincially, nationally and internationally.

The list is endless but I will try to point out just a very few. In the field of business and industry, Laurence Lamb is the president and general manager of Steel Rock Iron Mines at Atikokan. Jack Keith is a former president of Imperial Tobacco Limited. The late Leonard Walker was president and chief executive officer of the Bank of Montreal. Tom Rahilly is the president and chief executive officer of National Steel Car Corporation in Hamilton. Jim Hull is vice-president of manufacturing of the Litton Medical System in Chicago.

Malcolm Hamilton is a former chairman and president of Spruce Falls Pulp and Paper Company. Gino Francolini is the president of Livingston Industries Limited and a director of several companies, including Air Canada. Ron Lively is the president of the Elite Life Insurance Company, with head offices in Vancouver. Right in Sault Ste. Marie, Peter Nixon, whose father served with distinction for 26 years as the Liberal member in the federal House, is group vice-president of manufacturing and mining at Algoma Steel. Carson Weeks is senior vice-president of the same company. Jack Barber has recently retired as vice-chairman and vice-president of Algoma Steel.

Simpson Hollingsworth is chairman of the board and former president of the largest lumber co-op in Canada, Allont of Canada Limited.

In the field of art, Ken Danby, is renowned around the world and many other artists and craftsmen have won respect and recognition of their work, such as Jean Burke, Bob Carmichael, Ken Bradford and Ken McDougall.

Bill Mahoney is the former long-time Canadian president of United Steelworkers of America. Jack O'Driscoll is an Ontario Supreme Court Justice. Dr. Norman Bethune achieved prominence in the Spanish Civil War as a pioneer in battlefield transfusion techniques and is revered by the Chinese nation as the doctor saint of their revolution.

Ron Ianni is dean of law at the University of Windsor. David Johnston, a former All-American, in hockey at Harvard University, is the dean of law at Western and this fall will take over the responsibilities of principal and vice-chancellor at McGill University and he has yet to reach his 37th birthday.

Dr. Temple Kingston is the principal of Canterbury College in Windsor. Alfred Eddy is president of the bar association in New Brunswick. Wilfred Greaves is a former Canadian consul-general in New York City. Abe Rosenthal is the editor of the prestigious New York Times. His older sister is the senior editor of one of the Sunday supplements of the same newspaper.

Fred Rounthwaite was the architect who designed the new CNE stadium, Don Sims is chairman of the Ontario censor board. Bruce Smith, who retired to all sorts of accolades a month or so ago here in Toronto from the CBC is another Sault boy.

Gary Buck was named the top country music star in Canada in 1975. Donna Ramsay—regrettably, from my point of view, no relation—is a household word in country music circles and a star of the Tommy Hunter Show.

Eric Wild is a director of the CBC program Hymn Sing and conductor of various professional music groups in Winnipeg, including the Winnipeg Symphony. Doreen Hume is one renowned as a singer in both Canada and England. Sister Barbara Ianni is a member of the Toronto Opera Society.

The late Harry Hamilton, as the Liberal member of Parliament from Sault Ste. Marie, responded to the throne speech with the September 1939 resolution that Canada declare war on Germany.

C. T. Murphy is a past president of the North Atlantic Assembly. Gordon Cunningham is a past president of the Ontario Hospital Association, currently president of the Ontario Cancer Treatment Research Foundation and a director of Princess Margaret Hospital.

Charles Cliffe is the campaign chairman for the Ontario division of the Canadian Cancer Society. Stan Kurisko is past president of the Ontario Society for the Mentally Retarded. Dr. Ken Miller is vice-president of the National Council of YMCAs and Reverend Clifton McKay is a former moderator of the Presbyterian Church of Canada.

No brother combination in any sport in the history of the world has captured more honours than Tony and Phil Esposito.

The list of local boys who starred in the NHL is long and impressive: Jerry Korab, Lou Nanne, Gene Ubriaco, Matt Ravlich, Don Grosso, Marty Pavelich, Bill Coutu, Babe Donnelly, Bill Phillips, Ivan Boldirev, Chico and Wayne Maki, Joe Klukay. In fact, Lou Nanne is now the general manager of the Minnesota North Stars.

[4:00]

Joe Zaharko was one of the greatest badminton players in North America. Alex Denman was the only two-time winner of the Jeff Russel trophy in the eastern conference of the Canadian football championships. Mike Novick, Junior, is one of the finest harness racing drivers in the United States. Benita Rope was the coach of the Canadian gymnastic team in the recent Commonwealth Games.

Morley Torgov wrote a book about Sault Ste. Marie a few years ago, and he won the Stephen Leacock award for humour. Chapters of the book have since been adapted for television. The book's title, A Good Place to Come From, sums up my feelings completely about Sault Ste. Marie.

While I am proud of Sault Ste. Marie, and while I extol its successes and its features and virtues, I also have to admit to many worries about the community in particular and northern Ontario in general. We truly enjoy the good life in Sault Ste. Marie, but there are areas less fortunate than ours in northern Ontario; there are deficiencies and serious concerns that have to be considered by the members of this House.

Important areas that have to be continually reviewed and assessed include the following:

1. The establishment of secondary industry;
2. The development of natural resources;
3. The further processing of natural resources;
4. Realistic transportation policies;
5. Greater input into decision-making at the provincial level by northern Ontario people and, conversely, less interference in northern Ontario affairs by pressure groups and individuals resident outside of northern Ontario;
6. We require a study of total government receipts from all sources in northern Ontario and a study of total government expenditures in northern Ontario in relation to southern Ontario revenues and expenditures;
7. We have to look at agriculture; do we continue, discontinue or specialize, and in what areas, to serve our markets?
8. We have to improve the ratio of doctors and dentists in northern Ontario;
9. We have to concern ourselves about the exodus of university-trained people from northern Ontario because of the lack of job opportunities;
10. We have to worry ourselves about the problems of skilled and unskilled help for remote areas; and

11. We have to worry ourselves about the enlargement of cultural opportunities in northern Ontario.

I would go back to secondary industry for a moment. I do not know of any item which is discussed more, demanded more or suggested as the complete solution for all the problems for northern Ontario. Every city, town and village wants secondary industry. There are major criteria, though, that we have to look at if we are realistic, and we have to ask these questions:

Is there a major industry present or close by? If so, can it be enlarged or extended or further manufacture existing products? Can byproducts of such industry be further processed to provide additional business and job opportunities?

Can secondary industry be developed, making use of primary products manufactured in northern Ontario?

Can completely new products be developed that are not now available in necessary quantities for present markets?

Can we manufacture a percentage of articles of high value and little weight to overcome the problems of rate charges?

We all have to be concerned about the further development of natural resources. Many of our communities in northern Ontario are based on resource industries to provide a livelihood for the people living nearby. The pulp and paper industry is one example of an industry that provides jobs for dozens of small communities in northern Ontario, but it is an industry with antiquated plants. While they are benefiting now by the devalued dollar, in normal times they are no longer competitive.

While I endorse completely the philosophy of proper environment, is it right that people who reside in Toronto, and who have never been north of Orillia, make the decisions as to whether a town in northern Ontario is going to disappear because of excessive environmental standards?

Right now, many of the industries and mines resident in northern Ontario are spending enormous amounts for developments in other jurisdictions because it is not as viable a proposition to extend operations here. Algoma Steel is investing in an iron ore mine in Michigan. Abitibi is investing in plants in the United States. Inco, as we all know, is investing in Guatemala and overseas.

Mr. Philip: Thanks to this government they are.

Mr. Havrot: That's an idiotic statement.

Mr. Ramsay: Let us remember that the majority of markets for our products are outside the province. If southern Ontario were taking all of our products, then they should have a large say. However, that's not the case.

To provide more jobs and opportunities for job improvement, we have to demand extension of and more enlightened public policies conducive to the further processing of the products of our natural resource industries. The first consideration should be development of public policies which give first priority to the benefits to be obtained by the people in the area of the resource. In many cases in the past the primary consideration, and sometimes the only consideration, was how much tax will we or can we as a province receive. Government has to give first consideration to people most directly affected and then work towards policies which will encourage further processing.

We have to concern ourselves about transportation policies. Rates in Ontario are second only to Quebec as the highest in Canada. That's a tremendously serious problem to us in the north because of our distance from the primary markets.

I was not amused at all to learn of the petition presented by the member for Sarnia (Mr. Blundy) requesting a subsidized motor vehicle licence fee of $10 similar to that now enjoyed by the residents in northern Ontario. We pay more for our vehicles to begin with; our gasoline costs are higher; our maintenance and parts costs are higher; and we are confronted with the need for such accessories as snow tires. The $10 licence fee which we enjoy is small compensation indeed for the substantially higher cost of operating a motor vehicle in northern Ontario as compared to southern Ontario. I can't help wondering whether or not this petition represents a new policy of the Liberal Party.

Mr. Warner: Check in tomorrow.

Mr. Ramsay: Northern Ontario has only 15 members in the Legislature out of a total of 125, yet we have over 80 per cent of the area of this province. As individuals and groups, we in northern Ontario have to start asserting our views, requesting that they be considered and if necessary demanding it. We have a responsibility in northern Ontario, in concert with government, to have our area develop at a rate where young people will at least have a choice of where they wish to work.

Having enunciated these concerns, I must indicate a sense of encouragement in listening to and studying the throne speech, by the establishment of an employment development fund, the monitoring of shifting of economic priorities and the co-ordination of job creation programs. All of these can only help the north.

Further, the acknowledgement that the present educational structure does not meet fully today's needs for highly skilled persons in the manufacturing and service industries and the implementation of new emphasis on these problems, including the new role of the Minister of Labour, is also most encouraging.

Coming from a labour-oriented market, I am pleased to note the proposed amendments to the Labour Relations Act designed to reduce the cost of arbitration, to provide third party assistance in resolving grievances prior to arbitration and generally to enable the process to be carried out in the fairest and best possible manner.

I was happy to learn that tourism, which is invaluable to northern Ontario and which experienced a 16 per cent growth in revenue last year, is to receive renewed emphasis by the government in 1979. That can only provide great assistance to the north.

The Ministry of Community and Social Services, together with the Ministry of Transportation and Communications have indicated in the throne speech they will take steps to make permanent a pilot project that has been providing special transportation services for the physically disabled in five communities. One of those pilot communities is Sault Ste. Marie and I am delighted to note the continuance of these programs.

The consideration of a local services board act to address the needs of communities in northern Ontario that lack municipal organization is perhaps long overdue.

I was pleased to note the Ministry of Northern Affairs will seek ways to provide a greater range of television services for remote areas in northern Ontario. This has no bearing whatsoever on my riding, in that we enjoy television services as diversified as any in southern Ontario. However, I have been working personally for several years in concert with the late John Rhodes, and the member for Algoma (Mr. Wildman) who has also worked diligently in this respect, and with the Minister of Northern Affairs and with the Ministry of Transportation and Communications, as well as local town councils, in a continuing effort to resolve the problems of inadequate and unreliable television service in remote areas in northern Ontario.

These are just a few examples of positive measures relative to northern Ontario that have been revealed in the Speech from the Throne. There are many others, but time does not permit me the opportunity to review them or to go into any detail on those that I have already commented on.

Mr. Ruston: There's lots of time.

Mr. Ramsay: In conclusion, while I spoke in some detail earlier about the continuing concerns for secondary industry in northern Ontario, I am delighted to announce that I have been advised by the Minister of Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier), that $718,000 has been put aside in his budget for 1979-80 to assist in the assembly, servicing and development of phase II of our industrial park in Sault Ste. Marie. It will be of great assistance to the municipality of Sault Ste. Marie in attracting and encouraging new industry to our area, as well as the development and diversification of existing industry which requires property for expansion.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with you and the members a story that I have used on many occasions because I think it's most appropriate today. It relates to a father and his young son.

The boy was restless and his father wanted to watch the Saturday afternoon football game with some degree of peace and quiet. In order to occupy the youngster he took a map of the world and tore it up into little pieces, thinking that this would keep the boy busy for quite some time.

Much to his surprise the young lad returned in a relatively short period of time with the task accomplished. The dad asked how he had been able to do it so quickly. The boy replied, "Well, it was easy, dad. You see, on the back of the map there is a photograph of a man; I got the man right and that made the world right, too."

Let me paraphrase that story just a bit. If all of us, you and I and many others, concern ourselves with and work toward good government and service to our fellow man, then we stand a much better chance of getting the world right, too.

On motion by Mr. Nixon, the debate was adjourned.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment of the House may I take this opportunity to indicate the order of business for tomorrow and for Thursday.

Tomorrow afternoon we will continue with this debate and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) will be making his contribution to it. When the honourable Leader of the Opposition has completed and if there is still some time between then and 6 p.m. we will then go back to Bills 74 and 75 in committee of the whole House. Then tomorrow evening at 8 o'clock we will take into consideration private member's motion

No. 1 standing in the name of the member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy)—

Mr. Nixon: But that matter has been settled.

Mr. Ashe: What a waste of time.

Hon. Mr. Welch: —with a division tomorrow night some time around 10:20 p.m. The House will not sit in the assembly on Wednesday; and on Thursday afternoon we will carry on with the first order, at that time hearing from the leader of the New Democratic Party and, of course, rising at 6 o'clock as we have already provided for in an earlier motion.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Welch the House adjourned at 4:15 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, MARCH 13, 1979

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I know that a couple of my colleagues have statements. They have been detained, obviously.

Mr. McClellan: Better put on the whips over there.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Actually they just wanted to make sure everything was up to date; so they are waiting until the last moment.

Mr. Breagh: Is this an acknowledgement that you really are bankrupt over there?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, with the concurrence of the House, perhaps we could carry on with the question period and revert to statements when my colleagues with statements arrive.

Mr. S. Smith: No, we will wait. What do you have—26 cabinet ministers?

Mr. Hennessy: You tell him, Stuart.

Mr. S. Smith: Mickey's here, look at that; Jim Taylor is here.

Mr. Nixon: Jim never misses prayers.

Mr. Makarchuk: Did you tell him when the big hand is on 12 and the little hand is on two that's when the House starts?

An hon. member: It is about time, Larry.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It has been a very busy morning.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

WESTINGHOUSE CANADA

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry for the delay and I thank the members of the House for their forbearance. We were working until just a moment or two ago to finish our work on the Westinghouse Canada situation in Hamilton.

To that end, I might say that I would expect the members opposite are just now receiving copies of my statement, which they will know from dealing with me in the past is not a usual situation. Usually copies are there well in advance but, because of these circumstances, we have been delayed until now. Also, I am out of breath for those reasons.

Yesterday, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) raised the question concerning the possible closing of the Aberdeen Avenue plant of Westinghouse Canada in Hamilton. Yesterday, he referred to—and I quote from Hansard—"a study undertaken by Westinghouse Canada which may well result in putting 700 production employees out of work in Hamilton."

Yet I understand that by 11 o'clock last night, after doing some research, he discovered that the layoffs might not in fact occur. His original, unresearched statement raised, I think, unnecessary concerns for all employees in Westinghouse and elsewhere.

This House will therefore be interested in facts concerning Westinghouse instead of unresearched speculation.

Mr. Sargent: I'm sure glad you're around here.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You should try it more often yourself, Eddie.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Glad to see you here too, Eddie.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: My officials met with the Westinghouse Canada executive—the president, vice-president and their staff—last November 15. The meeting was indeed to have been held as early as October 13 but had to be postponed.

Westinghouse told us then of their long-range plans for their Canadian operations and how they were conducting an evaluation of all their manufacturing so they could build for a profitable future in Canada. They told us frankly that unprofitable lines, not surprisingly, would probably have to be discontinued, and that their policy was to convert from a branch plant to an organization set up to service local needs. They discussed the changing pattern in their industry and how they must respond.

I am, as I stated yesterday, frankly disappointed that they did not tell us earlier of the specific study which involves the Aberdeen Avenue plant, but I must remind the House that this is still at the study stage and the conclusions will not be made until the study is complete. My staff has discussed this matter with Westinghouse officials who anticipate that the first part of the study, the first part only, will be completed by June and the rest of the study finalized by October.

If any layoffs do result, and this will not be known until the study is complete, those layoffs will indeed be phased in over a period of three years. Even so, the company feels there is a good possibility that, with increased employment in other Hamilton operations and with normal attrition, the 700 employees who might otherwise be affected could be absorbed elsewhere.

Mr. S. Smith: That's still 700 jobs whether it's the same people or not.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I wish to stress that any decisions affecting Westinghouse Canada Limited will be made in Hamilton and nowhere else. In our discussions with Westinghouse it has become apparent that they feel the reaction through the press and their own elected representatives has been much greater than the situation warrants.

Westinghouse has been in Canada since 1903 and there have been tremendous changes in the entire electrical industry in Canada and in the rest of the world, quite obviously, in that time. The company at present employs more than 7,000 people in Canada, plus a further 2,300 people who were recently transferred to CAMCO at the time of that merger.

Westinghouse Canada has not been content to stay as just a branch plant. They have been successful in introducing the world product mandate concept by which the Canadian company is the exclusive manufacturing plant and conducts product research and development for certain products which are sold world-wide.

Mr. M. N. Davison: How many products?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: One of these products is gas turbines which have been sold successfully against aggressive foreign competition into many world markets. They are able to do this in part because they are a multinational, and because they can use the world-wide facilities of their company. This rationalization process is one that benefits Canada and one that we are encouraging in other companies.

Mr. M. N. Davison: How many other products?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The product mandating buffers them against foreign-made decisions.

Mr. McClellan: Give us another product.

Mr. M. N. Davison: How many more products?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That's what these studies are all about. That's precisely the process that's going on now.

On the whole question of multinationals, I think all persons, including the Leader of the Opposition, must take a mature and responsible attitude.

Mr. Cassidy: What does that mean?

Mr. Warner: For the minister that means bow and scrape.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There are many examples of successful multinational operations in Canada providing substantial employment to our citizens.

Mr. Warner: Where?

Mr. Cassidy: Like Inco?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I'm going to tell the members where. If I may quote a speech I delivered in the great city of Cambridge on March 1:

"A great deal of our economy is dominated by branch plants of multinational firms. There's a lot of nonsense talked about multinationals. On one side people say they are all bad; others talk as if they raise no problems at all. The truth is somewhere in the middle"—I would say to the Leader of the Opposition—"but I think it's high time we started to work in a deliberate way to maximize the benefits we can get from the activities of multinational firms in Canada." That was on March 1.

I suspect, I would note to the Leader of the Opposition, that notwithstanding yesterday's performance, many people in—just to name three communities—Sarnia, Kitchener and St. Catharines—are happy to have major multinationals creating very substantial employment in their communities.

I have stated over the past several weeks that we must do what we can to rationalize the branch plants that are operating in Canada. Product mandating is one way of encouraging efficiency of operations, and decision-making in Canada is part of that scheme. We must do what we can—I say to the Leader of the Opposition—to develop a mature and responsible attitude to the whole subject of multinationals in Ontario.

While we are on the subject of maturity and multinationals—

Interjection.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am going to quote from the Leader of the Opposition in a minute—I want to discuss the comments of the Leader of the Opposition this past week-end.

Mr. Kerrio: There has to be something sensible in there.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: My friend will find out.

On March 12 the Leader of the Opposition was quoted in the Toronto Star as saying—

Mr. S. Smith: That was an inaccurate quotation.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Another one? Are you on the conservative or liberal side of the party?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The Leader of the Opposition says it was inaccurate. We will find out whether he means this year's or last year's statement.

Mr. S. Smith: We will read the correct statement to you.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: "The Tories believe the way to do things is to provide giveaways to American companies while totally ignoring our own industrial potential. The Conservatives gave away"—

Mr. S. Smith: We said you had to do it that once but not to make a fetish of it. That's what we said. Do it once but don't go down the slippery slope.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If we are going to have orderly proceedings, only one person should be heard at a time. We are at the point in our routine proceedings where we are listening to a ministerial statement. There will be ample opportunity to respond to the statement during question period.

Mr. S. Smith: It's an inaccurate quotation.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I say to the Leader of the Opposition to wait until he hears all of his statements and then pick the ones he wants to disallow.

I continue to quote from the Leader of the Opposition: "The Conservatives gave away millions to the Ford Motor Company to build a plant in Ontario and the real reason was the vision of ribbon-cutting ceremonies in the minds of Tory cabinet ministers"

Mr. Speaker, I would now call the attention of the Leader of the Opposition to his comments in the Legislature—

Mr. S. Smith: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker: It happens to be that the minister is reading a statement from the Toronto Star which statement itself was not a correct quotation from my speech. I would like to set the record straight by reading the exact quotation, and a tape recording is available if the minister and other members of the press would like to hear it. I now quote from the speech:

"They sort of stumbled into the Ford deal in Windsor. They were dragged into it by the feds—most of the money was federal—and the provincial government stumbled into it"—

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. S. Smith:—"and got some good publicity. Suddenly they realized that here was an opportunity for them to look as though they were doing something. Visions of ribbon-cutting danced in the heads of Tory cabinet ministers as the notion struck them that all you have to do is give away the taxpayers' money and someone might open a plant. They will claim that the reason they are opening the plant is because you gave them the money; then you can stand back at the ribbon-cutting ceremony and talk about what a great economic strategy you have in Ontario."

[2:15]

An hon. member: What's the point of privilege?

Mr. Hennessy: What's the punch line?

Mr. S. Smith: You will recall that, at the time of the Ford deal, we recognized that this was—and I called it at the time—"a slippery slope." Those were the words that I used.

Mr. Nixon: Exactly right.

Mr. S. Smith: I am still quoting, Mr. Speaker, from my statement from the weekend. If the Premier would like to hear the actual statement, I said: "We were being blackmailed and had no choice but to give in, in that one particular instance."

Hon. Mr. Davis: That is incorrect.

Mr. S. Smith: "It was like applying a tourniquet when a haemorrhage is occurring. You don't normally use tourniquets as a regular way of maintaining people's health, but it was a necessary thing to do at the time. We made it plain at the time that it had to be regarded as an exception, as something that we were forced to do because we were desperate for the jobs, but that we had to use the intervening time after that to develop a genuine industrial strategy. What did the government do? It repeated the experience on a smaller scale with the Hayes Dana Corporation of New Jersey." And I went on to discuss the Hayes Dana matter.

Let's be very clear on this matter. The minister should get his facts straight in the future.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister will please continue his statement, uninterrupted.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition has risen on a point of order to explain what he said. He has asked for a retraction. May I say that I am sure he would have written a letter to the editor of the Star explaining what he did say. May I say, secondly, that he has indicated to me just now that he indicated in his speech—and I look forward to receiving a copy—that we were dragged into it by the federal government.

Mr. S. Smith: I said we were going to lose the deal.

Mr. Speaker: Order. As I drew to your attention before, we are in the process of listening to ministerial statements. Any editorializing, or anything in response to what is said over here is not permitted at this time. If the minister would just complete his statement, let's get on with the business of this House.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, to respond—

Mr. Speaker: No. Just continue with the statement.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: With respect, the Leader of the Opposition has asked that I withdraw a portion of my statement, and I ought to either withdraw a portion of that statement or respond to his point of order as to why I should not withdraw that portion of my statement.

Mr. S. Smith: I didn't ask the minister to withdraw a thing. Let him leave it on the record. Let him leave his distortions on the record.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Rather than taking up the time of the House, Mr. Speaker, I will distribute to any persons who are interested, including the Leader of the Opposition, a copy of the Leader of the Opposition's letter to the Right Honourable Pierre Elliott Trudeau, dated June 21, 1978, which will show that we were not dragged into it by the federal government.

Mr. S. Smith: The minister knows I favoured it at the time.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The Leader of the Opposition pleaded with the federal government to give us some money to go and get the deal. That's what he did. Here it is.

Interjections.

Mr. S. Smith: What is wrong with the minister? He was in the House. Everybody knows that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In his letter to the editor he can draw that to his attention too.

To continue with the statement, Mr. Speaker: I want to call the attention of the Leader of the Opposition to his comment in this assembly on June 23, 1978.

Mr. S. Smith: When you guys were about to lose the deal.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Oh, I see! "We need 2,600 jobs in the province." Here is what he said: "Why stop at $17.5 million when, for another $17.5 million or so, we can get the $500-million plant on Ontario soil and create the 2,600 jobs?"

Mr. S. Smith: Or you would lose the deal; that's right.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Is the member ready for what he said next? "I'm proud to say that is the policy of the Ontario Liberal Party."

Mr. Havrot: Talk about red faces now.

Mr. Mackenzie: Tweedledum and Tweedledee.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, to sum up: It is always easy to beat up on multi-nationals, but the plain fact is that this country, like many, has always needed a certain amount of foreign capital to be able to meet the aspirations and the job demands of its people.

A mature approach is needed when speaking of both domestic and international capital, and jurisdictions which operate on cheap politics or immature sabre-rattling have no credibility and will be left behind.

Although the Leader of the Opposition may have difficulty deciding on his party's industrial policy, we have no difficulty in developing and following our own. We intend to take every opportunity to develop Ontario industry, to work with the facts that exist and to be concerned for the potential for industrial growth and employment in this province.

PHYSICIANS OPTING OUT OF OHIP

Mr. Speaker: The honourable the Minister of Health.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I was asked to table the figures for physician options on a county-by-county basis; today I will read those figures into the record.

I may say, sir, that the statement will be distributed later in the day, inasmuch as I got the draft statement as I left the CBC after talking to my friend from Oshawa and certain changes have been made by myself. Before I give the figures, Mr. Speaker, I would like to put them into context.

Almost since the inception of the plan in its present form, the province's doctors have had the option of billing the plan directly or billing the patient directly; in the latter case the plan reimburses the patient. In fact for the first approximately seven years of the plan approximately one doctor in eight have billed patients directly.

As I have said, sir, on many occasions, we in the ministry expected an increase in physicians opting out of the plan as the Anti-Inflation Board regulations were lifted at the end of 1978; and that, Mr. Speaker, is precisely what has occurred.

Before reading the figures for the counties, regions and districts, I would like to apprise members of the following figures. First of all, the matter of the number of physicians opting out by effective date: On November 1, 1978, 36 physicians opted out; December 1, 1978, 31; January 1, 1979, 205; February 1, 1979, 116; March 1, 1979, 77; coming up on April 1, 1979, 71; and on May 1, 1979, two.

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I said I felt we had seen the peak of opting out and these figures confirm my view. These figures are firm and final and no more than two physicians can opt out in the month of May because of the three-month notification period.

Mr. Roy: Don't count on it.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: It is also noteworthy, sir, that since 1973 there has been a steady growth of the utilization of health services. In 1973-74 the average number of claims per insured resident of Ontario was 5.3, and by 1977-78 that had risen to 6.7.

What this indicates, Mr. Speaker, is that despite an increase in opting out by physicians there has been a steady growth in usage of the services; in other words, there would appear to be no threat to the acceptability of medical care.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, it should be of interest to members to see that the ratio of opted-in physicians in the province has improved significantly in the past six years. The figures, which are based on Statistics Canada population estimates, are for March of each year. I will start with 1973 when there was 907 population per opt-in physician in the province; 1974, 869; 1975, 838; 1976, 824; 1977, 803; 1978, 812, and once we have the March 1979 data I will release that as well, although I obviously expect a slight increase in that ratio but well below the figure at which we started in 1973 when the records started to be kept.

To reiterate, Mr. Speaker, I do not see any threat to the universality of the health plan in Ontario at this time. Universality is the cornerstone of the plan and we are constantly monitoring it.

Now as I promised, here are the figures for physicians billing the plan directly for the end of February, 1978. I might point out, Mr. Speaker, that these figures include the total number of physicians who have signified their intention of opting out, whether their effective date has arrived yet or not. They also represent physicians who are actually billing the plan, as opposed to the much larger number of physicians registered with the plan but who are not presently billing for one reason or another. These are by county, region, or district, and the percentage of doctors who are billing the plan directly, that is, who are opted in:

Brant county, 97.5 per cent; Bruce, 100 per cent; Dufferin, 94.7 per cent; Elgin, 96.8 per cent; Essex, 89.8 per cent; Frontenac, 94.2 per cent; Grey, 90.5 per cent; Haldimand-Norfolk, 93 per cent; Haliburton, 100 per cent; Halton, 71.1 per cent; Hastings, 99.2 per cent; Huron, 95.7 per cent; Kent, 98.9 per cent; Lambton, 78.1 per cent; Lanark, 100 per cent; Leeds and Grenville, 89.7 per cent; Lennox and Addington, 100 per cent; Metropolitan Toronto, 76.3 per cent;

Middlesex, 79.8 per cent; Muskoka, 100 per cent; Niagara, 80.3 per cent; Northumberland, 98.3 per cent; Durham, 100 per cent; Ottawa-Carleton, 82 per cent; Oxford, 89.4 per cent; Peel, 78.6 per cent; Perth, 70.7 per cent; Peterborough, 52.8 per cent; Prescott and Russell, 100 per cent; Prince Edward, 94.3 per cent; Renfrew, 97.8 per cent; Simcoe, 74.8 per cent; Stormont-Dundas-Glen-garry, 98 per cent; Victoria, 100 per cent; Waterloo, 74.5 per cent; Wellington, 71.4 per cent; Hamilton-Wentworth, 88.1 per cent; York, 59.3 per cent;

Algoma, 99.2 per cent; Cochrane, 97.4 per cent; Kenora, 100 per cent; Manitoulin, 100 per cent; Nipissing, 82.9 per cent; Parry Sound, 100 per cent; Rainy River, 100 per cent; Sudbury, 91.8 per cent; Thunder Bay, 97.1 per cent; Timiskaming, 100 per cent; and out of the province—there is a group of physicians who bill from out of the province—95.4 per cent.

In brief, Mr. Speaker, I see no threat to the principle of universality in this province.

Mr. Warner: You wouldn't.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Listen, if you got grades like this you would have passed.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: What is of great importance is the fact that we in the ministry are constantly seeking ways to improve our dealings with physicians.

Mr. Warner: You sit idly by and watch the thing being destroyed.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: We have a lot more to discuss with the OMA and we have been setting up mechanisms to discover and to dispatch minor irritations with bureaucratic procedures, and to review the means whereby the schedule of benefits is arrived at so that the results of such negotiations not only are fair to the public and to the profession but are seen to be fair.

ORAL QUESTIONS

WESTINGHOUSE CANADA

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question for the Minister of Industry and Tourism. Given that his own officials have now spoken with Westinghouse and seem to confirm that, as said in today's Spectator, there is little hope that the 700 jobs will stay—even although some of the jobs lost will be lost by the process of attrition and therefore actual employee layoffs in some instances may not happen, the city will lose the 700 jobs very likely—what is the explanation that the minister is able to accept for this?

Is he aware that the reasoning being offered by the company, which accepts that the switch gear and control plant on Aberdeen Avenue is profitable, is that they wish to replace this older plant with a number of smaller, decentralized plants all around the country? Does this make much sense to the minister, does he accept that particular reasoning; and is he not concerned with a statement made by the president of Westinghouse some time ago in which he spoke of the benefits of these small, more-automated, decentralized plants which are non-union? Does the minister feel that the reasoning may be an effort on the part of the company to avoid the union?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I have to say to the Leader of the Opposition that I suspect the company wouldn't have to conduct a study which it has well publicized, let its employees know about, and indeed let the public know about, if all it was trying to do was to get away from a union.

That study will be available to our ministry, I am sure; and with the consent of the persons doing the study and that of Westinghouse, we would be happy to make it available to the Leader of the Opposition and to the third party, and to anyone else who wishes it. Therefore, I would tend to discount at this time, on the evidence we have at hand, an attempt to avoid the union.

Secondly, the Leader of the Opposition refers once again to the Hamilton Spectator, from which apparently he concludes there is little hope of the jobs being saved. I should say that as a result of our discussions with them they have indicated to very senior officials in my ministry there is some hope for a lot of those jobs.

I would remind the Leader of the Opposition that, as he should know, there are currently some 4,300 persons employed by Westinghouse in the Hamilton area, and that many of those 700 or so workers might well be absorbed into some of the other activities of Westinghouse in Hamilton. I would reflect that Westinghouse has made a substantial contribution to the Hamilton area and is not about to take what I suspect would be an unusual step; that is to walk away from its labour force there and those parts of its operation there which seem to work well.

I would also remind the Leader of the Opposition that when Westinghouse talks of getting into diversified plants and smaller operations they are not only talking about other parts of Canada. Indeed in our conversations they have indicated—the member for Quinte (Mr. O'Neil) will be interested—some talk about moving some parts of their operation to eastern Ontario.

These are alternatives which Westinghouse and Canadian-owned plants, plants all over Ontario and everywhere else, do look at from time to time. I am happy to say that Westinghouse is not following a high-handed approach of simply closing the plant, giving layoff notices and moving its operation to another country or even another part of this country. Rather they are conducting a study, and the bottom line of it is as I believe the Leader of the Opposition indicated to some persons either out there or on the media last night, I think he reflected that this was free enterprise, and one of the things that is going to happen is that free enterprise operations are going to assess their operations from time to time to see if they can develop more profitable ways of carrying on business than those currently in use.

My concern is that they do not abandon a community for reasons other than good, businesslike reasons, and that they have given every opportunity to this government to assist them in relocating the work force, and given the workers and community involved every chance to adjust to that change.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary: Given the fact that the Aberdeen plant has been quite profitable, that they intend to continue making their switch gear and control products in Canada—it's not something they are willing to admit they are going to take back to the United States when the tariffs go—is the minister convinced that it makes sense to have a bunch of small plants all around the place when he is always speaking of the economies of scale and so on? Is the minister convinced that it makes more sense to do that? Isn't he the least bit suspicious as to the reasons for that, given Mr. Tyaack's address to the Conference Board of Canada in which he praised the small, decentralized non-union plants as the way of the future?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Again, I think it would not be helpful to the long-range prospects for Westinghouse, which does employ 4,300 persons in the fine city of Hamilton, to invite speculation, based upon a speech made earlier and upon a study it is conducting, that Westinghouse is acting in a high-handed, unreasonable fashion. As I have indicated earlier, I just don't think that premature speculation is a type of attitude which is conducive to attracting the type of confident investment decisions made by Westinghouse and other people.

I do acknowledge, I would say to the Leader of the Opposition, that it is politically attractive to jump on Westinghouse and accuse them of having plans and motives.

Mr. S. Smith: Do small plants make sense to you?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I must say to the Leader of the Opposition, whether a diversification into those operations makes sense or not I would prefer to wait until I have had the opportunity of seeing the results of the study which they are carrying on. Obviously, Westinghouse feels that it hasn't got enough information to make a decision on the Aberdeen plant without a study.

If Westinghouse feels that way, I must humbly say to the Leader of the Opposition that I obviously do not have the information either to make that assessment without at least having the opportunity of looking at that study. Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition feels he does not need the advantages of that study to make that business decision. I myself do not have that capability, nor apparently does Westinghouse.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I have had the opportunity to talk both to the company and to the union in the last 24 hours. Can the minister explain his confidence that he will have access to the study and that he will be able to share it with members of the opposition when the company specifically informed me at 9:45 this morning that they were not prepared to open their books either to me or to the workers who are concerned about the future of their jobs? Is the government prepared to insist that Westinghouse Canada open the books on its switch gear operations so that the workers, the community and this Legislature can judge whether this is a sound, business-like decision or whether this is yet another example of a multinational corporation pushing Canadians around?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I must say I wonder whether the leader of the third party would be taking the same attitude if it were a Canadian-owned company making the same assessment of its business as the American multinational is. I suspect he would find it a little harder to beat up on them than he does on the multinational.

Mr. McClellan: Inco perhaps.

Mr. Makarchuk: We just want to make them responsible, that's all.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Secondly, may I say I don't apologize for the fact that in this country we do believe that businesses have the right to keep their records confidential and to make their own decisions as to which portions of their records—

Mr. Cassidy: So we won't get the study, or it will be meaningless.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —are going to be open to the public and which are not, the same as the members opposite have that opportunity, the same as the unions have that opportunity to make that decision, the same as any ordinary worker or any union member has the opportunity to decide whether—

Mr. Cassidy: No, they don't.

Mr. McClellan: You are not answering the question.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —his or her own personal affairs are matters which are going to be open to the public.

Mr. S. Smith: Not when you're shutting a plant down.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I think it is a very crucial thing to decide on the floor of this House as to whether this government believes that a firm, deciding it is going to close its plant, is required to open all of its records and all of its books to government with the logical conclusion that government can or should force it to maintain an unprofitable operation.

Mr. S. Smith: How do you know it's unprofitable if you can't look at the books?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: May I say that the record of my ministry in dealing with very many firms throughout the length and breadth of this province is that the good and responsible firms co-operate on a confidential basis with my very excellent staff to do everything they can to protect the work force that suffers from a layoff or a plant closure. I would expect, though I can't be sure and one can never be, that Westinghouse would follow the now-established procedure of working with my staff and myself, showing us the details of their operation and permitting us to comment with them on a confidential basis with regard to the long-term prospects for that particular operation.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, does not the minister feel, given the infrastructure which the people of an area have to put in when an industry locates there—the houses that are built, the schools as a consequence, the streets, the water, the sewage—that an industry has a responsibility to a community, and that before it can just walk away from a plant it at least ought to be able to show that no viable alternatives exist? Doesn't the minister think the day of treating industries as though they were kings and could walk away or come in at will without any responsibility to the community is over in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I must say that I wonder whether that was part of the Leader of the Opposition's feelings when in the Prescott Journal he was quoted as saying he would encourage industry to leave the golden horseshoe by lowering energy rates and upgrading transportation services in other places. Is that what he was thinking about when he said he would encourage industry to move out of the golden horseshoe?

Mr. Riddell: Don't be so political, get on with the answer; it is getting a little tiresome.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That's precisely what it said: Prescott Journal, August 23, 1978.

Mr. S. Smith: You want to keep it all out of northern and eastern Ontario; you want it all in St. Andrew-St. Patrick, I suppose.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: But of course the member was in Prescott that day, he wasn't in Hamilton. If he wants to encourage industries to move out of Hamilton, as he told them in Prescott, then let him stand up and say that in Hamilton, not just in Prescott.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I would like the minister to inform the House as to when his officials last met with representatives of Local 504, United Electrical Workers, in Hamilton to discuss this matter; and furthermore, I would like to know why he and the officials in his ministry are sitting so quietly on the sidelines while Westinghouse continues to try to get rid of and bust up Local 504 UEW in Hamilton?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the member has any evidence that that is occurring then perhaps he will send it across to us and I will work on that with my colleague the Minister of Labour and Manpower (Mr. Elgie). I am sure if the member has any evidence that that has occurred he has already referred it to the Minister of Labour and Manpower. Has he?

Mr. M. N. Davison: Open your eyes. Look at the record.

ILLEGAL DUMPING OF LIQUID WASTE

Mr. S. Smith: A question for the Minister of the Environment: Has the minister now spoken with the three staff of his ministry who were originally involved in denying that a meeting took place in December of 1976 in which his regional staff was made aware of certain illegal dumping going on at the Upper Ottawa Street site in Hamilton? Has he spoken with his staff now that a member of his Stoney Creek regional office has admitted that he and two other ministry staff met with certain haulers and were told at that time that liquid wastes were being dumped illegally?

What kind of disciplinary action is the minister going to take with his staff? Does he have results from the samples that were presented to his staff in December of 1976 when they were told of illegalities, and what exact action has he taken since the matter has finally been revealed in the newspapers, even though he himself never was able to find out about it?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, obviously I expected this question, or one of related concern, and it would be easy for me, sir, to stand and say that since there are 139 charges laid on this particular instance, it is sub judice and I should refrain from comment. However, I think that that would not be fair to this House and I won't do so. On the other hand—

Mr. S. Smith: That is rubbish and you know it. Just be honest.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Let him speak.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Are you ready to listen to the answer or have you continually got your mouth in motion before you're ready to listen?

Mr. S. Smith: Just stop congratulating yourself for something you should know anyway.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Yakabuski: Slippery Stuart's had a bad day. Go easy on him.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: What I was going to suggest to the leader of the Liberal Party was that we have heard a great deal on this subject, and indeed a great deal from the member himself. I think it's time that two things happened. One, in the next day or two, perhaps Thursday or Friday morning, I will give a carefully considered response to his question, a response that will reflect not only our concern but a statement of the facts, and make sure that I do not make any utterances that would prejudice the fair trial of this case.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, we have heard so much from the leader of the Liberal Party on this particular item of a hearsay type of evidence—like for instance, if I might make the case, material in a Coca-Cola bottle presented to our regional office—which really, as he well knows, would not stand one second in a court of law. It is one thing to be suspicious, it's another thing to have the kind of evidence that will stand up in a court of law.

As the leader knows, I have asked him in the name of the public interest on this significant issue to come forward with factual information; and I would say, since there are 139 charges pending, it would be a darn good idea for him to come forward now, not with hearsay evidence but with factual information that we could take to the courts. On Thursday or Friday I will make a much more detailed statement on the question.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: Is the minister not aware that a member of his own office in Stoney Creek has now publicly admitted that such a meeting took place; the meeting at which the sample in the Coke bottle, whatever he wants to call it, was in fact handed over? He has admitted this publicly in the newspapers. Has he not found out about that? And will he check and find out just who was at the meeting; what the sample, if any, contained; what report was made following that meeting; and can he explain to me why it is he's still talking of hearsay when the matter has been confirmed from within his own ministry?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: The Leader of the Opposition does us all a great disservice by confusing it so much. Is he prepared, on a matter of principle—

Mr. Roy: Try to answer the question. If you want to ask them, get out of there.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: —that someone should be able to bring in an unidentified, unmarked, unsworn piece of evidence and say that's enough to take a court action on any particular company?

Mr. S. Smith: Court action? What court action?

Mrs. Campbell: What court action?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Is that his concept of justice? That's precisely what happened, precisely what happened.

Of course I know of that meeting, and of course I followed in great detail—

Mr. S. Smith: Why did they deny it happened at first?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: —those accusations the member has made. But he's talking about something that concerns all of us, concerns us a great deal. I don't think it's very wise of the Leader of the Opposition—

Mr. S. Smith: Why didn't they follow up?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: —to threaten the things he has threatened in this province in the name of gaining something politically.

Mr. S. Smith: Why didn't they follow up on it? Two years—

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. S. Smith: You've turned a blind eye on it.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I rise on a point of privilege. I ask—

Mrs. Campbell: No, it isn't.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: No, I won't ask. I guess that's not my privilege. Surely, when we have 139 charges—

Mr. S. Smith: Those are minor waybill matters that came out of your report, for heaven's sake.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: —on this issue, no one can say we have turned a blind eye.

Ms. Bryden: I have a supplementary question of the Minister of the Environment.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Ms. Bryden: I would like to ask the Minister of the Environment, since he is taking court action, when is he going to bring in legislation to increase the fines for illegal dumping and such practices as are being alleged in connection with this affair?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I answered that question some time ago in committee, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure we're going to do it this session of the Legislature. I did tell committee that we're seriously considering that possibility. We'll be bringing in spill legislation—not related, I know, but it's perhaps a time when we can consider the type of penalties that should be imposed for those who pollute and are found in violation of our acts.

PHYSICIANS OPTING OUT OF OHIP

Mr. Cassidy: A question of the Minister of Health, arising out of his statement today about the opting out of physicians from OHIP. Now that the minister has tabled figures that indicate that 29 per cent of the doctors in Halton county, 30 per cent of the doctors in Perth, 29 per cent of the doctors in Wellington county, 41 per cent of the doctors in the county of York, and 47 per cent of the doctors in the county of Peterborough have opted out of the OHIP plan; now that we have had information from the OHIP administrators themselves that 70 per cent of the doctors in the city of Peterborough itself, as well as in Orillia, have opted out of the plan; does the minister not believe that there are real obstacles to universal accessibility to insured medical services in many regions and cities of the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: First of all, Mr. Speaker, let me say on this question of the calculation by individual city I had a chat with the member's friend from Oshawa at noon hour, over radio, and I will check with my staff on those figures, inasmuch as to my knowledge we have not been keeping them by city. We have been keeping them by county, region and district, inasmuch as all our planning is by county, region or district, or by hospital centre. But I'll check that.

As I said in my statement, we have been monitoring the situation very closely and there is no indication that the universality or accessibility of the system is in fact threatened at this point. It is something we are watching very closely. The member will see from the figures I read out today that the situation varies from community to community. It seems to me that the most effective way to deal with this situation is to deal with the major problems that are of concern to the medical profession and deal with them head on.

Based on my discussions with a great many physicians around the province over the last year or so, I would have to say that they are concerned about whether or not the administrative procedures of the health insurance plan are unduly bureaucratic—

Mr. McClellan: And they are.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell:—the expression that is used from time to time is "bureaucratic harassment"—and there is a perception on the part of some of the profession that the schedule of benefits is not fair.

Mr. Nixon: Does the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson) remember when she was president of the OMA? Those were the good old days. The government knew what to do then.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Let me deal with the latter first. There have been all kinds of studies written from various points of view on the question of physician compensation, and you can find a study to support just about any point of view you want to expound. It is pointless to try to settle that today. What I have asked the medical association to do, and it has agreed on this, is to work with us to see if we can find a way to improve the existing structure for the negotiation of the OHIP schedule of benefits—

Mr. Nixon: Where is Richard Potter now that we need him?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell:—so that it not only is fair, both to the taxpayers who through their premiums and taxes are footing the bills and to the profession in compensation for its training and its skills, but also so that it is seen to be fair.

(To deal with the second issue, the question of what is from time to time referred to as bureaucratic harassment, we have for the last six or eight months been working with the medical association reviewing all of the administrative procedures, because I put the challenge to them that I would like them to identify where they feel we are being unduly or unnecessarily bureaucratic. If in fact we can satisfy our mandate as described by the legislation and as overseen by the Legislature, we're prepared to change our administrative procedures if we can make the day-to-day practice of medicine less bound by tape, forms and bureaucracy.)

I think it's better, looking at the whole province, to tackle those problems head on. I say to the member again that I feel the question of opting out has peaked inasmuch as we know that with the expiration of the Anti-Inflation Board controls there would be an increase. That has been borne out by the figures I gave members today.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Since a review of the structure of the OHIP fees was a recommendation of the select committee that met a year ago but was rejected by the Minister of Health, is the Minister of Health now prepared to stop any further opting out from OHIP until those discussions with the medical association have taken place? If not, can the minister explain what specific individuals and specific communities should do when they are faced with almost a solid wall of opted-out doctors?

Specifically, for example, what should people do in the southeastern end of Essex county where all six doctors in Amherstburg have opted out and where three of the four doctors in La Salle have also opted out, leaving only one out of 10 doctors in the region in OHIP? What should people in the Hamilton area do where 100 doctors opted out of OHIP on January 1, and where doctors in the Stoney Creek area are apparently not accepting patients who want to transfer from opted-out doctors? What should those specific individuals do in those specific situations when they find that the ministry's averages don't apply to them and they have not got universal access to insured medical services?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: First of all, both Hamilton-Wentworth and Essex are well below the provincial average of opting out or well above the provincial average of opting in, depending on your point of view.

Mr. McClellan: Let them eat averages.

Mr. Cassidy: Let them eat averages. Tell them that in Amherstburg. Where are their transit services to Windsor?

Mr. Bounsall: Answer the question. What about Amherstburg?

Mr. Warner: You're distorting again.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The provincial average is 82.1 per cent of doctors billing the plan directly—

Mr. Cooke: Answer the question.

Mr. Warner: Try answering the question.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell:—and in Hamilton-Wentworth it's 88.1 per cent, and in Essex it's 89.8 per cent.

Mr. Cooke: What about Amherstburg?

Mr. Cassidy: What about Amherstburg? What about those people?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: In those particular cases, and in any situation initially of course, we expect that the doctors and the patients will discuss the fees.

Mr. Warner: You don't intend to do anything.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The member knows, of course, that not every opted-out doctor charges above the OHIP schedule. In fact, in many cases, they charge only what OHIP would reimburse, depending on the individual circumstances.

If the member knows—well, obviously, the member has come across these particular cases. We will take them up with the medical association to see if something can be done.

Mr. Swart: Half a man. Cap in hand.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I would have to say though that inasmuch as I have not heard—and I will check my files to verify this—complaints from that area, people are apparently finding that it is not depriving them of medical care. They are able to work this out with the physicians in the community or they are travelling to other centres.

Mr. McClellan: Why would they write to you? You won't do anything anyway.

Ms. Gigantes: You have told them it is no use complaining.

Mr. McClellan: So much for the principle of access.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker: Accepting the minister's premise that on a province-wide basis the universality of a plan is not threatened; and accepting the premise that in many situations in most areas of the province, if a patient is faced with a doctor who has opted out he can go elsewhere: can the minister explain the basis for saying universality is not threatened, in the case of a particular city and a particular county—how far does universality go?

Is the minister suggesting, for instance, that if one can't get the services of a specialist in Peterborough, the choice is to come to Toronto or Ottawa or elsewhere? Where does the minister draw the line on this famous principle of universality?

Secondly, would the minister tell us—he has been Minister of Health for a while—why he has not resolved the problem with the doctors on the question of bureaucratic weight, red tape and so on?

Why has the minister not resolved the problem of certain specialties within the profession? They apparently are getting more than their fair share of the fees, whereas the general practitioner is the one who is not being treated fairly.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: If I may deal with that last point first, in fact in the last two rounds of negotiations with the medical association—first the negotiations which resulted in the average 6.25 per cent increase last May 1, and then the negotiations which resulted in the average 6.6 per cent increase on January 1 of this year—

Mr. Cassidy: That is more than you gave the hospital workers, too.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell:—the general practitioner was, in fact, given more than the average. In 1978 that was done by introducing what is known as the intermediate assessment and in 1979 by a further weighting of the increase.

The average increase for the GP will thus be somewhere around eight per cent plus increasing utilization, plus the increase in population; it will be well beyond the eight per cent.

In the last couple of years, in fact, that direction has been very clear. We want to see more directed towards the general practitioner. This was a point, I think, raised by the member for Ottawa Centre. That was a point made by the select committee when they reported in October and a point with which we agreed.

Regarding the question of bureaucratic harassment: that committee first got going last June or July. They met on a number of occasions. They met as recently as this morning. I would anticipate resolving, in the not-too-distant future, some of the issues they have currently reviewed before they go on to some others. So we are making good progress there.

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Health how he can say in the case of a single-parent mother in Amherstburg or a senior citizen living in Amherstburg who doesn't have transportation to Windsor, that their access to the health care system in this province is not threatened. The fact is that no doctor in Amherstburg, and only one doctor in Lasalle, is in the OHIP system in this province. How can the minister possibly say that in specific pockets of this province, like Amherstburg, accessibility is not threatened?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: On two grounds, I guess: first, on looking at the larger picture and the growth and the use of the health care system it certainly does not indicate that people are being deterred from using it; and, secondly, on the basis of what people tell us.

Interjections.

Mr. Cassidy: How do you know we have had a 70 per cent increase in opting out?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: We have not been hearing from many people about problems of access; in fact, very few.

WESTINGHOUSE CANADA

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question for the Minister of Industry and Tourism.

Given the fact that all evidence indicates that the Westinghouse switchgear operation in Hamilton is profitable; that the company was investing substantially in new facilities in that operation on Aberdeen Avenue up until three or four weeks ago; and that productivity is as high in Hamilton as in the counterpart United States plants: Will the minister at least undertake to ensure that the 700 Hamilton workers in that plant who are affected by the threat of layoff will be able to participate fully in the studies that the company is now undertaking; that they will have access, not just to public relations figures but to all the books on that operation so as to be able to determine how it can be kept going as a viable operation?

[3:00]

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Now, obviously, as the leader of the third party knows, I can't ensure that any company, any union, any private individual in this country, must turn over bank accounts, private books and records to anyone else in this free democratic society. I'm not about to stand up—and, for good political reasons, that happens to strike the fancy of the leader of the third party—offer to change that fundamental principle, as we see it in this party, for this particular situation.

Mr. McClellan: Ask Norton about it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I'm not sure where the Leader of the Opposition is on this issue. I read him as saying both things during question period today. But I want to make my position perfectly clear. There's no legislation which would require them to do that at this time, nor am I contemplating any legislation that would force them to do that.

Now, a study is going on. I think it's only fair to point out that Westinghouse might have done what other firms, both multinational and Canadian, have done on other occasions: that is, begin by announcing a layoff rather than begin by announcing that a study is going on; announcing a layoff rather than begin by pointing out the good and bad parts of the current situation; and then pointing to the future in effect, saying, "Listen, there are some difficult times coming. We would like some co-operation from all those involved in this plant in this study and the study will be completed later this year."

I can also add that if Westinghouse acts the way other companies have, most of that information ultimately is made available to us on a confidential basis. I might add that I'm quite proud of the record and the member's seat mate, the member for—where is he from?—Sudbury, whatever, will be aware—

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is becoming a speech rather than a direct answer to a specific question. Do you have a supplementary?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister is not prepared to confront the multinational corporation which is threatening to take a major part of Hamilton's economy away; and given the fact that Ontario Hydro and many Ontario firms are major customers of the Westinghouse operation, is the minister prepared to bring in legislation to this House in order to prevent the switchgear operation being closed, and to compel Westinghouse Canada to make it available as an ongoing operation to some other company, if Westinghouse is not prepared to keep in the business themselves?

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Really, I'll presume that was a serious question and answer no. We're not prepared to bring in legislation to stop Westinghouse from closing any particular operation. Nor am I prepared to recommend legislation which would stop any company or, indeed, any citizen of this country from changing its, his or her place of operations.

I might suggest to the leader of the third party that to be consistent he should suggest that we ought to bring in legislation prohibiting certain parts of the labour force from uprooting and moving to different communities, simply because that would cause a disruption to the labour force and the industry in that particular community. We're not going to dictate to firms and we're not going to indicate to labour people where they should work, either.

PROPERTY TAXATION

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Premier in the absence of the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Maeck).

Given that the Minister of Revenue invoked section 86 of the Assessment Act which equalizes assessments within classes, and which is his prerogative; given that 13 municipalities in Ontario have implemented section 86; and given that there are a great number of increases in property taxes and assessments within these municipalities—in fact, in two cases, the increases have been over 1,000 per cent—is the government giving consideration to developing a formula whereby these people, these various property owners, are going to have to increase their taxes by only a certain amount per year?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, there was a supplementary from the member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. McEwen) which is the first supplementary I have heard from him in my whole career here.

Mr. Riddell: Just answer the question.

Mr. Wildman: Tell us about the Argonauts, Bill.

Mr. Makarchuk: You mean there is a member there?

Mr. McEwen: Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: There isn't a point of order. There is nothing out of order.

Mr. McEwen: I was only interjecting that the procedure of the government side of the House is to increase each one by 1,000 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I will spend the rest of the afternoon trying to sort out what the honourable member really meant by that observation.

Mr. Martel: That was a former Tory. Did he belong to you fellows at one time?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am very careful, I would say to the honourable member—

Mr. Speaker: Please don't say it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, you do a terrific job here. You are quite right. I will try to direct my attention to the question.

As I recall the question, there is some suggestion that the minister invoke section whatever on the Assessment Act. I think if memory serves me correctly, the minister was requested to give the municipalities permissive opportunities to introduce this approach to market value assessment. I think the honourable member himself has, in terms of principle and philosophy, supported this. His party has been ambivalent in that maybe they want it and maybe they don't, depending on where the by-election is, et cetera, et cetera.

Interjection.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am being interrupted by the member for Niagara Falls.

Mr. Speaker: Just ignore the interjections, please.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I can't ignore him. I mean he's such a delightful fellow. He's probably in the conservative element of the Liberal Party. In fact that probably applies to about 80 per cent.

Mr. Martel: I was going to ask which ones weren't.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I don't know that you have any cause to suggest anything today.

Mr. Martel: Well, I don't belong to that motley group.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am not familiar with the exact provisions of the act but the honourable member has pointed out one of the complexities in the introduction of market value assessment. I have been in a community where we had market value assessment introduced some 10 years ago and there is the difficulty in the first six months or a year of sorting out some of the changes that take place.

I am not sure of this but I will check with the Minister of Revenue whether the municipality has the right to phase in some of these new tax situations. I think maybe they do. But I will certainly ascertain that from the minister and have him communicate directly to the member. I have read about some of the concerns in his particular community. The only encouraging thing for me is that he supports what is being done so enthusiastically. When we go to that great part of the province we say the local member is in favour of market value assessment and the municipality had followed his direction in seeing that it was introduced.

Mr. Roy: You might as well say that. You'll never win—

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, given that the municipality of which I speak is not one that I represent but is in the same general area, in order to correct the record, and given that the Premier on many many occasions in his speeches across the province makes the contention that his government is such a great—

Mr. Speaker: "Given" is not a question. Where, when, why, how.

Mr. Epp: In view of the fact that he contends that his government is doing such a great job in administering the affairs of this province, how does he reconcile these preposterous, these tremendous increases in these various municipalities with that kind of contention that he's a good manager of the affairs of the province?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I will take the first "given" as the part of the question that is most relevant—where the honourable member does endorse the fact that we do a tremendous job in the governing of the affairs of the people of this province. I accept his congratulations and best wishes.

As it relates to the other part of his question, this is one of the problems that we raised in this Legislature. It's one of these matters that was discussed. It's interesting to see the leader of his own party wandering in to Scarborough West where his candidate can't be elected, according to him, as a Liberal candidate; he has to run as an independant.

He is talking about the province imposing real property assessment when some of these members were in support of moving it ahead. Some of them were not, but I think it's really a little bit strange to hear him come into this House now and tell us of the difficulties. We know of them and it's up to the municipalities and ourselves to work together to see how we can assist in this rather complex issue. We have never minimized them. That's why we didn't move ahead on a province-wide basis, in spite of the fact that some people opposite have suggested we should in some areas of the province.

Mr. M. Davidson: Supplementary: Is the Premier aware that in the city of Kitchener alone taxes on some small businesses have increased by as much as 1,200 per cent, and municipal land held by the city of Cambridge in one instance rose by some 11,000 per cent? All of this in itself is imposing a great deal of hardship, not only on the community which must set its own tax base, but within the residential community on senior citizens who have been hit by maybe not quite as large an impact as that, but by a great percentage increase in many cases.

Rather than ask the minister as to whether or not there is a means whereby municipalities can implement the increase over a period of time, would the Premier suggest to the minister perhaps that where the situations are so serious he should be informing the municipalities that they should bring those increases in over a period of time rather than through a sudden increase?

Mr. Worton: Tell him how high is high.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I just want to make one thing very clear so that there is no misunderstanding. I'm sure the member didn't mean to imply this in his initial question, but it wasn't a case of the minister invoking or insisting. We were requested by the municipalities, which are presently faced with these difficulties to move into this at their initiative. It was their initiative.

I think the very distinguished member who asked me the question in the first place was perhaps part of a delegation that came to see us about it. I think I'm correct in that. Certainly he gave it his support; I can recall that.

Mr. Epp: That's because the government froze assessments for eight years.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No one ever suggested there wouldn't be some of these very obvious difficulties that have been related both in the press and here.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'm sure the minister and his officials will be delighted to sit down with the municipalities to see what means can be developed to mitigate some of the major increases or escalations that take place. But the members opposite should understand that it's great to talk in terms of principle and it's great to be critical of us with respect to real property assessment or market value assessment, but it is incorrect, when the crunch comes, when we have done it on a voluntary basis, to come in here and try to tell us that we should have done it on a universal basis, or that we didn't warn people as to the difficulties that are inherent in this.

Everybody talks about real property tax reform. A lot of people are in support of it, but it's a very complex issue and one where I think we are wise in having certain municipalities move ahead to see what the problems are and see how we can assist them in straightening them out. I can assure the members the minister will be more than pleased to sit down with the heads of the municipalities and some of their officials to see in what ways we can be helpful. I lived through this for two years in my own area. I know some of the problems and they are not easy, although ultimately we were able, at least in that great region, to sort the vast majority of them out.

CO-PAYMENT FEES

Mr. Warner: I have a question of the Minister of Health. Since the decision regarding the placement of a patient should be based on a medical judgement, and for a chronically ill person that judgement should involve consideration of a chronic-care wing of a hospital, nursing home or a home-care program, and since this government has not provided these three basic types of care throughout the province, will the minister now withdraw his punitive $9.80 daily charge on those who are chronically ill?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I never cease to be amazed—

An hon. member: By trash.

Mr. Cassidy: We get amazed at the minister.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —at the antics of that party opposite, a party which in October—

Mr. Pope: Page 46.

Mr. Cooke: Read the whole thing.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —page 46, thank you very much—caucused over the then draft select committee report. Finally, the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere and the member for Hamilton East on behalf of their caucus signed the report, which recommended that there be a per diem charge in chronic facilities to equalize the burdens of nursing homes.

In fact, we didn't take their recommendation, inasmuch as it would have had the effect of charging from day one regardless of ability to pay, as in the case in some other provinces where, if one can't pay, one goes on welfare.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That was the NDP Magna Carta.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Instead, we've come up with a system for chronic units or a chronic hospital which provides for a number of exemptions, particularly for those who are going to be rehabilitated back to the community, and is equitable and fair in comparison to a nursing home.

[3:15]

Mr. Riddell: That recommendation was made on the basis that there were other facilities.

Mr. Cooke: Or that there would be.

Mr. Warner: Continue with your distortion. Go ahead.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: In those cases, as we have said repeatedly, we are prepared to approve additional chronic or extended care beds where the need is identified through the local planning process. That has come to being in Ottawa where recently we announced the approval for the conversion of the Ottawa General Hospital for 200 chronic beds; it has come about in Windsor where, through the agreement of the hospitals with the health council, additional chronic care facilities are being provided; and it will come about in a great many more areas as soon as the need is identified.

We are prepared, Mr. Speaker, as well, as was indicated in the speech from the throne, to expand the chronic home care programs this year in a number of areas. I will have more to say on that later in this session.

Mr. Warner: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: To the minister who refused to debate the report on the select committee on health care costs, does the minister realize that the committee agreed unanimously on page 37, and I quote, "that user fees by definition shift costs to those who are sick and therefore undermine one of the basic foundations of the scheme, but the committee contends to further penalize those who are sick, usually a condition beyond the control of the patient, would have a very adverse compounding effect upon what are already unfortunate circumstances"? And, further, the committee realized and agreed that there is no need for this callous penny pinching binge that the minister is on, since the committee agreed unanimously that our health costs in Ontario are not out of line, in particular when compared with the United States—

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Mr. Warner: —they are considerably less, because we have a public health care system and they have a private one—

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Mr. Warner: —but the minister is out to try to destroy it.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, this grand con job on the member's part isn't going to work. He knows as well as I do—

Mr. Cassidy: Don't you speak of a con job.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: He knows as well as I do that that section of the report was referring to the various submissions the committee had had, that it recommended a dollar per service—a couple of dollars per service and real user fees.

Mr. Cooke: Read the whole report.

Mr. Warner: You never even read the report.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The member cannot escape the fact that the committee, after due consideration, and the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere in particular and his colleague, after caucusing the report, recommended that there be a per diem charge in chronic facilities.

Mr. Riddell: If other facilities were made available.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Warner: The minister continues to twist and distort. Twisting and distorting isn't going to win you anything.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Read the report.

Mr. Mackenzie: On a point of personal privilege.

Mr. Warner: You know it was done in the context—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere sit down?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: And resign.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Does the honourable member for Hamilton East have a point of privilege?

Mr. Mackenzie: I think so, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Eaton: Trying to get out of what he signed now.

Mr. Mackenzie: Well, we will find out. I think it is a point of privilege, because I consider a slur on my position on that committee the comments just made by the Minister of Health.

Mr. Eaton: You signed something you didn't really mean to sign.

Mr. Mackenzie: If the Minister of Health has discussed with his colleagues on that committee he will understand that the discussion on that $9.80—and there was never a figure on it—that went on in that committee dealt very specifically with what was a loophole in the legislation that allows a family to put into an active treatment bed a person who should be in a nursing care bed when there are not enough facilities for those beds and get away with pocketing the money. That was the context of the argument and he should understand it.

Interjections.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: That's not true.

Mr. Speaker. Order. Order.

I am sure that the honourable member and all honourable members realize that when a member rises on a point of privilege he has a responsibility to indicate which of his privileges have been abrogated. I fail to see that you have.

FARM TARIFF CUTS

Mr. Rollins: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food. In view of the announcement of the federal government on reducing tariffs on farm commodities, what consideration will be given to the producers in the province of Ontario?

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Honourable Jean Chretien released the tariff report in Ottawa. There were some reductions. It is quite interesting to note that, not because of any particular time limit, the reductions became effective as of midnight last night.

It is also interesting to note that the tariff equities that we have been fighting for for three and a half years are going to be changed from a cents per pound or fixed rate to a percentage. We do commend the federal government for that.

In tariff reference 152 and the tariff board recommendations there were almost 300 recommendations put on the bargaining table. I have not had a chance to look at the 300 recommendations. I do know that some of them were not adopted by the government of Canada and it did not live up to the recommendations that it put on the bargaining table, but until I have had a chance to look at the total package, to analyse it and see what it will do for the horticulture industry in this province, I wouldn't want to comment in depth on that.

On the reductions, I only have to look at today's paper: "Tariff Cuts May Squeeze One Cent Off US Orange Juice." May I remind members we are interested here, in Canada and in Ontario, in selling our products. When we find our products, like carrots, selling at half the price of imported carrots today, apples at almost half the price of imported apples, onions at about half the price of imported onions, that is the sort of thing they should be working on, and we should all be drinking apple juice, tomato juice, or grape juice here in this province.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary: Can the minister inform the House if the other side of the federal announcement—that is, increases in certain tariffs—will be made applicable to protect some of the tender fruits and particularly the strawberry industry here? It is interesting to note that 90 days from now, unless something is done, the strawberry crop in this province will be lost unless there is some tariff protection. Is the minister using his good offices to apply this new policy to protect our own farmers?

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, it is just unfortunate, as I said, the announcement last night said the reductions took place at midnight last night. The new increased protection or equities that we are asking for will not become effective until October 1, and will have to be done by legislation. So there will be less protection for our horticulture industry in the province of Ontario this summer than we had last summer. I think that is atrocious—

Mr. Nixon: I do, too.

Hon. W. Newman: —when we have been fighting for this thing for three and a half years.

JOB CREATION

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Ministry of Industry and Tourism, as it relates to the mineral policy paper number 4, put out by the Ministry of Natural Resources, Towards Nickel Policy for the Province of Ontario. There are a number of proposals that were recommended by the study; seven in all. I want to know for example, if the minister has given any consideration to implementing some of them, such as to “encourage the refining in Ontario or Canada of the by-product platinum group metals,” and to “intensify diversification of the Sudbury manufacturing base by encouraging the importation of Inco subsidiaries’ technical and nickel manufacturing expertise acquired through recent diversification, not now employed in Canada, for the purpose of creating new industry and employment in Sudbury”? Has the minister accepted any of these proposals, or when can we look to the minister to implement some of these recommendations to create jobs in the Sudbury basin?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will be discussing the matter further with my colleague, the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Auld), and I would expect he would have more to say to the House on that subject at a later time.

HOTEL DIEU HOSPITAL

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Health: Is the minister aware of the fact that on February 21 of this year 14 patients in Windsor had to stay overnight in Hotel Dieu’s emergency room because there were no beds available in the hospital, and that in order to get rooms available the following day other patients had to be released before they were ready to be released? Further, is the minister aware that in the opinion of Dr. Frank L. Manforton, president of the Hotel Dieu medical staff, medical and legal risks are being taken in sending patients home prematurely, as well as in not admitting patients who should be admitted? Is this what the Minister of Health calls restraint of spending without a decrease in the quality of care?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The honourable member will know that at this particular time of the year, during the winter period, many hospitals experience their peak utilization of any point during the year.

Any decision to discharge a patient must be based on medical judgement. Of course, no physician is going to put a person in jeopardy. Likewise, the decision to detain a person in emergency overnight would be based on the best interests of that patient. But I ask the member to recognize that at this time of the year we do face these peaks in utilization that will result in some inconveniences—

Mr. Wildman: What about reserve capacity?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —however, I am confident that the quality of the system is, in fact, being maintained.

MEDICAL SCHOOL ACCESS

Mr. Pope: My question is directed to the Minister of Education and Colleges and Universities. It arises from the Ontario medical school application service instruction booklet for the 1979 entering class, which is a guide for applicants to all medical schools in Ontario.

Of the five schools, three of them have geographical preferences. These preferences are set out in this pamphlet and in their own calendar material. The University of Ottawa openly gives preference to students who reside in the Ottawa-Outaouais area—

Mr. Speaker: Question?

Mr. Pope: McMaster University gives preference—

Mr. Speaker: Question?

Mr. Pope: My question is, how long has this open and co-ordinated discrimination existed against otherwise qualified students who reside in Ontario from Barrie to Moosonee and throughout most of eastern Ontario? Will the minister end it? Will the ministry compensate areas which have not had such favoured status by implementing compensatory geographical weighting factors of its own? Will the minister ascertain, along with the Minister of Health, whether or not these policies have had an effect on the availability of trained medical personnel in northern Ontario, eastern Ontario and central Ontario?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: We will certainly attempt to determine whether, in fact, the policies which are enunciated now in these brochures have had any such effect.

I am aware that the University of Toronto and Queen's University have no specific geographical policy in terms of the regions of Ontario affected.

It is my understanding that the universities, through the council of faculties of medicine, have attempted to ensure that there would be equal access to faculties of medicine for all students within the province by arranging that their catchment areas would be those designated within the document mentioned by my honourable colleague.

The University of Western Ontario specifically serves southwestern Ontario initially, then the remainder of the province. The university at Hamilton, known as McMaster, serves the Hamilton area, specifically, first and then northwestern Ontario. The University of Ottawa specifically serves the Ottawa-Outaouais region, which means, of course, that it is looking specifically as well at some students outside the province of Ontario. The faculties of medicine at the University of Toronto and Queen's University state that they are to serve all of the students within the province of Ontario, with certain provisions made for some students from outside the province of Ontario.

If this in any way has proved to be an inhibition to the possibility of medical education for students from north-central Ontario and northeastern Ontario, we shall most certainly report this to the House. We will undertake that study.

Mr. Speaker: The time for oral questions has expired. I would just like to call members' attention to the fact that we spent 43 minutes today on leaders' questions and supplementaries.

Mr. T. P. Reid: How much on the answers?

Mr. Riddell: Is that the reason I can't get a question on?

Mr. Speaker: That's probably the main reason.

Mr. Eaton: Better get rid of your leader.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

FAMILY BENEFITS AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Peterson moved first reading of Bill 11, An Act to amend the Family Benefits Act.

Motion agreed to.

[3:30]

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the minister is going to support this because it is something we feel very strongly about on this side of the House. It is a bill to provide equal status under the Family Benefits Act for men and for women who are parents of dependent children. We have an anachronistic law now and unfortunately, my bill does not clean up all of the irregularities in the Family Benefits Act by a long shot, Mr. Speaker, but it does go to address a specific one. There are a number of specific cases in this province at this time that need this help and I feel very confident the minister will address his mind to this and will support it because it is just and it is equitable and it is the only fair thing in the circumstances.

LANDLORD AND TENANT AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Warner moved first reading of Bill 12, An Act to amend the Landlord and Tenant Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill is one with which the committee agrees unanimously. It is to ensure that a landlord cannot prevent tenants from using a common room in order to meet with political candidates nor their representatives or those who are elected to office. It is introduced—

Mr. Eaton: We already did that in the act, what are you trying to pull?

Mr. Warner: —because the present bill will not be through the House until after the by-elections. We ask that this bill be put on the order paper and dealt with by Friday.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor at the opening of the session.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, the speech from the throne contained, as we have come to expect over the last several years, very little of direction, very little that is new, and very little to indicate to us the government has a sense of what's wrong in Ontario and a plan for how to cope with it.

One could, of course, speak at length on a great many issues touching almost every aspect of life in the province and certainly every ministry but surely, in the amount of time that is reasonably at our disposal, the public would be better served and this House would be better served if in reply to the motion and in reply to the speech if we were to focus in greater depth on one or two matters rather than try to cover the broad waterfront of issues that affect us all.

I think the two matters which I would particularly like to share with this House, the matters on which I have some thoughts to present at this time, are fundamentally to do both with the industries upon which we all depend in Ontario; and the second matter, to do with the matter of electrical generation, the situation of Ontario Hydro.

Let us deal first of all with the question of our industrial situation in this province. We know that Ontario is the manufacturing heartland of this country and yet we know also that we have been losing manufacturing jobs in Ontario at an enormous rate. The thousands and thousands of jobs that are leaving Ontario and that are disappearing from the manufacturing sector have been well documented by the Science Council of Canada in recent studies. There seems to have been a kind of de-industrialization, about which I spoke in last year's speech, in similar circumstances to those we find ourselves in today.

This de-industrialization finds us relying more and more, as a nation, on our raw resources and less and less able to compete in the world in the field of high technology manufacturing—any kind of manufacturing for that matter. This is a very disturbing matter for Ontarians in particular, because we are, after all, the province that depends mostly on manufacturing.

It is interesting that as we have been sort of churning through this heavy going on industrial strategy, we have finally come to a real parting of the ways between the government of Ontario and the party which I have the honour to lead. We find two fundamental issues upon which we have very important differences of opinion and of policy. The first has to do with what I call corporate responsibility.

Let me take you back for a moment, Mr. Speaker, to the fundamental question of what is a corporation. A corporation is not a person. It should not be regarded as having the human attributes that each person has, each of us sitting here would have, each person going about his daily work would have. A corporation is a device, it is a means to an end; the end, of course, is the more efficient production of goods and services in a society and one hopes, ultimately, their fairer distribution as well.

But the means to the end is, of course, the corporation by which we permit large aggregations of capital to occur with certain protections by law, certain protections with regard to tax, with regard to liability, and we allow these capital aggregations to come together with expertise, with initiative, with labour, to produce goods and services efficiently in a competitive enterprise for the good of society.

Let's remember that. It must be for the good of society, and what we in the Liberal Party have said, for lo, these many years, is that there has to be an element of corporate responsibility, that the notion that corporations are fundamentally out to maximize profits for their shareholders is an accurate statement of how a system works and how, if you will, it is fuelled. That's the motive source but it's not the purpose of the system. The purpose of the system must still be the efficient production of goods and services and their rational and fair distribution in the society.

Mr. Wildman: In order to maximize profits.

Mr. S. Smith: My friends in the NDP feel profit is the end of corporations and I would suspect it is the only goal that would probably be seen by the Conservatives as well, but I don't believe that. I believe the corporation is a device that serves society, and I believe that the seeking of profit, which is an excellent motive, is the motive force which allows corporations to, in fact, produce more and be efficient. If they did not seek profit then there would be no incentive to be efficient.

Having said that corporate responsibility is one of the things that divides the Liberal Party from the Conservative Party in Ontario, I want to expand on that a bit. We see corporate responsibility in a number of areas, but primarily four.

The first is responsibility, of course, to the planet, to the environment. It would be unthinkable that corporations should be allowed to despoil the planet, to render inhospitable the very means of existence, the very surroundings upon which we expect our children and their children to depend for life and for sustenance. So clearly corporations must have environmental responsibility as, for that matter, must all citizens.

Secondly, and this was at issue during our discussion during the question period and the ministerial statements today, there must be a community responsibility on the part of corporations. The tremendous investment which communities must make when corporations locate there are much clearer to see in small towns, in one- or two-industry towns, where, as we all know, the sewers and roads have to be put in, houses have to be built for the workers, schools and playgrounds have to be built for the workers' children, and so on.

We can see very plainly in the one- or two-industry towns the enormous public investment that exists in a corporation. Of course, one can become a little more abstract and refer also to the educational endowment which is given to corporations, inasmuch as the people working there have been educated at the expense of the community. It is not difficult to see.

Sometimes, when you get into larger cities and when the infrastructure seems almost to exist separately from the industrial needs, it is not as easy to see that there is a community investment in each corporation. But there is indeed.

There are times in free enterprise when it is necessary to abandon a factory, when it is necessary even to abandon a whole industry. These are very unfortunate times, but they happen. If you did not have a free enterprise system which permitted this to happen, you would artificially try to keep alive enterprises which in fact were not producing well for society, and no one would be the long-term gainer in that situation.

None the less, there must be an accounting. There must be a way in which the investment of a community in a factory can be calculated and compared to the differences in profit that might accrue by closing down a plant in one place and opening it in another.

To take an extreme example, it would not be sensible to move a plant to make an extra $1 million for a corporation if it is clearly going to cost society $50 million to have that move occur. There has to be some kind of an accounting, some way that we rationalize these matters.

We see, therefore, that the time has come to recognize that communities have responsibilities to their corporations; that governments have responsibilities to treat corporations fairly, to recognize how the system works and to help them prosper; but also that corporations have responsibilities to communities. That is a very important matter. When the time comes that a corporation feels it must close a major plant, the day should be over when it can do that simply as a corporate decision, without any consideration for the community responsibilities which exist.

A third responsibility of corporations must surely be the responsibility to the labour force of the corporation. Over the years I have seen the barricade mentality by which the workers on one side and management on the other view each other with distrust and use whatever kind of protective and offensive devices they seem able to obtain by means of law or by means of persuasion. I find it very sad.

If this country is ever going to survive internationally, particularly in manufacturing—upon which Ontario depends—there is going to have to be a sense of partnership, a sense of mutual loyalty, between corporation management and worker. That is not going to come when corporations feel they can just shut down a plant and ignore the investment which individual working people have made throughout their lives in that corporation and in that plant.

Similarly, it is not going to come if labouring people insist on always being counted out and counted as outsiders when it comes to having to make some tough decisions to keep corporations viable. There must be a sense of mutual involvement. Part of that can be sharing information with the representatives of workers. Part of that can be profit-sharing. Part of that can be share distribution. Part of that can be seats on decision-making boards and so on.

But surely the government ought to start to take some initiative to break down the barriers and to create an atmosphere of more mutual work, rather than antagonistic concern.

The fourth responsibility of corporations, I'm not ashamed to say, must surely be a patriotic responsibility. It must surely be a responsibility to the nation in which the corporation is attempting to prosper. It grieves me to see what has happened in that regard, but I'll have more to say about that in a little while.

I said, at the outset, that there were two very important differences between the Conservative Party of Ontario and the Liberal Party of Ontario. The first is our sense of corporate responsibility. The second is the degree to which we are very deeply worried about, and very determined to do something about, the extent of foreign domination of our economy. I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that it has never been clearer that there is a very major difference between the government of Ontario and ourselves.

I have made some statements in recent days concerning the need for a code of behaviour for corporations, so that foreign-owned corporations would conduct themselves in a manner conducive to the benefit of Canada and of Ontario. These have been regarded with some derision and some fear on the part of the government, the fear being that—and I quote the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman)—“in the international community, we will not be able to attract more branch plants to Ontario.”

I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that we do not need to attract more branch plants to Ontario; we need to help the Canadian companies that are struggling here now to get on their feet and become corporate enterprises that can compete in Ontario, in Canada and in the world.

Everyone knows it would make a lot of sense for this country to have a policy of lower interest rates so as to encourage more investment, so as to encourage more renewal of plants, so as to encourage more construction of housing and so on. We all know the benefits lower interest rates would bring; yet we're locked into a situation where we have to have, over and over again, higher interest rates. What is the reason for that?

The reason given by the governor of the Bank of Canada is that our balance of payments deficit is so great that the only way we could keep from having a massive run on the dollar would be to raise our interest rates sufficiently that foreign money, mostly American, would come into the country to take advantage of these high interest rates, and, in coming into the country, would temporarily restore a balance which otherwise runs against this country in terms of our current accounts.

Yet why is money leaving this country so rapidly year by year that we require high interest rates to bring money in to balance that? What is the reason for the outflow of the money in the first place, the outflow that prevents us from having the kind of economic policy that would help us grow?

The reason is not a trade deficit because in trade at the moment we're running a small surplus. Unfortunately we export mostly raw materials and that's not good for the future of the country; but still, it's a small surplus.

Hon. Mr. Davis: There's a slight tourism deficit.

Mr. S. Smith: There's a slight tourism deficit, indeed. There is indeed. People are fond of referring to it; it certainly is a problem, but it's nothing like the real problem—

Mr. Nixon: All those Fort Lauderdale condominiums,

Mr. S. Smith: —which is approximately $5 billion leaving this country in dividends, interest and service charges, management fees and other service charges, and profits, and going to those who own the bulk of industry but who are not themselves Canadians. That is the main drain on the economy of this country.

Hon. Mr. Davis: You are going to end up voting for Joe. You really are.

Mr. Nixon: You may end up voting against him, if you know what's good for you.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I read Mel's speech to your convention on the weekend. I said to myself: “The Liberal Party of Ontario now appears to support the Tories federally.”

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Roy: Not quite.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Did you read what he said?

Mr. Roy: The federal Tories have no economic policy.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, come on. It was all directed at the government of Canada.

Mr. Young: Bill, he is just trying to separate himself from the federal Liberals; that's all.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. S. Smith: The $5 billion which is being drained out of this country year by year will increase as each year goes by, so that added billions will be leaving our country. In order to make up for that, we will have to have massive trade surpluses or, of course, continue to increase our interest rates—hurting our economy—to attract more and more short-term or medium-term capital to temporarily balance the flow.

The investment we once needed in this country now has grown to the point where we are being drained daily by our foreign owners. We have come to the sad state of affairs where we must hope to raise our own interest rates high enough that the people to whom we owe all that money will be willing to lend some of it back to us temporarily so we will look okay on the balance sheet for the moment, knowing full well that means we will owe them even more a few years down the road. That is the terrible downward spiral that our country and our province are on.

Ontario, as a manufacturing centre, suffers the most from these high interest rates and from this drain on our economy. Ontario should therefore not be encouraging more branch plants in the province, but should be encouraging Canadian-owned enterprises to grow and to prosper.

These are two very vital differences between the government and the official opposition in Ontario: corporate responsibility and our attitude towards foreign domination of the economy.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, come on. This is 90 per cent of the bailiwick of the government of Canada. It may be the position of the Liberal Party of Ontario, but not of Canada.

Mr. S. Smith: Yesterday I spoke of the need to have a code of corporate behaviour. I was told by the Minister of Industry and Tourism that he would like to see such a code. Such a code, said he, is just some type of silliness which would frighten away foreign investment. Heaven knows, we have enough foreign investment; but he does not want to frighten it away. He feels that kind of code would make us uncompetitive in seeking branch plants—and he likes branch plants.

Hon. Mr. Davis: You don't like branch plants, but I tell you there are a lot of people in Brampton who are delighted to be working at American Motors.

Mr. S. Smith: I will present to you today, Mr. Speaker, that code of behaviour for corporations.

The Premier went to Japan, and he came back terribly enthusiastic because Panasonic, if I remember correctly, was going to assemble a few pieces and possibly put them in a package in Ontario. He thought that was a wonderful thing: "Think of the jobs it would create."

There are all kinds of Ontario industries dying to get the kind of backing and support so that they can go out and make an assault on the markets of the world, and they don't get the support of the Premier. But Panasonic thrilled him.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We didn't give them a nickel.

Mr. S. Smith: Unfortunately, he is not ahead of his time; he is well behind the times.

I want to set out today some of the main elements of our approach to economic policy. The first is to reiterate the industrial strategy which our finance critic, the member for London Centre (Mr. Peterson), and I have been speaking about for years now, from one end of the province to the other and in the Legislature.

There are nine major points and, at the risk of repeating some of the material that was in Hansard a year ago and two years ago, I am going to underline the nine major points of the industrial strategy which we are recommending.

First of all, we believe there must be, as I was saying earlier, support for Canadian-owned business. We must favour Canadian-owned business. If we are giving out money, it should be to Canadian enterprises. It should be for the clear purpose of making these Canadian enterprises truly competitive and making them the kinds of enterprises that will provide a future for our children. That's the first element.

Secondly, there must be a code of behaviour. If foreign-owned companies are to be part of a general industrial strategy, then they must abide by a code of behaviour in which they act as Canadian companies should act. I'll give an example, Honeywell has discovered and invented in Canada a certain device that has to do with lighting and lighting intensity. They can market that device throughout the world. Their parent company is apparently willing to do the research here, to let them do their own product development and market the product back into the United States and around the world.

If they're willing to do that, then I would feel that they are acting in the Canadian interest with regard to that product. Under such circumstances, I am prepared to treat Honeywell or any other foreign-owned company on the same basis as a Canadian-owned firm. The key element for me is that the foreign-owned company would have to abide by a set of criteria which would indicate that its behaviour would be that of a Canadian-owned corporation. I'll set out these criteria in a moment.

The third aspect of the industrial strategy concerns purchasing policies. The government of Ontario must adopt purchasing policies which are "buy Canadian." I don't simply mean putting up signs saying, "Shop Canadian" or "Turn Over a New Leaf." That's not the issue. The issue is to use the purchasing power of this government, Ontario Hydro, the municipalities, hospitals and school boards to buy Canadian.

Furthermore, we should also use the power we have over large mining corporations and large paper companies to make them buy Canadian pollution control equipment, and to make them buy Canadian in their pulp and paper equipment wherever possible. Give them whatever incentives are required to make them buy Canadian because it's a good deal for us. In fact, the Canadian Science Council recently released a study to indicate that even if the product cost 76 per cent more, it's more advantageous to the society as a whole to purchase the Canadian product than the foreign-made product. Their figures may be out, but it's obviously a good deal to buy Canadian.

Look for a moment at what we're losing. A billion dollars is going to be spent this year on pulp and paper to renovate old plants and to buy new equipment. Yet about half of that money will go outside the country. Why should we have to import equipment for the forestry industry? Why should we have to import mining equipment, as we now do with regard to almost every large piece of mining equipment, when we used to export on a large scale? What happened to these industries in Ontario? How could the Conservatives for the last 36 years sit back and watch us lose industry after industry in the manufacturing sector in Ontario and still claim to be economic managers? We must purchase in Canada.

Fourthly, our industrial strategy must allow for specialization. We're not going to get anywhere by simply supporting every kind of corporation in every kind of area. We must specialize in those things that we can do well in this country. To begin with, we should choose those for which there is a large domestic market. We're a small country in terms of population but we have a large domestic market in mining, forestry, agriculture, communications and transportation. There are large domestic markets in areas related to energy, to fisheries, to oceanography and to aeronautics. In areas such as those, we must focus our strategy.

Fifthly, there is research and development. We must protect a certain portion of our home market for labour-intensive industry. But in terms of world competition the Third World will almost always be able to beat us in a labour-intensive sector. What we must concentrate on is technology-intensive industry. That means a vast increase in research and development. That is where we should be putting government money. We must bring together the universities, the research establishments and the large companies with the potential suppliers to those large companies. Bring together Inco with the pollution control manufacturers. Bring together Texasgulf with the mining-machinery maker. Bring the universities in so they can do their research the way that fits our industrial strategy.

Sixthly, we have education and manpower planning. There is no point getting into manufacturing if we don't have the people to do it. What an abject failure of the system of education in Ontario it is that even for the manufacturing jobs that are available today there aren't the people available to fill those jobs, while hundreds of thousands of people are without work in Ontario. What an ironic tribute to the man who is now Premier and was Minister of Education that the education system that has cost us billions and billions of dollars has not prepared the people for the jobs that we knew perfectly well would exist. That's what has happened.

We have spoken about apprenticeship. We've spoken about on-the-job training. We've spoken about the need for skilled trades and the need for polytechnic education where one can have a job-oriented education at the same time one is getting a good, reasonable, liberal arts type of education. What's happened? We have one polytechnic in Ontario at a time when high-technology industries should be our salvation. We have one polytechnic at Ryerson. It is now seriously threatened in terms of its financial viability by the shortsightedness of the Davis government.

The seventh point has to do with financing. We must have a program that encourages our financial institutions to lend money to small and medium-sized Canadian enterprises. I hear so many times about the Canadian company that gets a loan to start up a business of $10,000, $15,000 or $25,000. They work really hard at it. They finally develop a business, refine a product line, start to make contacts, get the feel of where they're going and see an opportunity for their product. Then they go back to the bank and say: "I've got to get into production. I need $150,000 or $250,000."

The bank says: "My goodness, you already owe so much, and you don't have much in the way of assets that you can borrow against. Really, you don't have a track record. Frankly, what have you ever done? You don't have a great record of achievement, and that's a pretty risky thing. I'll tell you what, my friend, why don't you get some managerial expertise?" For which we may read, get an American buyer.

He comes back with a big American purchaser—sometimes a Canadian purchaser, but more often an American—who is willing to guarantee the loan. The loan is given to the American company, using Canadian money to buy out the Canadian company, so that this guy can finally get into production. At that point, if anything good comes of the product, it's taken back home by the American company and further developed in the American home industry. That has happened time and time again. That is the story of industrial development in Ontario.

The province of Ontario has not so much as lifted one finger to do anything to get the financial institutions of this province to start to favour the new enterprises that are Canadian—

Mr. Cassidy: How about the federal Liberals who revised the Bank Act?

Mr. Bounsall: That's the Liberals' fault.

Mr. S. Smith:—and the small and medium-sized Canadian enterprises. They have done absolutely zero. They have not so much as spoken to the financial institutions about it, let alone introduce tax changes or other changes that might have encouraged the banks and trust companies to start to take a different attitude towards emerging Canadian businesses.

Mr. Cassidy: Why don't you confront the Liberals up in Ottawa?

Mr. Eaton: They are the ones who control the Bank Act.

Mr. S. Smith: The eighth point has to do with an attitude—

Mr. M. N. Davison: Why leave the seventh point so quickly?

Mr. Cassidy: Yes, you were doing so well.

Mr. Kerrio: My God, they are awake.

Mr. Breithaupt: There are not many of them but they are at least awake.

Mr. Watson: Seven is a lucky number.

An hon. member: Who wants to talk to Jack Horner?

Mr. Eaton: Some of your pals are falling asleep back there.

Mr. S. Smith: I take it that the members of the other two parties have detected that there's a certain difference between the policy I'm putting forward and the policy that has been adopted by successive federal governments over the years. They're quite right. There is, in fact, a difference. There is no doubt that the comments I've made about foreign domination of the economy represent a certain difference, but they most certainly also represent a very severe difference that we have with the government of Ontario.

There were the comments of the Minister of Industry and Tourism who was worried about whether or not the international investment community would take offence at a code of corporate ethics and perhaps not locate branch plants here. He expressed that worry only yesterday. There is a very severe difference between us.

If I may get to the eighth point in our industrial strategy—and this point is a little less easy for us to deal with in government—it has to do with the attitude of Canadians.

Nothing got me angrier in the last little while than the fact that, one week after the United States recognized the People's Republic of China, they had Coca-Cola trucks there; they had an agreement to put in satellites and to teach them how to open up educational television channels.

What have we managed to do with China in the eight years since we recognized them? Sell them wheat. It would take a pretty inept individual to be unable to sell wheat to a hungry person.

What have we done? What has the government of Ontario done in its Ministry of Industry and Tourism? What has happened? Why could we not be opening up educational television channels in China? We have the expertise; we have trained teachers looking for things to do because of declining enrolment. We have lots of things we could have been selling to China, but we have not been doing it.

We have not been aggressive enough. It did not take the Americans a week before they were in there with all their products. They will have a McDonald's in China pretty soon.

In Ontario, we are somehow just not in the game. A lot of that is attitude.

Maybe some of it is a reflection of a school system that has downgraded the idea of competition and produces people who think of themselves mainly as having a future working for large corporations, government, and service industries, rather than as entrepreneurs. Even our business schools hardly ever produce entrepreneurs in this province and in this country.

We could see this happening to us, and yet in our educational system we have done pitifully little in Ontario. We have not given guidance to people to lead them into entrepreneurial and aggressive, competitive kinds of occupations. We have been quite content to sit and bask in the enjoyment of this beautiful province without ever thinking about the future.

The ninth point has to do with labour-management relations. As I have said earlier, we have to change our system of labour relations. Employees have to be brought in so that they truly understand the financial position of the company they are working for. We cannot expect unions to settle for low wage increases on the basis that the company needs to be competitive, if the union members do not believe what the company is telling them and if the union members have never had the opportunity to be given reason to believe what they are being told. Unions should have a stake. Workers should be represented; they should have access to genuine information.

We should all be getting away from the barricades which, as I said earlier, have operated in the labour-management field. Neither unions nor management wish to do this. Many of the unions say they will be co-opted; they would rather be on the outside and fighting. Many management people say they do not want union people messing about with the decision-making of a company.

Today there is even an editorial in the Spectator saying that such a suggestion that working people might actually have a say in the affairs of a company is tantamount to socialism. In fact, they say I should apologize to the leader of the third party for stealing what they consider to be his ground.

Mr. Cassidy: When you come to the crunch, you never stand with the workers; everybody knows that.

Mr. S. Smith: There. You have just heard from the leader of the NDP—did you hear that?—if it comes to the crunch, will you stand with the workers? The old barricade mentality. Neither of the other parties and neither management nor labour seems to understand that we have to get away from the polarization; we have got to get away from the barricades. We are all in the same boat, and it is about time we started working together.

Government could give incentives to those companies that have share distribution plans, that have profit-sharing, that involve their workers in decision-making. There are things government can do in this regard.

That represents the nine points of industrial strategy which I am happy to share with the members of this House.

I promised the Minister of Industry and Tourism that I would present a code of corporate behaviour for foreign-controlled firms operating in Ontario. What I am putting before the Legislature is not intended to be a fully comprehensive code, but rather a framework in which such a code can and should be developed. The code would include at least the following components:

First of all, subsidiaries of foreign multinational corporations should at the minimum undertake research and development activities in Ontario in industries where the Canadian domestic market is large enough to justify such operations. I give as an example electrical generation, which of course we are talking about in Hamilton. Subsidiaries must be permitted to design, develop and market new products rather than only market existing products which involve no innovative research and development. That is the first sentence I would have in a code of corporate behaviour for foreign-owned corporations.

Secondly, subsidiaries should be permitted by the parent corporation to buy component parts and services under the most competitive market conditions, rather than being locked into mandatory purchasing agreements with the parent corporation. Frequently the subsidiary in Canada simply acts as a customer for the parts, components, design, services and management that are so-called expertise that it has to buy from its parent company. If the parts and components are available elsewhere, the company in Canada should not have to send large sums of money across the border unnecessarily; it should be able to buy at the most competitive price and value situation.

Thirdly, subsidiaries should be in a position to allow products developed in Ontario to be exported freely to all international markets, including the domestic market of the parent corporation. We shouldn't just have companies interested in putting things out in a mediocre way for the domestic market. If they have the talent, if they have developed the products, they should be free to market these things on behalf of Canada, for the good of Ontario, elsewhere in the world including the home market of their parent company.

Fourthly, subsidiaries should ensure that Canadians form a majority on their boards of directors.

Fifthly, subsidiaries should be prepared to plough back profits into their Canadian operations in order to assist their growth and development.

There are two additional conditions that are part of this corporate code of behaviour which would apply to foreign-controlled and Canadian corporations alike. Firstly, corporations should acknowledge their responsibility to the communities in which they are located, and recognize that those communities have a vested interest in those factories and plants that cannot be moved or shut down with impunity. I spoke about that at the beginning of my response to the speech from the throne when I started earlier this afternoon.

Secondly, corporations should also acknowledge their responsibility to their work forces. Corporations contemplating disruptions to their work forces should be obliged to discuss any changes with their workers. They should not be allowed simply to announce layoffs or cutbacks, even in accordance with the law, and assume no responsibility for the impact of their decision.

Those seven points—five that apply particularly to foreign-owned corporations and two that apply to both kinds of corporations, foreign-owned and Canadian—represent for me the outline of a code of corporate behaviour, something the Minister of Industry and Tourism may scoff at but which I say is long overdue in Ontario.

All of the components I have outlined and possibly others could be worked out in consultation with labour and business leaders to ensure an environment is created that will provide the greatest benefit to the economy of this province.

Compliance with this code of corporate behaviour would be sought first through the use of moral suasion. I hope most foreign-owned corporations in Ontario have a large enough stake in this province to want to fulfil their role as good corporate citizens.

However, secondly, the government of Ontario must have a meaningful buy-Canadian policy. Non-Canadian firms would only be eligible under this policy if they demonstrated their willingness to behave like Canadian companies. In other words, if a company failed to adopt the corporate code I am recommending, then the government would not give it the favourable treatment it ought to be according to Canadian corporations, and which it would accord to such corporations under the industrial strategy I outlined a little earlier.

If the foreign-owned corporations are to participate in any of the benefits—any of the investment changes, any of the tax changes, any of the purchasing policies—then they will have to abide by the corporate code of behaviour. That is reasonable.

After so many years as a client state, surely the time has come for this country and this province to stand on their own feet and say to these people, who seem to own so much of our industry, particularly in manufacturing, "Look, we appreciate that you came in with your capital when we needed it. Now we want to work together. But we want you to act like good corporate citizens of this country and to take your responsibilities very seriously, indeed."

Mr. Nixon: Come on, Jim, you agree with that.

Mr. S. Smith: An economic strategy for Ontario must be based, of course, on good government management—

Mr. M. N. Davison: What happens when they ignore your code?

Mr. S. Smith: —of those economic and industrial resources under its direct control.

Mr. M. N. Davison: What happens when they ignore the code, Stuart?

Mr. S. Smith: I am being asked a question, Mr. Speaker, by one of the members of the third party. He wants to know what happens if they ignore the code. Basically, I thought I answered that question. But, for his edification and clarification, and because I appreciate his interest, I will simply say this: If they ignore the code, they carry on doing business, but they cannot get any of the benefits I am suggesting will accrue to Canadian-owned corporations as a result of a "buy-Canadian" policy. They cannot get any of the benefits in financing which will accrue as a consequence of our policies. They would not get any outright grants or any particularly favourable loans from the government of the province—

Mr. Watson: The Liberals would cut them out of the ballpark.

Mr. S. Smith: —they would, in fact, continue to do business as it is everyone's freedom and right to do; but they will, in fact—

Mr. M. N. Davison: Larry Grossman has nothing to worry about, then. That's not going to scare anyone.

Mr. S. Smith: —they will in fact not get the benefits that I have outlined.

The member says the Minister of Industry and Tourism will have nothing to worry about. He is quite right. Since there is no policy in the government of Ontario to favour Canadian businesses, there is no reason in the world why a multinational branch plant should have to worry about the government's opinion of it. But, once you have a proper "buy Canadian," "favour Canadian," "support Canadian" industry policy, it becomes meaningful to be classified with those particular corporations. Then, I tell you, Mr. Speaker, the branch plants will be happy to respond to a proper code of behaviour. If they do not do so, they are on their own. They can expect nothing in the way of special treatment that the government will offer Canadian enterprise.

I think I have shown sufficient respect in taking a little time to answer the member's question. I hope members will permit me to continue my remarks, because I want to move on to another topic.

As I say, an economic strategy for Ontario has to be based on good government management of those economic and industrial resources under its direct control. It is counterproductive, to say the least, to try to excite and influence the private sector of the economy into certain directions if, in the public sector, the government is stumbling in the opposite direction.

As I have already indicated, the most important economic resource under the government's direct control is tax and fiscal policy. Eighteen per cent of Ontario's gross provincial product is controlled by the Premier, Treasurer and cabinet of this province. Their record, of course, is one of gross overspending in relation to revenues, and a tremendous year-over-year building up of provincial debt. It would be absurd to expect the Ontario economy to be more efficient, to be more competitive, to be more investment-oriented, to be less inflationary, as long as the government of Ontario continues to drown it in red ink.

The practice, if not the policy, of the Davis administration has been to throw life preservers with one hand while pushing us under with the other. We have had countless protestations of reform and improvement but, every year, after the propaganda fog lifts, we see that the ocean of red ink is larger than ever.

Now we have a new Treasurer and his first major initiative is to throw a $100-million lifeline to the pulp and paper industry, an industry which, with rare exception, is enjoying good cash flow and profits, paying high dividends, and complaining that it cannot afford to modernize, to clean up its pollution and increase its productivity for the future. However, one should not, perhaps, be too harsh towards the pulp and paper industry. After all, it is only emulating the government of Ontario.

So much for the tax and fiscal policy necessary for a sound economic strategy. Let me turn now to the most important industrial resource under the government's direct control, namely Ontario Hydro. No doubt about it, Hydro is big. One wonders sometimes if it is not bigger than the government itself. It is the second largest electrical utility in the western world. Its growth, evolution and success since 1906 have been a major reason for the economic development of this province. When the Premier and his colleagues thank divine providence and themselves, not necessarily in that order, for the miracles that have been wrought over the past 50 years, they might acknowledge the fortuitous presence of Niagara Falls.

It is precisely because Hydro's success is essential to the further development of Ontario that we on this side of the House have been concerned to know what has gone wrong with Hydro and the government's control over Hydro during the past 10 years. For something seriously has gone wrong and must be put right. It is no happenstance that a select committee of this Legislature has been exhaustively investigating Hydro's affairs over the past five years—perhaps one should say seven years, to include the Moog matter. It will no doubt be emerging from its mountain of evidence and documentation with some distilled view on what is wrong and what should be done about it. While we in the official opposition have come to some general conclusions, we await with interest the recommendations of the select committee.

Perhaps, however, I can give the House and the government some indication of how we view the problem. In that regard I can do no better than to cite some documents our research department found in our own mountain of Hydro material. These documents are rather old and I cannot say how we came by them. Presumably they arrived in one of the brown paper envelopes an opposition party receives from time to time.

The first document is apparently known somewhat notoriously within Hydro and the Ministry of Energy as "the Leighton letter." It is dated November 9, 1970, and it was written to the then Premier John P. Robarts by A. J. G. Leighton, president of Resources Engineering of Canada Limited. Mr. Leighton was a consulting engineer whose career included work with Ontario Hydro. He had become convinced of the need for a provincially-appointed public utilities review and licensing board charged with the responsibility of studying all plans for the proposed construction of major electrical generating stations and of holding public hearings in order to receive briefs.

His letter to Premier Robarts was a suggestion that the Ontario government pursue such a policy. I might say parenthetically that one can see in Mr. Leighton's argument the germ of new policy which eventually manifested itself in the Environmental Assessment Board.

Premier Robarts thought well of the idea—would that we had his leadership today—and forwarded Mr. Leighton's letter to the then Minister of Energy and Resources, the member for Burlington South (Mr. Kerr), and to the then chairman of Ontario Hydro, George Gathercole, with the suggestion that it merited "very full attention." That's the quotation from Mr. Robarts.

I do not know what the minister thought of it, which is hardly surprising, nor do I know except by inference what Mr. Gather-cole thought of it. All we got in our brown paper envelope was a copy of a memorandum to Mr. Gathercole from Douglas Gordon, then general manager of Hydro, and a copy of a draft reply to Premier Robarts prepared by Mr. Gordon for Mr. Gathercole's signature. The memorandum is brief and I shall read it to the House.

It is dated December 1, 1970, and reads: "Last Friday, I suggested that we should forward our views on the Leighton letter to the Prime Minister and the honourable George Kerr. Attached is a suggested draft. I have tried to lay it on the line because we've 'had it' if the government thinks like Leighton."

The draft letter is rather long and I shall quote only the relevant portion. Mr. Gordon proposed that Premier Robarts be told—and I quote: "There is one thing absolutely certain about Mr. Leighton's approach. To follow it would result in brownouts and blackouts in Ontario within the next 10 to 15 years, a situation which currently exists in certain areas of the United States."

I still quote from the letter: "Having let off steam, let me say that I am concerned, as I am sure you are concerned, with the problems of communication which continue to persist on Hydro matters; the changes which have taken place in the political, social and informational environment as to obscure the essentiality and achievements of Hydro, things which were a source of pride in the past. The pride which we once enjoyed in our achievement now seems to generate a negative response on the part of almost everyone, an attitude which apparently has its roots in increasing resentment and misunderstanding of our size and complexity and what we must do to continue to provide our vital service.

"There is an urgent need for Hydro and government to find a means of re-asserting the fact that Hydro expansion is absolutely vital to this province. Furthermore, we must communicate the fact that the driving force behind Hydro's growth is the economy. Slow down the economy and you slow down Hydro; the converse is also true."

Doesn't it remind you of, "What is good for General Motors is good for the country"? I'm continuing to read from the letter. I'm continuing to quote, Mr. Speaker.

"There may be some merit in having an outside body hopefully validate the objectives, policies and practices of Ontario Hydro to the satisfaction of our detractors, but we should avoid at all cost the establishment of a body to provide, as Mr. Leighton suggests, a forum to challenge every move by Ontario Hydro."

Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not know, as I say, if this letter was ever sent. It really doesn't matter. My point in citing it is to show that the Hydro problem has been with us for a long time. Here, in a few paragraphs written in 1970 by the man who was and remains the chief bureaucrat of Hydro—a paragraph intended for the Premier of the province—are all the symptoms of Hydro paranoia which we have come to know so well: the sense of persecution; the sensitivity to criticism, real or inferred; the dedication to ever-expanding power and more power; the conviction that only Hydro knows best; the autocratic belief that what is good for Hydro is good for Ontario; and, of course, the ever-present threat that if Hydro is hamstrung in fulfilling its manifest destiny, then the lights will surely go out a few years down the road.

Well, those words, those threats of brownouts and blackouts, were written almost 10 years ago. Certainly, Hydro has been hamstrung in fulfilling its manifest destiny in all sorts of ways in recent years, although, perhaps, not in quite the ways Mr. Leighton had in mind. If there's one thing that's absolutely certain today and for the next 10 years at least, it is that there is no need for the lights to go out in Ontario because of an inability to generate sufficient electrical power.

We have, Mr. Speaker, at this moment in Ontario, an installed generating capacity of 24,500 megawatts. That is 20 per cent over and above what is needed, even after allowing for a 25 per cent safety margin above peak demand. The excess capacity amounts to 4,036 megawatts which is 38 per cent of the 10,705 megawatts added to the system between the end of 1971 and the end of last year. This situation of growth over supply is not a temporary one. It will last until 1990, 12 years away. It will only disappear then if drastic stretch outs, deferrals and, no doubt, cancellations, are effected for further expansion projects now committed or planned for the next decade.

Mr. J. Reed: The biggest mistake in the history of the province of Ontario.

Mr. S. Smith: The cost of this excess generating capacity is enormous and staggering and I shall have more to say about that in a moment.

Let me first examine how the problem developed and how it was allowed to develop. The easiest and most convenient explanation, certainly from the government's point of view, is to say that the problem exists because Hydro made an understandable mistake in its load forecast. That is to say, it over-estimated what the future consumption of electricity in Ontario would be.

These load forecasts, made at the beginning of each year for 10 years ahead, were consistently at the rate of seven per cent annual increment. The first departure from this magic figure occurred in 1977 when Hydro estimated the demand over the ensuing 10 years would increase at the rate of 6.5 per cent per year. The 1978 forecast was for 5.5 per cent; and the 1979 prediction for the next 10 years, issued a month ago, is for 4.7 per cent. It is, as I shall show, probably still too high.

The importance of these load forecasts is that they become the basis, the justification, and the rationale for the building of additional generating capacity, not just in the form of additional generating plants, but in the form of additional and larger transmission lines, of more transformers and switching stations, and of more administration and system infrastructure. After all, a generating station without wires hooking it into the system is a rather useless thing.

Thus, the reason we have an installed generating capacity of 24,500 megawatts today, which is 4,000 more than we need, is that Hydro estimated in 1969 that electrical demand would increase at the rate of seven per cent per year for the period 1969 to 1978, and built accordingly. In effect, it concluded that the installed capacity which existed in 1969 would have to be doubled by the end of 1978. I should, perhaps, add that the installed capacity is not quite as high as the original target because the building program has been stretched out and curtailed in recent years for a variety of reasons, one of which was that Hydro finally realized about a year or so ago that its load forecasting and expansion program are grossly over-ambitious.

How and why did this colossal mistake occur? The whole incredible story may be found if one looks hard enough for it in the mountain of evidence being piled up by the select committee on Hydro affairs. I shall attempt to cover only the salient points here.

Let me at the outset reject entirely the contention, so avidly seized on by the government, that forecasting is a seat of the pants, by guess and by God operation in which mistakes are bound to occur. Let me also reject the simpleton argument so frequently advanced by the Premier that forecasting is an esoteric, complicated business which the inexperienced layman cannot be expected to understand.

There is nothing mysterious about linear regression analysis, to give forecasting its technical name. The statistical principles on which it is based have been known for a long, long time, and the mathematical formulae which it employs are well established. All one needs is a person trained in that branch of mathematics known as statistics and a computer to speed up the calculations. Indeed, for the more rudimentary calculations, all one needs is one of the more sophisticated pocket calculators available on the market.

Forecasting can be as simple or as complex as one wants it to be, depending on the assumptions made and the importance of the results obtained. One can, for example, assemble the peak consumption of electricity in Ontario each year for, let's say the past 10 years, correlate such data in a computer or calculator and obtain a prediction for the consumption of electricity for the current year or, indeed, for any year in the future.

One can also obtain a measurement of deviation or variance from this prediction so that one can say with a remarkably high degree of probability of being correct that the consumption of electricity in any given future year will fall within a certain range. That range will be entirely accurate and confirmed by experience as long as the assumption on which it is based remains valid, namely, that the pattern of electrical energy consumption in the past will continue into the future. That would be forecasting at its most basic level.

A more sophisticated and useful approach would be to explain the consumption of electricity in the past in terms of various factors, so that a change in these variables will produce a change in predictions for the future.

Here, one definitely needs a computer to do the mathematics, but, once again, there's nothing esoteric about it. Common sense, for example, suggests there may be a positive relationship between the consumption of electricity and the population of Ontario; between consumption and the rate of family formation; and between consumption and the number of children in classrooms. Common sense suggests there may be a negative relationship between the consumption of electricity and the price of electricity, because after all, the more expensive electricity is, the less consumers may be inclined to use it.

In fact, the list of possible variables is endless. By testing them against the recent past one can arrive at a set of variables which account for the consumption of electricity to a remarkable degree of completeness, and which permit the prediction with a very high degree of probability that a change in one or more variables will produce a certain change in the consumption of electricity.

It may be said this more complex approach to forecasting does not get us very far because you're still left with guessing how the variables may change. That is not how it works, Mr. Speaker. The correct technique is to arrive at variables with adequate lead time so that the time of their impact on the economy may be guessed at with reasonable precision.

Thus, we know when a change in the birth rate will show up in the number of children attending school. We know a new steel mill is not built overnight and a Toronto Dominion Centre is not built in a year. We have a very good idea as to when new commercial and industrial development will be coming on stream. All these things can be measured as to their effect on the future consumption of electricity, at least within the 10-year lead time Hydro needs for major generating projects.

What then was the quality of the forecasting done at Ontario Hydro? Incredible as it may seem, only the most recent forecast—the 4.74 per cent forecast for the next 10 years issued a month ago—employed sophisticated statistical analysis. It is only in the past year or so that Hydro has had an econometric model of the economy capable of making such an analysis. All the previous forecasts were based on the crude and elementary projection of past experience, the illogic being that since the consumption of electricity increased at a certain rate in the past it will increase at the same rate in the future.

Honourable members who do not sit on the select committee on Hydro may suspect that I'm exaggerating. Let me, therefore, refer them to the testimony of L.T. Higgins, Hydro's chief forecaster. It may be found in the transcript of the committee's proceedings of February 28. Mr. Higgins, I have said, now uses a more sophisticated approach. He now uses seven variables in his equation to reach a prediction of future demand. Not one of them is directly related to the population factor. Instead, Mr. Higgins uses employment as a variable to capture changes in the population.

Employment, as every economist knows, is primarily a function of economic condition, not of population change, but perhaps it doesn't matter because the load forecast predicted by Mr. Higgins' new approach apparently doesn't matter either. That forecast, the first one done by his econometric model, came up with a prediction of an annual increase of 2.6 per cent over the next 10 years. Mr. Higgins put it up to 4.7 per cent as an arbitrary judgement call, simply because he didn't think 2.6 per cent would be right. He didn't just select a high degree of variance from the forecast of 2.6 per cent; he simply decided that the demand for electricity in the 1980s will be 80 per cent higher than the figure produced by his statistical analysis because he didn't believe what his computer was telling him.

Again, I refer honourable members to the select committee's transcript of February 28 if they feel, as I'm sure some do, that I may not be recounting Mr. Higgins' position correctly. On page HA-1220-2, they will find him saying: "I have some quite strong views about the presentation of models. I have some quite strong reservations as to how good or bad they are, and I make no apologies for making judgements."

In short, it is Alice in Wonderland. For years, Hydro based its load forecasts on a method and a reasoning that offends common sense. Then, when it has finally developed techniques more or less adequate to the task, it refuses to believe the results. Why? Surely the explanation is obvious, however unpleasant. It is that Hydro is not serious about load forecasting. It has never been serious about it. It does not want to make the best and most accurate prediction it can about the future demand for electricity. It wants, rather, to make the highest prediction it can in order to expand as much as it can.

If this sounds extreme, I invite honourable members to consider the statement issued last week by the chairman of the Royal Commission on Electric Power Planning. The commission is holding hearings on the need for bulk power facilities in southwestern Ontario and, to that end, had asked Hydro for in-depth information on several factors which, in the commission's view, would be important determinants of the electrical load growth in that part of the province. Specifically, the commission wanted Hydro's analysis of population growth, housing starts, the electrical needs of industry and agriculture with special reference to new industries, and the additional electrical needs of the commercial sector. Honourable members will recall that all this would fall within what I have called the common-sense approach to load forecasting.

I quote from Dr. Porter's statement: "We concluded that the information supplied by Ontario Hydro was inadequate for our purposes on several grounds, not least because it was extremely difficult to understand, even by a former professor of electrical engineering. This view was fully endorsed by several outside consultants."

May I say parenthetically that I am sure Professor Porter has the sympathy of the members of the select committee on Hydro affairs.

The Porter commission then prepared a comprehensive set of questions for Hydro to answer. I quote from page three of Chairman Porter's statement: "Unfortunately, although the replies to the majority of the questions assist in clarifying the original submission, the reply to what the commission regards as the central question is not satisfactory."

The central question was whether Hydro uses population growth rates, housing starts and so on in its forecasting process, and if so, whether Hydro could provide such estimates to the commission. That is a reasonable question. On what does Hydro base these forecasts? Do they use housing starts and population growth, and if they do and other such reasonable estimates, would they put those assumptions in front of the chairman so he could understand them?

The chairman concluded as follows, and I quote what Chairman Porter said: "Estimates of such factors and their relationship to electrical growth represent the type of information—" Excuse me. It seems important to understand this correctly.

The chairman felt that Hydro's response was simply not satisfactory with regard to the central question and here is what Hydro's response was. The question was a simple one. What do you base it on? Do you have the estimates of housing starts, population growth and so on? Could you give them to us?

Here is what Hydro said:

"Estimates of such factors and their relationship to electrical growth represent the type of information which is useful when an end-use or explanatory approach is being used in forecasting. This has not been the approach taken by Ontario Hydro, with the result that the data gathered for Ontario Hydro's load forecasting is not of this type and has not been organized in this way.

"However, the load forecasting methodology used by Ontario Hydro does rely heavily on estimates of local load growth provided by Hydro's wholesale customers, the municipal utilities, by direct industrial customers and by Ontario Hydro's regional offices for retail areas services directly by Ontario Hydro. Embedded in these estimates are judgements based on first-hand knowledge of the demand for electricity and local activities, factors or trends which will change these demands.

"During its participation in the regional hearings, it is intended that Ontario Hydro's regional personnel will be presenting for discussion with the commission the local information which appears most pertinent to load growth in certain key areas in southwestern Ontario."

What does that mean? They are saying they don't base their load forecasting on such reasonable factors as housing starts, population growth, family formation—none of those things. They base it on what their customers tell them they think they might need as years go by.

When one analyses that response it means simply that Hydro estimates the future demand for electricity in Ontario by asking its own people, the municipal hydro utilities and so on, by asking itself. It means that Hydro knows best.

In short, Hydro supplies what Hydro demands. If we search for the reason, I suggest it is because there has developed within Hydro, over the years, a messianic complex to save Ontario.

The House will remember what Douglas Gordon proposed to tell Premier Robarts in 1970: "There is an urgent need for Hydro and government to find a means of reasserting the fact that Hydro expansion is absolutely vital to this province. Furthermore, we must communicate the fact that the driving force behind Hydro's growth is the economy. Slow down the economy and you slow down Hydro. The converse is also true."

"The converse is also true." I invite honourable members to consider the implications of the comment. There is a certain credibility to it. No one can deny that Hydro is a colossus. It buys hundreds of millions of dollars worth of machinery, equipment and supplies every year. Directly and indirectly it employs thousands upon thousands of workers. It borrows billions of dollars on the credit of the province. It is not too much to say that the fate of the Canadian nuclear industry rests in its hands.

Hydro is indeed very big, very powerful. The converse is not automatically true. What is good for Hydro is not necessarily good for Ontario because we cannot afford the cost and economic waste of having a state within a state.

[4:45]

Mr. Kerrio: Created a monster.

Mr. S. Smith: I say "economic waste" advisedly. The cost of overexpanding our electrical empire, which this government accepted, condoned and is now championing, today stands at over $2 billion. In five years time, even with further deferrals and cutbacks, it will reach $5 billion. This money has been raised and will have to be raised by issuing Hydro bonds. The interest cost today is of the order of $200 million a year. In five years it will be $500 million a year. When the bonds mature their face value will have to be rolled over by the issuance of new debt and the payment of further interest charges. No one can say precisely when, if ever, the cost of this colossal mismanagement will be liquidated and disappear from Hydro financing and from the Ontario economy.

All one can say is that the economy and the electrical consumers of Ontario have been saddled with a bill that will total billions of dollars—I repeat, billions—at the end of the road. Needless to say, the Premier and his colleagues are not admitting to that kind of blunder. They have made a virtue of necessity and are contending that two much electrical power is good for us. It is even somehow a strategic answer to the ayatollah of Iran. Besides they say it is just a "temporary" surplus of generating capacity, to quote the Treasurer, which will only cost Ontario households a few cents a day.

I must confess that I am intrigued by this strategic conflict between the Premier of Ontario and the ayatollah of Iran. I shall have something more to say about it in a moment. Let me first however, deal with this temporary surplus which is only costing us a few cents a day. The Treasurer, standing in for the Minister of Energy who was understandably absent, told the Ontario Municipal Electrical Association and the Association of Municipal Electric Utilities last week of the wonderful "security" which comes from having so much excess generating capacity, which will cost a $100 million a year or about three cents a day for the typical residential customer in the province. He didn't say how long this $100 million a year or three cents a day would have to be paid, but a close reading of his remarks reveals an admission that the temporary surplus will last until 1990. I trust the Premier will point that out to the ayatollah of Iran because I think the ayatollah should understand that we are protected from him for a very long time to come.

Mr. Breithaupt: An embarrassment of riches.

Mr. S. Smith: Meanwhile, back to the Treasurer and his $100 million a year or three cents a day. Even for a government notorious for its fun with figures, even a government whose Premier didn't even know what the provincial debt was and had the nerve to criticize the opposition for telling him what the provincial debt was, even for that kind of a government and recognizing that a $100 million a year would be cost enough, this particular figure is so blatant in its deception and hypocrisy that I'm forced to challenge it.

I do not mean merely to show that the true cost is much higher, but primarily because it provides an insight into the political problem which this Legislature faces. The Treasurer's three cents a day for a typical residential customer is simply the bottom line summary of an analysis presented by Hydro to the select committee on Hydro affairs. The analysis will be found on page 9(a) of Exhibit D-89 in the committee's record. I invite honourable members to study it carefully. The first thing they may note is that it identifies Hydro's current excess capacity to be 3,400 megawatts and they may remember I have said it is 4,036 megawatts, a rather significant difference.

My research people arrived at 4,036 megawatts by reference to information supplied by Hydro too. They obtained the current installed capacity, they obtained the peak demand this winter, they added 25 per cent reserve margin to the peak demand and they deducted the total from the installed capacity to get an excess capacity of 4,036 megawatts.

All these terms and concepts have been standard in Hydro operations for years. But when we examine Hydro's own analysis of its excess capacity, what do we find? We do not find a figure for peak demand this winter, we find a figure for something called "firm peak load." It just happens to be some 500 megawatts lower than the consumption which was actually experienced. We do not find a figure for installed capacity. We find rather a figure for something called "actual capacity." It just happens to be 1,200 megawatts less than installed capacity. Presumably there is installed capacity which is not actual—which does not exist. Perhaps then the Treasurer will assure us that, having installed it, we don't have to pay for it because it's not really there.

The member for Prince Edward-Lennox (J. A. Taylor) has a great look of relief on his face that he doesn't have to cope with Hydro when it tells him installed capacity and actual capacity are different, even though we've got to pay the shot for the installed capacity.

Mr. Nixon: He holds Hydro bonds. That's why he's so relieved.

Mrs. Campbell: In trust.

Mr. S. Smith: By introducing new nomenclature, Hydro is able to get its excess capacity down to 3,400 megawatts, which is bad enough one may say, but hear the rest of it. Hydro then proceeds in Exhibit D-89 to estimate the cost of its excess capacity by assuming that if it had estimated current demand correctly back at the turn of the decade, it would never have built the last four units of the Nanticoke generating station.

As honourable members know, Nanticoke is a coal-fired station with lower capital cost than a nuclear station. There is, I believe, a Hydro exhibit somewhere in the select committee's record in which this cost analysis is worked out on the assumption of not having built the Bruce A nuclear station, but the end result was too costly for Hydro's taste and Nanticoke was substituting what we might call the authorized and cheaper version.

According to Exhibit D-89, the last four units of Nanticoke have a capacity of 2,100 megawatts and cost $391 million to install. Therefore—and this is Hydro's logic, not mine—3,400 megawatts of excess capacity have cost about $635 million. The interest, depreciation and overhead on this capital cost comes to $101 million per year which the Treasurer has reduced, no doubt for the sake of simplicity, to $100 million a year.

Hydro sold 9.9 billion kilowatt-hours of electricity last year, so this cost of $100 million a year applied to last year's sales comes to 1.12 mills per kilowatt-hour. Since the typical residential user consumes about 9,600 kilowatt-hours a year his extra cost is about $10.80 per year, or about 90 cents per month, or about three cents per day. That's what Hydro says. Even if one believed that the cost of Hydro's overexpansion is $100 million a year, that three cents a day would represent only the residential share of the burden.

Residential sales accounted for only 26 per cent of all Hydro's sales in Ontario last year. Who then is going to pay for the remaining 74 per cent, which comes to $74 million a year, if the total cost of $100 million is accepted? The Treasurer didn't mention that in his speech last week. Somehow the Premier forgot about it too when he was so anxious to have the House and the voters understand that protecting us from the ayatollah would only cost "some cents per week." Obviously, the industries, the businesses and the farms of Ontario will have to pay the $74 million per year. Perhaps some of them will be forced to absorb it in their costs of production, in which case the Treasurer may be able to inform us as to the expected loss of corporate income tax revenues.

(We on this side of the House do not accept the government's cost estimate of $100 million a year. The true figure is $320 million a year. I want to put on the record just how we arrived at this cost. There is nothing mumbo-jumbo about it.)

Ontario Hydro is required to publish a financial statement every year. It is also required to publish a prospectus when it issues new bonds. These documents report for each fiscal year the value of Hydro's fixed assets at cost.

We've used these documents in estimating the costs of Hydro's overbuilding—with one addition. Since the financial statement of 1978 is not yet available, we've made use of Exhibit D-77 in the select committee's record. Exhibit D-77 is a Hydro submission which contains the value of Hydro's fixed assets at cost for the year ending last December.

Earlier in my remarks I made the point that excess generating capacity does not simply mean excess generators. It includes transmission and distribution capacity as well as administrative infrastructure. All these things come under the heading of what Hydro's financial statements call "fixed assets in service."

I also noted earlier in my remarks that between the end of 1971 and the end of last year Hydro added 10,705 megawatts of generating capacity to its system. This was a net addition. It may be easily calculated by deducting the installed capacity at the end of 1971, namely 13,795 megawatts, from the installed capacity at the end of 1978, namely 24,500 megawatts. The value at cost of Hydro's fixed assets in service at the end of 1971 was $4,286 million. The value at cost of fixed assets in service at the end of 1978 was $9,639 million.

We may, therefore, legitimately say that the difference, namely $5,353 million, represents the cost of adding 10,705 megawatts of generating capacity to the system over that period of time.

I have already said that Hydro's current excess capacity is 4,036 megawatts and I have explained how this figure was arrived at. This represents 37.7 per cent of the capacity added to the system since 1971. Its cost, therefore, represents 37.7 per cent of the cost of those additions, or $2,018 million.

The annual cost to Hydro customers of this overexpansion may, therefore, be calculated as follows: interest at approximately 10 per cent, $202 million; depreciation of the assets on a 30-year-life basis, $67 million; maintenance, administration and other overhead, $51 million; total per year, $320 million.

Mr. Peterson: Disgraceful. Terrible.

Mr. J. Reed: Shame.

Mr. S. Smith: I may say, Mr. Speaker, that in calculating this amount we have used exactly the same formula as employed by Hydro in its submission to the select committee. Let's be clear on that. It's not $100 million and $100 million is not three cents a day. There is an additional $74 million they don't even think about when they talk about three cents a day. It's not $100 million anyway, it's $320 million, and that's only the situation to this date.

What does this extra cost mean to the typical residential user of electricity in Ontario? If it were spread over all the energy sold by Hydro in the province last year it added 3.56 mills per kilowatt-hour to the bill. For the typical residential user this amounted to $34.19 in a year, or 9.4 cents a day. The average residential hydro bill last year appears to have ranged between $280 and $300 for the year. The cost of the excess capacity was, therefore, about 12 per cent of the average bill, and that's just the excess capacity right now. There are other errors Hydro has made with regard to the heavy water plant. There are other errors in the excess capacity of tomorrow and some of the commitments already made and cancellation charges which we are already paying for today. That 12 per cent represents only the one error. There are many other errors and, frankly, if you put them all together it comes closer to 15 per cent.

Small wonder that hydro rates are going up—and this is just the cost of the excess capacity which is installed today. By the end of 1983, as I indicated earlier in my remarks, it will be two and a half times worse.

I shall conclude this portion of my reply with a final observation on the financial cost. Hydro's non-hydraulic generating capacity is generally capitalized and financed over a 30-year period. That means, roughly speaking, that the $320 million annual cost of Hydro's current over-expansion will have to be borne for 25 to 30 years. We are, therefore, looking at the expenditure of $8 million to $9 million before the burden of this mistaken and misguided policy is lifted from the economy. During the latter part of this period we will, hopefully, get some electrical power for our money, but for the earlier part we will not get a kilowatt because we can't use it. We don't need it and we never did. Our only hope is to sell as much as we can to our American neighbours, but it is a very faint hope because all the evidence indicates they don't need it either.

It is very amusing to think about how the government has been rushing to the defence of Hydro saying, "Isn't it great that we're overbuilt, because it's necessary security against what may happen in Iran," and then they're turning around and trying to sell firm power to the United States. But if we needed that necessary security, which of course we don't—it's a farce, the government knows we don't, they're clearly putting the best face they can on a bad situation—but if, in fact, they believed that this was a wonderful extra security we had, why are they trying to sell it to the States? However, that sort of little contradiction doesn't disturb the government of the day, of course.

[5:00]

Mr. J. Reed: Typical Tory management.

Mr. S. Smith: Anyway, our only hope is to sell as much as we can to our American neighbours, but that is a faint hope, as I say, because they don't need it either.

The Premier and his colleagues say, "Remember the ayatollah." I quote from the speech from the throne: "Foreign political instability makes it mandatory that we continue policies and programs which safeguard and enhance Ontario Hydro's production facilities as a future guarantee of domestic supplies."

What can this possibly mean, Mr. Speaker? Is there electricity coming into Ontario that might be lost because of political instability abroad? Hardly. How can the ayatollah from Iran threaten the security of Ontario's supply of electricity? It is very strange.

When the OPEC countries created the oil crisis of 1973 Ontario Hydro thought it would be good for Hydro, and of course what is good for Hydro is good for Ontario, they say. Mr. Higgins said as much about it being good for Hydro to the select committee on Ontario Hydro affairs. He said he thought the oil crisis of 1973 would stimulate the demand for electricity in Ontario and would help the Ontario economy generally. Apparently it never occurred to him that the 1973 crisis, with its staggering impact on oil prices generally, would hurt Ontario just as it hurt all the industrialized economies in the world, and that less electricity would be needed. Now we are hearing the same nonsense from the Premier and his colleagues: "Ontario Hydro's production facilities must be safeguarded and enhanced," they say, "because the ayatollah has returned to Iran."

If there is any rationale to this ayatollah business, it appears to lie in the belief that electricity can be substituted for oil to a significant degree in the economy. The Globe and Mail, for example, has suggested, apparently quite seriously, that the railway system could be electrified, and asked me to place my trust with Hydro rather than with Tehran. I notice however, that the Premier and his colleagues imply in a vague way that there are great possibilities for substitution, but they never actually use the term.

By the way, just to put the rest of the question of the railways, if we are going to electrify the railways, it would be about a 30-year project. We would have all the time in the world to build the generating capacity we would need once it is decided to undertake something like that. It is ludicrous to say that we have to have billions of extra generating capacity sitting here like museums with nothing to do but drain the money out of the ordinary ratepayers of the province of Ontario because somebody, some day 30 years hence might decide to electrify railways and that this would be some kind of protection against the ayatollah from Iran. What nonsense! Never have I heard worse nonsense spoken in the Legislature of Ontario than that which the Premier has offered us on that subject in recent days.

Mr. Breithaupt: Or in the Globe and Mail.

Mr. S. Smith: Or in the Globe and Mail editorial for that matter, but it wasn't spoken in the Legislature.

Mr. J. Reed: It is the Bermuda triangle again.

Mr. Martel: It is the ayatollah Lougheed.

Mr. S. Smith: You are right.

Perhaps they are aware, Mr. Speaker, of some awkward echoes from the past. On June 5, 1978, for example, the Ministry of Energy gave its views on substitution to the National Energy Board. You understand now, the Premier is telling us we need all this extra electricity to substitute it for oil we might not get. Here, on June 5 of last year, is what the Ministry of Energy said on that subject to the NEB:

"The extent to which the electrical energy can be technically or economically substituted for other energy forms in Ontario is not large, and is unlikely to substantially reduce the consumption of petroleum products." Indeed, the ministry declared the government of Ontario's vehement opposition to any federal attempt to promote the substitution of electricity for oil and gas in no uncertain terms.

I quote again: "Federal policies designed to increase the substitution of other energy forms for petroleum products which necessitate increased provincial investments such as for electrical generation and renewable energy must not interfere with provincial financial management." Provincial financial management, of course, is a sacred cow of provincial autonomy. Apparently there can be no federal interference with it. The Premier, the Treasurer, and Ontario Hydro are mismanagement enough.

The Ministry of Energy gave its view on substitution to the National Energy Board less than a year ago. It apparently does not see any reason to change them just because the ayatollah is loose in Iran. Here is the conclusion in a document entitled, substitution of Electricity for Oil Products and Natural Gas, submitted by the ministry to the select committee on Hydro affairs on February 23 last. Now, please understand, Mr. Speaker. You will remember the Premier standing in his seat to tell us that because of the problems in Iran we were lucky to have all this extra generating capacity, presumably to substitute for oil. That is the only possibility I can think of, if there is anything rational in what he said.

I have already told you, Mr. Speaker, that the Ministry of Energy in June of last year said that such substitution was unlikely. Here's what they said on February 23 of this year: "The preceding analysis deals with the potential for substituting electricity for other energy forms over the next 20 years. Despite considerable potential for such substitution in the residential, commercial and industrial sectors, there are numbers of factors that will act to constrain the degree of actual substitution: relative prices, existing infrastructure investments, including housing and conventional energy supply prospects. It can be expected"—I'm still quoting—"over the projection period that both the technology and the economics of renewable energy will improve. As a consequence, renewable energy will be in a position to meet an increasing, although still relatively limited, share of energy needs. The net effect will be a tendency to moderate the requirement for an increased use of electricity."

Now, some will say the Premier is not really concerned about the ayatollah in Iran; his concern is over the sheikh in Alberta.

Interjections.

Mr. Makarchuk: The ayatollah in Alberta as well.

Mr. Warner: Ayatollah Loughheed.

Mr. Makarchuk: Ayatollah Loughheed would be more appropriate.

Mr. Hennessy: When are you going on TV?

Mr. S. Smith: If so, you will understand that I say—

Mr. Hennessy: You and Cassidy, what a team. Starsky and Hutch.

Mr. S. Smith: I thought there was a comment from the member—for Fort William, is he? I'm afraid the member for Fort William, poor soul, has had just one too many blows to the cranium, I suspect.

Mr. Makarchuk: You should have worn your helmet, Mickey.

Mr. S. Smith: In any event, one of the advantages, of course, of having been jostled around, shall we say, in that part of the anatomy for some time is that at least he remains alert during these presentations. That's more than you can say for most of the people over there.

Mr. Eaton: That is pretty hard to do the way you have been droning on.

Mr. S. Smith: Most of them would rather not hear the facts, but at least he is willing to listen to them.

Mr. Hennessy: That's right.

Mr. S. Smith: As I say, most will realize that the Premier is not really all that concerned about Iran. His concern is over the sheikh in Alberta. If so, Mr. Speaker, you will understand if I say that in a sense I share that concern. Indeed, I think the presence of Peter Loughheed in Alberta and William Davis in Ontario is something about which every Canadian should be deeply concerned.

Mr. Hennessy: Stuart Smith in Florida.

Mr. S. Smith: The federal government appears to be concerned too, because it has introduced standby legislation to allocate oil and gas supplies. What did the Davis government do in response to that prudent move? It dispatched its newly appointed parliamentary assistant to the Ministry of Energy, the member for Durham West (Mr. Ashe), to Ottawa to foam at the mouth—something he does very well—and to castigate the federal bill as “a camouflaged War Measures Act for which there is no present need.”

It is amazing. One day the Premier stands here and says, “We've got to throw $2 billion away because of the terrible crisis that may fall upon us at any moment due to what has happened in Iran.” Then he sends the parliamentary assistant to say, “There's no need for any kind of emergency-type legislation. What's the problem?” It's amazing how they talk out of two sides of their face. But, then again, I suppose, they talk out of one side of each face, so it's not so bad.

Mr. J. Reed: It's been going on for a decade.

Mr. S. Smith: Did not this government support identical federal standby legislation during the energy crisis of 1973? Did it not enact parallel legislation in its own jurisdiction? What is one to make of the comment of the Minister of Energy to the press last week when he said, “The government objects to the present federal bill because it dealt primarily with electricity, whereas the 1974 bill dealt primarily with oil supplies”? What's he talking about? Has he not compared the two bills?

Does he not know that they are virtually word for word, period for period, comma for comma, the same? Does he not know that the only reference to electricity is in section 15 of both bills, identical in each instance, and if those references require provincial approval before the federal government can regulate the supply of electric power within a province, what nonsense was he talking when he gave that interview to the press?

Mr. Speaker, it's such a pity really. We had to suffer through one uninformed Energy minister after another. Finally, we have the present one who keeps a low key, who sends his assistant to Ottawa, but even he has to go to the press and make it obvious that he doesn't know the first thing about the subject he is discussing.

The policy of Hydro is a Davis policy. The blunder of Hydro is a Davis blunder. Yet today there's a bloated Hydro empire virtually out of control, costing the power users of Ontario millions of dollars for years to come, and it is because the Premier of the province allowed it to happen. He could have stopped it; he had the power to stop it; he was warned repeatedly to stop it, and he didn't stop it.

Oh, the Premier will say, “You're being wise by hindsight.” He says, “You have 20-20 vision looking backwards.” Mr. Speaker, I look back at the record. In June 1976 the select committee on Hydro issued its famous report, A New Public Policy Direction for Ontario Hydro, in which the committee expressed its conviction in numerous recommendations that Hydro's expansion program was too ambitious, too grandiose, too unnecessary.

How did the Davis government respond at that time? I quote from the government's response to the committee's recommendations: “The select committee's recommendation to reduce Hydro's system capacity even further by deferring another generating station, either Bruce B or Darlington, would result in greatly increased risk of blackouts and brownouts. The government feels this puts the consumer at too great a risk and therefore it cannot accept this recommendation."

The select committee recommended that Hydro develop a new generating plant to bring additions down to what the committee regarded as reasonable target levels. I quote from the government's response again: "The select committee has recommended that Hydro develop a new generation plant and during its discussions suggested that Hydro cancel either the Bruce B or the Darlington generation station. As described in the response to recommendation 3-23, this would greatly increase the risk to the consumer. Further postponement would have a serious effect on the economy of the province and put the consumer to considerable risk without reducing appreciably the cost of electricity."

The select committee's report of 1976 was not the first to express concern over Hydro's expansionism. Let me quote from the Ontario Energy Board's report of August 1974, entitled, Ontario's Hydro Power System Expansion Program and Financial Policies: "The board does not consider that Hydro has made a convincing case in respect of the amount of reserve generating capacity which it requires. No evidence was adduced by Hydro which would give the board any measure of the degree of service reliability required by its customers other than an express desire to follow an arbitrary industry standard. In the opinion of the board"—and I want you to listen to this, Mr. Speaker—"the generation reserve margins proposed by Hydro for the program period 1977 to 1982 could be reduced substantially without significantly affecting the quality of service or the choice of economically optimal alternatives." That is from a 1974 report.

"In view of the foregoing"—I continue to read from that report of the Ontario Energy Board—"the board's suggested important modifications to the reserve capacity policy of Hydro are warranted and positive action must be taken to formulate a policy regarding generation reserve which more properly reflects customer requirements."

On February 4, 1976, the Ontario Energy Board reported on Hydro's bulk power rates for 1976. I quote from the report, Ontario Energy Board, 1976: "The board is alarmed to learn that even after the reduction in reliability that resulted from the directive of the provincial Treasurer, Ontario Hydro's planned levels of reliability over the next six years are still well in excess of its stated target of one in 2,400 which the board in 1974 and most interveners in 1975 characterized as generous. However, as the board has said that the load forecast is likely to prove if anything too high, it strongly urges Ontario Hydro to consider taking immediate steps to reduce its generating margin.

"The board believes that if it is being asked to sanction rate increases, a large part of which is needed to assist in the financing of future plants, then it behooves Ontario to ensure as best it can that the reserve margins resulting from the expansion program are the minimum necessary to provide adequate supply reliability.

"The board urges Ontario Hydro to adopt its 1974 recommendation that planned reserve capacity requirements be reduced."

I could quote the record ad infinitum to the same effect.

The Premier talks about hindsight. He was warned. Hydro was warned. Ontario was warned.

We in this party were concerned. Members of the NDP were concerned. The select committee was concerned. The chairman of Ontario Energy Board was concerned. All sorts of citizens were concerned very early in the game that there was and is an imperialism at work in Hydro, a determination to grow at any price which could only end, if left unchecked, in the kind of gross waste and cost we face today.

But what do we hear from the Premier? Nothing but variations of the old theme: Leave Hydro alone or the lights will go out. It is better to have too much than not enough. What is good for Hydro is good for Ontario—

An hon. member: The lights went out for you a long time ago.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Fort William will realize that interjections are out of order; but it's positively out of order to interject from other than your own seat.

An hon. member: Very well; thank you.

Mr. S. Smith: The member is required to rise from his seat from time to time to give his brain a rest.

Mr. Eaton: Is that why you have been standing all this time?

Mr. S. Smith: The former Treasurer knew what Hydro was doing. In January 1976, Darcy McKeough exercised his right in law to tell Hydro they could not raise the money for this expansionism. At the time he told them they did not need it anyway.

Perhaps I should spell that out a bit, Mr. Speaker, because the Minister of Energy's deputy tried to suggest before the select committee that Darcy McKeough's action of January 1976 was an approval of Hydro's load forecast at that time and a denial of the necessary funds for strictly financial reasons.

I quote from the McKeough letter of January 22, 1976, to the chairman of Ontario Hydro:

"I appreciate that the long-term electrical demand forecast by Ontario Hydro shows a trend of about seven per cent a year. After examining the province's and Hydro's financing capacity, you may decide that it is necessary to meet and discuss with the Minister of Energy the development of energy policies which would permit the expansion of load capacity in the range of, say, five to six per cent per annum."

The Deputy Minister of Energy may regard that as an approval of Hydro's load forecast if he wishes, but I think we all know what Darcy McKeough was saying. After all, he had no control over the load forecast. All he could control was the financial result of that load forecast.

But they are two sides to the same coin: load forecasting is meaningless without the money to implement it. When Darcy McKeough told Hydro it could not have the money for seven per cent, while at the same time saying Hydro should be looking at five to six per cent, he was saying that a seven per cent growth rate in electrical demand was grandiose and unnecessary.

Darcy McKeough knew what he was talking about. He had a computer. He had a ministry with a good record for tracking and predicting the impact of tax changes and other things. We now know that the Treasury had been doing some load forecasting on its own and was able to show Darcy McKeough that Hydro's forecasts of seven per cent per year were beyond the range of reasonable probability.

Those Treasury forecasts came to light in a submission to the Porter commission in May 1976. They are fascinating reading. They consist of five different scenarios, in which the variables employed were given various weights. The lowest prediction of electrical demand to the year 1995 was at a rate of increase of 3.5 per cent. The highest was at a rate of 5.5 per cent.

The Treasury made a point of noting to the Porter commission that a growth rate of 5.5 per cent a year to 1985 could only be reached by making generous adjustments for population growth, employment and so on. Its submission contained a very pointed section on the very unlikely probability that the historical growth rate of seven per cent would continue. That could only happen, it pointed out, if there were a progressive decline in electricity prices relative to oil and gas; if there were reversal of the downtrend in birth rates; if there were increased immigration; if there were an absence of the conservation ethic, if there were a failure to develop energy-efficient technology, and so on.

We do not have to ask if Darcy McKeough pressed that evidence and that view on his cabinet colleagues, we know that he did; he was that kind of man, he was that kind of Treasurer.

I asked the Premier on Thursday last to explain why Darcy McKeough was overruled. He, of course, fobbed it off in his usual way, claiming that ultimate responsibility for load forecasting lay with Ontario Hydro. I shall deal with that point in a moment, but let me say for the record what every member in this House knows to be so, that Darcy McKeough fought Ontario Hydro and Darcy McKeough lost. He lost because the Premier overruled him, and the Premier overruled him because Hydro policy was Davis policy.

There was one man in the government of Ontario during the 1970s who knew what was wrong at Ontario Hydro and tried to stop it. I say to the Premier in words he may remember: That man is gone.

Now the Premier says it was Hydro's responsibility. The implication of that, of course, is that it was Hydro's mistake, although heaven forbid that the Premier should have made a mistake of any kind, because too much power is good for us and what is good for Hydro is good for Ontario, let's remember.

It is hardly surprising that the Premier and his colleagues are trying to work both sides of the street on this issue. On the one hand they said it was a Hydro mistake; on the other hand they say there was no mistake because we need the excess generating capacity for security of supply. They have to do this because they know they cannot try to blame Hydro alone. They know that if they tried that we would produce every order in council, every cabinet approval issued since 1973 for every aspect of Hydro's expansion program.

That, perhaps, is the nub of the matter. Under the Power Corporation Act, Hydro can operate its system and it can plan and dream as it pleases; but it cannot build, it cannot acquire, it cannot expand, without cabinet approval. Every generation project must be authorized by order in council and every project, every step in this march to gross overexpansion, was approved by this Premier and this government.

Ah, but the Premier says the Power Corporation Act gives Hydro an arm's length independence from the government which the government must respect because the Power Corporation Act was passed by the Legislature. Well, not by this Liberal Party, Mr. Speaker, not by this Liberal Party. The leader of the Liberal Party at that time, the member for—was it Brant-Haldimand-Norfolk at that time?

Mr. Nixon: Brant.

Mr. Peterson: A great guy.

Mr. Foulds: You don't even know his riding, eh?

Mr. S. Smith: The member for Brant, as it was then, and now the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk, made it very clear how this party regarded the main provision of that legislation, which was to create an arm's length relationship by recreating the Ontario Hydro-Electric Commission as a crown corporation.

Mr. Foulds: Why isn't there anybody in the galleries?

Mr. S. Smith: On page 3304 of Hansard for June 18, 1973, the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk said: "We in the Liberal Party do not approve of that separation from government policy. We feel it should be left as a commission and the powers of the government asserted so that in fact its control over the commission will be directly responsible to this House through the appropriate minister."

Mr. T. P. Reid: He knew what he was talking about.

Mr. Eaton: Is that right? Did you say that?

Mr. Nixon: How's that for foresight?

Mr. S. Smith: The problem with Hydro even then, my colleague noted, was that it was "operating autonomously and surprisingly inefficiently." On behalf of the Liberal Party he declared: "I, for one, will never vote in favour of any further separation of that monolith from the public control of this Legislature."

Mr. Peterson: A wise man.

Mr. S. Smith: The government's response, however, was characteristically one of saying one thing and doing another. It said that Liberal concern was groundless, because while Hydro would be at arm's length from the government the new Power Corporation Act contained many provisions whereby Hydro could be made to operate under public control and in compliance with government policy. That was the assurance given by the government then: Not to worry, not to worry; the new Power Corporation Act didn't give them all that independence, they would still have to come for various approvals. But when it suits his purposes, the Premier of Ontario stands up in this House and says: "Well, I can't take the blame for those mistakes. I didn't make all those decisions. Hydro is independent. It acts at arm's length from the Legislature." Sure, when it suits their purposes they can say that.

Mr. J. Reed: And the NDP supports them.

Mr. S. Smith: In fact, the Hydro policy has been the government's policy. That's the final conclusion, I guess, of the submission I make to the House at this time.

There was and is enough authority in the Power Corporation Act to have stopped Hydro's ambition. That authority was not used. Instead, the program of Hydro was approved every step of the way. This has, in fact, been a most serious and a most costly instance of government mismanagement in Ontario.

How has this affected the ordinary power consumer? How does it feel, at a time when people want to have more purchasing power in the hands of ordinary people so as to get the economy moving, so as to create jobs in the private sector; how reasonable is it that in fact 12 per cent to 15 per cent of the hydro bills of these people, these ordinary citizens today, can be regarded basically as an unnecessary tax which these people are paying into the coffers of government to pay for the huge unnecessary loans which were made mostly in the United States of America?

What kind of situation is it where the government talks about the joys of free enterprise, the need to have purchasing power in the hands of people and then, by condoning and by creating errors of this kind, increases the hydro bills of these people, the ordinary power users, in this way?

Apart from the errors made, there are other things which can be done, of course, in Hydro policy to help the ordinary user. Why did Hydro change its policy in front of the Ontario Energy Board when it came to the question of marginal cost pricing? Why did Hydro suddenly decide to cave in to the demands of the association of major power users and operate against the interests of the ordinary citizens when you consider the amount of time and study which went into that marginal cost pricing report? With even partial marginal cost pricing the ordinary user would get a break, and it is about time he did have some breaks.

Again, my colleague the member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent) has proposed a private member's bill, which also would help the ordinary citizens—

Mr. Peterson: Great member.

Mr. Foulds: Don't let that praise go to your head, Eddie.

Mr. Roy: You should have that kind of talent on your back benches.

Mr. Sterling: I wish he was. Come on over.

Mr. S. Smith:—those ordinary citizens who need just a fundamental amount of electricity, just a basic amount of electricity. Instead, they are charging them more for each kilowatt hour, as now happens where the person who uses the least pays the most for each kilowatt hour; the individual just barely getting by on the bare necessities to keep body and soul together pays more per kilowatt hour than members opposite heating their swimming pools.

Mr. Foulds: What?

Mr. Sterling: I haven't got a swimming pool.

Mr. Foulds: Which of you is guilty?

Mr. S. Smith: He has suggested, and I agree, that these people should in fact have a break. They should get the cheapest electricity and there should be an adjustment of electricity rates to help people so that the domestic user can get a basic fundamental amount of electricity at the lowest price, not at the highest price; and that is something a Liberal government will do once we achieve government in this province.

Mr. Speaker, I have gone on at some considerable length dealing with basically the need for an industrial strategy in Ontario, pointing out how the manufacturing industries, which are the lifeblood of Ontario, have been allowed to deteriorate to the point where we have become deindustrialized in this province under 36 years of rule which was interested more in the Gallup Poll than it was in doing something for the future citizens of this province.

Mr. Peterson: Our children will pay.

Mr. S. Smith: Why is it that we find ourselves with jobs now going begging for trained personnel? We have spent billions on education and yet we don't have people ready to take those jobs. Why is it that with a need for high technology we have only one polytechnic in Ontario, and even that being squeezed to the point of ruin by the government of Ontario?

Why is it we have a government which is unable, apparently, to understand the degree of foreign domination in our economy and still is running about cap in hand hoping to attract more branch plants while being devoid of real programs to give incentives to Canadian industries to let them get a leg up in the world, to let them get out there and compete in our domestic market and in our world market the way they should be doing?

Why is it we have a government that still feels the corporation can somehow be encouraged to avoid the proper degree of corporate responsibility to the environment, to society generally, to the community, to labour, and of course to our country?

These are great differences, which we have pointed out in this afternoon's address Mr. Speaker, great differences between the Conservative Party and the Liberal Party in Ontario.

We believe in corporate responsibility; we have a code of corporate behaviour and we have a feeling that corporations must serve the ends of society. We also believe that foreign domination of our corporate sector is already far too great, is a terrible drain on this economy and that we need policies to redress that dreadful situation.

We believe that Ontario Hydro has overbuilt; and we believe that the ridiculous excuses of the Premier and the various ministers suggesting that we're lucky to have this excess capacity, are nothing but stuff and nonsense which do not bear the scrutiny of reasonable, intelligent people, nor will they stand up for any length of time.

We have demonstrated the errors of Hydro go well back into the attitude and history of that utility, and in fact are the errors of this government. The fact is that they have done nothing to stop the overspending of Hydro. They have done nothing to recognize the burden which this places on the ordinary power users in the province of Ontario. And they, and they alone, must bear the responsibility for the terrible mess this has created for all Ontarians at a time when the economy of Ontario most needs stimulation and when it most needs the buildup of its private sector, they've allowed the colossus of Ontario Hydro to put this terrible drain on it.

To have to sit and listen to jingles about turning off light bulbs when they've thrown billions down the drain can only be described as grotesque. It is adding insult to injury, that's the only way to express it. Those ludicrous jingles continue at a time when conservation seems to mean one thing; when they talk about turning off light bulbs, the only thing they're not interested in conserving at Hydro is money, they feel they have an unlimited supply of that to throw around. It would be nice if conservation began at home. It would be nice if conservation was reflected in Hydro's financial statement, and the financial statement of Hydro.

However, Hydro has the provincial government to copy; the grandiose overbuilding of various schemes and the way in which it goes into the red and builds up the provincial debt, Hydro has a good teacher in this regard.

I have been pleased to take the opportunity to discuss some of these ideas with the House in response to the speech from the throne, and I look forward to further debate on these and related matters.

Mr. Peterson: That was a great speech.

On motion by Mr. Cassidy, the debate was adjourned.

House in committee of the whole.

PROVINCIAL OFFENCES ACT

Resumption of the adjourned consideration of Bill 74, An Act to establish a Code of Procedure for Provincial Offences.

Mr. Chairman: Order. I believe when the committee last recessed we were discussing section 52. Are there any further comments, questions or amendments?

Sections 52 and 53 agreed to.

On section 54:

Mr. Lawlor: Just one word on section 54. On subsection 2, we mentioned this in committee and I mention it again, I think that in these private cases, which are not prosecutions in the strict sense at all, where a private citizen lays a charge against another private citizen and doesn't show up on two occasions the thing should be dismissed; not just maybe. I would ask that be taken into consideration.

Mr. Sterling: I think the problem that was discussed in the committee and the answer to your concern, related to the situation where a person who had laid a complaint was unable to appear because of circumstances totally beyond his control, such as sickness. It seemed unfair in those very particular situations to shut that prosecution down at that particular time. It was for those particular instances that this clause reads "may" rather than "shall dismiss the charge."

Section 54 agreed to.

Sections 55 to 63, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 64:

Mr. Lawlor: I still find a persisting if not a contradictory dichotomy between section 64 on one side and section 59, which was added subsequently, on the other side.

Section 64(1) says "The term of an imprisonment imposed by a sentence shall, unless otherwise directed in the sentence,"—that's the saving part of this thing—"commence on the day when the convicted person is taken into custody, but no time during which the convicted person is imprisoned or out on bail"—we can understand out on bail—"before sentence shall be reckoned as part of the term of imprisonment."

I would like a further explanation of this particular thing. I think it's in contradiction, to a degree, with section 59. In any event, on its merits why shouldn't the period of time in which a person has been imprisoned be taken into account? Why do you go to such great trouble to exclude it and then towards the end of the thing surreptitiously kind of bring it back in again?

Mr. Sterling: I think, basically, it was formulated in that particular way in order to allow the court to have the discretion to deal with the matter in terms of sentencing, as it should properly have. In other words, it was just formulated, with no intention of not taking into account the period of time when the accused was incarcerated prior to the trial. There was no malicious intent in drafting it in that particular way.

Mr. Lawlor: I'll leave it alone at the present time because we're all anxious to see this become law, but I think it's done backwards. The whole thing is stated inversely to the way it actually should be. I suppose that was the true intent, namely, that precisely the time taken when a convicted person is placed in prison would be taken into account at the time of sentencing. That is the central fact about the section and where the justice of the thing is. But why it goes around in the opposite way, excluding rather than including, is quite puzzling to me.

Mr. Sterling: I cite a possible problem that could arise, which would be in a very unusual circumstance where the person was in fact incarcerated for a period longer than the period of time that the offence carried as punishment. That possibility could arise.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, he should be compensated.

Mr. Sterling: I just don't know how the court would deal with that particular circumstance, if it did arise.

Mr. Lawlor: I'd send you a bill.

Section 64 agreed to.

Sections 65 to 78, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 79:

Mr. Lawlor: I have just a query arising out of section 79. Is the fact that a justice may infer the age of a person from his appearance general law? Is that true about bartenders serving stimulants or beverages to minors? My feeling is that is not normally the case, that whether they are at a particular age or not is not to be determined by their mere appearance but by their actual calendar age.

Mr. Sterling: I think the problem relates to an evidentiary problem, in terms of proving the age of a person who is not called as a witness in a particular hearing. In other words, do you require in a situation where a young person is involved and he is not to be called as a witness that he have his birth certificate? How do you prove his age if you don't have his birth certificate? Even when he's called, it's a question of hearsay. If he says, "I'm 16"; how do you know he's 16 if he doesn't have his birth certificate?

Mr. Roy: How do we do it generally?

Mr. Sterling: I guess we ask the witness. We ask the witness how old he is and we accept that, but in fact it's hearsay. It's a question of when the mother or father is not available to the courts how do you prove the age of a child?

Mr. Foulds: But you normally accept it.

Mr. Stong: Call his mother.

Mrs. Campbell: She should know.

Mr. Lawlor: I just think it's a criteria that is rather easier on justices, et cetera, than it is on bartenders. Why they should be lifted and given such an elevation? The consequences that flow from it can be very serious, as to whether or not that individual is amenable to that particular court or should be in a juvenile court instead simply because he happens to be an overgrown child.

Mr. Sterling: The section is also contained in the code, and there will be cases which have held that you can't rely on that particular subsection where other evidence is available to prove the age of the child. It was put in there for the circumstance perhaps where the parents are no longer living.

Mr. Chairman: Shall section 79 stand as part of the bill? Carried?

Mr. Roy: Well, just a second. That bothers me a little bit.

Mr. Chairman: Is this on 79?

Mr. Roy: Right; on 79, yes. I am convinced there is no provision in the code which says that a judge can infer the age of an individual. Is that provision in the code? What section of the code?

Mr. Sterling: Section 585-2 of the Criminal Code of Canada says: "In the absence of other evidence or by way of corroboration of other evidence, a jury, judge, justice or magistrate, as the case may be, may infer the age of a child or young person from his appearance."

Mr. Roy: Is that the summary conviction provision of the criminal code now?

Mr. Sterling: It has general application.

Mr. Roy: To indictable offences?

Mr. Stong: Mr. Chairman, there is one other aspect of that. The common law has defined that to be limited to where there is no other evidence or it's not readily available. There is a case that follows right under which says if there is other evidence available then you just can't go on inference from appearance. So there is a greater onus than what you have alleged in this act under the Criminal Code.

[5:45]

Mr. Sterling: I think I indicated, referring to the decision in Regina and Leonard, that the subsection under the Criminal Code cannot be relied on where evidence of the age of the child is readily available. I would submit that the same law would apply to this subsection.

Section 79 agreed to.

Sections 80 to 94, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 95:

Mr. Roy: Perhaps the parliamentary assistant can assist me here. The appeal provisions and payment of the fine, et cetera, have to be changed from what the law generally was pertaining to appeal from summary conviction. As I recall, it was not necessary to pay the fine prior to filing an appeal. As I read the section now, the notice of appeal by the defendant shall not be accepted for filing if the defendant has not paid in full the fine imposed by the decision appealed from.

Possibly you could explain why you felt it necessary to change the existing law? Having in mind that most of these decisions appealed from will come from a justice of the peace, not from a provincial judge or somebody like that who has more training in the law, I would like to hear some justification for having changed the approach. As I recall, it was not necessary that the fine be paid prior to the appeal being processed or accepted for filing.

Mr. Sterling: You are correct in pointing to the situation as it is now. Basically what has happened is we have experienced an abuse of the system in terms of motor vehicle infractions where people are filing appeals in order to postpone the payment of fine and getting points on their licences. You will notice under subsection 2 that where the convicted person can enter into a recognizance as the judge directs, it still leaves the opening where the situation is such that it would be very onerous on the convicted person to come forward and show that in fact it would be onerous while the appeal is going on. Basically it has been used to abuse the point system in terms of putting that off for a further period of time.

Mr. Roy: If I might just continue this discussion, are you saying therefore that not only do you have to pay the fine when you go to appeal, but you would be losing points in the interim period pending the appeal? That doesn't seem to make sense.

The point I am trying to make is if you felt you had proper grounds of appeal, and as an example if one was approaching the maximum number of points and in appealing he just paid his fine and lost his points—and he would lose his licence for a month or two months—then you would be frustrating the whole purpose of the appeal. He may be right in law that there was a mistake made at the lower level by the justice of the peace.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Are you arguing law?

Mr. Roy: Yes, I am. You wouldn't understand that; you've got a chauffeur and points aren't that important.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Of course not; I haven't been there for 20 years.

Mr. Roy: But to the ordinary fellow out there these appeals are pretty important.

Hon. Mr. Davis: What do you mean? For the guys like you making big fees?

Mr. Roy: For the every-day person on the street—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh come on. You are talking about your profession.

Mr. Foulds: His income is more than yours.

Mr. Roy: I think you will agree with me that it doesn't make much sense to have an appeal process if the individual has to suffer the consequences of an earlier conviction. What the parliamentary assistant has said bothers me, that there have been abuses. As I understand it there was definitely an abuse of trial de novo; but that has been taken out of the code now, you can only get a trial de novo if the court gives leave. It doesn't have to give leave to have a summary conviction appeal but it has to give leave for a trial de novo.

I understand that with the amendments the Criminal Code has cut down a lot on the number of appeals that have been made from these summary conviction offences. My point is this: If an individual, in principle, has to suffer the consequences of an earlier sentence in appealing, we are undermining the process of appeal; that bothers me somewhat.

Correct me if I'm wrong, but as I understand your comments one would have to pay the fine; secondly, one would lose the points. There may well be some circumstances where he is suffering the consequences of an earlier sentence before he even gets a hearing on the appeal.

Mr. Sterling: The situation is such that on an appeal for any reason the points are still suspended. It is just a question of experience with the system as it now stands; where for example there have been many appeals filed in order to stay points for a period of time, six months or whatever. That, really, has been the only reason for the appeal. Many appeals are abandoned after that period of time.

Basically, this section just switches the onus more to the convicted defendant to make, we hope, a more rational decision on what he is dealing with.

Mr. Kerr: You are discouraging appeal.

Mr. Sterling: We are trying to discourage him from the use of appeal.

Mr. Roy: Either you give him the right or you don't.

Mr. Sterling: He has the right, and the section says he pays the fine.

Mr. Roy: And he loses the points.

Mr. Sterling: No, he doesn't lose the points. He stays the points until the appeal is heard; the points are stayed.

Mr. Roy: The points are stayed?

Mr. Sterling: Yes. He could still get around, or delay, the implementation of the points. But it is more difficult for him to do it, in terms of financial incentive, under this particular section.

Mr. Roy: Let me pick you up on that. As I understand it, the abuses in the appeals were not so much to avoid payment of the fine as to avoid the consequences of a conviction. That is my experience in the abuses of the appeal program as it then existed. If that is the case, and you are saying basically that the points are stayed—the imposition of the loss of points is stayed pending the appeal—then why would he have to pay the fine?

Mr. Kerr: He won't hire the lawyer twice.

Mr. Roy: What I'm trying to say to you, basically, is this: My experience hasn't been that people generally appeal just to stay the paying of a fine. Those fines, at that level, are not very big. On an average they are relatively modest. But the whole principle of an appeal process is that you set up a system whereby an individual is free, whatever the decision, to appeal. There should not be a disincentive on the part of certain defendants or accuseds to appeal.

To get back to the point: I think you are trying to curb an abuse; you are not doing it by just attacking the question of a fine. I think that the abuse, if there was any, was in relation—I can recall, for instance, in impaired cases or driving under or over .08, that those were the type of cases where there were abuses and appeals. What they were doing, in those cases, was delaying the imposition of the loss of his driver's licence. For instance, he wanted to drive during the Christmas period or something, so you appealed during that period. Six months later the appeal is heard and, come the fall or come summertime, he doesn't mind losing his licence. There were abuses there.

My concern was that in fact I had not known the experience where people were abusing the appeal process to avoid paying the fine.

Mr. Sterling: I can only reiterate what I said before in terms of trying to discourage the present abuse we are experiencing; and saying further that subsection 2 allows convicted persons to apply to a judge to alleviate any onerous fine which they are unable to pay at that particular time.

Also, under the other sections of the act it is almost automatic that they have time to pay that particular fine anyway. So that there are many other areas of the act which enable them to negotiate with the judge or justice of the peace to make the payment of the fine less onerous than it is now.

Mr. Roy: I just want to correct you again on that last point. The section states very clearly that the fine has to be paid before there is a filing; so whether you have got time or not, I understand—

Mrs. Campbell: In full.

Mr. Roy: In full. So as I understand it that last point you made would not apply, because you have to pay the fine before they will accept your appeal.

Mrs. Campbell: Could I just go back to the type of thing we did in committee, because I felt that all too often we got ourselves off on the wrong foot on traffic matters? In order to involve some of my colleagues: what happens in the case of that very heavy penalty which I understand would apply here under the Abandoned Orchards Act? I must continue to admit I know nothing about it, but I understand it carries a very heavy penalty of several thousand dollars. Is that not correct? If that is the case, how in the world would anybody get to appeal if they had to pay that first?

Mr. Sterling: As I say, the very reason for subsection 2 is to enable the judge to determine whether the fellow is, in fact, legitimate or if he is a rotten apple.

Mrs. Campbell: Don't bring that into the abandoned orchard.

Mr. Sterling: I really do believe that the situation is such that the judge has enough discretion under subsection 2. Again, our experience is that the section is needed at this time.

Mr. Lawlor: We will never get finished with this legislation today, obviously, so I have only one other comment to make. The legislation which has been decriminalized is therefore more onerous on a so-called defendant than the crimes, because by taking an appeal you can put aside for a brief time the consequences of the act; here, you can't. So you have reached a result which is the direct contrary of what it is that you sought to reach. We did not take any great umbrage with it because this is the kind of legislation that makes opportunists of us all—I will tell you about it tomorrow.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Welch the committee of the Whole House reported progress.

The House recessed at 6 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, MARCH 13, 1979

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS PUBLIC TRANSIT POLICY

Mr. Cassidy moved motion 1:

That as the government of Ontario has refused to provide $6 million to the Toronto Transit Commission to maintain present transit fares for one year and has failed to revise its public transit subsidy formula, thus undermining public transit in Ontario; and as this refusal reflects the government's policy to permit public transit fares to increase in the province; therefore this government no longer enjoys the confidence of the House.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, this is a motion of no confidence in the government and it arises out of the situation concerning the Toronto Transit Commission and concerning the situation of transit in the province generally. I'll read the motion for the edification of the government and in case it hasn't absorbed its import:

"That as the government of Ontario has refused to provide $6 million to the Toronto Transit Commission to maintain present transit fares for one year and has failed to revise its public transit subsidy formula, thus undermining public transit in Ontario; and as this refusal reflects the government's policy to permit public transit fares to increase in the province; therefore this government no longer enjoys the confidence of the House."

Mr. Turner: You don't believe that, do you?

Mr. Cassidy: The New Democratic Party has brought this motion of no confidence in the government for three reasons. The first reason is that the New Democrats have had a long-standing commitment to mass transit and all it means for the health of our cities, and we could not let the Conservatives back down, not just on the city of Toronto, but also on Ottawa and London and Thunder Bay and all the other communities which have recently had fare increases, or which are facing fare increases, because of the inadequate transit subsidy formula which we have in the province of Ontario; not only that, but all of those cities where transit is now being squeezed by rising fares and declining ridership and all that means for the future life of those particular cities.

This motion is not just about the TTC; this motion is about transit in 58 cities and towns across Ontario. In our opinion what is happening to transit is also happening to OHIP, to hospitals, to schools, to day care, to mental health centres for children, in fact to every imaginable service which is provided by government, services which in our opinion are essential to people but which have come under the axe because of the priorities of the province of Ontario. They don't put grants to Ford Motor Company and the pulp and paper industry under the axe, but they put every imaginable service which is important to the working people of this province under the sledge-hammer in 1979, and first on the list was transit when we came back into this Legislature on March 6.

Mr. Johnson: What about western Ontario?

Mr. Hennessy: This is John the Baptist.

Mr. Cassidy: When we were faced with all the cutbacks now being made to these services by the Davis government, we felt we could not stand by and let the working people of this province take it in the neck. Given the apparent determination of the Liberal Party to hang tough on this issue, we felt this was one of those rare occasions in a minority government situation where if we took the leadership we could get support from the official opposition and make the government back down on a decision which we felt was a bad decision in itself and which set a dangerous precedent as far as the future life of our cities is concerned.

We know what happened. The Liberal Party proved once again to have the backbone of a jellyfish.

Some hon. members: Shame, shame.

Mr. Foulds: You flatter them; you flatter them too much.

Mr. Cassidy: I hope I don't exaggerate. Even last Thursday in the emergency debate they could have stood with the transit riders in Toronto and across Ontario and they could have forced the government to back down on its decision about transit fares in Toronto and the rest of the province by announcing they would support our motion of no confidence, but they failed to do so.

You know, Mr. Speaker, that on an issue like that if both of the parties of the opposition had pushed the government, the government would in fact have changed its mind. But one of the opposition parties was not prepared to stay with the transit riders and the ordinary people of the province. In fact, the Liberals and the Conservatives combined in order to make sure that this particular motion was not debated last Friday. In the House leaders' meeting the two of them ensured that the debate would not be held until after the fares went up on Monday.

An hon. member: Do you want your crying towel now?

Mr. Cassidy: After all the crocodile tears have been shed by the member for Hamilton West (Mr. S. Smith), by Conservative Paul Godfrey, the chairman of Metropolitan Toronto, and by the Conservatives generally, we are now faced with a situation where the transit fares in Toronto have gone up.

We're not worried by the fact that this debate is, so-called, "after the fact," because the fact is that under the Conservative policy transit fares will continue to go up. We have been warned that TTC fares will soon go up to a dollar or so a ride. They are rising inexorably by seven and a half per cent a year, and similar formulas are being imposed on transit authorities in every other part of the province.

As far as we are concerned, therefore, this debate today is not just a debate about what happened in Toronto, it is also symbolic of whether or not we will continue to have decent public transit in our cities in the years to come. It is no different than voting in December on a budget where we move that it is a no-confidence amendment after the budget is brought down in April.

The Premier (Mr. Davis) said to me last week when we had the emergency debate that my friends in the UAW must be unhappy with what we are saying. I want the Deputy Premier to take word back to his leader that back in 1975 Dennis McDermott, then the Canadian director of the UAW, came before the Ontario government with a brief which said specifically, and I quote—

Mr. Turner: This is 1979. You are only four years behind, Mike, which is normal?

Mr. Cassidy: "Mass transit: There must be greater government subsidization of mass transit. We recommend that the province raise its subsidization of operating costs from 50 per cent to 75 per cent."

But that, he said, was not alone, because we have to change the planning of our urban system in order to ensure that it is no longer controlled just by business interests that want to give free sway to the automobile.

The UAW said that the automobile is not about to disappear. We agreed. They said what we need is an urban environment where a car is not an absolute necessity, but where we have a sane, balanced, private and public transportation system; and of course that is what we are in danger of losing in our cities because of the kinds of policies the government is pursuing at this time.

When the government could find $300 million for Rio Algom and Denison Mines, when it can find hundreds of millions of dollars for industry of all kinds, for them to say that they could not find $6 million out of a $15 billion budget is rubbish.

Mr. Sterling: Only equitable, only fair.

Mr. Cassidy: It is simply not the case. As far as we are concerned, public transit benefits everybody in the province of Ontario. It saves energy. It saves capital expenditure on roads. That means we benefit if public transit is good in Ottawa and good in Thunder Bay. The people in Thunder Bay benefit if there is adequate public transportation in Toronto, in Windsor and in London.

We believe that public transit is vital for the health of our municipalities. We say, as well, that it is about time that the government looked to the needs for transit not just to people in Metropolitan Toronto and the surrounding municipalities, not just in cities like Ottawa or Thunder Bay, but also to the people in villages like Amherstburg, which we were talking about today, where there are no doctors to go to unless you can ride on the bus and there were no buses to ride because there is no transportation system in the smaller communities of this province.

We say it is not the time for Ontario to back away from transit. If the government had been willing to put some of the savings it has been realizing from its declining commitment to capital expenditures on transit into the subsidy formula this debate today would not have had to occur. If the Liberal Party had been prepared to join with the New Democratic Party in pressing the government to take action this debate would not have had to occur.

If the government had any compassion, any sense about services that are essential to people, this debate would not have had to occur. If the government had had any commitment to maintaining the life and vitality of the great city of Metropolitan Toronto and the other great cities and towns of this province, this debate would not have had to occur.

It is therefore more in sorrow than in anger that I am moving this motion of no confidence; asking the Liberal Party to join with us, and asking the government to announce even at this late date they are prepared to recant, that they are prepared to move in now on behalf of transit riders in Metropolitan Toronto and that they are prepared to take the steps that are so essential in order to protect the life of our cities and make sure that we have public and not just private transportation in our cities over the decades to come.

Thank you very much.

Mr. Turner: Mike, you have got to be kidding.

Mr. Sterling: As a member who lives outside of an area which is serviced by public transit, I felt we should speak up at some point in the debate. Unfortunately, the other afternoon we weren't given that opportunity.

I would like to remind the House that the majority of the people in this province come from without the boundaries of Metro Toronto. It upsets many of the members from outside the boundaries of Metro Toronto that the mayor of this fine city and the council have tried to blackmail the provincial government into giving $6 million to that particular city.

An hon. member: No, no.

Mr. Ashe: What else would you call it? It's the end of the no-down-payment party.

Mr. Sterling: Especially, Mr. Speaker, when they now receive 70 per cent of transportation subsidies that this province now pays and the rest of us, six million out of 8.4 million people, settle for 30 per cent.

Ms. Gigantes: You can't even add up the population of Ontario.

Mr. Sterling: We are discussing a nickel—

Ms. Gigantes: Can you subtract?

Mr. Hennessy: Give it to him, Evelyn.

Mr. Sterling: —a nickel per ride increase in TTC fares—

Ms. Gigantes: He added wrong.

Mr. Hennessy: Give it to him.

Mr. Sterling: —in Metro Toronto.

Mr. Haggerty: Like 90 cents a month.

Mr. Sterling: The member for Ottawa Centre has pointed out increases in other areas of the province, including a hike to the good people of Ottawa-Carleton. They are paying 60 cents per ride for OC

Transpo and OC Transpo doesn't have nearly the transportation system that Toronto has.

Ms. Gigantes: How much?

Mr. Sterling: Sixty cents per ride.

Mr. Wildman: Well then why aren't you fighting for more money for them?

Mr. Eaton: Neither one of them said anything about it. Where's Cassidy? He has been away from Ottawa so long he doesn't know what's going on there.

Mr. Sterling: Where were they on January 1? Where was the leader of the third party?

Mr. Cassidy: We were waiting for your government to bring the Legislature back, that's where we were.

Mr. Sterling: That didn't stop you from making other statements before the press.

Mr. Cassidy: You've got a Premier who could have acted.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The member for Ottawa Centre has just spoken. I'll listen to the member for Carleton-Grenville.

Mr. Sterling: Let's examine what our government presently gives to Metro and the TTC. Since 1974, $472.8 million in provincial subsidies have gone to Metro and the TTC out of a total of $658.4 million, 70 per cent again. This year, in 1979, they're getting $98.1 million. They're getting an 8.4 per cent increase in subsidies for operating deficits within their system. What does the rest of the province get? Five per cent.

Mr. Philip: They also pay for all the additional roads and expressways that we have. Are you going to abolish those also?

Mr. Ashe: Just the NDP.

Mr. Sterling: The member for Ottawa Centre, in his remarks, has said that the government is making cutbacks in the transit budget now. I submit that this isn't a cutback that we're talking about, it's an add-on.

I think the Brockville Recorder and Times has expressed how the rest of Ontario views what this Legislature is debating at this time and what it debated before in the emergency debate. This reflects on the whole Legislature. The members for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) and Hamilton West (Mr. S. Smith) may both talk about the whole transit situation, but that is not the way it is perceived outside of these boundaries. It's perceived as $6 million going to Toronto.

Ms. Gigantes: Speak for yourself.

Mr. Wildman: Why aren't you correcting that perception?

Mr. Sterling: The Brockville Recorder and Times quoted the Globe and Mail as saying:

"The health of Toronto is of concern, not just to its residents but to those areas of the province which depend upon it for their wellbeing.' In our opinion, the only area in Ontario that depends on Toronto for its wellbeing is Toronto itself. The rest of the province is too often hampered by the provincial government looking out for Toronto's wellbeing."

Ms. Gigantes: That's your problem.

Mr. Sterling: Unfortunately, by raising this debate, by calling it an emergency—

Mr. Makarchuk: You sound like you should be working for Lougheed. You've got the same kind of perspective.

Mr. Sterling: —by calling it a matter of confidence, that is the kind of attitude the members opposite have engendered in the rest of the people of the province of Ontario. Those members have little support out there and I only wish we would go to a vote on this particular issue because we'd be sitting back here with more than 58 seats.

Mr. Makarchuk: Lougheed is running an election on the same basis.

Mrs. Campbell: I am really rather sad listening to the last speaker, because it does seem to me that this matter is one of importance for the whole province—

Mr. Eaton: It sure is.

Mrs. Campbell: —and I don't quite understand what I see. I see it with great regret, I may say, as a parochialism which I don't understand.

[8:15]

Mr. Sterling: That's the way Ontario looks at it.

Mrs. Campbell: In the first place, I don't know whether the member for Carleton-Grenville knows who the mayor of Toronto is or the circumstances. Of course the mayor of Toronto is concerned about his citizens, and I think that this is his right.

Mr. Eaton: He is concerned about the gay people of the province. That's what he is concerned about.

Mrs. Campbell: The fact that the Metro chairman doesn't care is a tribute to the government's influence. May I say also in this debate that the Liberal position was stated quite clearly on Thursday?

Mr. Eaton: Vote against us.

Mrs. Campbell: We asked for the emergency debate prior to the increase in the hope that we might create in the government an understanding of the problems of transit.

Mr. Johnson: In Toronto.

Mrs. Campbell: Not just in Toronto, no. We did indeed want to try to get an understanding of what we have developed. In a way something like Hydro, I suppose, we have a large operation of transit in this area which has expanded faster, without question, than the ability of the people of the city to handle it.

Mr. Johnson: Who pays?

Mrs. Campbell: Who pays? Let's get to that. In the first place, I pointed out the other day the history of this transit corporation, otherwise named. This was originally a Toronto operation and the subway was financed out of the reserves of that corporation.

Mr. Eaton: With a lot of money from the province.

Mrs. Campbell: When this government brought Metropolitan Toronto into being there was a demand for an extension of those services, which could not be met out of those reserves. That was the point at which the government came into the picture. The trouble is that quite basically what Mr. Sewell has been saying is rather well demonstrated, that is that the fare-box operation is very largely supported by the citizens of the inner city. That is not to say that others don't use it; but basically, if members look at the Spadina subway fiasco, they will understand a little bit of what we are talking about.

Mr. Hennessy: There are other fiascos too.

Mrs. Campbell: We have stated consistently that all parts of Metro ought to have a proper transportation system, but we have equally said that this should not be financed municipally to a greater extent than the financing allocated to Hamilton, to Ottawa and to other major centres. In other words—and I am open to be corrected—I believe our percentage is something like about 13.7 as against 17.5 for Hamilton, Ottawa and those other areas.

Mr. Hennessy: Thunder Bay.

Mrs. Campbell: When we went to the emergency debate, what were we asking? We were asking for time in order that a study might be done. Because of the decline in ridership which had taken place prior to this particular situation, we felt that it was important not to allow the situation to worsen while we did that study. I may say that we are very happy that we had, I think, a great role to play in the government's decision to undertake that study. We accomplished that much in our emergency debate. It was never a nickel issue, the issue was simply the declining ridership.

Having said so, I maintain that Scarborough is as entitled to as decent a system as North York or anyone else, but I wonder why it wouldn't have been better, and certainly more logical, to deal with the percentage funding situation and then for the government to move into its special project subsidy for the Scarborough light rail transit; but that was not the way the government went.

(We concede that this is not an issue on which we are prepared to bring down this government. We do concede that the accumulation of issues is what is important to the people of this province. Those issues are emerging and will continue to emerge. So for us the stances are not the reality. The reality for us is to come to grips with the problem and to try to seek a solution to that problem. There is no reason, really, why Metropolitan Toronto should be disadvantaged on a percentage basis over other major cities.

One of the arguments used is that other cities do not have the population on so dense a basis and, therefore, they need the additional subsidy in order to make their systems viable. I would like to say that I could understand that position if it related solely to the inner city, the city of Toronto, but it doesn't. When one gets into the suburban areas of this metropolitan area one finds very much the same conditions as prevail in these other cities to which this special consideration has been given.

Unfortunately, we did not prevail on Thursday. I would now take the position as a responsible member in this House that I personally want to see what those studies indicate. Perhaps at that point in time we will be able to reach those solutions which are imperative, in my opinion, but which, unfortunately, we cannot usefully discuss in advance of the study. Our position is that we have entered into the debate. We do not take second place to any in this House in our concern for this problem of transit. We are not being parochial about it. We do believe that Metropolitan Toronto does have an impact financially on the whole province. I am sorry other members feel that we have no such impact, but I think if you examine the record we really do put a great deal into this province; and of course so we should.

I cannot add anything further. I have stated our position as best I can and I thank you.

Mr. Philip: Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the no-confidence motion. I find it very regrettable that the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) is not present in the House during the debate on such an important transportation matter.

Mr. Eaton: Oh come on, he was here the other day.

Mr. Sterling: Where is your leader now?

Mr. Philip: I find it even more distressful that at least those people who are close advisers to him are not even in the galleries, and I would like that on the record.

Mr. Sterling: Where is your leader now?

Mr. Philip: I would like to refer members of the House to an article contained in the February 22 issue of the Toronto Sun.

Mr. Eaton: Where is your leader? He is gone.

Ms. Gigantes: He is on his way back.

Mr. Philip: The headline reads: "Liberals and the TTC Hike May Bring Down the Davis Government."

Mr. Eaton: They chickened out again.

Mr. Philip: The article states that, "Liberal leader Stuart Smith does not rule out the possibility of introducing a no-confidence motion."

Mr. Eaton: That's when he was in Florida playing tennis though.

Mr. Philip: It goes on to quote the leader of the Liberal Party directly: "If the principle of public transportation is at stake, then this issue becomes a provincial one."

Mr. Van Horne: What principle are you working on now?

Mr. Philip: The issue of public transportation is at stake. This is an issue that is a provincial issue; it is a province-wide issue.

Mr. Kerrio: How come Michael Cassidy only spoke for 10 minutes about it?

Mr. Philip: I would like to refer the Minister of Transportation and Communications, if he ever does return to this House, and perhaps the Premier who also is not present, to the article in the Kitchener-Waterloo Record for Saturday, March 3. The headline is: "Mayors Team Up to Pressure Davis."

Mr. Van Horne: You guys don't know what your target is.

Mr. Philip: The municipal politicians out there recognize that it's a provincial issue—

Mr. Eaton: How many other mayors teamed up?

Mr. Philip: —and the Davis government had better realize this. The fact is that the public in this province is a lot smarter than this government gives it credit for, or that the member for Carleton-Grenville (Mr.

Sterling) gives them credit for. In fact, there is the growing realization that the struggle tonight is not over $6 million; it is over the government's failure to develop a systematic and cohesive transportation policy in this province.

I found it interesting that 10 days ago I was listening to a radio station in Peterborough—hardly a Toronto area—and a series of man-on-the-street interviews came up with something rather startling even to the interviewer. In fact the majority of the people interviewed in downtown Peterborough recognized the need to preserve the public transit system in Toronto and condemned the Davis government for not doing so.

Mr. Eaton: Why don't you test him at the ballot box then?

Mr. Philip: We are dealing with a government that has no identifiable transportation policy. We go from one crisis to another. As transportation critic in my party I find it difficult to watch TV or listen to the radio without being jolted out of any relaxed mood by some new transportation crisis coming over the medium.

An hon. member: Where is the crisis?

Mr. Philip: First we have the Gray Coach fiasco: there's transportation policy in this province. Then you turn on the radio and there are dump trucks parked in front of the Legislature: that's transportation policy in this province. Then there is the inquiry during the last few weeks into the transport board by the resources committee. If the minister were here—perhaps he is conferring with the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) over the seizures that were made yesterday of papers owned by one Mr. Secord; perhaps that's transportation policy in this province.

Then we turn on the radio or the TV and we find out that the driving school instructors are calling for policy, because there is no policy in this province even in that field.

[8:30]

I can't even turn on my TV set on Sunday night, as I did last Sunday, but I find there is another crisis in transportation in Ontario. It is something that we have been talking about, but W-5 has to zero in on the tow truck industry and show what a rip-off the consumers are having to endure because this government has no transportation policy in that field either. The tow truck operators have not been brought under a public commercial vehicle licensing system.

There is absolutely no transportation policy in this province. That is what is wrong. It is the Minister of Transportation and Communications who gets the no-confidence motion tonight. He is the one who should be here; he is the one who should be listening to it; he is the one who should be resigning as a result of the fiasco we have. Not only with regard to the movement of people in Toronto, but in the movement of people throughout this province and the movement of goods throughout this province there is no identifiable policy.

Thus the vote of no confidence tonight is more than a vote on the TTC issue. It is a vote on the failure of the Ministry of Transportation and Communications. Mr. Speaker, it is possibly because there is no policy that the Minister of Transportation and Communications does not recognize that the concept of the Toronto Transportation Commission has changed over the years. Transit is not being used now as in the past, as a means of simply moving people on a very small, local level; transit is being used as a means of influencing land-use planning. The costs related to this are bound to be higher than was experienced in the past when the TTC had the responsibility to merely provide limited local service, limited local movement of people around a limited area.

The TTC now also has the responsibility of providing what amounts to commuter service, but it hasn't provided it adequately and that is fairly obvious to anyone who lives in the Scarborough or Rexdale areas. In fact, the minister still doesn't realize that it is a greater distance to the centre core of the city—downtown Toronto—from the area of Albion Road and Highway 27 where I live, than from Port Credit GO station to downtown Toronto; yet the provincial government will subsidize a rider on that system 97 cents, while the commuter from my area, from my neighbourhood, gets a measly six cents for what amounts to a commuter transportation system.

I found the statement contained in the minister's letter to Paul Godfrey very interesting. This letter I am talking about is dated February 12. The minister states: "I am sure you would agree that the fare box should provide a realistic share of the costs." I challenge the minister to define what is a realistic share for the fare box.

In order to do so, he must first of all tell the House what his objectives are in transportation. He hasn't done so. He must tell the House how his government sees the role of the TTC and other transportations systems vis-à-vis land-use planning and development. What services they are to provide and what is their role in that area. He must tell us how he sees the TTC in terms of providing commuter service. Until those kinds of questions are answered he cannot define what is an adequate funding.

We find a 13.75 per cent subsidy for operating costs entirely inadequate. The Minister of Transportation and Communications has no satisfactory rationale for demanding that 72 per cent of the costs be covered by the fare box. Consider the fact that 48 per cent of operating costs come from the fare box in Montreal and only 35 per cent in Vancouver; and consider, too, that most Ontario systems are facing increasing deficits. It should be abundantly clear that this system of subsidization, whereby TTC riders are expected to pay 70 per cent of the operating costs, is simply inadequate.

I was appalled to learn, again in looking at American figures, that Americans are much more generous with their public transportation systems than we are.

Mr. Eaton: Yes, but where has it got them?

Mr. Philip: If we look at Ontario, what we are talking about in terms of the fare box—

Mr. Eaton: Show me a public transportation system in any American city—

Mr. Philip: If the member will be quiet for a minute he just might learn something. He hasn't learned anything about the movement of goods, now maybe he will learn something about the movement of people.

Interjections.

Mr. Philip: This is the parliamentary assistant to the minister who wants to deregulate the trucking industry and put all that industry out of business; maybe he would like to put public transportation out of business?

Mr. Eaton: Tell us about the American city transportation systems you are talking about. If you are going to compare them, tell us about them. There is not a city in the United States that can compare with it.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. M. Davidson: The city of Washington, 40 cents.

Mr. Philip: In Ontario, the fare box operating revenues in cities over one million are expected to equal 72 per cent; in cities of 200,000 to one million, 65 per cent; in cities of 150,000 to 200,000, 60 per cent.

We take a look, then, at the American figures—and I would be glad to supply this to the parliamentary assistant to the minister or to the minister. We look at New York, 52 per cent—

Mr. Eaton: Talk about the transit system in Detroit and how they get to work.

Mr. Philip: —Los Angeles, 41 per cent; Chicago, 55 per cent; Philadelphia, 48 per cent; Detroit, 45 per cent—

Mr. Eaton: How many of them have subway systems like we have?

Mr. Bounsall: You're trying to destroy it.

Mr. Philip: —San Francisco, 40 per cent; Boston, 20 per cent; Washington, 52 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, the government clearly is not only interested in not providing the kinds of service, the kinds of subsidy that other Canadian cities provide, it can't even equal the American subsidy; and the Americans have hardly been the greatest advocates of public transit.

Mr. Eaton: When you're subsidizing nothing it isn't much, is it?

Mr. Philip: I found the remarks from the member for Carleton-Grenville rather amusing. I guess amusing is the only word one can use to describe them.

Ms. Gigantes: Pathetic.

Mr. Eaton: You are the only amusing thing around here, Philip.

Mr. Philip: What we have to do is to look at the history of the kinds of subsidies in this province. One of the keys to the province's big splash in transit in November 1972, the unveiling of the GO Urban, was a commitment to pay 50 per cent of the operating losses in the municipal transit system. That commitment was reinforced in John White's 1974 budget, in which the Treasurer made transit grants conditional on keeping fares constant during the 1974-75 fiscal year.

Shortly after that the commitment began to fade. The province put considerable pressure on Metro to put up fares in March 1975 and again in February 1976. In fact, the rapidly increasing deficits followed. Finally, in the fall of 1976, the province changed its support formula from 50 per cent of operating deficits to—in the case of the TTC 13.75 per cent, which is the figure we have been talking about.

The letter from the minister to Mr. Godfrey is also kind of interesting. He says, and I quote: "As you are aware, reflecting on our commitment to public transit the government of Ontario will provide substantial support for the TTC during the coming fiscal year. According to the TTC estimated needs under present subsidy arrangements, we will likely contribute $8.7 million for demonstration program; $21.4 million for surplus capital; $32.8 million for rapid transit construction"—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Would honourable members carrying on private conversations please refrain?

Mr. Roy: I agree with you.

Mr. Philip: Thank you, Mr. Speaker—"and $33.5 million for operating subsidy."

For the sake of the member for Carleton-Grenville, then, I will go over those figures. I see he has left already; well those are the breaks of the game, perhaps he will read it.

Let's deal with those figures; first the $8.76 million for demonstration program. This is the 1979 payment of 100 per cent of the cost of the 75 LRVs and fulfills an obligation the province undertook years ago. Last year, $11.2 million was transferred under this agreement.

If we look at the $21.4 million that is quoted for surface capital in the minister's letter, this refers to the $16.4 million towards 75 per cent of the cost of 125 LRVs purchased by the TTC as a result of the agreement noted again just before, and $5 million for the other surface improvements, such as escalator expansion, purchase of buses and trolleys.

Last year the amounts were $15.8 million and $3.2 million. So the total increase is from $19 million to only $21 million.

The $32.8 million is for rapid transit construction. Again, this refers to money budgeted for subway construction, the Kipling and Kennedy extensions in the Scarborough LRT. Last year this transfer yielded $38 million.

The $35 million for operating subsidy was an increase from the year's subsidy of approximately $30.9 million; and this projected transfer is what the present formula was expected to yield in 1979 and 1978. Just as the municipalities learned on the breaking of the Edmonton commitment that the commitments made by the then Treasurer and Minister of Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs were not to be relied on, so too they have learned that the government cannot be relied on to provide even consistent financing in transportation, let alone any kind of consistent policy.

We are facing a crisis in public transportation in this province. I find it shocking that the Liberals have decided to do another flip-flop. Just as they sold out the women in the family law reform bill and as they recently sold out condominium owners in the condominium bill, so too are they about to sell out transit riders throughout the province on this particular motion of no confidence.

Mr. Speaker, we in the NDP provided a very constructive proposal for alternatives in the brief that we made on January 9 before the Toronto Transit Commission regarding the transit problem in Toronto. In that brief we pointed out that fewer people rode public transit last year in Toronto, Hamilton, Kitchener, Mississauga, Sault Ste. Marie, Thunder Bay and at least 10 other Ontario cities.

In this time of sharply rising fuel costs it is absolutely irresponsible to allow public transit to go down the drain. Besides enriching the transportation grant formula we would encourage experimentation and innovation in transportation in this province. We suggested a fund that would grant or loan start-up money to any Ontario transit authority which presented an innovative plan to increase ridership and efficiency. That would be a lot more innovative, and a lot more constructive, than the $55 million the Minister of Transportation and Communications poured off on some pie-in-the-sky Krauss-Maffei. It would be a lot more constructive than an awful lot of the other millions and millions of dollars that are fed to resource companies to exploit our resources and ship them to other countries.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the Liberal Party to change its position. I urge the Liberal Party, for once, not to do another flip-flop, not to sell out the people in Toronto. Vote with us on this issue.

Mr. Williams: Mr. Speaker, as a member for a riding located in the newest and fourth largest city in Canada—which is quickly proving itself to be the senior partner in the Metropolitan Toronto corporation—I am pleased to participate in this emergency debate this evening.

Mr. Speaker, I would say to you that without question—and I challenge any member in this House here this evening on this point—the Toronto transit system is the finest public transit system in the continent of North America. Without fear of contradiction, I say to you, that the reason this transit system is the finest in North America is because we have, without question, the most efficient system, the cleanest system, the best organized system, the most heavily-funded system anywhere in the country. You only have to talk to people visiting Toronto who will say that among the first impressions left with them of Metropolitan Toronto was that of the public transit system in this jurisdiction.

I must say that perhaps one of the reasons our system continues to receive awards around the country, both for safety and for efficiency—

Mr. Kerrio: Because you give all the awards.

Mr. Williams: —of operation, and for its cleanliness of operation, is because of the leadership given by the Toronto Transit Commission itself. I look back to the days of Ralph Day when he was the hard-nosed leader—

Mr. T. P. Reid: Does Michael Warren live in your riding?

Mr. Williams: —who helped bring the transit system to where it is today. I guess one could consider Ralph Day—

Mr. Eaton: Do you want an election on this?

Mr. Williams: —as the Fred Gardiner of the public transit system of Metropolitan Toronto.

Mr. T. P. Reid: If you ran him up in Rainy River, Bob, I would vote for him.

Mr. Williams: His successors since that day have also performed well, along with the senior administrators and staff—

Mrs. Campbell: Then there's Mr. Hurlburt.

Mr. Williams: —and operators of the transit system to make it the fine system it is today.

Obviously this is the very reason the Toronto Transit Commission has the highest per capita ridership in North America.

Mr. Riddell: What do the people of Middlesex think of the TTC, Bob?

Mr. Williams: The reason for this success is not—

Mr. Foulds: No thanks to you.

Mr. Williams: —through uncertainty or because of luck. It's been because of good planning, strong leadership and the strong financial backup of the province of Ontario.

Mr. Kerrio: And Gray Coach.

Mr. Williams: As other speakers this evening and previously have stated, this province has generously donated over 70 per cent of its total transit subsidies to the Toronto transit system.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Donated? Where the hell do you think the money comes from?

Mrs. Campbell: Not from you.

Mr. Williams: In making that extremely generous donation to Metro Toronto transit they have provided—

Mr. Kerrio: What are you talking about?

Mr. Breithaupt: Whose money is it?

Mr. Williams: —over 33 per cent of it in operating subsidies. And in so doing for this coming year, they have enriched the ante by 8.4 per cent, up from $31 million to $33.5 million. If that isn't a generous enrichment of the program I don't know what is.

Mr. Van Horne: Do you really believe that stuff?

Mr. Cassidy: You measure the whole world by percentage points. You've got an accountant's view of the world.

Mr. Williams: There's no doubt that Metro Toronto is not suffering; it has strong financial support from the provincial government. After the Premier (Mr. Davis) has announced there would be no further additional moneys in the—

Mr. Foulds: When was the last time you took the subway?

Mr. Williams: —amount of $6 million forthcoming, members will recall that the mayor of the city of Toronto and some of his colleagues—

Mr. Foulds: Have you ever been on the subway?

Mr. Williams: —decided to come to a caucus of the Metro Toronto members to discuss the matter again and ask if, through them, the Premier would capitulate and reconsider. When the mayor of Toronto, with some of his members, came to the Metro caucus—

Mr. Cassidy: And you all turned your back on the people of Metropolitan Toronto; all but two of Metropolitan Toronto Conservative members.

Mr. Williams: I said to him: "Explain to us why you should be coming to us with cap in hand asking for another $6 million—"

Mr. T. P. Reid: Did you say that to Paul Godfrey?

Mr. Williams: "—when we've already enriched the subsidy by another 8.4 per cent." And I listened carefully to what the mayor of the city of Toronto had to say.

Mr. Cassidy: Where were the Toronto Tories when the transit riders were looking for your help?

Mr. Williams: He said to me that he was there because the nickel was the issue, that there would be six million fewer riders using the TTC—

Mr. T. P. Reid: You should have understood that.

Mr. Van Horne: Was it a Blue Jay cap, John?

Mr. Williams: —if the nickel addition was put on. That was the sole reason for his coming there with cap in hand.

I said to him: "Mr. Mayor, you explain to this caucus this evening how you conclude that there will be six million fewer riders the day after the nickel increase comes about. Show me the statistics." The mayor of the city of Toronto didn't have an answer. He couldn't give me the statistics.

Mr. Bounsall: You couldn't read them anyway.

Mr. Cassidy: If you could read we would give them to you.

Mr. Lawlor: You can't give statistics in advance.

Mr. Williams: I said give it to me in black and white. "Where is the backup information from all the experts at the TTC?"

"Is this a guesstimate or is it based on cold hard facts?"

Mr. T. P. Reid: What did you say to Paul Godfrey?

Mr. Cassidy: You are not only illiterate, you are "ill-numeric."

Mr. Williams: He said there were no cold hard facts to back it up. This was a guesstimate made by the TTC.

Mr. Foulds: It's called a load forecast. If it's good enough for Hydro it's good enough for the TTC.

Mr. Williams: The interesting fact is that in 1975, when the TTC increased fares by 33 per cent not 14 per cent, the ridership went up by 10 million.

Mr. Bounsall: You supported that too.

Mr. Williams: In 1976, when they increased the fares again—

Mr. Cassidy: The ridership went down.

Mr. Williams: —by 20 per cent, the ridership went up by another three million.

Mr. Cassidy: It went down.

Mr. Williams: All refuting the statistics that the mayor of the city of Toronto was trying to give to the Metro Toronto caucus.

He could not substantiate the facts.

Mr. Cassidy: Are you ever misrepresenting the facts.

Mr. Williams: I asked: "Where are the six million riders going to go if they're not going to continue to use the TTC and pay the extra nickel?"

Mr. Cassidy: They're going to clog the roads.

Mr. Williams: He put himself right into a corner. He said: "Oh, they'll start using their cars. They'll pay to park downtown."

Mr. Kerrio: With a Tory government they don't have any cars.

Mr. Williams: The fact is that with the new increase it will cost them a dollar a day to ride back and forth to work; if they took their cars to work it would cost them twice that or three times that just to park their cars downtown, let alone pay for the increase in gas. He had no answer for that.

Mr. M. Davidson: If you guys keep going, we won't be able to afford tickets.

Mr. Havrot: Down with socialist riders.

Mr. Foulds: Maybe, like you, they'll fly.

Mr. Havrot: You guys don't know the value of a nickel.

Mr. Williams: I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that the statistics just did not support the arguments they brought to the Metro caucus.

Mr. Foulds: In your private plane. Where do you park your plane?

Mr. Eaton: How do you get around the province? Who subsidizes that?

Mr. Foulds: Where does he park his plane?

Mr. Eaton: Who subsidizes that when you fly in from Thunder Bay? Who subsidizes you? Nobody.

Mr. Foulds: What are you talking about? I take the subway more than he does.

Mr. Williams: The point at issue is that it's not just a nickel issue. The mayor of the city of Toronto was looking at it with tunnel vision, when he said that it was only the matter of the nickel. The provincial government felt—and the Premier very clearly spelled it out the other day—that it was a much broader issue than simply the $6 million and the nickel increase.

Mr. Havrot: That is a typical NDP view.

Mr. Williams: The mayor of the city of Toronto, while he was there with his cap in hand, already knew that the newspapers were going to press with his ad slanted towards putting the blame for the fare increases on the provincial government.

Mrs. Campbell: Shame on him.

Mr. Breithaupt: That's exactly where it belongs.

Mr. Van Horne: His cap was in his hand because he was a sacrificial lamb. He didn't know where the Tories were going to stick it to him next.

Mr. Williams: While he sat there talking to the Metro caucus he knew of their little scheme of trying to get the people emotionally involved and upset and go after the provincial government, instead of looking at the Metro people with whom the buck stays for looking after transportation in Metro. It backfired on him. The whole thing fell apart because the people in this city recognized there was a broader issue and it wasn't just the nickel increase.

Mr. Van Horne: Godfrey and Davis and all your friends.

Mr. Williams: It's the old story that no matter how long you talk to the people, and try to mislead them perhaps—

Mr. Breithaupt: Mislead them?

Mr. Williams: —or give them a story that isn't totally accurate or complete, you can fool some of the people some of the time, as they say, but you can't fool all of the people all of the time.

Mr. Van Horne: It's getting pretty thin there.

Mr. Williams: The people in Metro Toronto and beyond recognized that when they did take the mayor up on his proposal and phoned in and completely turned the tables on him.

Mr. M. N. Davison: You sure know about being foolish.

Mr. Williams: The people of this city aren't as dumb as they're made out to be by those who would suggest—

Mr. Van Horne: You're saying the people in Toronto are dumb, are you?

Mr. Cassidy: Are you calling them dumb? Are you calling your own constituents dumb?

Mr. Van Horne: Are you calling Torontonians dumb? Spell it out.

Mr. Williams: —that they could be conned by that type of proposal, that it's the nickel and only the nickel.

Mr. Van Horne: Spell it out. Are you calling them stupid?

Mr. Cassidy: Another slur on the ordinary people of this province.

Mr. Williams: The people of this city are much more astute, than they're given credit for by the mayor of the city of Toronto, let me assure you of that.

Mr. Van Horne: You didn't say that a minute ago.

Mr. Williams: In speaking of the broader perspective—

Mr. Conway: Spare us that.

Mr. Williams: —the leader of the third party touched on it when he referred to that well-known labour leader, Dennis McDermott—

Mr. Cassidy: A fine fellow.

Mr. Williams: —who said we must continue to have a balanced transportation system within Metro Toronto, as we must have in any urban area.

Mr. Breithaupt: Does he use the TTC too?

Mr. Williams: That indeed is really the sum and substance of what this issue is all about.

Mr. Cassidy: That's right. Well, stop pushing the fares up every year.

Mr. Williams: We must continue to have a balanced transportation system within Metropolitan Toronto. I think it would be interesting to compare the private transportation, if you will, in Metro Toronto with the public transit system. It's interesting to note that in fact there are more miles of subway lines in Metropolitan Toronto than there are metropolitan expressways. The fact is that far more has been done to expand the public transit system in Metro Toronto in the past five years than has been done to improve or expand upon the arterial road system within Metropolitan Toronto.

Mr. Breithaupt: So what?

Mr. Williams: In fact, expansion of the arterial road system in Metro has virtually come to a standstill because the emphasis has gone so far the other way, to the point where this balanced transportation system that the leader of the third party talks about is starting to deteriorate; but I would suggest not negatively against the public transit system, rather perhaps against the private transit system.

Interjections.

Mr. Cassidy: The pro-expressway faction rears its head again. Roads before cities, cars before people; you are off again. The old instincts have come to the fore, you just give them a chance, they will—

Mr. Williams: Let me point out to you what those real broad perspectives are that the opposition hasn't even considered because all they have talked about is the nickel, the nickel, the nickel.

Mr. Conway: Get out your purse, John.

Mr. Williams: And what those broad perspectives are is what the Toronto Transit Commission itself pointed out in its white paper produced in January. There, Mr. Speaker, the transit commission clearly pointed out that, while fares are important, there is no question of that, they do not alone determine ridership.

Mrs. Campbell: Oh but they do have a bearing.

Mr. Williams: In that white paper, the transit commission pointed out that in fact three major ingredients were having a possible adverse effect on the Metro transit system. Those three major factors, as was pointed out, are these:

First, fare and fare structures, which is what this debate has been largely limited to, to date.

Mrs. Campbell: Precisely.

Mr. Williams: Second, the level of service provided; and third, external factors.

Those latter two considerations, I suggest with respect, have barely been touched upon by the other speakers in this House who have restricted themselves strictly to that five-cent image in the increased fare.

In order to give this the proper perspective, I would like to—

Mr. Ziemba: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. Last week you could get seven tokens for three dollars, this week you can only get six; it is not a five-cent increase, it is a seven-cent increase.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is not a point of order, it is a point of view.

Mr. J. A. Taylor: It is a point of information.

Mr. Cassidy: It is a fact, Mr. Speaker. If you had counted it in fact you might have voted with us.

Mr. Roy: No, no; we are not that foolish.

Mr. Williams: The transit commission has pointed out, in its white paper, that there are perhaps three options left open to it; options which the committee has agreed to undertake to review. This province is anxiously waiting to see the results.

The Premier the other day did offer to assist this study in any way possible. While the member for St. George (Mrs. Campbell) seems to have lost patience with this idea, I think she herself suggested that we must see the full story which will be presented by this in-depth study.

Mrs. Campbell: That's what we asked for in the emergency debate.

Mr. Williams: She herself is supporting that concept. It is the very concept that this government is proposing; that we in fact wait to see what the results of this study are so that we can see the total picture.

Mrs. Campbell: We said "before the increase" and you said "after." What is the difference?

Mr. Williams: There are three options left open to us, as pointed out by the TTC. One is to continue the status quo; another is that we favour transit more but without capital expansion; and the third is that we favour transit more with a rapid transit grant.

What I would like to do for a moment or two is—

Mr. Haggerty: Sit down.

Mr. Williams: —to highlight to you the consequences of continuing the status quo.

Mr. Samis: When you get Ray Haggerty saying that, John, you are in trouble.

Mr. Williams: And the transit commission points out what the negative effects of doing so would be. Three of them are related to the fare and fare structure factor. They are, and I will point them out in point form:

First, the status quo would mean to continue with the 1977 financial formula, retaining a constant revenue cost ratio through incremental fare increases as operating costs increase.

Second, there would be minimal or no expansion in surface transit service.

Third, there would be no expansion of rapid transit beyond current commitments.

[9:00]

Those three status quo factors would obviously fall within the area of jurisdiction and control of the transit commission itself. But there are three other considerations that the commission points out that are of equal importance and concern, I suggest to you Mr. Speaker, and once again which have been minimized or not even touched upon in this debate.

That is, first, they point out, the status quo would mean a minimal priority for transit on the roads. Second, there would be limited transit-oriented redevelopment along rapid transit lines. Third, there would be minimal improvement to their arterial road system.

One of the major problems in making our public transportation system more efficient in Metropolitan Toronto is the fact there has been a down attitude towards improving the arterial road system within Metropolitan Toronto. Because the anti-road people can only equate the use of roads, the expansion and the improvement of roads, to the use of those roads by private vehicles.

The fact of life is the public transit vehicles have to use those roads as much as the automobiles and the commercial vehicles. That's a point that's lost sight of and never touched upon in the debate. The buses, the extended new larger vehicles that will be coming on stream in the near future, have to have adequate roads to utilize just as much as the private vehicles do themselves.

Unless we can maintain and ensure there will be an adequate arterial road system within Metropolitan Toronto that can accommodate the public transit vehicles, whether they be the trolley buses or the gas-driven vehicles, that system is not going to move any faster than the private motor vehicles through this city.

Anyone who suggests the whole Metro Toronto public transit system is wrapped up in the subway system has lost sight of reality, because the large bulk of our system is still tied up in the rolling stock on the surface, using the roads that a lot of the people here would like to see closed down. In fact, I think the greatest thing the mayor of Toronto would like to see is the roads in this city rolled up and everybody walking to work—

Mr. Renwick: Oh that's not fair; that's not fair, John, and you know it.

Mr. Williams: —or taking the subway.

An hon. member: Or riding a bike; he rides a bike.

Mr. Williams: The fact of the matter is the very reason—

Mr. Renwick: Don't be ridiculous. The opening of the silly season.

Mr. Williams: —that the transit system—

An hon. member: He's right on.

Mr. Williams: —cannot improve as far as the rolling stock on the surface is concerned is because of some of the bottlenecks that exist in our arterial road system. I can speak with authority on that subject having come from a riding where I've seen the detrimental effects of those who would not permit reasonable road improvements to take place for necessary road extensions to occur; or even for road widenings to take place so that bus-only lanes could be developed on existing roadways.

I point specifically to Bayview Avenue where there was a debate at the time I was on Metro council over the widening of Bayview Avenue by one foot on either side so a third lane could be accommodated and they could put a bus-only lane in. The people in that area said: "No, we don't want any improvements to our roads. It will interfere with the community. Take it away."

The people in North York didn't want the Lawrence Avenue diversion corrected, so the buses that would normally go straight along Lawrence Avenue from Scarborough-Ellesmere and from Scarborough West, and from Scarborough Centre and Oriole over to the Lawrence Avenue station, can't go that way. They have to take a two-and-a-half mile dog-leg down Leslie Street along overcrowded Eglinton Avenue to get to the Eglinton subway—

Mr. Warner: Talk to your friends at Post Road about that one.

Mr. Williams: —simply because the people in the area wouldn't permit Lawrence Avenue to be straightened out—

Mr. Warner: What people?

Mr. Williams: —and the diversion removed—

Mr. Cassidy: The working class is standing in the way of that one.

Mr. Williams: —so it could accommodate the public transit buses in Metro Toronto.

Mr. Warner: What people, John? What people?

Mr. Williams: The transit commission supported it but the people in the area would not support it.

Mr. Warner: Those rich folks on Post Road, John.

Mr. Williams: In the same fashion, Mr. Speaker, I point to the Leslie Street diversion, a road that could provide the much needed relief to the traffic congestion in northeast Metro that the Bayview extension provided many years ago.

Mr. M. Davidson: It's the workers who live in the $100,000 homes in that area.

Mr. Williams: The Leslie Street extension wouldn't remove one existing house from stock, it would go through open lands and valley lands very much like the Don Valley Parkway does; and yet the council of the city of Toronto has continually opposed the Leslie Street extension, as have some of the radical members of the North York council. But I'm telling you, Mr. Speaker, so long as there's this negative attitude not to build any roads to help accommodate and move the public transit vehicles as well as the private vehicles—

Mr. Warner: We'd build one for you; one-way south.

Mr. Williams: —then this is one of the exterior factors that the transit commission talks about that they have no control over and which they point out is going to inhibit improvement of the system. Until we start to realize those facts of life, that we have to assist the transit commission in that type of fashion—

Mr. Warner: Southward extension of Yonge Street.

Mr. Williams: —we will not be able to assist them in improving the system.

And this goes beyond providing capital dollars from the province. The Metro politicians have got to face up to these facts and they have got to start making some of these hard-nosed decisions and realize that it's not just the bucks involved. They have got to be able to divert other energies and support to the system in dealing with these external factors over which the TTC doesn't have direct control.

Mr. Speaker, so long as the city of Toronto has got the extra $3 million they were prepared to throw into the system, I would suggest that the mayor of the city of Toronto, in a gesture of goodwill, put that $3 million into the building of the Leslie Street extension so we can run a decent bus line down there, so the people can take an express bus from northeast Metro to the downtown area without having to make two or three transfers to get down there.

That's the kind of improvement we need to help the Toronto Transit Commission and, Mr. Speaker, until we start waking up to these broader considerations and perspectives we are going nowhere. No matter how much we subsidize the TTC, there will undoubtedly be a loss of ridership if, when they should be at their place of business in 15 minutes, people are going to sit on a bus for half an hour because of jammed streets and incompleting roads and unwidened Bathurst Street and Leslie Street—did the member for St. Andrew-St. Patrick hear that, Bathurst Street?

Mr. Cassidy: You keep going. You will diselect all of your colleagues.

Mr. Williams: I am telling you, Mr. Speaker, until these things come about and the Sam Casses and other professional traffic people can have their hands untied so they can provide the solutions they have been offering to the people of Metro Toronto for so long but who are being hamstrung by the politicians who think it's good politics to oppose these things—until this attitude changes amongst the politicians and the public at large, Mr. Speaker, we are not going to be able to assist the transit commission to the full extent to which it's entitled.

Mr. Lawlor: You won't give them the money and you tell them how to spend theirs.

Mr. Williams: It's more than giving them subsidies. The Metro politicians have got to grow up and start dealing with these problems in a meaningful and mature manner. So, Mr. Speaker, I would hope that in these few comments that I have brought a—

Mr. Van Horne: A few comments? You have talked for half an hour and said nothing.

Mr. Williams: —broader perspective to this debate, Mr. Speaker, and I have pointed out the fallacy and the mess that surrounds the debate so far that it's been strictly the nickel—

Mr. Van Horne: Gave Tom Wells a migraine.

An hon. member: It's not a nickel; it's seven cents.

Mr. Williams: —and that people are going to walk away from it because of the nickel increase.

Mr. Van Horne: We would like to walk away from you but we can't. Just sit down. Quit pointing your finger at us.

Mr. Sargent: You are almost as bad as Grossman. Why don't you sit down?

Mr. Williams: And if the member for Owen Sound had been on the transit system in Metro within the past few years, he would realize we now have a subway system in Metro Toronto, that we are heavily subsidizing.

Mr. Van Horne: How often do you ride on it?

Mr. Williams: Quite often, as a member from Metro Toronto—and I am proud to be able to use the system.

Mr. Van Horne: Most of your Tory members ride in limousines. How come you are riding in the subway?

Mr. Warner: Try riding under it.

Mr. Williams: It's the safest, cleanest transportation system on the continent and we should be supporting it in all ways, not just through the subsidy at the provincial level but the Metro politicians should be getting out there—

Mr. Van Horne: You have got more limousines flying around over there than Dodd's got kidney pills.

Mr. M. Davidson: Were you the guy who was buying up $50 worth of tokens before Monday?

Mr. Williams: —and supporting them and in eliminating the negative exterior factors that are so clearly dealt with in the white paper issued by the transit commission. So, Mr. Speaker, if I might conclude, I would like to simply state—

Interjections.

Mr. Cassidy: Are you going to start all over again?

Mr. Williams: I feel encouraged, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Eaton: Don't encourage him, you guys.

Mr. Williams: All I have talked about so far, Mr. Speaker, is the option one proposal under the transit white paper—

Mr. Martel: Wind him up again.

Mr. Williams: —which is to maintain the status quo. I have pointed out many of the negative aspects of maintaining the status quo, but if the members of the House would encourage me, I would be glad to speak further on the other two options which are favour transit more but without capital expansion; or the third option, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Makarchuk: Have you considered taking the bus yourself someplace?

An hon. member: You take a one-way, Mac.

Mr. Makarchuk: A one-way bus, John.

Mr. Williams: —or the third option, which is favour transit more with a rapid transit grid. Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, that's the one that I personally support; and I hope that when the study is completed the transit commission will give great emphasis and support to that third option, because we indeed do need—

Mr. Cassidy: He won't trifle over $6 million.

Mr. Martel: Would you repeat that again?

Mr. Williams: We do, indeed, Mr. Speaker, need to give strong support to public transit in Metro. One of the ways in which we can accomplish that is by improving the rapid transit grid, as is suggested in the third option presented in the Toronto Transit Commission white paper. So, Mr. Speaker, I'm hopeful when this study does come out, as the Premier himself has stated, that we will then take a closer look at it. While it may mean that additional subsidies may be needed in the future, it will not be done without this province and the Metro politicians collaborating with this government to assist the TTC in implementing programs—

An hon. member: By increasing the fares.

Mr. Cassidy: The way Paul Godfrey collaborated for us.

Mr. Williams: —that will not only deal with the dollars but improve the delivery of the system by improving the arterial road system within Metropolitan Toronto.

So, Mr. Speaker, for these reasons, I think that with the broad perspective clearly now before the House, it's clearly understood why it would be inappropriate at this time for the government of the province of Ontario to further enrich its already very generous add-on contribution this year to the operating subsidies of the Toronto Transit Commission. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. M. Davidson: You haven't told him a thing, John.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member for Niagara Falls.

Mr. Kerrio: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two or three comments to make as they relate to this debate. The first one I have to make is, naturally, that we're not supporting the asinine, no-confidence motion of the socialist party.

Mr. Martel: What did Stuart Smith say the first day?

Mr. Kerrio: And for a very good reason. Our leader made a commitment that we would not bring an election on the people of Ontario that might cost $30 million over a $6 million issue.

Mr. Martel: What did Stuart Smith say the other day?

Mr. Kerrio: There was no misunderstanding about that position.

Mr. Martel: What did Stuart say?

Mr. Havrot: And that's socialist financing.

Mr. Kerrio: The suggestion that we should, in fact, put some dollars into TTC, if they were willing to come up with some viable transit plan, was the way we might consider going. The problem with the people on my left is that they never face the realities of life.

Mr. M. Davidson: You had better believe we are on your left.

Mr. Bounsall: You brought it.

Mr. Kerrio: They think we can do so many grand and glorious things and then someone else will pick up the tab. The someone else happens to be the taxpayers of the province of Ontario, and they're the same people in every instance.

Mr. Martel: Margaret, are you listening to him?

Mr. Cassidy: The member for St. George doesn't agree with you.

Mr. Kerrio: I'd like to suggest to you that if this was a valid and important issue the leader of the third party would have spent a great deal more time than the few minutes he gave in trying to make his case. He didn't see fit to do that. He wants to let every one of those people get on the record so they can print 10,000 copies—

Interjections.

Mr. Kerrio: —and distribute them across this great province of ours suggesting that they're the only people interested in the transit problems of the people of Ontario.

Mr. Cassidy: And your speech as well.

Mr. Kerrio: I would like to suggest something to members that might be very meaningful. Even though I'm a proponent of the free enterprise system, I would have to take exception to something the government did that might very well have helped this whole transit system—

Mr. Eaton: Why don't we see what you have done for the people of Brantford, Mike?

Mr. Kerrio: —and it has nothing to do with taxing the people in the rest of Ontario. It has to do with the government of Ontario deciding to allow Greyhound to overrun Gray Coach runs on intercity—

Mr. Cassidy: If you keep on we will take your ferris wheel away from you.

Mr. Kerrio: —the only paying proposition in transit that the people of Ontario share. I suggest to members assembled here tonight that there was a time and the time has now passed, and I would like the government to—

Mr. Makarchuk: The CNR is making money, Vince.

Mr. Kerrio: —reconsider the position in that matter. You cannot and you should not ask the taxpayers or the people of Ontario to pick up the deficit financing of transit within the cities and give the inter-urban transit to the private carrier. That should not be done. So I say, with respect, if members want to do something meaningful, they shouldn't posture like the socialists and decide that somebody else is going to bail them out of a situation.

Ms. Gigantes: No wonder you have one seat in Toronto.

[9:15]

Mr. Kerrio: Members have to do it in a meaningful way; they have to address a situation. I think it's time, if we're going to move the people within the cities of this province at a loss, it's about time we decided that the inter-urban has to be coupled in with that so that we can move the people around the whole province and take the load off the taxpayers.

Mr. Charlton: I rise in support of this motion of no confidence tonight. Those of us in this party used to have a very sure way of knowing when we were right, namely by how loud the former member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. McKeough) would yell at us when we had something to say.

Mr. Martel: The bellwether is gone.

Mr. Charlton: Thankfully, we have discovered tonight that although he's left us, we still have quite an effective way of knowing when we're right, namely by how loud the member for Middlesex (Mr. Eaton) yells and by how much hot air comes out of the member for Oriole (Mr. Williams).

Mr. Makarchuk: It's a regional problem over there, isn't it?

Mr. Samis: It's worse than the Sudbury Inco stack.

Mr. Charlton: The motion of no confidence which we placed tonight—

Mr. Kerrio: Why don't we vote now? You know you have lost.

Mr. Charlton: —says quite clearly that not only is this government undermining public transit in Metro but in the province of Ontario as a whole. I find it quite ironic that in his speech tonight the member for Oriole spent so much time lauding the public transit system in Metro, talking about it being the best in North America, talking about it having the best ridership in North America, and then proceeding to find ways to dismantle it because ridership losses will do just that. Increased fares cause lower ridership. Lower ridership causes increased deficits and increased deficits eventually end up in increased fares again. One just gets into a cycle that never ends.

We have problems province-wide, not just here in Metro. In Hamilton, we are presently into a very difficult situation. The city council and the regional transit commission in Hamilton have done a very effective job over the past two years in keeping transit fares in Hamilton the lowest in the province, as well as implementing the best social rate structures in the province for seniors, students and so on. At present, the city of Hamilton is paying 43.7 per cent of the cost of our transit system and the province only 17.5 per cent.

The money is running out in Hamilton. This fall the fares go up. Next year they are going to go up again. That's going to mean decreased ridership in Hamilton, the same as the proposition in Metro. It is going to mean the start of the decline of a reasonably efficient transit system with the lowest fares in the province. It is going to mean the end of a serious commitment to the public in Hamilton and of the ability of the public to count on public transit, especially those who have no other form of transit to rely on. It's always those who have the least resources to provide themselves with the alternatives that get hurt the worst in these kinds of crunches.

I have a resolution from the city council in Hamilton which is requesting essentially the same thing as what Metro is requesting, that is money so that they can hold the line on fares in the transit system in the city of Hamilton, which they have been trying on their own to do substantially in the last few years, and which they are fast losing the ability to do. This whole debate tonight is not only about Metro Toronto, Hamilton, Ottawa-Carleton and all of the other major centres in this province, but is about the lack of serious commitment on the part of this government to see that we've got transit systems in those centres that are meaningful and useful.

The member for Oriole mentioned the need to substantially improve arterial roads. At the same time that this government is holding the line and cutting back on its commitment to public transit, it is also holding the line and cutting back on its commitment to municipalities and their ability to do just what he's talking about. It's all a part of the same game and it has no end except down.

Mr. Kennedy: I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak briefly to this question, though I am not sure why any of us are speaking to it here this evening.

Mr. Martel: I can tell you why; your House leader wouldn't let us bring it before the fare increase.

Mr. Warner: It should have been done on Friday.

Mr. Kennedy: Members opposite could start basically with taking a look in the dictionary and finding the definition of an emergency. This thing has been going on for a long period of time; then suddenly we have an emergency, and they push and push and push.

Mr. Martel: Don't give us nonsense.

Mr. Kennedy: I just wonder if we would be here if there wasn't a consultation over in Scarborough West in two or three weeks.

Mr. Eaton: Grandstanding is all they are doing.

Mr. Kennedy: Grandstanding is right. I think if this issue came to a vote and the government was defeated and it led to an election, it would be immediately dubbed the five-cent election.

Mr. Martel: What about two per cent?

Mr. Kennedy: Members opposite would be laughed right out of their seats because the public would realize the irresponsibility of bringing it on in this form and taking two days of the Legislature's time to deal with an issue where there is nothing left to be said.

Mr. Makarchuk: What was the election you called in 1977? You have four $7 million members over there. It cost $7 million a member to elect four men in 1977. Don't forget that.

Mr. Kennedy: And worth every nickel.

Mr. Riddell: If ever they lose their seats maybe we should have an election.

Mr. Acting Speaker: I would remind the House that the member for Mississauga South has the floor.

Mr. Kennedy: In full consideration of all the factors involved in this nonetheless very important debate and issue, there were two ways for the government to go when it got down to the final decision on it, either give the grant or don't give the grant.

Mr. Roy: That's pretty clear.

Mr. Kennedy: The judgement of the government in declining this—not hastily and not out of hand, but after very careful consideration—was correct, and very correct. If $6 million were added in subsidy, what do we do next year and what do we do the year after that? Where do we go? The result would be a widening disparity between Metropolitan Toronto and the rest of Ontario. There are bus and transit systems in areas across this province other than in Metro, like Mississauga.

Mr. Kerrio: Gray Coach. That paid but you scuttled that.

Mr. Kennedy: This party has demonstrated on so many occasions its belief that there should be equality, equity and fairness for each person in this province. If one went through our great system and went through the budgets of the various ministries, one would see that one of the end points was to take into account the welfare of every individual within this province.

Mr. Kerrio: And Gray Coach.

Mr. Kennedy: As my colleague from Oriole has said, the province has been very generous with transit grants. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) said it wasn't the nickel he was concerned about, but the downward spiral in the ridership. This is one of the things that has emerged tonight. I want to deal with this for a moment from the TTC paper, which is an excellent report. A person who hadn't followed this issue in detail from day to day could read this and the Hansard of Thursday and he wouldn't require any more statistics. It is all there, there is nothing to be added. What was said in this report should be put on the record for once and for all.

"The ridership projections for mid-1977 have not been met, but at that time the optimism seemed justified. In 1975 and 1976 ridership exceeded expectations by 10 million and three million trips respectively, as apparently a fare increase in those years affected ridership less than expected. Since 1975 there has been a steady, although small, decline in ridership, from its all-time peak of 358 million trips in 1975 to a projected 340 million in the current year without a fare increase."

Mr. McClellan: What's the deficit? Is it not 65 million bucks?

Mr. Kennedy: There have been other periods of declining ridership. Between 1954 and 1961 it dropped from 282 million to 240 million. There was also a plateau and slight decline in the 1968-71 period.

It goes on to say: "Declining ridership is not unique to the TTC. Vancouver and Montreal both had significant drops despite fare freezes, while Calgary and Edmonton have had ridership increases coincident with fare hikes. Economic growth seems to be at least as important as the fare level in determining ridership."

To say there is a downward spiral, implying that at some point down the road the transit vehicles are going to be empty or nearly empty, is not the way, evidently—

Mr. McClellan: Why don't you ride the Spadina subway and see if you can find any body on it?

Mr. Kennedy: —that historical statistics indicate. It appears there could be a cyclical nature to ridership numbers. Perhaps it is economic change. Whatever it is, I don't know; but I don't think we should draw the conclusion from this that the end of public transit is coming upon the TTC and upon the system.

Mr. Grande: What is your conclusion?

Mr. Kennedy: I want to touch on the grant system of MTC, the ministry, for a moment. We mentioned that it is very generous. It is. But I want to touch on a couple of things that have been referred to recently. One is the program for the handicapped, which again will receive substantial funding by the ministry; and of course the Easy Rider program, which is to be expanded.

I was interested in rereading the comments of the member for Riverdale. He made reference to this small amount of $6 million. I immediately thought of the late C. D. Howe, adding significant inflation. Maybe they are both out in left field together. It may not be of great significance over there, but it certainly is to me, being a frugal individual, and it certainly is to people across the province.

Mr. Martel: Right; and in Minaki Lodge too.

Mr. Kennedy: Certainly. That's an investment.

Mr. Eaton: Wasn't that where the people ran Stephen out of?

Mr. Martel: You spent $18 million and you still haven't got it open. You tried to give it away and nobody will take it from you.

Mr. Havrot: That's where you got beaten.

Mr. Kennedy: There is one thing that should be stated as well. My colleague the member for Oriole (Mr. Williams) mentioned the economical ride that individuals using Metro transit receive, and they do. In 1973 the single zone fare for anywhere in Metro was established. One can go from Long Branch to Scarborough, from downtown as far north as the system goes—and that for five cents more than the former rate. There isn't a better bargain if one is going to use any other type of transit, unless, as the member for Middlesex (Mr. Eaton) said, it is the bicycle or some mode such as that. It is a very good bargain.

I heard a CBC-AM program where a learned individual, editor of a transit journal or some such publication, was interviewed—by the CBC no less. He knew transit systems all over the world. He was loud in his praise of the system we have here in Metropolitan Toronto.

Also, the other night, I saw some TV man-in-the-street interviews, where the issue wasn't ridership, nor total subsidies; it wasn't the amount of deficit or any of these things. The question really was, "What about the increase, the five-cent increase?" Several were somewhat concerned about it, but two or three said that in the light of the way the economy is it seemed only reasonable. I think it says something for the common sense and intelligence of the citizens of Metropolitan Toronto.

I wanted to touch for a moment on another point.

[9:30]

Mr. Conway: Please do.

Mr. Kennedy: It is to help the members opposite. They should listen, because it involves their cousins on Capitol Hill down there.

Mr. Kerrio: You are doing the same things they are.

Mr. Eaton: The ones you want to disown.

Mr. Kennedy: The ones those members don't acknowledge. It is a couple of their sins that I want to touch on.

The member for Etobicoke (Mr. Philip) mentioned commuter services. Members will recall the great fanfare with which the federal government, prior to 1975—1974 I guess was their last time out to consult the electorate—was going to help out with something like $500 million for urban transit. This was to include half of what might be needed to modify union station to help this province bring in commuters. It was to help opening up GO Transit on the CPR line out through Dixie, Cooksville, Streetsville and Malton; and to the north and to wherever that system brings riders in and converges on Toronto. The total cost was something in the order of $58 million. We were hoping and were promised a significant contribution at that time, but later Ottawa reneged on the deal.

I just want to tell the members opposite, if they would go down there to take a look at Union Station right now, this government didn't accept that and roll over and let it lie. They allocated $7 million, they have gone alone in the modification of Union Station to enable that commuter service to proceed and bring all those additional riders into Toronto and relieve the burden on our highways. We are going it alone; and it was $7 million for the first phase and a total of some $37 million committed. There was not one nickel from the feds, and that is a breach of the promise we received from them.

The only other point I want to make on this is that though this brings commuters into a central point they are not all from outside the boundaries of Metropolitan Toronto. They pick up at least from Long Branch, and then of course Scarborough, and in the north as far as Metro goes. So it is not a project to help commuters from out in the suburban areas. It's part of the integration of the whole transportation system. At the moment we're having some conversations with Ottawa in the light of an article in the Montreal Gazette on January 27.

Mr. Conway: Are you reading Quebec newspapers, Doug?

Mr. Kennedy: We are these days.

Mr. M. N. Davison: It is a clipping; dispense.

Mr. Roy: Dispense.

Mr. Kennedy: We won't dispense with anything. The fact is that article in the Gazette, with great trumpeting from Marc Lalonde, announced there would be $63 million allocated to transit in the Montreal suburban areas. It just happens that about $33 million of that allocated now is just about what was promised for Union Station downtown. That is what we are asking, ironically: how come they get it at this time? The $500 million originally promised goes out the window; whole new ball game, fellows, but we're starting down in Montreal and there's nothing for Metropolitan Toronto, and nothing for the province of Ontario. There's some answering to be done on that issue over the next few weeks.

It is my belief, as I said at the outset, the government, has made the proper judgement, the proper decision in this instance. In the knowledge of all the factors that have been brought out at this time, I am sure it will be acceptable to the riders who use the TTC in this area as a fair, just, good business decision and the very best solution to the problem with which we are confronted.

Mr. Roy: After listening to our leader's address this afternoon in reply to the throne speech and listening to an individual set out policies—in detail, alternatives to governments—

Mr. Hennessy: Leader? Charlie Chaplin.

Mr. Roy: Will I have to put up with him? Or shall we invite him to meet up with a transit boss or something?

Mr. Speaker: Just speak to me.

Mr. Eaton: He would win, Roy; he would win.

Mr. Roy: He set out the policies, he set out alternatives. I think tonight is an opportunity to bring out the bankruptcy, or to see long-term contradictions of the party on the other side, the same party whose members over the years have prided themselves as being real managers, of knowing the province, of looking to the province's future. We're seeing, as the years go by, the bankruptcy, the contradiction in these policies.

I listened to the member for Oriole (Mr. Williams). It's interesting to hear the expression used by some of these members, members of a party who have been in power 36-some years. When he talks about taxpayers' money coming from the province to the municipalities, he talks about it in terms of "donations," as though he were donating his pay cheque, something that was coming out of his pocket.

You hear it across the province, as you travel, whether it's Wintario funds or whether it's grants which should normally flow to municipalities, the people on the other side masquerade as though these funds are their funds; that they're not taxpayers' funds, that in fact they're doing this out of some altruistic gesture. They take the approach that it is their money rather than the money of the taxpayers of the province.

Mr. Havrot: We never gave you that impression.

Mr. Roy: I think it's indicative when members use words such as "donated."

He was followed by the member for Mississauga South (Mr. Kennedy).

Mr. Mancini: He was worse.

Mr. Roy: Then again, we get the old scenario of why they did not give a grant or a subsidy in this particular case.

Mr. Kennedy: Are you apologizing for Ottawa?

Mr. Roy: The approach, first of all, is Ottawa. When in trouble, blame the feds.

Mr. Kennedy: Blame the feds. Ottawa said it, we didn't say it.

Mr. Roy: It's the feds' fault.

Mr. Eaton: Isn't that what you fellows did after the election? That's why you separated your party. Why did you separate your party, Albert?

Mr. Roy: It's the old refrain. We see it all the time. If something goes wrong it's not their fault; somehow the federal government is involved in renegeing—

Mr. Kennedy: That's because of Ottawa's broken promises.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: At least we don't disavow our party.

Mr. Roy: —on a deal, somehow, with the municipality of Toronto, and that's why the subsidy couldn't be given. How often we've heard that refrain.

There is another refrain which is popular. I was surprised that the member should read the Montreal Gazette. One could almost predict what was coming when he mentioned the Montreal Gazette. It's just like Rene Levesque in reverse, some of the things he's saying. He's saying that not only is it the feds' fault we're not getting the money for the municipality, but the money that should generally be coming to Ontario has been given to Quebec. How often we've heard that refrain.

Mr. Kennedy: There is nothing wrong with that because that's the way it is.

Mr. Roy: How does he justify it? Poor Levesque in Quebec City has been spending the last three years convincing the people of that province that one of the reasons he wants to separate is that all the money is coming to Toronto, that all the money is coming to Ontario.

Most of us know the truth is somewhere in between, that the money is not all going to Quebec and the money is not all going to Toronto, and that in the long term there is a balance.

Mr. Rotenberg: How about sticking to the TTC?

Mr. Hennessy: What are you talking about?

Mr. Roy: It's not good enough. The people on the other side, when their policies are as bankrupt as theirs are, when there are inconsistencies and contradictions in their policies—

Mr. Rotenberg: Speak on the TTC.

Mr. Roy: —they have to accept responsibility. If they don't want to accept responsibility, they should get out and let somebody else govern.

Mr. Kennedy: Why did they say they would give it?

Mr. Villeneuve: People don't want to leave us.

Mr. Roy: The irony of this issue and this situation is that the subsidy should be refused by the same Premier who staked his whole political reputation on being a man of public transportation, of being Mr. Transportation Man of the Year.

Mr. Peterson: Hurray for him.

Mr. Roy: He follows in a long line of Premiers who started as far back as George Drew.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Great man. Great man.

Mr. Roy: I happen to have here—Mr. Speaker, you'd be interested in reading this—what is called the Constructive Platform of the Conservative Party in the Province of Ontario—

Hon. Mr. Walker: You got it right.

Mr. Roy: —approved at a general meeting at Toronto, July 3, 1943. It's all laid out there. My leader this afternoon talked about—

Mr. Hennessy: The ayatollah.

Mr. Roy: —the party which masquerades as managers—the same party. We talked about the economic strategy of this province. We talked about the bankruptcy in their policies vis-à-vis Ontario Hydro. Let's listen. Now we've got bankruptcies in public transportation.

George Drew, back in 1943, was saying this—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Are you kidding?

Mr. Roy: "It can be done wastefully or it can be done as part of a great plan." That's what he said, "part of a great plan."

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Where is the Mitch Hepburn stuff?

Mr. Roy: He said: "We will need more power." This is what he was talking about back in 1943. "We will need more power. We will need better transportation."

Mr. Hennessy: You need more brains.

Mr. Roy: You see, it starts as far back as 1943. "We will need new buildings." My former leader, the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon), knows what we're talking about with these buildings. We've got one not too far away.

"Plans for all of these should be done in advance." That's to say you've got to have policies and you've got to have strategies.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What are you talking about?

Mr. Roy: So the scheme is under way.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What did Drew say about the subway fares?

Mr. Roy: I recall back in 1971, as a new member, seeing the transformation of Bill Davis. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that this was part of the overall plan to change the image of the man. Dalton Camp and the boys were saying: "Look, Bill, your pant legs are too wide. Your hair is not quite right. You have to change the image. You have to find an issue."

Mr. Hennessy: That is not a subway train. Dalton Camp is not a subway train.

Mr. Eaton: Get back to the topic.

Mr. Roy: You recall the issue, Mr. Speaker, the Spadina Expressway. You recall the famous speech. Mr. Speaker, I think you were in the House back on June 3, 1971.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What was your party's position on that? Take your week and then tell me what your position is.

Mr. Roy: He talked at that time of the Spadina Expressway in terms of a capital city, of his views on a capital city, the capital city of Ontario and what the overall plan should be.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Give us Phil Givens' position on that.

Mr. Roy: It's interesting to read Hansard, page 2280.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Vern Singer.

Mr. Roy: It says: "The issue of the Spadina Expressway is not only a substantive one, but it has become symbolic among the population at large, whose legitimate concerns for the planning and development of the capital city of their province, their communities and their transportation facilities are all keenly felt, and whose interests in conserving their urban amenities and environment have become one of the highest priorities. The government of Ontario does not propose to proceed in support of the plan for the Spadina Expressway." Members will remember that famous—I unfortunately was not here at that time—

[9:45]

Ms. Gigantes: Do you have confidence in them now?

Mr. Roy: Confidence in them? Of course not.

Ms. Gigantes: Well, vote against them; vote with us.

Mr. Cassidy: Ah, you got caught on that one, Albert; right on.

Mr. Peterson: We have less confidence in you.

Mr. Roy: It is true I don't have confidence in them. I just want to say to the member for Carleton East—

Mr. Cassidy: Oh, you got caught on that one. Do you stand with the riders in OC Transpo?

Mr. Roy: The NDP members should wait their turn. They will get their turn next.

Mr. Cassidy: We are talking about you and the buses in Ottawa.

Mr. Roy: We will talk about the bankruptcy of the policies of the people to my left. Let me finish. Don't be impatient.

Mr. Martel: You got caught, Albert.

Mr. Hennessy: Is that a promise?

Mr. Roy: And so the famous decision was made on the Spadina Expressway back in June 1971. He goes on:

"We do propose to co-operate with the appropriate municipal authorities in the development of alternative transportation facilities in which we shall offer appreciably greater provincial financial assistance for rapid transportation service."

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Read me your party's position.

Mr. Sterling: Only $7 million in the last four years.

Mr. Roy: Here is what we were getting back in 1971.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Keep reading.

Mr. Roy: I can recall it was probably the single most important decision in the Premier's whole political career.

Mr. Makarchuk: He didn't make it; it was Dalton Camp who made the decision.

Mr. Roy: He probably didn't think of it, but he obviously convinced him to make the decision. So the question that followed from that decision was, what was their alternative?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The large majority.

Mr. Roy: I can recall the famous announcement. I recall trooping over to the science centre where we were going to be given alternatives to the automobile—public transportation. Members will recall that spectacle; it was obscene. My colleague from St. George will recall that. Everybody who was anybody in the municipality was ordered to come up there and watch this film—

Mrs. Campbell: Bowed three times to Mecca.

Mr. Roy: —of the Krauss-Maffei system. At that time it was interesting that the Premier said of his Minister of Transportation and Communications—

Mr. Villeneuve: Never mind grandstanding.

Mr. Hennessy: Sit down.

Mr. Roy: —the honourable Mr. Carton—do members remember him?

Mr. Kennedy: Great fellow, we sure do.

Mr. Roy: Back in 1972 the Premier said of him, "I have a great deal to do with him. It is quite obvious after yesterday's announcement"—and that was the announcement at the science centre—"that particular minister will emerge as the foremost leader in the world as far as rapid transit is concerned."

Not only did we have to suffer the spectacle at the science centre, but they came to Ottawa-Carleton and they went down to London, I am sure, and Hamilton and all over. There was background music and all at once you would see these rapid transit vehicles—

Mr. Kerrio: Magic carpets, Albert, magic carpets.

Mr. Roy: Yes, it was fantastic. There were no wheels on these things. It was beautiful. No driver; no one driving.

Mr. Cassidy: Just like the Liberal Party; there are no wheels on your party either.

Mr. Kerrio: Just like the government.

Mr. Hennessy: Albert, you are sick.

Mr. Roy: What did I hear from that member? He's getting sick?

Mr. Makarchuk: That's one of the $7 million members over there. By the pound he is about $40,000 a pound.

Mr. Roy: But then things started going sour with the whole Krauss-Maffei system. Some of my colleagues have said that in a city when you are talking about public transportation you may have a problem if you have a vehicle that will not go around corners. That could be a problem in the city. Then there was some concern about not having a driver in there. We mundane and narrow-minded people sort of like to see someone up front in charge.

Mr. Ruston: We like to see someone running the store.

Mr. Eaton: You've got nobody up front in charge of your party.

Mr. Roy: For you that may not be a problem. For us, we think it's important.

Mr. Ruston: They're used to it, Albert. They're used to nobody up front.

Mr. Roy: Anyway, it's soured, and so we've got the project now out in Kingston, as far away as possible from the Premier. You recall, I go a step further, what was it, 1972? The Premier trooping off to Florida; he got a medal.

Mr. Makarchuk: Miami.

Ms. Gigantes: What are you going to do tonight, Albert? Do you have confidence in them tonight?

Mr. Roy: Yes, transportation man of the year. So, Mr. Speaker, we have it all. You know, the chickens come home to roost. Here's the man who's built his whole reputation on public transportation. Here's the same individual who denies the city of Toronto a subsidy at a time when they are in an important phase.

Mr. Sterling: They are already getting more than anybody else.

Mr. Roy: When they have arrived at a fine line between increasing the rates and increasing the number of passengers.

Mr. Wildman: Nobody's getting enough.

Mr. Roy: It's got to be studied, it's got to be looked at. The approach that we've taken is to say, "Look, defer it for a year to allow the TTC to review the problem to see that we can have a study so that we're in a position really to chart the course of the public transportation system of this city."

The Premier is not without knowing that even in the city of Toronto possibly he may win votes on this issue and he knows full well that across the province it's a no-lose issue that he will in fact win. I think it's sad that for political reasons the very man whose reputation was made on public transportation is the one who here today or last week in fact undermined it by refusing to give a subsidy that we may chart the future of this important system for the capital of the province.

There'll be an election at some time in the future where he'll be made accountable for some of the things—on Hydro, on economic policy and on the public transportation system.

Now I have to look at the socialists' position.

Mr. Kerrio: Get them on the buses, Albert.

Mr. Roy: We've got to review it.

Mr. Makarchuk: You are ahead so far.

Mr. Roy: I'm sort of a kind soul. I would not of my own initiative attack my friends to the left.

Ms. Gigantes: Smile when you say that.

Mr. Roy: That's not my style and the member for Carleton-East knows that; it's not my style. But I was provoked into it by an editorial which appeared in yesterday's—Monday, March 12—Ottawa Citizen. I think it's important; the Citizen is an important paper. The leader of the NDP reads the Citizen; that's an important paper for the leader of the NDP. It's taking him to task a little bit. In case you haven't read it, Mr. Speaker, I'll read it.

Mr. Martel: Well, he was here, but you never are on Monday.

An hon. member: He was at home writing his speech. Leave him alone.

Mr. Roy: That's true, Mr. Speaker. Some of us spend more time in the riding. I listened to the leader of the NDP and if he's going to spend his time doing foolishness like he's doing tonight, maybe he should spend more time in the riding.

Here's the editorial. It says "A Sweet Election Issue." That's the title of it.

It says: "Michael Cassidy and his New Democrats are stretching a point of philosophy to a point of absurdity." And that's his local paper. It goes on to say—

Mr. Cassidy: You fellows are going to move a motion of no confidence.

Ms. Gigantes: Read the whole editorial. I have it here too.

Mr. Roy: Okay, I'm quite prepared to read it together if you like.

Let's carry on. It says: "They are prepared, if we take their actions at face value—"and even the Citizen knows sometimes that you don't always do that with the NDP—"to force an election because of the Ontario government's refusal to increase subsidies to the Toronto Transit Commission." Then it goes on to say: "They want to head off the same fares for Toronto that Ottawa-Carleton residents are already paying." And who is one of the members from Ottawa-Carleton?

Ms. Gigantes: Read about Mr. Smith's hot air; read the paragraph about Mr. Smith's hot air.

Mr. Cassidy: The present rate in Ottawa for long-term riders is the old rate for Toronto.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, it goes on: "Wouldn't that be a sweet election issue for Premier Davis?"

Mr. Kerrio: Self destruction.

Mr. Ashe: Maybe we should vote for the no-confidence motion.

Mr. Roy: In every little town and village across Ontario, he would keep hammering away: "We are having this election because the opposition wants to give more money to Toronto." That's exactly what he would do. He'd win. We would have shades of 1971. He would win the election for sure. But then it goes on to talk about the sanity of the official opposition, and that's a plus.

Mr. Sterling: Read that part. It isn't too complimentary, is it, Albert?

Mr. Roy: If I may have your attention, please. I am sorry, my friends are impatient; let me proceed.

It says: "But of course we won't have the election on this issue and Cassidy knows it. That's why it was perfectly safe for his party to introduce its motion of no confidence in the government for failing to provide the $6-million subsidy to TTC. The motion will pass only with the help of the Liberals"—but the Liberals know a lot better; I'm sorry, I'm getting ahead of myself—"and the Liberals won't support it because they realize that the pursuit of the issue would be suicidal outside of Metro Toronto." Right? We know that.

Interjections.

Mr. Ruston: Larry, why don't you vote with the NDP?

Mr. Roy: "Liberal leader Stuart Smith gave himself two options to show concern without actually risking an election." And that's smart leadership.

Mr. Eaton: Why don't you be honest and admit the rest of the members got to him?

Mr. Roy: I am bound to read this word for word, Mr. Speaker; the member for Carleton East, I am pledged to it. It says: "His first choice was an emergency debate which meant a lot of words and hot air in the Legislature without ever holding a dangerous vote. His second out was to say that he was opposed to an election on the issue unless he sensed a lot of public support.

Well, that makes sense too. We are not going to go into an election and lose it.

"He knows full well that there will be no public support outside of Metro and there are a lot of signs in support even within Toronto. The NDP's no-confidence"—this is good, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Van Horne: It would bring a tear to your eye, wouldn't it, Albert?

Mr. Roy: Yes, turn up your hearing aids. It says: "The NDP's no-confidence motion is about as risky as playing Russian roulette without bullets."

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Interesting simile he selected.

Mr. Roy: "But Cassidy," it goes on to say—you probably think I am making this up; straight word-for-word here.

"But Cassidy's own constituents in Ottawa Centre might well wonder why he was so comparatively mute when OC Transpo fares rose to 60 cents cash, the very fare that he's trying to block in Toronto."

[10:00]

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Resign.

Ms. Gigantes: Keep talking, Albert.

Mr. Roy: It goes on: "He didn't play around with no-confidence motions then; why is he so concerned about Toronto?"

Mr. Warner: Where was your voice?

Mr. Havrot: The five-cent fiasco.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, if I may complete this: I want to finish. There are just two short paragraphs here.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Take all the time you want.

Mr. Roy: "His weak answer is that the line has to be drawn somewhere." It wouldn't have anything to do with by-elections here, would it? I don't think they'd do that, would they, for political purposes? If Toronto can get more subsidies for public transit, then so can other municipalities. Obviously, the line was not about to be drawn in defence of transit riders in his hometown.

Interjections.

Mr. Roy: And I tell you, Mr. Speaker, I'm sure the member for Ottawa Centre would deny the rumour that he plans to run in Toronto; that he still represents the riding of Ottawa Centre and he will for the next election.

Mr. Cassidy: And I represent it well. I am going to keep on representing it long after you leave this place.

Mr. Roy: If the member gets too exercised, we will send out Brian Cameron.

Let's face it: the political and media power in this province is in Toronto, although the choice of the TTC riders—the outspoken tabloid Toronto Sun—has sided with Davis against the subsidies: "Cassidy and Smith are both anxious for support in Toronto, even at the risk of alienating the rest of Ontario, or maybe they thought we wouldn't notice."

So the point is this: I say to the member for Ottawa Centre and the people on that side: where were you when OC Transpo in Ottawa increased its fares?

Mr. Young: Where were you?

Mr. Peterson: Where were you when they increased the fares in London, Ontario?

Mr. Roy: My colleague to my right said: "Where were you when they increased the fares in London, Ontario?"

Mr. Cassidy: Where were you when I was talking about transit subsidies across the province in January?

Mr. Renwick: Where was anybody in this House?

Mr. Roy: Did they increase the fares in Windsor? I'm sure they did in Niagara Falls, St. Catharines, Kitchener. Where were you when they increased the fares in Kitchener?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They were out working for the federal Grits.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I think the best evidence of the logic of their position is that this same party is prepared to spend $30 million—

Mr. Nixon: Start over again, Albert, start over. Let's have that editorial one more time.

Mr. Roy: I am not sure that the camera can focus sufficiently to pick this up but I say, Mr. Speaker, we know that the party to our left is posturing.

Mr. Cassidy: Speak for yourselves. We are voting with the motion.

Mr. Roy: As my colleague said some time ago, if we said to them now, "We'll support your motion," they'd have a heart attack.

Mr. Warner: Try it. Why don't you try it?

Mr. Peterson: It might be worth it. It would get rid of them once and for all.

Mr. Roy: As I said earlier, in due time this party—the official opposition—will make these people account for their policies. But I think it's important that the public of this province—

Mr. Cassidy: You are going to get your big brother in Ottawa to help you, eh?

Mr. Roy: As I said a year ago, we've got to give the people of the province some time to get to know the leader of the NDP—just a bit longer, the way we know him in Ottawa.

With the policies that we're putting forward and the reasonable positions that we're taking here I am sure that even the people of Toronto, even the transit riders, as frustrated as they are about the policies of this government, would be the first to say there shouldn't be an election on this issue. The approach of this official opposition is one that is responsible and it's not a matter of posturing.

Ms. Gigantes: Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to join in the debate on my leader's motion that this government no longer enjoys the confidence of this House because of its recent decision to withhold provincial funding to maintain current fares for riders of the TTC and because of its continued refusal to provide an adequate funding formula to public transportation systems throughout Ontario. While I listened to the member for Ottawa East accuse us of having weak hearts, I would suggest that perhaps one might tell the Liberals that people who have weak hearts shouldn't accuse other people of having heart attacks.

Throughout the weeks of discussion and lobbying and hard bargaining which have led up to this motion of no-confidence the Conservatives have attempted to convince us that the issues involved can be simply put and we hear them echoed again tonight by the Liberals. "It's Toronto versus the rest of the province," they tell us, "the pampered Toronto transit system versus struggling public transit systems in other Ontario municipalities." It is the old Conservative game, which the Liberals are trumpeting again tonight: Keep the locals fighting with each other and the provincial government can cast smiles of benign neglect over the resulting fray below.

It's strange to say, as the member for Ottawa East has quoted, there are still some in this province who get taken in by this old divide-and-rule gambit. The Ottawa Citizen, for example, which was widely quoted by the member for Ottawa East, ran the editorial to which he referred and chastised the member for Ottawa Centre for moving no confidence on Toronto transit fares and said he was comparatively mute when fares in the OC Transpo system rose to 60 cents. Of all the profound character analyses concerning the member for Ottawa Centre that pundits have indulged in, the accusation that he is comparatively mute is surely one which would stretch even the most credulous mind.

The editorial went on to suggest that my leader was running the risk of alienating the rest of Ontario by expressing our lack of confidence on this issue, and I should mention also, for the benefit of those who didn't hear through the buffoonery of the member for Ottawa East, that in fact the Ottawa Citizen accused his leader of the same error. I think this kind of analysis is just what Conservative policies have been designed to produce and I feel these policies must be challenged.

I am one of those from the Ottawa Valley who gets occasional relief from time to time by saying things like, "Toronto is a nice place to visit, but I wouldn't want to live here," or, "Some of my best friends are Torontonians, but I wouldn't want my sister to marry one." That's the way we hinterland residents let off steam. It's a natural enough way of expressing our frustration, less with the city itself than with the 36-year-old government that has its power centre here in this city. But there is a limit to my willingness to indulge in this kind of anti-Toronto sport, especially when spitting in Toronto's eye means spitting in the eyes of other municipalities of this province who are struggling with similar urban transit problems, municipalities such as Ottawa-Carleton, Mr. Speaker.

I hope the member for Ottawa East will stick around to hear some information about the Ottawa-Carleton transit system. The Ottawa-Carleton regional municipality is one of the fastest-growing areas in Canada, let alone Ontario. The riding of Carleton East, which I have the great honour to represent in this Legislature, encompasses the eastern and southern urban and suburban communities of Ottawa-Carleton and includes about 20 communities separated by many miles from each other and from the employment centre, the city of Ottawa.

Carleton East is served by the buses of the Ottawa-Carleton transportation system, OC Transpo, as we affectionately call it, and we have a very strong appreciation in Carleton East of how important that service is. Most of us can remember how isolated and difficult life was in the days before OC Transpo took up the promise of provincial government support and began the difficult and deliberate job of extending service to our far-flung communities.

That was back in the early 1970s when the transportation man of the year had promised provincial income tax moneys for three quarters of capital costs and one half of operating deficits. The transportation planners—and we have some good ones in Ottawa-Carleton—and the local politicians—and we have some creative ones—set to work with those provincial promises and began the slow and careful extension of public transit in Ottawa-Carleton. Every suburban line they opened was filled to peak-hour capacity in no time flat, and the same is true for every new line today.

But because of the limits this government has placed on its promises, OC Transpo may soon be heading into difficulties. Our regular adult fares are now 60 cents. Because of the imaginative planning on routes, express surcharges and bargain-basement monthly pass packages, the average fare in Ottawa-Carleton is only 32.4 cents. The ridership continues to grow as the system is extended, but the signs of trouble for this system are clear. Last year the OC Transpo deficit was $1 million higher than expected. The warning signs are in.

What is the reason? It is simple enough. Although the system is expanding, ridership is not expanding as fast as might reasonably have been expected. In turn, the most probable reason for that is that the off-peak adult rider has to pay 60 cents a trip. Sixty cents a trip is a deterrent for an awful lot of people who live in Ottawa-Carleton. It is another bitter and sad fact of life in this province.

The provincial subsidy to OC Transpo would be the promised 50 per cent of operating subsidy if, and only if, OC Transpo were raising 65 per cent of its revenue from the fare box. But OC Transpo discovered in 1978 that its ridership growth started to flag when public transit in Ottawa-Carleton was raising 60 per cent as opposed to 65 per cent of its revenue from the fare box. If we raise revenues from the fare box to 65 per cent in OC Transpo to meet the provincial government quota, our ridership will grow even slower. The increasing operating deficit will mean that in an area which is undernourished as far as public transit is concerned we may have to plan to cut routes instead of increasing them. So much for the Conservative policy of support to public transit.

Mr. Grande: The Premier finally came.

Mr. Cassidy: He came to see the government fall?

Hon. Mr. Davis: What did they do for urban transit in Saskatchewan?

Ms. Gigantes: While I am on my feet, I would like to remind the members of the Conservative government about a candidate they ran in a by-election in the riding of Carleton East in 1974. He was the mayor of the city of Ottawa and was well respected for his work in that role. The Conservatives thought they could elect him in Carleton East, but they didn't understand how people in Carleton East, who had practically no public transit, would feel about a mayor of Ottawa who didn't want expressways built over the communities in his cities.

He was right and so were the people of Carleton East. He wanted to protect communities in the city; they had to get to work. He would have had a much easier time as a Conservative candidate, if the people of Carleton East had been well served by public transit. It might be a good idea for members of this government to consult with him now on this question because I am sure he would confirm what I am saying.

I don't like divide-and-rule politics. I don't like to see the city pitted against the suburban area. I don't like to see Toronto pitted against the province. It is cheap, miserable and self-defeating. It is the kind of politics this government indulges in and promotes, and it is supported by the Liberals.

Mr. Turner: You're not supposed to be reading.

Ms. Gigantes: This government will ultimately be judged on its miserable record. In the meantime, I join with Mayor Marion Dewar of Ottawa, Mayor Morley Rosenberg of Kitchener and the other progressive mayors of Ontario—

Mr. Peterson: What about Jane Bigelow from London?

Ms. Gigantes: —and my leader and NDP colleagues in this Legislature to express my distaste for a government that promises public transport support but fails to deliver it. I am in support of this motion.

[10:15]

Mr. Eaton: Mr. Speaker, in rising to conclude what has been a debate on such a major issue that it could cause an election, such a major issue here in this town that the galleries are full tonight—

Mr. Kerrio: Sit down while you're ahead.

Mr. Eaton: A major issue the NDP say. Well, one hardly thinks so when they don't come. We've had major issues in this House when the galleries were full.

Mr. Cassidy: They're waiting for us to knock on their doors.

Mr. Makarchuk: They can't afford to ride the subway to get here. What was the major issue in 1977?

Mr. Turner: You should know.

Mr. Eaton: Working with the Ministry of Transportation and Communications, I know the dedication of the people of this ministry to the support of public transit. The past decade has been one which has made us the most progressive area in North America as far as public transit is concerned. We are one of the forerunners of public transit, and we have visitors coming here at all times to see the public transit system that we set up in this province.

We have considered all of the elements of public transit. We have included programs of surface capital; of rapid transit; of operating capital; of studies; of development and demonstrations. We have increased our operating subsidies in this province from $6.7 million in 1971 to $60 million in 1978; and the total subsidies have increased this year sevenfold to that time. That is a dedication by this government to public transit.

The member for Etobicoke (Mr. Philip) made some references to other areas of transit. Yes, this ministry is involved in a number. We provide some of the best roads in North America. We have the soundest trucking industry in North America in Ontario. We have the safest public transit in North America. And on top of that we have the best connecting systems to that public transit.

I use the public transit coming in from London—the railway. The member for Brantford (Mr. Makarchuk) does, too, at times—and a lot of his constituents do; but did I ever hear him speaking up for subsidy for them from the federal government on the railway coming in? Never.

The London transit increased its rates just about two weeks ago to 50 cents. Did we hear the members from London speaking up, or the NDP? No; not at all.

Mr. Cassidy: You certainly heard us.

Mr. Eaton: Because they are realistic. They know that a 50-cent fare is a realistic ride to work. The people in my riding would give anything to be able to get to work for 50 cents like all the people in Toronto can.

Mr. Villeneuve: Best bargain in the world.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Six tickets for three bucks.

Mr. Eaton: That 50 cents means $5 a week. You can't park downtown for $5 a week in Toronto. It's the best bargain there could be. The ridership has dropped a little, and very little, because some people are using their cars more. A very foolish move, really, when you see that even at 50 cents they can't park for that price. And you people are trying to get us to put more subsidy into that. How ridiculous.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Could the honourable member wind up in 30 seconds?

Mr. Eaton: I can do that. The only member of the Liberal Party from Toronto talked about reality. Well a 50-cent ride to work is reality. It is a fair ride to work. The NDP have grandstanded, and they have grandstanded greatly on this issue. If they thought other members were going to vote for this resolution, or if they voted for it, they would need somebody behind them to clean up.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, order. The 30 seconds have expired. It is the duty of the Speaker to allow 10 minutes for the possibility of casting a vote on the motion before the House.

The House divided on Mr. Cassidy's motion, which was negated on the following vote:

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, MARCH 15, 1979

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

ESTIMATES

Hon. Mr. McCague: I have a message from the Honourable the Administrator of the province signed by his own hand.

Mr. Speaker: By his own hand, the Honourable W. G. C. Howland, the Administrator of the province of Ontario, transmits estimates of certain sums required for the services of the province for the year ending March 31, 1980 and recommends them to the Legislative Assembly, Toronto, March 15, 1979.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

GOVERNMENT AGENCIES, BOARDS AND COMMISSIONS

Hon. Mr. McCague: I would like to take this opportunity to report to the House on the steps that are being taken to implement the intent of the 11 general recommendations of the standing procedural affairs committee on agencies, boards and commissions.

Members will recall that on December 7, 1978 the House adopted the report of the committee with one amendment. The report included 27 recommendations, of which 11 were of general nature. The other 16 recommendations referred to agencies specifically reviewed by the committee. The responsible ministers will in due course respond to the specific recommendations where necessary.

Before dealing with the 11 general recommendations, I would like to make two preliminary points. In my statement in the House on December 7, 1978 I referred in some detail to the important work that has been undertaken by this government to ensure that its agencies are administered in an effective and an efficient manner. The results of that work have already satisfied some of the concerns of the procedural affairs committee.

Secondly, I should make it clear that the current activities of the agency review committee, chaired by my colleague the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Wiseman), are also aimed at resolving some of the issues raised by the procedural affairs committee. It is anticipated that the agency review committee will issue its next report in the late spring of this year.

Recommendation one was that Management Board should review agencies in order to rationalize structures and that there should be an explicit policy in agencies. As most members are aware, this is a policy in the government's manual of administration in which all agencies are allocated to schedules which delineate the applicability of financial and administrative controls. This policy, therefore, meets the committee's underlying concerns. The agency review committee will, however, review the need for any refinement of the policy and will report on this matter in its next report.

Recommendation two dealt with two issues, the first of which was the number of members that should be appointed to agencies. The agency review committee will review the need for guidelines on the number of members in its next report. The second issue referred to was the remuneration of appointees. As the members are aware, remuneration is already closely controlled by Management Board according to a policy which was tabled in the House in May 1978 by my predecessor, the present Minister of Energy and the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Auld). The policy is presently under review and the amended policy, when approved by Management Board, will also be tabled in this House.

Recommendation three referred to guidelines for the disclosure of interest of members. The committee is looking at that also.

Recommendation four, essentially, was that a written policy statement should be drawn up for each agency. Most agencies do, of course, have clear policy statements in their legislation or order in council, or in terms of reference prepared by the responsible minister. In addition, some agencies are required to prepare memorandum of understanding, each of which includes a detailed statement of the agency's role and objectives. The government certainly agrees with the intent of recommendation four, and accordingly Management Board will ensure that written terms of reference are prepared in each case where they do not now exist.

Recommendation five, that all memoranda of understanding should be tabled in the House, will be implemented as the memoranda are finalized and approved by cabinet.

Recommendation six suggested that all agencies would table annual reports in the Legislature. In the government's view it would be inappropriate for all agencies to table reports, given the fact that many bodies have no financial or administrative relationship with the province. In addition, some agencies are so small that preparing several reports would be administratively inefficient.

The government proposes, therefore, to meet the intent of the recommendation by including references in the appropriate ministry's annual report to all agencies, or groups of agencies, which have a financial or administrative relationship to the government and which do not now table reports. It is not proposed, therefore, to include those agencies, such as the Association of Professional Engineers of Ontario, which have no financial or administrative relationship with the province.

Recommendation seven discussed the content of annual reports. The agency review committee will review the need to stipulate minimum information and will report on the matter in its next report.

There are two parts to recommendation eight: firstly, that a standard accounting format should be established for agencies; and secondly, that all expenditures and services provided to an agency by a ministry should be charged back against the accounts of the agency.

As members will appreciate, one standard accounting format is not feasible, in view of the diverse nature of agencies. However, depending on the nature of each agency, its expenditures are required to be accounted for according to either government or commercial, generally accepted accounting principles.

To meet the intent of the second part, the following approach will be taken. All agencies will be listed in the appropriate ministry estimates briefing book provided to members during estimates debates commencing with the 1979-80 estimates. For information purposes only, estimated direct and indirect program-related costs from the consolidated revenue fund will be identified for each agency in the briefing books beginning immediately. In subsequent years, an assessment of actual expenditures for the previous year will also be included. This approach is the most efficient way of ensuring that members are provided with relevant cost information for those agencies receiving provincial support, either in the form of money or services.

Nine referred to the need to improve co-ordination of federal and provincial interests. The government fully concurs with this sentiment and the recent creation of the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs, as well as the current deregulation initiatives, are evidence of our concern.

Recommendation 10 was that the expenditures of all agencies should be subject to the review of the public accounts committee of the Legislature. It is accepted that the public accounts committee should review an agency's expenditures where there is an immediate or potential financial relationship with the province. The committee, of course, already has this mandate and can review all expenditures by agencies from the consolidated revenue fund and the accounts of those self-financed bodies included in volume two of the public accounts committee; therefore, no action is required.

The final recommendation, number 11, requested that all agencies be listed in the estimates book, and this will be done.

AUTO PACT

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, last night the Honourable Jack Horner spoke to the Windsor Chamber of Commerce outlining the federal government's policy regarding the Canadian automotive products industry. At the same time, the federal government announced its response to the Reisman commission recommendations and to the sector task force on the Canadian automotive industry.

Mr. S. Smith: May we have a copy of that?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I'm sorry, isn't it over there? It's coming now. Mr. Speaker, if the opposition wishes, I would be happy to stand down my statement for a few moments until they have it. I'm sorry for the delay.

I'm sure that honourable members would like to know this government's reaction to Mr. Horner's address. I also intend to expand upon my preliminary statement on the Reisman report that I made in this Legislature November 24, 1978. Our response to the sector task force on the Canadian automotive industry will be coming forward in the near future as part of our overall response to all industry sector task force studies.

While we agree with some of the recommendations from Ottawa, we differ on other of their approaches.

As we have said before, we agree with the federal government's decision that the Canada-US Automotive Products Trade Agreement, commonly known as the auto pact, should not be open for renegotiation at this time.

To enhance the investment climate in this industry, we believe all Canadian governments should now support the auto pact. However, we firmly believe that studies should begin immediately to develop more favourable terms and conditions in the operation of the agreement in order to be prepared for discussions with the US government, when opportune.

We are pleased to learn that the federal government will review the automotive industry on an annual basis beginning with the 1979 model year. Ontario has been pressing the federal government to produce such an annual public report. We feel that the provinces and the automotive industry must have the opportunity to participate in the development of its form and content, particularly to establish an agreed upon data base. Assessment of the Canadian industry's performance in relation to the auto pact has been clouded by lack of accurate and comparative data. An annual report should end this controversy.

We support federal efforts in the area of duty remission programs but feel these efforts need to be intensified for the sake of our auto parts manufacturers. Moreover, every effort should be made to encourage not only increased parts sales but also new investments by foreign vehicle manufacturers. New capital investments in manufacturing facilities will provide more jobs and minimize our sensitivity to changing market conditions.

We feel that the federal government has not gone far enough in developing specific programs to improve the structure of the automotive products industry in this country; nor do we feel they go far enough in ensuring that Canada attains its share of the massive investment in design, development and production of the new generation of automobiles to meet energy conservation, safety and environmental requirements.

We feel that in order for the automotive industry to be able to effectively respond to the challenge, a firmer commitment than that given yesterday is required. We would remind this House that our government has proposed for some time now that an automotive investment incentive assistance program be developed on a one-for-two basis, with the government of Ontario being willing to contribute $50 million.

The federal government's position in this regard remains vague. Ottawa only states that special federal assistance will be considered when such aid is beyond the financial capability of the province concerned and when existing federal programs do not apply.

The industry, Mr. Speaker, is of course substantially located in Ontario and if the federal government is not prepared to say now whether Ontario qualifies or not, then Mr. Horner's statement is meaningless. We intend to fulfil our commitment to support the automotive parts industry in Ontario. We must know with certainty to what extent our tax dollars will be complemented with federal tax dollars.

To that end, we will approach Mr. Horner once again seeking more definitive arrangements. We will in any event, proceed to develop measures of assistance for the automotive industry in this province to the maximum of our abilities. We are encouraged by the fact the federal government has identified a need for special measures to increase the level of research and development in the Canadian automotive industry. Lacking more definitive information, we have some reservations as to the effectiveness, however, of some of these proposals.

We would like, for example, to know what steps are going to be taken to assist Canadian-owned firms to obtain foreign technology. We would like to know the extent of assistance to be available under the enterprise development program.

As I said in my statement to this House last fall, we do not disagree with federal funds being administered under the aegis of EDP; we do though, insist that a program be specially tailored for each segment of the industry, that it be developed through federal-provincial consultation and agreement and that the procedures be streamlined. We would like to know how the federal government will decide what type of research and development is most appropriate to Canada and we expect that the federal government will consult us on the types of R and D that will be promoted.

It remains up to the government and the individual firms involved, of course, to seek out and develop programs of maximum benefit, and to decide the specific assistance required for capital investment and R and D; nonetheless, some indication of the level of federal participation is necessary.

With significant restructuring of the auto parts industry due to new materials and new technology, there will undoubtedly be some dislocation of workers. We note that Mr. Horner said special arrangements for dislocated workers are being considered. We feel, however, that now is the time to clearly outline an adjustment assistance program. Consideration should also be given to the provision of financial assistance to companies to promote rationalization and expansion where their financial resources are inadequate.

Mr. Horner said that while Canada now has a deficit under the auto pact, a recovery has been under way since 1976. The fact is Canada has had an automotive trade deficit since 1973. It is important, then, that we move now to reduce the deficit. Some of the measures proposed by Ottawa are encouraging; however, it is not likely that a deficit situation will be corrected until capital investment results in a strengthening and restructuring of the industry.

We will be making further submissions to the federal government on this, and we will, of course, report any new developments to the House.

DISASTER RELIEF ASSISTANCE

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I would like to briefly confirm to the members of this House that the flooded sections of both the township of Dover and the town of Paris have been declared disaster areas, entitling them to financial assistance from the province under our provincial disaster relief assistance program.

In Dover, the ice blockages in the Thames River caused flooding of about 8,000 acres on March 8 and 9. About 100 homes and 300 farm buildings were damaged and more than 100 cattle drowned. In Paris, about 60 residences and 20 small businesses sustained flood damage on March 5 when ice jams caused the Grand River to overflow.

Staff of my ministry have been in the two areas over the last several days and have been in constant touch with municipal officials to discuss the details of the disaster relief program. I am happy to tell the House that we have now also received from the councils of both Dover and Paris the request to designate the affected areas as disaster areas.

I might also say that even before those requests were made the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon), the area in which the town of Paris is located, and the member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. Watson), the area in which the township of Dover is located, had already spoken to me about these matters and got us alerted to the problem well in advance of receiving requests from the municipal areas.

Mr. S. Smith: Which you would not have noticed from the front page of the newspaper.

Hon. Mr. Wells: We, of course, noticed it from the front pages of the newspapers, but we like to hear everything first hand from the members of this House.

Mr. Nixon: You are not building an ark?

Hon. Mr. Wells: They are discharging their duty in a very excellent manner.

Mr. Samis: Does that apply to Mickey?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Therefore, having officially received the request, the cabinet has designated these areas as disaster areas so that they now can receive the relief program.

A detailed assessment of the flood losses will be made by each of the local disaster relief committees, who will also have the responsibility of dispensing the aid money to the flood victims.

The province's disaster relief assistance program provides financial aid of one dollar for every dollar raised locally by a committee appointed by municipal council.

COMMUNITY SERVICES CONTRIBUTION PROGRAM

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I would also like to inform the members of the House that the province of Ontario represented by the Minister of Housing (Mr. Bennett), and the federal government, represented by the Honourable Andre Ouellet, minister responsible for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, today signed a two-year agreement activating the Community Services Contribution Program. Other signatories for Ontario to this agreement included the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Parrott), and myself.

The Community Services Contribution Program as we have designed it for Ontario, replaces the federal funding previously provided under CMHC programs for water and sewage treatment and neighbourhood improvement projects. As well, Ontario is designating a portion of the money it will receive for a new program which will offer incentives for municipal non-profit housing projects. One of the most important features of this arrangement is the significant degree of disentanglement that it achieves between the roles and responsibilities of the two orders of government in this area.

In recognition of the provincial responsibility for municipalities and community services, the agreement provides the province with almost complete flexibility to select the programs that will be included under the agreement and to determine eligible projects, allocation criteria and dollar allocations.

The federal role is thus largely a financial one. The only condition imposed upon the province is that federal funds be allocated on an objective and equitable basis. The criteria that we have set out in the appendix to the agreement are the means by which we shall meet this condition.

With the policy and administrative responsibility now resting clearly with the province, we think duplication of efforts and related inefficiencies will be eliminated. Moreover, the program can be more readily adapted to changing priorities.

While the agreement signed today is for a two-year period only, negotiations will begin before the end of 1979 on a longer-term program.

Maximum funding from the federal government pursuant to the agreement that has just been signed will total $137.55 million: $51.6 million will be made available in 1980-81 in respect of spending on eligible projects initiated or in progress during 1979; and $85.95 million will be made available in 1981-82 in respect of spending on eligible projects initiated or in progress during 1980.

In the first program year the Ontario government has committed to this program area an amount of approximately $90 million. Much of the funding in the first program year will be channelled through the Ministry of the Environment. Thirty-one million dollars in federal contributions and $83 million in provincial funding will be provided for water and sewage projects in an estimated 115 municipalities under the municipal infrastructure part of the program.

The Ministry of Housing will allocate $13.7 million in federal contributions and an additional $6.85 million in provincial grants to some 13 municipalities for neighbourhood improvement area projects. The balance of the first-year federal funds will be used for a new municipal non-profit housing incentive program. Details of the first-year allocation process are available from the two Ontario ministries mentioned, Environment and Housing.

Both the federal and Ontario governments emphasize the need for municipalities to submit their specific projects for approval by May 1, 1979. Submissions by this target date will ensure early construction starts, as well as full use of the funds being made available by the federal government under this new program.

Prior to the end of the current year, the province will decide how to distribute the second-year federal funds of almost $86 million between different ministries, and the criteria for determining eligible projects and municipal allocations.

In order to simplify contracts with the government on the new programs, the Ministries of Housing and the Environment have decided jointly to sponsor a series of six municipal workshops. These will serve to explain the new programs to elected and appointed municipal officials, builders, engineers and architects.

The first of these workshops will be held March 22 in London at the Holiday Inn, City Centre. The others will be held in Toronto, March 27; in Sudbury, April 3; in Thunder Bay, April 10; in Ottawa, April 19; and in Kingston, April 24. Information on the programs and other information about the workshops will in the very near future be placed in the members' mail boxes.

Finally, I wish to advise members of the House that the Minister of the Environment and the Deputy Minister of Housing, along with myself, will be attending the provincial-municipal liaison committee meeting tomorrow, March 16, to discuss this new agreement and the details concerning it with municipal representatives.

Mr. Martel: On a point of order: The Chairman of Management Board made a statement to the Legislature a while back. We don't seem to have received copies of that statement on this side of the House. The Liberals have theirs, but we haven't received one.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: You haven't read all your mail.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Chairman of Management Board can correct that omission.

FLOOD CLEANUP BY INMATES

Hon. Mr. Walker: Correctional Institution inmate work crews will help western Ontario flood disaster areas. In view of the designation by the cabinet of an area of southwestern Ontario as a disaster area due to flooding and as a result of representations made to me on behalf of the residents by the member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. Watson), I am pleased to announce that this ministry is prepared to provide a 60-man task force of inmate workers to help in cleanup operations after the flooding has receded.

Instructions have already gone out to mobilize a work force of inmates from five institutions to carry out whatever useful work the affected communities require. The inmates will be carefully selected and will include non-violent offenders who are not considered a security risk in the community. Inmate work parties will be drawn from the Elgin-Middlesex Detention Centre and the Chatham, Sarnia and Windsor jails. In addition, approximately 20 inmates will be transferred from the Burtch Correctional Centre to these four institutions to swell the work force to a total of 60.

Arrangements are being made with the Guelph Correctional Centre and Burtch Correctional Centre for the provision of rubber footwear, safety boots and helmets, and other work for the inmates. Each of the four institutions involved in sending work crews will provide lunches for the inmates and correctional officers to supervise their activities in the community.

This action is in keeping with the ministry's philosophy that, wherever possible, inmates should undertake helping tasks that benefit the community.

Mr. S. Smith: If they were not a security risk, why were they in jail? Why would they not be in a community centre before?

Mr. Roy: We are only off for one week. Why all the statements?

THAMES RIVER FLOODING

Hon. Mr. Auld: Before bringing members up to date on the flooding situation in Dover township, I would like to begin by praising the actions and the many hours of hard work of not only the Ontario Provincial Police, but the staff of the Lower Thames Valley Conservation Authority. I'm sure every one of us is familiar with the excellent rescue work carried out by the OPP. It has been fully documented by the media, as well as in the comments of township people affected by the flooding.

Mr. Foulds: Your heart's not in this.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I would also like to commend the staff of the authority who have been monitoring the river conditions, issuing warnings and spending long hours patrolling the flood area.

Mr. Nixon: I thought your member called for an investigation into that.

Hon. Mr. Auld: All through the flooding, staff were working round the clock to stay on top of the situation. I believe that in a number of instances their judgement calls during the height of the flooding were extremely astute.

Mr. Nixon: What happened there will happen on the Grand too.

Hon. Mr. Auld: It is still difficult to assess the full damage in Dover township. Much of the area is still inundated. On the basis of several meetings between local people, Ontario government agencies and the authority and ongoing surveys, the ministry estimates that a total of 8,100 acres of agricultural land have been flooded, 100 beef cattle lost and 100 homes affected. The acreage affected includes 1,000 acres of winter wheat which, presumably, is covered by crop insurance.

It is still hard to estimate the damage to private homes. Many people have not been able to return yet and make practical damage estimates. We know that some of these dwellings—not many—are seasonal homes and were not occupied at the time of the flooding. A rough estimate of the damage to all homes and personal contents is $900,000. However, we must remember that these are rough estimates only.

The estimated damage to farm buildings and equipment in Dover township is about $300,000 and, to stored crops, another $300,000; damage to roads has been roughly estimated at $750,000, bringing the subtotal to $2.25 million. The cost of repairing the dikes, we estimate, may amount to $1.25 million.

I am sure that these figures will change. The township of Dover will be meeting with the Ontario Provincial Police, my ministry and the authority to continue assessing the damage as I believe the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells) has indicated. These organizations have also begun to meet to decide on the courses of action that need to be taken at the present time and will be considering the types of assistance available to the area. This will be the basis for an appeal for assistance to the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs, the agency which administers disaster relief funds.

I have established a review committee to go over the events and actions that were taken before and during the Dover township flooding. This committee, as yet unnamed, will examine the events and file a report with recommendations to me on how flood action systems can be improved, if indeed there is need for improvement. I would like to wait for that report before making any final judgements; but, before that, I would like to comment on several points that were raised—some of them here in the Legislature—in the days immediately following the height of the flooding.

First, the question of dredging at the mouth of the Thames River where it flows into Lake St. Clair: It is the opinion of the authority, and of other technical staff, that dredging would have to be a continuous operation because of the continuous deposition of silt in that area. This could be classified as a delta, a dumping ground for any silt in the river as it is slowed down on entering the lake. As I said before, technical staff, both local to the area and from Toronto, are of the opinion that the effects of dredging could be wiped out in a short time.

Second, there was the question of why an ice-breaking vessel was not called in to assist in clearing the mouth of the Thames. As you may know, the staff of the conservation authority continually monitored the river, beginning Monday, March 4. Both Chatham and Thamesville were notified on Monday and Wednesday that the river was flowing without interruption and that the flood would peak some time on Thursday. On Wednesday, conservation authority staff noted again that the river was still flowing strongly. Authority staff flew over the river on Thursday and identified an ice jam at the mouth of Jeannette's Creek, about three quarters of a mile up from the mouth of the Thames.

The decision to dynamite this jam was carefully considered but rejected, and we believe with good reason. Ice from the upstream jam could have moved to the mouth of the river causing another jam. That would have created even worse flooding in the Lighthouse Point area, a residential section that was flooded in 1968 when an ice jam formed at that same place. In addition, it would also have caused serious flooding throughout the townships of Tilbury East, Tilbury North and Raleigh.

The authority had already contacted the officials aboard the United States Coast Guard ice-cutter and had been told that, because of the ice conditions in the lake, there was no guarantee that they could reach the mouth. If they could, it would have taken a minimum of three days. Without the ice-breaker it was impossible for a local tugboat to get into the river mouth area to move the ice around.

I think you will agree that the conservation authority and the ministry made the right decision. A jam at the Thames mouth would have not only flooded the builtup residential area but also caused extensive flooding in the area on the south side of the Thames, as I have already mentioned.

Third, there was the question of the gauge at Prairie Siding, just one of the gauges the authority has installed along the Thames. Actually, I shouldn't say the gauge at Prairie Siding has been installed; physically, it is there, but it has never been operational. The gauge was put in place late last fall but, because of mechanical problems, it has never been used for water measurement readings. We must remember that these devices are hooked up to a telephone line and a hydro line. Because of difficulties in the telephone hookup, which were being worked on at the time, the gauge was not in use. Until these hookups can be made, of course, the gauge cannot be calibrated. Without the proper calibration, any information from the device is useless.

I really don't think the Prairie Siding gauge was an important factor here. It was not malfunctioning, it was simply in the process of being installed and made operational.

I think I would be loath to agree with the statements that the conservation authority was ill-prepared for the flooding. As I said before, lower Thames staff monitored this situation from the very beginning and indeed throughout the entire crisis. They are still out along the river helping local residents, gathering information, helping repair damage to the dikes, and also monitoring for future flood crests if they should begin to materialize.

SALES TAX REBATES FOR VISITORS

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Speaker, the honourable members will recall that last November I announced a new vendor information program to help small businesses deal more easily with retail sales tax. This was part of a broader program established in my ministry to support the Premier's (Mr. Davis) commitment to improved customer services.

Mrs. Campbell: Oh, boy.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I am surprised at the member for St. George saying, "Oh, boy." She was one of the people who thanked me for that information kit.

This initiative is a new pamphlet expressly designed to inform visitors to Ontario how they may obtain exemptions or refunds of retail sales tax on purchases made in Ontario.

This fully bilingual pamphlet, entitled Provincial Sales Tax Rebates for Visitors to Ontario, explains in simple language how visitors may obtain either immediate exemptions at the point of purchase when they choose to have the goods shipped home by retailers, or how they can subsequently apply for refunds when they return home. At the same time the pamphlet will clearly inform more Ontario businessmen of these benefits available to their tourist customers, so that they may more effectively promote their sales to tourists.

Each pamphlet contains a simple form for claiming retail sales tax rebates. To provide greater visibility to the program, a display stand containing supplies of the pamphlet will be distributed for placement in suitable prominent locations.

In anticipation of an increase in the volume of claims, we have taken steps in the Ministry of Revenue to streamline operations further to ensure that tourists receive their rebates promptly.

In announcing this improved service, I am particularly pleased to acknowledge the enthusiastic co-operation of the Ministry of Industry and Tourism. The pamphlet has been designed, by using the "We treat you royally" slogan, to be directly included in the 1979 advertising campaign to be launched shortly by my colleague, the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman).

Because of this co-operation, the pamphlet will be widely distributed through Ontario, Canada, the United States and abroad. I am informed that preliminary discussions have already resulted in many requests for supplies of the pamphlet. The first printing run will be 400,000 pamphlets, of which 100,000 will be made available immediately to retailers by my ministry. The remainder will be distributed by the Ministry of Industry and Tourism. Plans have been made to supply airlines, the hospitality industry, chambers of commerce, Canadian and Ontario tourist information centres and the media.

In summary, copies will be widely available, with particular emphasis on servicing tourist entry points, airports, vacation areas and tourist attractions.

In conclusion, I believe this improved information service will reinforce the government's other successful programs for promoting our tourist industry. The pamphlet demonstrates our recognition and understanding of the immense contribution made by this industry to the economic strength of Ontario generally, and in generating employment in all parts of the province.

BYPRODUCT POWER PROJECT

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I should like to bring members up to date on developments in regard to the byproduct power greenhouse project co-ordinated by the Ontario Energy Corporation.

Honourable members will recall that this project is designed to utilize the thermal energy of reject warm waters available at nuclear power stations. Last December I announced that in co-operation with my colleagues the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. W. Newman) and the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) we were working on the establishment of two greenhouse productivity tests, one in Bruce county, the other at Pickering. At that time I emphasized that in addition to ensuring that our project is designed to meet the needs of a family-size greenhouse operation, we were looking to the private sector for substantial financial and management resources.

I am delighted to confirm today that these expectations are being fulfilled.

First, I'm pleased to announce that a small test facility at Pickering, based on a conventional heating source, has been built and is now being operated by a farmer. We expect the first crop of tomatoes will be harvested in the near future. Following a successful demonstration of the productivity at Pickering, an eight-acre commercial project is proposed for that site, heated by the rejected warm water from the Pickering nuclear plant.

Second, I am equally pleased to report that a meeting organized by the Ontario Energy Corporation on February 7, 1979, for potential investors in our Bruce County AgriPark project has also proved to be most successful. At that meeting we invited a broad spectrum of business interests to participate in a joint venture research, design and development program to be undertaken in Bruce county.

As a result of that invitation we have received offers of participation exceeding $600,000 in value—

Mr. Mancini: That's peanuts, and you know it.

Hon. Mr. Auld: —from a widely varying group of companies and individuals, including George Weston Limited, TransCanada PipeLines, Jarman Holdings Limited, Snobelen Farms Limited, and Huron Ridge Limited.

Mr. J. Reed: George Weston is a small family unit?

An hon. member: Absolutely. A family farm.

Hon. Mr. Auld: As this offered contribution satisfies the requirements of the productivity test component of the proposed program, the Ontario Energy Corporation will proceed now to enter into detailed negotiations with the potential participants.

I may say that I did not indicate all those people who are inquiring because some of them wish to continue negotiations and reach some conclusion before they have their names made public.

Mr. McClellan: Package this as a cure for insomnia.

Hon. Mr. Auld: It's my hope that these discussions will proceed quickly so that the construction of the test facility can be achieved by the next growing season. At the same time I expect the joint venture will also begin—

Mr. Cassidy: What about the condominium fish farms that are in that statement?

Hon. Mr. Auld: —to direct its efforts towards planning for the design work required for the full commercial development of a large-scale agripark—

Mr. Cassidy: Has Frank Drea got legislation to govern them?

Hon. Mr. Auld: —in co-operation with the municipal authorities of Bruce county.

Mr. Kerrio: On a point of order: Mr. Speaker, when it becomes difficult from time to time to get copies of ministerial statements across to the opposition, I wonder—if they're going to continue the practice of printing half of the statement or giving it to the media—why wouldn't they print the whole thing in the media and save us the time of listening to it?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: The speech was not given to the media.

Mr. Kerrio: Just half of it.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Not half, or a quarter, or any of it.

Mr. Cassidy: This whole thing is an abuse of the Legislature.

Mr. Foulds: This is the only important statement today.

HOCKEY VIOLENCE

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Recently concern has once again been expressed both in this House and outside about violence in amateur hockey. Obviously my ministry, which is responsible for amateur sport, including hockey, shares this concern. I am now in a position to inform the members of the Legislature about our most recent decisions to further look into and ultimately to eradicate violence in amateur hockey.

Mr. Nixon: Lots of luck.

Mr. Foulds: Why are you splitting your infinitives?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Before outlining our next steps, it may be useful to recall some developments during recent years.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Do you want me to continue?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would like to hear this statement.

Mr. Makarchuk: You're the only one.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: You're not interested in violence in hockey or you'd be listening to this.

Mr. Martel: Your statement is so full of baloney I can't help but be that way.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Yeah? Let me hear about it later on, okay?

Before outlining our next steps it may be useful to recall some developments during recent years. The William McMurtry report on violence in hockey in 1974 led directly to the establishment of the Ontario Hockey Council, an advisory board in my ministry.

The members of that council under the chairmanship of Lloyd Davidson are drawn from leaders in organized minor hockey as well as several individual citizens interested in hockey but with no affiliation to the minor leagues. It is well to recall also some of the major functions assigned to the Ontario Hockey Council:

1. To define the purposes and objectives of amateur hockey;

2. To design a rule structure consistent with the purposes and structure;

3. To act as a final appeal tribunal from various hockey associations;

4. To ensure that coaches' and referees' clinics are operated in accord with the proper philosophy for amateur hockey;

5. To recommend the allocation of government funds in support of amateur hockey;

6. To assist in educating the public as to the role of amateur hockey.

[2:45]

Mr. T. P. Reid: They haven't done much of a job.

Mr. S. Smith: They should get a delay-of-game penalty.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Since its inception, the Ontario Hockey Council has been successful in a number of areas in collaborating with organized minor hockey authorities to minimize roughness and violence.

Clinics for referees and the eventual mandatory requirement for certification of referees have already improved control of games by referees. Body contact in the youngest age group leagues is increasingly being disallowed. Through educational programs for fans and parents carried out by publications such as "You and Your Child in Hockey"—

Mr. Warner: Name names.

Mr. Martel: Did you leave some out?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —and a film called "Hockey Is", the objectives of amateur hockey have been widely disseminated.

Mr. Cassidy: You skipped a page.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: There is tangible evidence to indicate that all of these measures are having a desirable effect. For example, injuries to the eyes sustained in hockey—some, no doubt, through acts of violence—have been reduced from 253 in 1974-75 to 27 in 1977-78.

Mr. Martel: Nonsense.

Mr. Kerrio: It's not because of less violence, it's because they wear helmets now.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: In spite of success to date in attempting to eliminate violence—

Mr. Martel: You haven't the statement we've got.

Mr. McClellan: Which statement are you reading?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —it is obvious that we must not only continue our efforts through the Ontario Hockey Council but substantially increase them.

Mr. Foulds: You split your infinitives again.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: As part of our expanded program, the Ontario Hockey Council has agreed to send a questionnaire to parents of almost 100,000 players in Ontario—

Mr. Kerrio: It says 200,000 in the paper.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —asking them to assess the quality of hockey experience available to their children.

Mr. Kerrio: You've got the numbers wrong.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We believe that in ascertaining the viewpoint of the parents we are reaching that sector of our population which has the greatest direct interest in hockey and the well-being of the players. The 17 questions seek to find out what parents think about hockey as it is taught, played and organized in Ontario.

Mr. Bradley: Are we getting the results?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Respondents are asked not to name any specific team or individual, nor to identify themselves.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Will Alan Eagleson get one?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Responses to the questionnaires will be tabulated and analysed. The resultant information will then serve as a basis for further discussion at some 25 to 35 open forums to be held throughout Ontario.

We are planning to hold most of these during the month of May while memories of the current hockey season are still vivid. Forums will be open to all and we hope they will help shed further light on some of the concerns of the general public, referees, coaches and others about amateur hockey. By midsummer we should have not only a clear indication as to the major concerns but also be in a position to take whatever specific steps are required to deal with them.

In this exercise I should like to stress that my ministry, as heretofore, will be working through the Ontario Hockey Council and will be providing increased resources where necessary. This council, by its structure, is able to work in close collaboration with organized amateur hockey leaders, parents, players, coaches and referees.

We believe that this arm's-length approach, stressing self-regulation and self-government, will in the long run be far more effective in eliminating violence from amateur hockey than direct legislative intervention. We continue to believe that neither the provincial government, and certainly not the federal government, should become directly involved in regulating amateur hockey at the minor league level.

Mr. Bradley: How many games did you see?

Mr. Martel: On a point of order, the most significant part of the Minister of Culture and Recreation's prepared statement was left out of the statement that he read to the Legislature. In fact, he left that portion out which says: "For example, fighting now results in an automatic game misconduct penalty." That is just not the case, and he ignored putting that in the statement to the Legislature because it is erroneous.

SIGNATURE OF MINISTER

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of privilege. It involves my privileges as a member in correspondence with the Minister of Transportation and Communications, the Honourable Jacques Neige.

Mr. Van Horne: That went over his head.

Mr. Roy: Some time ago, I had correspondence with the minister in one of the official languages, French, and the minister graciously answered in the same language, French. It was a very nice letter, very well written and all.

In the spirit of the letter the minister signed, instead of "James Snow", "Jacques Naige." I want to tell the minister that the humour was not missed but I want to bring to his attention that "neige" is not spelled n-a-i-g-e.

Mr. T. P. Reid: You can't spell in French, either.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I never could spell.

An hon. member: You're illiterate in both languages.

Mr. Roy: You see, I ran to my dictionary; I didn't know what it meant. It's spelled n-e-i-g-e.

PCB SPILL AT DOWLING

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of privilege dealing with a press release put out by the Minister of the Environment.

In a release dated March 14, the minister indicated he would be making an important statement concerning a PCB spill at Dowling, Ontario, at 7 p.m. on Monday, March 19, at Dowling.

My point of privilege is, in view of the fact this is one of the biggest polychlorinated biphenol spills that has ever occurred in Canada, and in view of the fact it has been raised in this chamber on a number of occasions, I believe our privileges have been abused by his failure to make his statement here in the chamber where there will be an opportunity to question him on the entire matter.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think it is only appropriate that since the spill did occur in Dowling, it is about time the opposition recognized that we are more than prepared to deal with the problems in Ontario where they exist.

Mr. Martel: After three and a half years.

Mr. Warner: Five years later.

Mr. Laughren: When the House is not in session.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think it is a good thing that we are prepared to go to the communities all over Ontario and present our case first-hand to the people who are most seriously affected. I don't think I have short-changed the members' privileges. I will be glad to answer those questions when we return to the House.

Mr. S. Smith: Presumably we will hear about the dump at Upper Ottawa Street after the House has risen as usual.

ORAL QUESTIONS

PHYSICIANS OPTING OUT OF OHIP

Mr. S. Smith: I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Health: Since all the anaesthetists at Toronto Western Hospital appear to have opted out of OHIP, as perhaps so have those at other hospitals as well, can the minister tell us what plans he has to ensure that people in Ontario and particularly people at that hospital will be able to have an operation at a public hospital in this province without having to pay a surcharge to an anaesthetist?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: These are the kinds of situations that we are looking for to work on with the medical association, to take them up on their offer to assist in seeing people do have that option.

While I am on my feet I didn't want to rise on a point of privilege—

Mr. T. P. Reid: Answer that question first.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Very simply, where those situations arise, and we are checking our records to see if there are others—

Mr. S. Smith: You didn't know about them?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: No, I wasn't aware of that particular one, no. We will go to the particular medical staff through the medical association which has offered to be of assistance in that regard to ensure that people do in fact have the option available to them.

Mr. Makarchuk: Does that mean they can have their operation without the anaesthetic?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I might point out the change in regulations recently to ensure that in all hospitals, in all clinical departments of all hospitals where there are billing groups, we will be able with their assistance to bring this about.

While I am on my feet, sir, I wanted to raise a concern. In this morning's Globe and Mail it seems the question of whom I consult for medical advice is more important even than the possibility of a settlement between Israel and Egypt.

Mr. Speaker: That wasn't part of the question.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: On a point of privilege, then; I will make it a clear point of privilege.

Mr. Foulds: Don't deny it during question period.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I take some exception inasmuch as when I was asked about my medical services yesterday I pointed out that I have two doctors, one of whom has apparently opted out and the other of whom has opted in. I haven't seen the one who has opted out for about three years.

Mr. Conway: We thought you were a healthy young man.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Lakeshore Psychiatric?

Hon. Mr. Davis: We get our psychiatric assistance from over there.

Mr. T. P. Reid: He doesn't allow for a surcharge.

Hon. Mr. Davis: You get a caucus rate. I will tell the honourable members, his treatment is becoming obvious.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, is the minister prepared to encourage the immediate establishment of capitation medical groups or other kinds of health service organizations, especially in communities where patients are unable to obtain medical services at the OHIP rate? The minister has known this would happen for some time. Is he ready to move and introduce those kinds of operations in those communities?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As the member knows, for a number of years, I think it is now six or seven years, we have had a variety of forms of health service organizations in various parts of the province. In fact, we now have 29.

Mr. Cassidy: You've constantly dragged your feet in funding them.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: We have recently, over the last year or more, been working on revising the budget system for the HSOs and revising the goals and objectives. When that updated policy has been approved by the cabinet I will be announcing it publicly, but in the meantime we have been approached recently by two groups in Peterborough; one a group of physicians, the other a group representing, I think, the largest union in the city. They are expressing an interest in establishing an HSO and we are quite prepared to meet with representatives of either or both groups to explore the possibility of establishing a financially-viable health service organization.

Mr. Cassidy: Is the minister not aware that the regulation that was adopted by cabinet in December and published in the Ontario Gazette in January, which permits opted-out physicians to continue to bill under OHIP for services they deliver in the hospital, is a means of encouraging doctors to opt out of OHIP? It allows them to have a certain amount of income from OHIP and to refer patients of whom they have doubts about their capacity to pay to outpatient clinics in the hospital. Will the minister take action now to rescind that regulation rather than encouraging doctors to get out of the plan?

Mr. Warner: You're helping the doctors opt out.

Mr. S. Smith: I said that at the time.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: What I would do is encourage the honourable member to go back to the level—

Mr. Warner: You drew the regulations.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —and the quality of research his party had when the former leader was there. It's clear that it's gone straight down hill. If he will check, he will find that that regulation has brought to the clinical departments of non-teaching hospitals what has applied in all departments of all teaching hospitals and in the emergency departments of all non-teaching hospitals for years.

Mr. Foulds: It is still a bad regulation.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: It is an assistance to the public.

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker: The minister has once again tried to accuse me of distortions in this Legislature. I would point out to him that that regulation extended that privilege to doctors in 200 hospitals across the province. He should stop twisting facts in this Legislature.

Mr. Yakabuski: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Does the minister feel that the whole matter of medical people opting out here in Ontario and Canada could quite possibly change drastically if a national medicare plan comes into effect in the United States of America? Couldn't that trend be reversed, where the slogan will be "Go north young man"?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: It is worth noting that in the last couple of years we have had in Ontario visits from such personages as the Honourable Joseph Califano, the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare of the United States, who was advised to come and look at the Ontario health plan as a model—

Mr. Warner: What's left of it.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —one of the best in the world; the Honourable Edward Kennedy, senior senator from the state of Massachusetts; delegations from a variety of state legislatures, all of whom came here based on their research to find one of the best health plans anywhere in the world.

Mr. Warner: They wouldn't be impressed now.

Mr. Kerrio: I know what they were doing here. They really like the nurses; they were signing applications.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I think at this point it is difficult to predict exactly what will happen in the United States. As honourable members know, some members of Congress have their own ideas about what they'd like to introduce; the White House and executive branch have some of their own ideas. They are determined, clearly, to have a universal medicare plan. The form of it is difficult to predict, and therefore the effect of it on this country is even more difficult to predict.

PLANT LOCATION INCENTIVES

Mr. S. Smith: I'll ask a question of the Minister of Industry and Tourism. Has the minister received a request from the highly successful Tridon Limited of Burlington for a straight cash incentive in the order of about $1.5 million to expand its operations in Burlington? Without it the company apparently has said it will do its expansion in Tennessee, where a recent calculation leads them to believe they could expand more cheaply.

[3:00]

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There are a number of firms that have written us in anticipation of the program—

Mr. Martel: Las Vegas in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Davis: You are opposed to it, are you?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —and Tridon is one of them; that's all I can report at this stage.

Mr. Makarchuk: It is better than roulette.

Mr. Martel: More and more like Las Vegas every day.

Mr. S. Smith: Is the minister aware now that he has, with the Hayes-Dana move, created a situation where no manager worth his salt will even dream of expanding any kind of plant in Ontario without at least pretending to look at the southern United States—

Hon. Mr. Davis: They are doing it all over the place.

Mr. S. Smith: —and coming back to the minister and saying that he needs an extra million or million and a half to make up the difference?

Mr. Bolan: Just plain blackmail, that is all it is.

Mr. S. Smith: Doesn't the minister think the time has come to say no to these kinds of straight grant demands based on the southern United States and to set up proper criteria for an intelligent industrial strategy in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well firstly, I would point out, lest the Leader of the Opposition is unaware, we of course had a discussion in this assembly last fall about the possibility of this government giving another incentive grant to the Ford Motor Company to locate another plant, in this case the casting plant, in Windsor. At that time the same sort of cry was coming out of the opposition side that we might be subject to this blackmail in each and every case that came along. The members should know by now, and I am sure the member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. B. Newman) has told them, Ford located a casting plant there, which was a further $150 million worth of investment in the great city of Windsor without a nickel from this government. There was no money offered by this government; and I think it's important to note, in fairness to that—

Mr. Mancini: That is the way it should be.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Of course it should be, but without the engine plant you never would have had it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —multinational, that they did not ask for any more money from this government.

So I think it's important to note that the multinationals are not automatically coming in here, nor is any firm automatically coming in here saying if you don't give us money, we are going to go somewhere else. I think there is one other important thing to note.

Mr. S. Smith: Where there are multinationals on the local scene, nobody is going to expand.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, you are against growth.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There is one other thing to note, and that is that in that case and in the earlier case, we carefully analysed the situation in anticipation of a request and determined that particular plant was likely to locate in Windsor for other good, business-like reasons. We do make that very careful assessment.

An hon. member: Why don't you write Peter Lougheed for a handout?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I would only add to the Leader of the Opposition that if he has been following some of the remarks made by both the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) and myself over the last few weeks and months, then he will know that there are criteria being developed. They are very clear and straightforward and I know the Leader of the Opposition is aware of them because he is now adopting them in all of his speeches. After the budget you will see them formulated in strategies developed by my ministry for applications to that fund. In simple terms, in the next few weeks members will see an industrial strategy developed by this ministry and made quite clear to the opposition and everyone else.

An hon. member: In the next few weeks, I like that.

An hon. member: In the fullness of time, right.

Mr. McClellan: Going to sell lottery tickets.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Are you looking for a grant?

Mr. Peterson: Would the minister please relate his comments in the context of this quotation: "Mr. Prime Minister, while I support much of what has happened since February, an industrial strategy which relies heavily on widespread giveaways will only come back to haunt us." I am quoting the Premier; November 27, at the first ministers' meeting.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Why don't you ask me? I will expand on that.

An hon. member: Was that in Ottawa or Brampton?

An hon. member: Was that at a press conference?

An hon. member: Better watch that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: As we have made quite clear in all of what we have been saying, there are many components to an industrial strategy quite apart from the financial assistance that this or any government can provide. Among them are some of the things members have heard us talking about—apprenticeship training, exporting, research and development, global product mandating, mergers where appropriate, and duty remission schemes where appropriate. All of those things, together with better purchasing practices, procurement policies by government and import replacements are components.

Mr. Peterson: We have seen nothing but words on that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well with respect, the member might have noticed, for example, the very successful Trade Horizons meeting we had last week in Toronto at the Harbour Castle. We were expecting 500 people to attend to find out how better to deal in the export market without government assistance. We had 1,400 people attend that very successful conference. The following day the federal government had a similar project at OISE. The Hon. Jack Horner attended. He did have 37 people turn up for a little analysis on how to do some exporting technology. That is a lot more than words.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The 1,400 people who attended our Trade Horizons conference have now backed up the numbers of applications to us to assist them, not financially but in making contacts in the United States. That's what industrial strategy is all about, taking people who aren't exporting and showing them how to export.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. When the standing committee on procedural affairs is reconstituted and begins to meet, perhaps they can take under advisement bringing in some kind of provision in standing orders for a delay-of-game penalty.

A new question from the honourable member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, your reference is an excellent idea, because we're certainly not going to get—

Mr. Speaker: Off-sides and asides.

Mr. Cassidy:—any particularly useful advice the way the Minister of Culture and Recreation (Mr. Baetz) has handled the question of violence in hockey.

Mr. Hennessy: Here we go again.

Mr. Speaker: A new question, please.

Mr. Hennessy: Misconduct.

Mr. Peterson: Is this an attempt at parliamentary humour?

Mr. T. P. Reid: That is the funniest thing you've said in five years.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: The member would legislate it into the grave.

Mr. Cassidy: The minister should listen to what the member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel) is suggesting. He made some excellent recommendations and I'm sorry they're being ignored by the ministry.

LAKESHORE PSYCHIATRIC HOSPITAL

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question of the Minister of Health, Mr. Speaker, arising out of his foreclosure of Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital.

Hon. Mr. Davis: As long as there is no penalty.

Mr. Cassidy: In view of the McKinsey report; and in view of the Ontario Public Service Employees Union brief this week, which has systematically documented the need for Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital to remain open; and in view of the strong community demand to keep the hospital open; can the minister explain why his ministry has rejected the OPSEU request for an inquiry which would allow the community, the workers and the patients to learn the rationale for the closing of the hospital and to participate in finding alternatives to the closure?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I think I outlined the rationale fairly clearly in my statement on January 22. I met that day with the advisory board for the hospital. Recently, I met with a delegation representing the council of the borough of Etobicoke and the board of health of the borough of Etobicoke. I have a meeting coming up with representatives of various groups, including the advisory group. I have received copies of the lobbying brief distributed by the Ontario Public Service Employees Union to rate-payers groups and the like; I'll be responding to that.

Mr. Speaker: I will acknowledge that I am going to be a little bit longer in my answer, but it will take some time. I'm sure you'll want me to answer the question intelligently.

There are four or five main points in the lobbying brief that I would like to respond to. First of all, the allegation is made that 296 patients will be transferred to Queen Street Mental Health Centre from Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital, 14 to Hamilton and eight to Whitby.

The average in-patient population at Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital over the last six months has been about 280. Out of this total, members must subtract 46 beds which are presently in use for the alcohol unit and 26 beds which are being used for the mentally retarded unit. None of these will be moving to Queen Street Mental Health Centre, therefore the maximum number of patients who will be moved is 208. Transfers to Hamilton Psychiatric Hospital total six, transfers to the Whitby Psychiatric Hospital two; not 14 and eight respectively as reported by the union.

The second allegation is that the beds available at the Queen Street Mental Health Centre would be somewhere between 125 to 150. The facts are that the beds presently available at the Queen Street Mental Health Centre, with the relocation of some services to different areas of the hospital, comes to 292. This figure does not include the 68 beds which have been allocated to the med force unit.

The allegation is made that the closure of Lakeshore will further reduce the beds and force hospitals to resort to early discharge of uncured patients into the community and the establishment of more group homes and boarding homes. I think that if members follow the figures I've just given them we have shown that the Queen Street Mental Health Centre has sufficient beds to handle the in-patients, and therefore there is no need to resort to early discharge into the community.

Finally there is the allegation—

Mr. Makarchuk: That is very questionable, Dennis.

Mr. Turner: It is not.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —again revolving around the bed capacity at the Queen Street Mental Health Centre. I think I've already covered that, Mr. Speaker. So we will be answering OPSEU, and maybe they will give us their mailing list. I have a rough idea of the range and the distribution of their lobbying kit. We'll send out as many copies of the answers as we can.

Mr. Warner: The minister is just trying to fight a bad decision.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Basically, the factors which contributed to my decision not to retain Lakeshore, which I recommended to cabinet and which it supported, were the antiquated facilities there compared to the modern up-to-date facilities and programs available at Queen Street. I haven't even mentioned today the beds available at Hamilton Psychiatric Hospital nor beds being built up in some of the community hospitals.

Mr. Makarchuk: What beds? In the corridors?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: In addition, there is the lack of available capital to rebuild both Whitby and Lakeshore, as well as my concern for the safety of the patients and the staff, given the antiquated facilities. None of the factors which contributed to the decision has changed. Therefore, I think it would create undue expectations on the part of some of the staff, many of whom are already in the process of interviews for vacancies which have been identified elsewhere in the government and outside of government, and it would be misleading to the public at this point even to suggest that an inquiry was possible.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Since the minister is saying in his statement that he is so set in this decision that no facts emerging from an inquiry would lead him to change his mind, can he then explain to this House why he said on January 22 that services, such as the excellent alcoholism program, would continue in the community they service when, in fact, the alcohol services unit is dependent on 28-day inpatient and partial hospitalization therapy and, since it will not be transferred to Queen Street, it is not going to be continuing to provide the kind of service that it has provided for many years at the Lakeshore location?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: My staff have asked the director of the alcohol services unit to outline what will be needed to maintain the alcohol services program in the community. To my knowledge, that has not yet been received. For all of the outpatient and community services programs, the work is under way to identify where in the community they will be located. But we do not intend to pull into Queen Street all of the community and outpatient services; rather, we will be taking to Queen Street the inpatient services.

Mr. Conway: Supplementary: The director of the alcohol services division at Lakeshore has indicated to me as recently as this morning that the optimal condition is to maintain that unit at Lakeshore, since the Ministry of Community and Social Services presumably will be maintaining its responsibilities on that campus and since the vocational training building—and I may stand corrected and I would appreciate the minister's comments—which was built, I believe, in 1973 and which is in excellent condition—a really fine facility —is still on the site—

Mr. Speaker: Question.

Mr. Conway: —is the minister indicating that it is still his intention to close the door on the entire campus as far as his ministry is concerned?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: We haven't even had the report yet from the group which has been set up to review what would be the most appropriate locations for the community service program.

Mr. Cassidy: The minister will have closed the hospital before he gets the report.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am not sure that any one building on the site could sustain itself in terms of the services as compared to everything else. My intention at this point would be to vacate the entire site, but I will await—

Mr. Martel: You are completely unresponsive to facts.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —the reports which are being prepared with very extensive community involvement. Dr. Maharaj, who is the director of the unit, has specifically been asked to put down on paper his thoughts as to what is most appropriate there. Then the committee will report on what is in the best interests of the patients' programs.

Mr. Lawlor: I don't know if it is supplementary; it may be almost a point of personal privilege. The minister is not wearing the button with "Save Lakeshore Hospital" I sent across to him a few moments ago. No, that's not the question. The question has to do with two other units.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Speaking to the point of privilege, I would say that my motivation is that of the interests of the patients and the staff of that hospital and I think what we are doing is in their best interests.

Mr. Warner: Then save the hospital instead of closing it.

Mr. Martel: Save the hospital.

Mr. Lawlor: I would like to ask the minister about two other units. One is the dialysis unit which has been switched to Whitby with all the patients in that unit located in Lakeshore. I think there are 18 of them. The second unit is with respect to special observation, which is people under Lieutenant Governor's warrants. I believe there are 16 of them, and they are somewhat dangerous individuals. The minister is closing the unit immediately. Can he explain that?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am sorry, I didn't quite get the last part. The dialysis unit is going to Whitby. Those are mainly people, I am told, who commute and the patients have been advised. That's the advice I've had on that. What had the second part to do with? [3:15]

Mr. Lawlor: It has to do with Lieutenant Governor's warrants, to people referred from the courts, very often very dangerous individuals. There is a special unit at the hospital which is being closed immediately, so I hear. Has the minister an explanation for that?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I will check, Mr. Speaker, rather than hazarding a guess. My recollection is that that unit is to go to Queen Street in its entirety, but I will confirm that.

Mr. Swart: You are closing the hospital and you don't know these things?

Mr. Warner: You are just closing it and you don't know why; you don't know what you're going to do.

HERITAGE LANGUAGE PROGRAMS

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Provincial Secretary for Social Development in the absence of the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson). In view of the speech by the Premier to the Metropolitan Catholic principals in February, which stated that the government firmly believes in and will fight for the right of individuals and groups to retain and develop their cultural heritage and language, can the minister explain why the government intends to pay fewer actual dollars and in fact has cut its share of the cost of heritage language programs in the schools by just about half in 1979, and how does that represent an implementation of any genuine commitment to multiculturalism or help language groups to maintain their linguistic heritage?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Education, I will take that under advisement and make sure the honourable member receives the answer.

Mr. Lawlor: Not again.

Mr. Cassidy: You are supposed to be responsible for social policy.

Mr. McClellan: You should resign. Your policy secretariat is useless.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If I understand the limited response, the provincial secretary is taking the question as notice on behalf of the Minister of Education.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Yes.

Mr. Lawlor: Not again.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: No. It has been taken as notice and there will be an opportunity for supplementaries—

Mr. McClellan: I would like to know why this minister doesn't know what the Minister of Education is doing with respect to her own policies.

Mr. Cassidy: That's what the policy secretariat is for.

Supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: No.

Mr. Cassidy: Can I ask the minister to advise on further questions when she comes back with an answer after consulting the Minister of Education?

Mr. Speaker: No. She has taken it as notice and she can answer it either directly or refer it to the Minister of Education for a response.

Mr. Cassidy: As a supplementary, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: No. It has been taken as notice.

Hon. W. Newman: You were trying to sneak in a double question and it didn't work, did it?

CHILDREN'S SERVICES

Mr. Blundy: To the Minister of Community and Social Services, Mr. Speaker: Is it his intention to commemorate the International Year of the Child by reducing funding of the children's mental health program when at the same time his government can find an easy $100 million for the delinquent pulp and paper industry?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what the source of the information or the quality of the research of the honourable member happens to be.

Mr. Roy: He is always right on.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I would suggest that one not jump to simple conclusions on the basis of what might be a misinterpretation of a particular letter. I know the letter that is being referred to. I will be meeting within the next week and a half with the representative agencies of all of the children's services in the province that we fund, at which time I will be outlining to them the full and complete picture of the funding provisions for this fiscal year for the children's services division. I don't wish to comment on any speculation at this point with respect to specific items within the budget until I have had an opportunity to carry out that process with those agencies.

Mrs. Campbell: You will have to tell the public before you tell the House.

Mr. Blundy: Mr. Speaker, in this letter from the deputy minister in rather basic English—and I would ask the minister if this does not convey the same to him as it does to me—a number of children's mental health centres, along with other parts of the ministry, will be asked to reduce certain services. That would appear to me, Mr. Speaker—does it not to the minister?—that there would be some further cuts there.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the honourable member to read that also in the context of a possible attempt to invite certain agencies, within their budgets, to shift priorities to, for example, non-institutional as opposed to institutional alternatives. There is that interpretation open. It does not suggest the interpretation he is placing upon it is the only one that is open.

Mr. McClellan: I have the memo too. When the memo from the deputy minister says that children's mental health centres will be asked to reduce certain services, I want to ask the minister if he will give us at least an assurance that there will be no reduction in the number of beds in children's mental health centres in this province. I would like that assurance now.

Hon. Mr. Norton: As I said earlier, I am not prepared to discuss specific details of the planning until I have had an opportunity to communicate with the agencies. Certainly, I will make this commitment to the honourable members opposite that there will be a very generous increase in funding to children's services as a total. I will not discuss at this point specific details within that.

HOSPITAL BED ALLOCATIONS

Mr. Cooke: I have a question for the Minister of Health. I would like to ask the minister if he is aware of an incident that took place in Windsor on February 27 where a Mr. Turski went to Metropolitan Hospital complaining of weakness and difficulty in breathing. He was taken to the hospital by ambulance. He was there for three hours, underwent tests and was released. According to Dr. Yomjinda, the emergency doctor, he would have been kept at Metropolitan Hospital for observation if a bed had been available. Four hours after Mr. Turski was released he was dead from a massive heart attack.

I would like to ask the minister if he now agrees that the bed reductions are affecting the quality of care in Ontario hospitals and if he will please change his policy.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I will be glad to look at that particular situation. It seems to me that the member has to accept one thing first and foremost, that is that no doctor, if he thinks a patient is in danger, will release him from the hospital. No doctor will do that knowingly. Having gone through a situation myself when my own father passed away four days after being cleared of any illness, I think I have some personal experience in that regard. I can tell the member that the ethics of the profession are such that no doctor will do that.

I will look at that particular situation.

Mr. Warner: Patients will be in the hallways.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I do not agree that the policies are encouraging this. I wish the member would start to realize that his community is a good example of where, while active treatment beds are being reduced, chronic care beds are being increased significantly to take care of the chronic bed needs of the community—

Mr. Foulds: Where?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —as identified by the hospitals in that community and his own peers and his health council.

Mr. Cassidy: In Ottawa, we had to drag you kicking and screaming for four years before anything happened.

Mr. Cooke: Supplementary: I would like to ask the minister, since he knows that in Windsor there will be further cuts in the number of active treatment beds as of April 1 and more the following year, how he expects a community like Windsor to cope when we need the active treatment beds. I agree we need the chronic care beds but people are dying because of his policies. When is he going to change them?

Mr. Turner: Nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I think that member does not only the Ministry of Health but all of the health professions in this province a tremendous slur by making that kind of statement. It is absolutely unfounded.

Mr. Warner: You're destroying the system and you know it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member should be embarrassed.

Mr. McCaffrey: Resign.

Hon. Mr. Norton: What kind of talk is that from a social worker? That's totally irresponsible.

Mr. Cooke: On a point of privilege: The Premier says I should be embarrassed. I should point out to the Premier that the information presented in this Legislature today was—

Mr. Speaker: That's not a point of privilege.

Mr. Riddell: Supplementary: In connection with the bed closures, would the minister disagree with the comment that was made by the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Drea) at the annual meeting of the Huron-Middlesex Conservative Association just a few days ago that if the quality of service was going to be affected in hospitals in places such as Goderich, Wingham, et cetera, this type of thing would be open to negotiation by his ministry?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am not sure what the honourable minister had to say. I am sure what he probably said was this—

Mr. S. Smith: You are sure of what he probably said!

Mr. Roy: You are playing with your odometer. Quit playing with your odometer.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —that in every part of Ontario, as we move to de-emphasize institutional care, with greater emphasis on things like day surgery, day hospitals and care in the community, where the need for additional chronic or extended care facilities is identified we are prepared to approve more. Windsor is an example where we have approved more chronic beds. In Ottawa, we have approved the conversion of the Ottawa General for 200 chronic beds.

Mr. Foulds: But you are not opening them first.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Just yesterday we approved, in a couple more areas of the province where chronic bed needs have been identified, conversion of active treatment beds to chronic to meet the actual needs.

Mr. Warner: Tell us about Scarborough. Two hospitals are full in Scarborough.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: So we are prepared—working with the local planners, the local health councils or, where they don't exist, the local hospital planning councils—to ensure that needs in the chronic and extended care fields are in fact met.

BEAN CROP DISPUTE

Mr. Riddell: A question to the Minister of Agriculture and Food in connection with the ongoing dispute between the Ontario Bean Producers' Marketing Board and the dealers regarding the 1977 bean crop contract. Is the minister aware that the solicitor for the dealers has constantly and persistently postponed examination for discovery, and as the minister representing the interests of producers, does he not feel obliged to solicit the assistance of his colleague, the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry), to bring some pressure on the dealers' solicitor to have the examination for discovery so that the matter in dispute can be brought to a head and so that the farmers can be paid for their 1977 bean crop?

Hon. W. Newman: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I've often said to the member's former leader over there—and I have many things we could agree on about solicitors—

Mr. Kerrio: Let's blame it on the feds.

Hon. W. Newman: —but anyway—no, I realize that it's a very serious situation. I realize there are five lawsuits involved and certainly I will be glad to bring it to the attention of our very able Attorney General, or if he's here I would refer the question to him, because it would be more appropriate. But I do realize the seriousness of the delays that have been going on.

Mr. Foulds: I have a question for the Minister of Health.

Mr. Kerrio: Hey, Bill, that's a first.

Mr. Speaker: Would the member for Niagara Falls just cool it?

HOSPITAL BED ALLOCATIONS

Mr. Foulds: I would like the Minister of Health to let this House know what reply he is giving to the over 300 letters that he has received from residents in Thunder Bay asking him to stop his devastating cutbacks in active treatment beds in Thunder Bay and northwestern Ontario. I would like to know especially what response he has made to the point that Thunder Bay is a regional service centre for most of northwestern Ontario and will he please accept the very sensible suggestion that has been made by a number of writers of these letters that the Ministry of Health allot temporary funding to provide the necessary additional long-stay patient care accommodation in existing vacant beds, so that the enormous strain on active treatment beds resulting in extensive waiting lists will be substantially reduced?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As the honourable member knows, within a matter of a couple of months—in fact it should have happened months before now—St. Joseph's Villa, I think I'm using the right name, will open. It's a 100-bed extended care facility which will provide a tremendous reprieve to the situation in the Thunder Bay area. That, as you know, Mr. Speaker, was supposed to have opened as long ago as October, or maybe earlier than that, but due to labour problems, it was delayed to December and then to May.

I will answer these form letters, probably with a form letter, pointing out the policies of the government; that as we have over the last number of years developed many alternatives—in fact, Thunder Bay is one of those communities in which the alternatives have been developed and experimented with first. We have had a chronic home-care program in Thunder Bay since October 1975. We have had an assessment and placement agency in Thunder Bay for, I think, it's now three or four years perhaps. We have the St. Joseph's Villa opening up.

Mr. Foulds: It's not open now.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: We have the new cancer clinic in Thunder Bay, which I was honoured to open last year. We have the new CAT scanner at the McKellar Hospital in Thunder Bay.

There are a number of new services that have been developed in that community and I will tell them about all of these developments and that we are prepared to add more in the extended care and long-term fields in the future as the needs are identified.

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary: Why has the ministry failed to take the suggestion that was made, as long ago I believe as 1976, by the district health council that the temporary funding be provided to relieve the chronic-care strain on the active treatment beds? Why has that not taken place?

[3:30]

Second, would the minister not agree that there is an additional strain on Thunder Bay because of the regional nature of its work? Does he not think it is time that the magic formula bed ratio system for the small hospitals in the region, particularly in communities such as Nipigon, must be replaced by a custom-designed system when we get the situation where three of the five doctors in a small community like that are saying they may leave simply because they cannot professionally and adequately provide services? As the reeve said, "How do you cut back on an x-ray technician when you only have one, and how do you close a wing of a hospital when there is only one wing to the whole hospital?"

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: First of all, the regional nature of Thunder Bay is already taken account of inasmuch as the referral population for that hospital centre does take account of the people who actually use it. Whether they be from the city of Thunder Bay or from the northwestern region, the people who have actually used the hospital are taken into account in calculating the referral population and therefore calculating the beds.

It is interesting that the honourable member raised the question of Nipigon; and, Mr.

Speaker, I know, that is a hospital that is near and dear to your heart. I was looking at the figures for that hospital this morning. We did build in several factors in the budget formula for the very small hospitals, and in the case of the hospital at Nipigon the restraint, if you want to call it that, resulting from the application of the bed formula is one bed—one bed—this current year.

I would point out that in fact we have asked the Ontario Hospital Association and the Ontario Council of Administrators of Teaching Hospitals, which are representative of all the hospitals in the province, to sit down with us and develop a whole new budget formula. There are a number of things we have tried to do in the last couple of years—

Mr. Foulds: Why don't you do that first?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, if he likes, I will take the honourable member through the steps that we have gone through over the last couple of years to take cognizance in the budget formula of things like the small hospitals: the fact that the very small hospitals have had higher increases in the last couple of years than the average for all the other hospitals; the fact that we built in a 10-bed cushion in the bed allocation formula for the very small hospitals, which resulted in that factor of one bed in the Nipigon hospital.

Also, instead of using the actual cost per bed, we used the average incremental cost per bed in the formula so as to cushion the impact. We have also indicated that the move is in transition in the active treatment bed area over three years, not in one year, which would have too great an impact on the system.

We want to develop a totally new formula, and one of the priorities on our table is the problem of the very small hospitals. In the meantime, we have put these cushions into the current formulae to cushion the impact on them until such time as we can develop a totally new budgeting system.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, in regard to the Thunder Bay hospitals, does the ministry's formula take into account the referral population from the Kenora and Rainy River areas which is going to be there, because the minister seems to be intent on destroying the secondary treatment facilities in places like LaVerendyre at Fort Frances, which will happen if he continues with this program the way it is.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I would point out that in the formula for LaVerendyre hospital in Fort Frances there is an allowance for 39 or 38 new chronic beds, and their overall funding compared to last year is up 16 per cent. That is the bottom line after taking all these things into account. In addition to the 16 per cent increase and the 39 chronic beds, I believe there has also been a recent special grant from the Ministry of Northern Affairs to that hospital for the space they are going to provide at annual cost to the health unit. So I think that hospital has been reasonably well done by. I met recently with the mayor of Fort Frances, and staff of my ministry will be visiting with Mr. White, the administrator, and representatives of the staff.

The referral population for the Thunder Bay hospital centre includes the calculations for the number of people or percentage of the population in those various communities who have used the hospital.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Not the future use?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: No. We can only go on what we know have been the patterns. If we try to project the future, I think the member could see that could militate against the interests of the small, far-flung hospitals if we overestimated on those projections. It's better to use retrospective information, which is absolute.

THUNDER BAY HEALTH STUDY

Mr. Hennessy: Mr. Speaker, I'm concerned that the member for Port Arthur has presented a petition. I have a similar petition myself; his is only a duplicate of the petition I have. I think the Minister of Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier) had the same type.

The petition is with regard to the shortage of hospital beds, and I am concerned, as is the member for that riding. I'd like to know if there is a study going to be prepared by the Thunder Bay district health council for the ministry to take some action with regard to chronic care patients.

Mr. Foulds: The beds are going to close in 10 days.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I'm sorry, I missed the early part, but I take it the question was meant for me.

Mr. Philip: The earlier part was a ministerial statement.

Mr. Speaker: The question was, is the district health council going to undertake a study?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I'm not sure, Mr. Speaker, if they have launched a study on chronic care at this time. Most of the health councils have got studies under way on chronic and long-term care needs. We have a few of those reports in now. Submissions are being prepared, in line with the commitment in the speech from the throne, to the Management Board and cabinet for approvals of some more chronic and extended care beds in various parts of the province. I'll have more to say as each of those reports has been prepared and analysis of local needs is considered by cabinet.

I will check for the member as to whether there is a study currently under way by that particular health council. Members can anticipate this is going to be an ongoing process. As the population continues to become much older, our needs in that area are going to become much greater. Even if a study were completed today they could expect it would be updated from time to time every few years.

RESOURCE EQUALIZATION GRANTS

Mr. Bradley: My question is to the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs. It relates to two questions asked in the House previously of other ministers.

In light of the fact municipalities across the province are striking their budgets and are looking for the precise amount the minister would be providing in terms of interim payments related to those municipalities adversely affected by the resources equalization grant, could the minister assure the House he will present those figures before the recess for the winter break so that municipalities would be aware of them? In presenting them, would he assure the House that the figures and information provided by the former provincial Treasurer to municipalities indicating those who would be eligible will be the figures that will be used to calculate this interim payment?

Hon. Mr. Wells: The answer to that question is, I will be introducing a bill to give us the authority to make those payments; no, I will not be introducing the figures before we adjourn for the Easter break; and no, I am not using the list of cities and municipalities with figures that the former Treasurer tabled. We are using a new formula, and the eligible areas—those that perceive themselves to be adversely affected—will be notified probably sometime in the next week.

Mr. Bradley: Supplementary: Could the minister indicate why he is not using the figures and information provided by the former Treasurer, in light of the fact a lot of municipalities were anticipating those would be the figures used, and that they were accurate?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Yes, I can indicate to the House very precisely. The figures used by the former Treasurer constituted a list of municipalities with amounts associated with the adoption of the total property tax reform market value assessment package. We are looking at something different. We're looking at those municipalities that would be very adversely affected because of the use of the present equalization factors for the computation of the resource equalization grant—something quite different from what the former Treasurer was using at the time he put his list in. So the list will be different from the one the former Treasurer had.

I might just say I already have a meeting lined up with the mayor and council of St. Catharines, I think for a week tomorrow, to chat with them about this and other matters.

LUMBER PRICES

Mr. Swart: I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. Is he aware that the tremendous escalation that took place in the price of lumber last year has continued apace into this year? For instance, the wholesale price of a four-foot by eight-foot sheet of spruce plywood, five-sixteenths of an inch thick, has increased from $7.25 to $8.20 from January 1 to this time. As a result, is the minister prepared to abandon his provincial hands-off policy, which he explained to me in a letter, and at least monitor and publicize the unreasonableness of the price escalation in lumber?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Never having been a man to duplicate activity under way, I draw to the attention of the honourable member that for some weeks my federal counterpart, Honourable Warren Allmand, has had an active investigation into these prices under the auspices of the Combines Act.

I should add that his attention was drawn to the Ontario prices by me, not by the honourable member.

Mr. Swart: By way of supplementary, doesn't the minister realize his government has the constitutional responsibility for retail prices and that when it puts a restraint program on wages and all forms of government assistance it has to do something about holding prices? Doesn't he think his government, as part of its $100-million gift to the forest industry, should require those companies to sell lumber here at the Canadian dollar level instead of at the United States dollar level?

Mr. Worton: He is putting the minister against the boards.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I would just say that while retail prices may or may not be a provincial responsibility—

Mr. Foulds: They are.

Hon. Mr. Drea: —the unusual activity in retail or wholesale prices is quite clearly a federal responsibility under the criminal code.

Mr. Swart: You've got enough clout to do something if you want to.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Furthermore, in terms of the development of resources, particularly in the lumber field, I thought the name of the game was to stimulate exports so that we could ease the balance of payments deficit.

Mr. Swart: Of course. We're not talking about combines; we're talking about Canadian prices.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I am very pleased to see the professional socialist from Welland-Thorold now wants to cut off exports so that indeed there will be even harder times in this country.

Mr. Swart: I never said any such thing.

Mr. Gregory: Pick on somebody your own size.

Mr. Mackenzie: Why don't you try to put 100 per cent of them out of business? It's your tactic.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Are they your friends?

Mr. Mackenzie: Some of them are. I didn't say all of them.

COURT REPORTERS DISPUTE

Mrs. Campbell: My question is to the Attorney General. Has the Attorney General no statement to make at this time with reference to the study of Mendel Green into the problems of the reporters in special examiners' offices, and will he table that report which I'm informed he now has?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I will be tabling the report in the very near future. At that time I will make what I consider to be an appropriate statement. I'm still reviewing the report. I'm waiting for reports from some members of the ministry who are interested in this area of special examiners. I expect to be reporting to the Legislature within the next two or three weeks.

Mrs. Campbell: Supplementary: Does the Attorney General not agree that these reporters have suffered for a considerable length of time, and for us to rise without any kind of a statement for them is at least thoughtless, if nothing else?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I think the member for St. George has really raised another related issue, namely, a dispute between certain reporters and the special examiners. With all due respect to Mr. Green and his very interesting and useful report, I don't think either his report or my statement will resolve that dispute.

ALUMINUM WIRING

Mr. M. N. Davison: I'd like to ask a question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations about the inquiry on aluminum wiring in the hope that he'll give up his role as the Artful Dodger and answer questions without his characteristic vagueness and evasion.—

Interjections.

Mr. M. N. Davison: On March 2, this minister said at the hearing that the cost of repair or replacing faulty connections and equipment will "be borne in a very fair way." Does that mean the minister will agree with me and the members of the New Democratic Party that it would be extremely unfair to expect any home owner in Ontario to pay for necessary repairs when the fault lies with the contractor, Ontario Hydro or the minister's government?

Hon. Mr. Drea: On March 2, when I tabled the report of the commission of inquiry into aluminum wiring, the question was raised about who would be responsible if defects and so forth were found in individual homes because of the inspection service being offered. At that time—and the member who asked the question wasn't present, he didn't show up, he only saw it later or something—

Mr. McClellan: You should talk about showing up.

Mr. M. N. Davidson: You haven't been in the House for the last three days.

Mr. Philip: Where have you been this week, Frank?

Hon. Mr. Drea: —we pointed out that it was premature to try to attempt to give a firm answer to that question because it would depend upon what the inspections found. At that time I gave a commitment, not only on behalf of my ministry but on behalf of the government, that when all the diagnoses were in from all of the free inspections—and they are not in yet—the solution for the individual home owner would be fair. I still say that.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Does the minister contend that the rather shabby treatment meted out to one Mr. John Wright, of 1 Juliette Square, Bramalea, who earlier this month—as a matter of fact within 24 hours of the minister's statement—had a fire in his aluminum-wired home, was fair?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Don't ask me, please don't ask that one.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I am asking that because the ministry has refused to pay compensation, even though research has clearly shown that a fire in a fuse box is much more likely to happen with aluminum wiring than with copper wiring.

Hon. Mr. Drea: The insurance will pay for whatever damage was in that fuse box.

Mr. M. N. Davison: You are inadequate.

Mr. Swart: Paper tiger.

Mr. J. Reed: Supplementary: I would like to ask the minister, if it is not very clear under the terms of the Power Corporation Act where the responsibility lies for the inspection and approval of all electrical installations in Ontario and that it does indeed lie with Ontario Hydro, and since in this case it is obvious that through certain incompatibilities of wiring and connectors and so on there have been problems, would it not be incumbent then upon Ontario Hydro, which is the approver and the inspector of these things, to make those corrections?

Hon. Mr. Drea: It is not quite that simple. In some cases people wired their own houses and received no approval. That is why we are waiting until all the—

Mr. J. Reed: They are not inspected?

Hon. Mr. Drea: If you don't take out a permit to wire your house, obviously it won't be inspected. What I am saying is, quite simply, when the diagnoses are in—those inspections are being made—we will take a look at who is responsible for the particular faults in the particular home, and at that particular time when we have all the specifics, the responsibilities will be assigned in a very fair manner. There is no general approach that can be taken at this time until all of those are in.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Was your treatment of Mr. Wright fair?

Mr. Warner: You didn't treat Mr. Wright fairly.

FAMILY BENEFITS

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Community and Social Services, or perhaps his youthful assistant there; we might get a better answer from him.

I wrote the minister on January 29—he is usually very diligent in his responses—but I have never heard from him with respect to the case of Mr. Terry Pembleton from London, Ontario, asking to qualify for so-called mother's allowance as he has three dependent sons. Would the minister please tell me his response to my letter? Is he prepared to assist him to get mother's allowance under the Family Benefits Act?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I apologize to the honourable member. I thought I could recall having signed a response to him fairly recently. That may be erroneous. I am aware of the case to which he refers.

I would advise the honourable member that to the best of my recollection on that particular case the answer is no; the circumstances that Mr. Pembleton faces are not such as to justify, in my judgement, an order in council in order to provide special assistance.

Mr. Peterson: Surely, as a reasonably fair-minded chap at times, would the minister not consider changes to the Family Benefits Act so we don't have to go through this ridiculous procedure of order in council and come begging to the cabinet every time to bring justice and equity under that act and prevent sexual discrimination that's there? Is the minister prepared to bring something to change that law, or failing that, at least support my private member's bill on April 6 on this matter?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I wouldn't wish to pre-judge my position on the honourable member's private bill, but I would point out to the honourable member, first of all, the procedure that is at present being used by way of order in council does, I admit, leave something to be desired. I would also point out that the majority—a rather substantial majority—of the male single parents who apply do apply under circumstances which render them eligible for assistance. There are cases where it's just obviously in the interests of the family or the children to provide that assistance.

Mr. Peterson: What about the three little children?

Hon. Mr. Norton: We could get into a lengthy debate on this. The circumstances, the needs of the family, have to be viewed if the appeal is on the basis of special assistance or special circumstances.

Mr. S. Smith: Treat men and women equally. It's not debatable.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I am not at this time prepared to bring in amendments to the Family Benefits Act in order to make the present provisions as they apply to women, apply to men.

Mr. S. Smith: Why not?

Hon. Mr. Norton: For one thing that presupposes that the current circumstances as they apply to women are the optimum circumstances.

Interjections.

Mr. Peterson: Just because of one part of your act, it does not justify sex discrimination.

Hon. Mr. Norton: As I have told the House, on numerous occasions, I am currently engaged—

Mr. Warner: You want to balance out the inequities.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —in discussions with the federal government seeking flexibility—

Mr. McClellan: It's been going on since 1973.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I wasn't around in 1973, but I'll tell you—

Mr. McClellan: You won't be around very much longer, either.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —we have made substantial headway in those negotiations in the last six months, and I'm hoping that if we are not interrupted by a federal election—

Mr. MacDonald: You've got your excuse all ready, Keith.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —the matter might be resolved satisfactorily, which would then allow me to proceed to make—

Mr. Warner: You move like a runaway glacier.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —significant changes in terms of employment incentives and so on to that program, which then might be appropriate for general application to both men and women. I do not wish to deal with this on a piecemeal basis; there are other glaring examples of discrimination in that act on the basis of gender.

Ms. Gigantes: It's because it's women.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Sometimes they're against women, sometimes against men.

Ms. Gigantes: Only against women.

Mr. Speaker: Time for oral questions expired two minutes ago.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I do wish to approach it when I am able in a comprehensive way and not in a piecemeal way.

MOTIONS

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BALLOT

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that notwithstanding the orders of the House, the order of preference for private members' public business be changed so that Mr. MacBeth's ballot item be listed and called for debate April 12, and Mr. Johnson's ballot item be listed and called for debate April 19.

Motion agreed to.

WCB REPORT

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that in compliance with section 81 of the Workmen's Compensation Amendment Act, 1973, the annual report of the Workmen's Compensation Board for 1977 be referred to the standing resources development committee for consideration starting the evening of Tuesday, March 27, and concluding Friday, March 30, the proceedings of which shall be transcribed by Hansard and appended to the Hansard proceedings of the House.

Motion agreed to.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

MINISTRY OF TRANSPORTATION AND COMMUNICATIONS AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Snow moved first reading of Bill 13, An Act to amend the Ministry of Transportation and Communications Act, 1971.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, this bill will replace the present cumbersome and largely unworkable provisions for delegation of ministerial authority by order in council in my ministry's act with provisions that are identical to those in other ministry acts passed by this House in the last session.

STATUTE LABOUR AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Snow moved first reading of Bill 14, An Act to amend the Statute Labour Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, this house-keeping bill simply removes the $50 maximum limitation on the annual salary which may be paid to the secretary-treasurer out of the fund of an area under the Statute Labour Act.

LOCAL ROADS BOARDS AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Snow moved first reading of Bill 15, An Act to amend the Local Roads Boards Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, this bill is part of a response to a concern expressed by the ombudsman. A procedure is being established which will ensure that residents who feel they should be removed from a local roads board area are entitled to have the question considered at the annual meeting, and that the minister has the final discretion in changing the boundaries of the local roads area, as I have always had when the boundaries are being initially defined.

The bill will also permit a board to vary the minimum tax from the statutory $10 for property with the approval of the land-owners.

AIRPORTS AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Snow moved first reading of Bill 16, An Act to amend the Airports Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, in furtherance of the government's objective of eliminating unnecessary red tape, this house-keeping bill will remove the requirement that an order in council be obtained for each grant to each municipality towards its airport construction or maintenance cost. The total of such grants are, of course, established annually in the ministry's estimates.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs.

Mr. Cassidy: This is a plot to keep the House going until 6 o'clock.

Mr. Kerrio: Thank heaven for small mercies.

Mr. Cassidy: They are trying to eliminate the debate.

LINE FENCES ACT

Hon. Mr. Wells moved first reading of Bill 17, An Act to revise the Line Fences Act.

Motion agreed to.

[4.00]

Hon. Mr. Wells: This bill is very similar to the one which was introduced on December 8, 1978, but which died on the order paper. There are several minor changes in it—

Mr. Cassidy: Your government may fall on this one.

Hon. Mr. Wells: —which will be outlined at the beginning of second reading and I hope that we will be able to pass the bill in this session, Mr. Speaker.

ONTARIO UNCONDITIONAL GRANTS AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Wells moved first reading of Bill 18, An Act to amend the Ontario Unconditional Grants Act, 1975.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, this bill allows for the payment in 1979 of special one-time grants to municipalities which have been adversely affected in the calculation of their resource equalization grants because of the equalization factors which, of course, have been unchanged since 1970.

The bill also clarifies the levying procedures of those area municipalities within regional municipalities which have been recently re-assessed under section 86 of the Assessment Act, such as the municipalities within the regions of Waterloo and Durham. This section merely ensures that a single set of mill rates is struck across the local municipality, rather than separate rates for each of its merged areas.

MINISTRY OF EDUCATION ACT

Hon. Mrs. Birch, on behalf of Hon. Miss Stephenson, moved first reading of Bill 19, An Act to Amalgamate the Ministry of Colleges and Universities and the Ministry of Education.

Motion agreed to.

RESIDENTIAL PREMISES RENT REVIEW AMENDMENT ACT (SECOND SESSION)

Hon. Mr. Drea moved first reading of Bill 20, An Act to amend the Residential Premises Rent Review Act, 1975, second session.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, this extends the current Rent Review Act for 90 days so that proper notices can go out in the case of proposed increases by landlords, covering the period from June 30 through to September 30. By the end of June, Mr. Speaker, presumably the new Residential Tenancies Act will have been passed.

Mr. M. N. Davison: This is the third time.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I just heard that from over there. There was a commitment from the people in that party, and once again they weren't there, that this would be the last and it would also involve sufficient time for the bill to be passed.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, there was no commitment made by members of this party sitting on that committee.

ONTARIO HUMAN RIGHTS CODE AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. B. Newman moved first reading of Bill 21, An Act to amend the Ontario Human Rights Code.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill is to prevent discrimination on the basis of a physical handicap where that handicap does not reasonably preclude the performance of the particular employment. Physical handicap means a physical disability, infirmity, malformation, or disfigurement which is caused by bodily injury, birth defect or illness. It includes epilepsy, diabetes and any degree of paralysis, amputation, lack of physical co-ordination, blindness or visual impediment, deafness or hearing impediment, muteness or speech impediment, or physical reliance on a seeing-eye dog, wheelchair, or other remedial appliance or device.

An hon. member: That covers all of us.

MINISTRY OF CONSUMER AND COMMERCIAL RELATIONS AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Drea moved first reading of Bill 22, An Act to amend the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, this is really a housekeeping amendment. It will allow other ministries of the crown to use the appeal proceedings of the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations, the commercial relations appeal tribunals, in the spirit of the Wiseman report which urged consolidation of appeal boards.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Swart moved first reading of Bill 23, An Act to amend the Legislative Assembly Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Swart: The purpose of this bill is to declare that the designation "Member of the Legislative Assembly" and "MLA" are the official designations of persons who are elected to the Legislative Assembly. The bill provides that only members of the Legislative Assembly are entitled to use either of the official designations in association with themselves while sitting as elected members of the assembly and during the succeeding election periods. The designation "MLA" will conform with all other provinces in Canada except Quebec. It eliminates the confusion of the designations MPP and MP, and it will correctly designate the position of the members.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, pursuant to standing order 13 may I take this opportunity simply and briefly to indicate the order of business on our return from the school break?

The House resumes, following adjournment today, on Tuesday, March 27. As it will be a Tuesday, we will consider legislation in the House, doing the following bills in this order as time permits: Bills 74, 75, 2, 7, 8, 18, and 20.

On Tuesday when we return, the standing committee on general government will continue its review of Bill 163, and the standing committee on resources development will take into consideration the report of the Workmen's Compensation Board as indicated earlier by motion.

Mr. Nixon: Fifteen hours.

Hon. Mr. Welch: On Wednesday, the House will not be in the assembly, but committees will continue, as indicated.

Thursday, on our return, in the afternoon we will do private members' ballot items one and two. On Thursday evening, the House will be asked to take into consideration a motion for interim supply which will be put on the order paper on the Tuesday we come back. Following that, and as time permits, we will take into consideration some supplementary estimates which will be tabled on Tuesday when we return. That will continue on Friday morning.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor at the opening of the session.

Mr. Cassidy: You know, Mr. Speaker, if I can say this to the two ministers who are still present: One would almost think there was a conspiracy to impose silence on the New Democratic Party in this debate when you count the 10 statements of total inconsequence that we had between two o'clock and 3 o'clock today and the 10 bills of equal inconsequence which were put forward by the government between five minutes to four and 10 minutes past four today—

Hon. Mr. Norton: Listen, don't start off being provocative. Build up to it.

Mr. Cassidy: —and the fact that having heard their own voices at such length, the cabinet has now decamped. I presume its members are over on Bay Street supping and deciding on the future of the province.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Waste more time.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I was looking after constituency problems for your members.

Mr. M. N. Davison: They are watching Smith and Davis play tennis.

Mr. McClellan: It's a great show of courtesy by the government.

Mr. Cassidy: That's right.

I want to begin by paying my respects to you, Mr. Speaker. In the 21 months since the 1977 election, you have filled your role with distinction and I am confident that you will continue to act in that way.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Now, why don't you say that every day? You have to control that guy to your right.

Mr. Cassidy: But I find it difficult, Mr. Speaker, to be positive about the present government and about the throne speech with which they have launched the 1979 session.

The problems that Ontario faces continue to be serious. The fundamental weaknesses of our economy remain to be addressed by this government and now we have added to that an attack on social services of unprecedented proportions, particularly in the area of health. Working people will be the victims of that attack.

The response we have from the government is a desperate search for old remedies and a refusal to look at anything new, a failure of will which has cost this province dearly and which will cost us even more for each further month that the Progressive Conservatives are in power, and a set of priorities in government which we believe are totally upside down.

We are faced with a weak economy, with high unemployment, with a colonized industrial structure, and with a resource sector which is operating as though there was no tomorrow. The response of the Conservatives to every one of these problems is that the province needs more restraints. Their policies—this government's policies—are both as skillful and as useful as those medieval surgeons whose response to every medical illness was to let more blood.

There is only one exception: corporation profits have risen sharply in the past year—those of the pulp and paper industry by 94 per cent—at a time when the real wages of workers are falling steadily by as much as four or five per cent a year.

Hospitals are being closed, and services are being cut across the province. Daycare centres are closing, and special programs in our schools are being squeezed. Municipalities are being pushed against the wall to provide services because of the cutbacks in provincial support. With all this going on, Ontario in its wisdom has decided that the corporate sector alone should get priority.

It is promises like the ones made in this year's throne speech that make people cynical about politicians. The government mouths concern about important problems, and then hopes that they go away. It has set up yet another advisory commission about women's rights, but won't change Ontario's laws to bring in equal pay for work of equal value.

The government is moving forward in providing special transportation services for the disabled, but what disabled people really want, and what the bill that the member for Downsview (Mr. di Santo) moved last year would have given them, is the right to work, and that we don't have from the government of Ontario.

The government's commitment to improve labour relations is pretty hollow when it comes from a government that sent the OPP to try to stop Fleck workers from getting a contract, that has placed a four per cent ceiling on Civil Service negotiations and that refuses to give workers the right to a first contract or to outlaw strikebreaking in the province of Ontario.

The commitment to multiculturalism also rings hollow, Mr. Speaker, when Ontario's heritage language program is being cut in half because of cutbacks in provincial funding. L'impegno preso in favore del Multiculturalismo non ha sostanza poiche' il programma provinciale del "Heritage Language" sara' ridotto a meta a causa della diminuzione dei fondi provinciali.

A promise to give citizens easier access to government isn't worth much, Mr. Speaker, unless the government is also prepared to pass a freedom of information law. A celebration of the Year of the Child by opening provincial parks is hypocritical when basic services that are vital to Ontario's children are being cut to the bone.

The monitoring of food prices proposed by the government is of no use to consumers unless the government is prepared to create a food prices review board which will roll back unjustified price increases now being imposed on the people of the province.

Interjections.

Mr. Cassidy: That's right, the government won't do anything at all.

Mr. Speaker, I intend today to concentrate on cutbacks in health services because this is the most serious example of how the government is getting out of providing services to people. The NDP is also concerned about the cutbacks in education, concerned about the property tax increases that are being created because of the cutbacks to municipalities and concerned with what is happening with local social services. We are concerned with what's happening to services to children and as we have already shown, Mr. Speaker, in the no-confidence motion we had in this Legislature on Tuesday night, we're concerned about what's happening to our cities with the government's determination to cut back on transit. We've said clearly that we will draw the line and we'll fight the government, not just in the health cutbacks but in all of the areas where it's trying to cut back on services that are essential to the working people of the province of Ontario.

In the last two weeks in particular, since we've had a chance to join with the government or lock horns with the government over the health issue, it has become apparent that the Conservatives have decided to dismantle the universal health care system which has been created in this province.

Mr. Martel: They opposed it right from the beginning.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It is immoral to make a statement like that.

Mr. Lane: Every day you get more ridiculous.

Mr. Cassidy: The New Democrats are proud of the part that we have played in bringing the security of universal health care to the people of this province. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, it is the single greatest achievement of the New Democratic Party and of the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation to have brought health care to Canada and health care to the province of Ontario and we will fight to stop this government from taking away that security.

Mr. Martel: Do you remember the "Machiavellian scheme"?

Mr. Cassidy: That's right.

Mr. Martel: I remember it well.

Mr. Cassidy: The references to health in this year's throne speech conceal far more than they reveal. The government talks and the minister talks as well of reshaping health care delivery to ensure both excellence of service and effective management. The throne speech says and I quote: "The social value to Ontario is too great to allow any diminution in the quality or quantity of such significant social advances as our health care system."

This is a gross distortion of what is happening in the province today and it is time that the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) started to set the record straight on just what is happening in health care in Ontario and what is happening in his ministry.

Last April 14 we were told by the minister that the Ministry of Health was monitoring opted-out physicians on a very detailed basis. We got a commitment from the minister at that time: "The universal, accessible medical health care plan that we developed in this province over the last number of years will be maintained." In fact, Mr. Speaker, that promise is not being kept by the government of Ontario.

In just 10 months, the proportion of opted-out physicians has jumped from just under 10 per cent to almost 18 per cent, yet this week in the House the minister denied that the current rate of opting out is a threat to universality. I would like to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the financial consequences for Ontario residents are that people are now having to pay heavily out of their own pockets for medical care, in addition to paying the highest health premiums in Canada.

We have been told that the Ontario Medical Association schedule, which opted-out physicians now are charging, is 30 per cent higher than the Ontario Health Insurance Plan schedule. In fact, the difference amounts to a surcharge of about 43 per cent and in some cases is even higher.

For example, a 74-year-old pensioner in Toronto who was diabetic found late last month, when she went in for a regular examination, that her doctor had opted out. She had to pay $20—in fact, they asked for it right away—and she will get only $13.25 back from OHIP. The surcharge on that office visit for this pensioner was 53 per cent over the OHIP rate and the only way to avoid it was for her to beg for charity medicine to the doctor or to his secretary. The doctor's rationale for the surcharge is that OHIP fee adjustments have not been adequate. I do not know what the doctor is talking about, when the OHIP fee schedule has risen by 13 per cent since last May but that pensioner's income has risen by only nine per cent.

To put things into perspective, when last year's select committee established that doctors in Ontario averaged $55,000 in net income per year, let us reflect on the fact that the net income of a pensioner receiving a guaranteed annual income supplement and old age security—like the pensioner I just mentioned—is $4,116 per year, or less than one eleventh of the average income of a physician in the province.

I do not understand how the minister can stay so calm when his own staff acknowledges that almost 70 per cent of the doctors in the cities of Peterborough and Orillia have opted out. I do not understand his complacency when we learn that every doctor in Amherstburg, in Essex county, has opted out, and the people who cannot afford the OMA surcharges either have to beg the doctor for a break or have to find a way to get medical care in Windsor, 17 miles away.

In Metropolitan Toronto, the figures that the minister filed this week show that 25 per cent of physicians have opted out; that is, one doctor in four. If you look just at full-time practising physicians, the proportion will be higher. If you look at specialists, it will be higher still. And we have yet to learn from the minister how many additional doctors have closed their lists or are not accepting patients who are trying to transfer from opted-out doctors.

When the ministry's own figures show that 30 per cent of the doctors in Halton, Perth and Wellington counties have opted out, that 41 per cent have opted out in York county, and that opting-out exceeds 24 per cent in Waterloo county, Simcoe and Metropolitan Toronto itself, it is obvious that there is a crisis. Even the Minister of National Health and Welfare has moved in, threatening to cut off federal funding if the exodus of doctors undermines universal access to medical care.

I want to say, as plainly as I can, that medicare in this province is in grave jeopardy. This government has not fulfilled its responsibility to make sure that every Ontario citizen continues to have access to universal medical care. This government, whose Treasurer said a year or two ago that it would not impose a deterrent fee on medical patients in Ontario, has moved aside and is allowing doctors to do the same thing through the back door.

I want to suggest a number of steps that the government should be taking now to preserve public health care.

The province must clearly indicate to our doctors that, while we value their services highly, Ontario will not allow its physicians to destroy OHIP or our medicare plan. Ontario must be prepared to use moral suasion, to use publicity, to use regulation and, if necessary, to use legislation to keep universal medicare in place.

Since the member for Don Mills has been the Minister of Health for two years, why has he not cleaned up the OHIP administration and the delays in payment which have caused such aggravation among doctors as well as patients and are one of the factors leading doctors to get out of OHIP? Why has he not examined the fee structure in response to doctors' grievances as well as ex-aming alternatives to the fee-for-service payment system, which causes such problems for general practitioners who are penalized for spending time with patients? And why has the minister not already established and fully supported health service organizations for all citizens of Ontario, rather than keeping them on such a tight leash that they have not even been able to plan from one year to the next? The commitments he makes now about health service organizations are hollow, when you look at the treatment of health service organizations in the province over the past five years.

Mr. Martel: You beggars are responsible.

Mr. Cassidy: The minister told reporters outside the House this week that he thought "consumer control" offered the best protection of the system.

Ms. Gigantes: Shop around.

Mr. Cassidy: But the only effective consumer is an informed consumer. And we've had our problems getting information.

How about the people of the province of Ontario? What's the minister doing to inform the consumer of health care about where to get an OHIP physician; and about what is happening with health care costs in Ontario? What's he doing to ensure that patients will know where to find care under OHIP and what it costs to go to an opted-out physician?

While he is considering his responsibility on these questions, the minister has some other problems to come to grips with. One is the practice, adopted by more and more doctors, of charging for services which were formerly provided free. A telephone call to a physician costs from $4 to $12. Even a medical slip required by an employer will cost $3, unless the patient is prepared to pay what amounts to a private premium of $40 per family per year. That's the rate being charged by the Queensway Clinic in Toronto; but in some practices and in some clinics, the annual rate is even more.

This minister should make it clear that this is not acceptable. He should make it clear that Ontario will never accept doctors' demands for what they call "balanced billing," a system which looks to us like having your cake and eating it, too.

If I can go back to the pensioner I mentioned. The idea is that, rather than billing the lady $20 and hoping that she can pay, the doctor can bill OHIP for the $13 in their fee schedule and then charge the patient the additional $7. Imagine paying such high premiums in this province and then having to turn around and pay a fee that is equal to half the fee in the OHIP schedule, if you want to get medical services in the province of Ontario.

We also believe that the minister should tell doctors that the practice they call "patient streaming" is unacceptable. He should stop actively encouraging it. Last December 13 the cabinet approved a regulation to change the Health Insurance Act to allow doctors who have opted out to bill through OHIP for medical services that are provided in hospitals. In effect—and despite his denials today—the Minister of Health was telling doctors to go ahead and opt out, because if a patient looks a bit shaky financially the doctor can treat him at the hospital and be paid through OHIP. It's amazing to me, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Health is adding fuel to the fire with this regulation at a time when opting out is already at crucial proportions.

His response in the House today is pure distortion. In one swoop he has expanded a regulation covering 20 teaching hospitals to apply to more than 200 hospitals across the province of Ontario. If that is not inciting doctors to get out of the OHIP scheme, then I don't know what is.

Mr. Martel: Some of you fellows in the cabinet should question that boy.

Mr. Cassidy: That's right. Where is the Minister of Health when he says he will protect the system? In fact, he is an active conspirator in tearing it down.

So far this afternoon, I have concentrated on OHIP. But I want this House to know as well that the Minister of Health's announcement about hospital funding on January 19 poses a threat to our health care system which is every bit as grave as doctors opting out.

In the past two months, I have talked to a lot of people who are deeply affected by the ministry's new budget guidelines. They are very concerned. As the phone calls mount and mail pours in, it's becoming apparent that this attack on the hospitals is even more devastating than the former minister's cutbacks of three years ago.

What is at issue is not just the budgets that were announced by the minister back in January. What is at stake is the provision of hospital services across Ontario. The 4.2 per cent budget increase announced in January means a cut in real terms of at least four per cent in hospital services across this province. And that comes on top of a system which has been systematically squeezed by the ministry for the past four years.

What is worse, however, is the sudden and arbitrary decision by the ministry that, between now and 1981, Ontario will cut active treatment hospital beds in this province to the level of 3.5 beds per thousand population in the south, and four beds per thousand in the north.

Interjection.

Mr. Cassidy: The member has a comment? Let's hear it.

An hon. member: Tell us what the socialist countries—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The honourable member isn't in his seat.

[4:30]

Mr. Cassidy: Let's look at the rest of the country and at what the select committee had to find, a committee whose findings in the section I'm about to read were endorsed by the Conservative members unanimously.

As the select committee noted last year, in Ontario the number of beds per capita is already lower than in any other province but Newfoundland and has been declining at a faster rate than in the rest of Canada for the past eight years. In fact, we are now moving towards a standard of 3.5 hospital beds per thousand at a time when the average for the rest of Canada is closer to 5.5 beds per thousand.

Mr. Watson: What is it in England?

Mr. Cassidy: Let's talk about Alberta. It's just about six in the province of Alberta, where Peter Lougheed is the Premier.

Mr. Foulds: He's a Tory too.

Mr. Warner: Worst medical record in Canada.

Mr. Cassidy: He's a Tory, that's right. There is absolutely no medical rationale which has been offered by the minister to explain this sudden move, only budget constraints.

Mr. Foulds: The magic formula pulled out of a hat like a rabbit. It means nothing.

Mr. Cassidy: That's right. The minister estimates that 1,200 beds will be cut this coming year, and that's bad enough. But to move from a ratio of four beds per thousand to 3.5 beds per thousand will mean cutting a further 4,000 hospital beds in Ontario over the next two years, and I don't see how our health care system is going to take it.

Mr. Warner: It's being destroyed.

Mr. Cassidy: It's not just beds that are being cut, but jobs too. As many as 4,500 hospital care workers could lose their jobs between now and 1981 at a time when we already face near-record unemployment in the province. The consequence, in other words, of this new round of cutbacks is deeply disturbing.

I have talked to a lot of people about this. The people at the Civic Hospital in my riding of Ottawa Centre tell me that all the fat has been removed over the past four years and these cuts are biting into muscle. When I met with the administrator of the Welland General Hospital last month, he complained that his hospital had no special consideration despite the fact its per diem bed rate is far below the level of most comparable hospitals in Ontario. He told me that even if the Welland General closes all the 16 beds ordered closed by the ministry it will still make no saving. It will have to close a full ward of 29 beds, and even then it will still be $210,000 short of the savings imposed by the ministry.

In other words, the minister's figure of 1,200 beds to be cut is a sham. Hospitals are going to have to cut more and the patients, people who are sick, are going to be the victims.

Mr. Foulds: Scandalous.

Mr. Cassidy: In Brantford, the supposed autonomy and responsibility of hospitals in responding to the Ministry of Health has been revealed as a total shambles. Without even allowing community consultation, a select group from the local health council has delivered an edict with the approval of Queen's Park that St. Joseph's Hospital should become a chronic care facility. That entire community is up in arms because of the way this decision is being forced upon them, rammed down their throats.

These cuts threaten to close hospitals in many smaller communities and that is where the damage is going to be the greatest. Small hospitals have fewer special programs and equipment to be cut back, and because they need a minimum number of staff to carry out many duties these hospitals cannot be cut at the rate the minister decrees without going under.

I want to read a letter which came to my office this week from Dr. R. E. Laine, a physician in Geraldton in northern Ontario. I don't know this gentleman, but Dr. Laine outlined what will happen in the Geraldton hospital over the next three years as the number of beds will be cut from 45 to 20. The story is so vivid that I want to quote his entire letter.

"You may know," he writes, "that this hospital is central to a number of relatively isolated communities, including Beardmore, Jellicoe, Longlac with two Indian reserves, Caramat, Nakina, Aroland and Indian settlements further north like Ogoki Post. Approximately 10,000 people, augmented by a transient and tourist population, are served. An active woods industry utilizes the hospital for acute trauma and physiotherapy. These factors assume some importance if you appreciate that the nearest medical referral centre is Thunder Bay, a distance of some 300 kilometres by road."

That's not universal access if you have to go that far, Mr. Speaker.

"Geraldton District Hospital is the only medical facility in a very vast area and it provides very basic medical services, no frills. There aren't any duplicated services. One can't close down a nursing floor of the hospital because there is only one. One can't fire an x-ray technician because there is only one. Statistical manipulations and criteria used to justify reductions in Toronto are not necessarily valid here.

"Years of community effort have transformed Geraldton District Hospital into an institution with competent medical and ancillary services peculiar to the needs of this area. Now the Ontario government proposes 'pulling the plug' which will result in underutilization of an established facility and which will force local residents to seek medical assistance 300 kilometres away from home, where beds are already in short supply." In fact in Thunder Bay my colleague from Port Arthur has shown me press clippings which show the waiting list for certain hospitals has as many as 1,000 patients.

Mr. Warner: Do you support the cuts up north, Leo? Do you support the cuts in Geraldton? Good idea, are they?

Mr. Cassidy: Dr. Laine is afraid that his hospital will be "reduced to the status of a first-aid post."

Mr. Warner: They'll run the ministers out of the north.

Mr. Cassidy: What is happening in Geraldton is happening across the north. The Minister of Health has tried to soften the blow for small hospitals this year by allowing them to keep up to 10 beds more than would otherwise be allowed under his rigid guidelines.

But that just postpones the reckoning. We believe that those hospital beds should not be cut back until the minister can tell us how the quality of the health care system in northern Ontario will not only be maintained, but improved.

We believe these hospital beds should not be cut back until alternative services are in place and the evidence that I had in traveling across northern Ontario, even in communities as well developed as Sudbury, is that their standard of services consistently falls below what is available in the south.

There are nine hospitals throughout the north that will not get a nickel more in budget this year. Once this year's 10-bed cushion is taken away, the hospital in Fort Frances is going to face a 29 per cent cut in beds. The cut is to be 32 per cent in Red Lake, 54 per cent in Manitouwadge, 33 per cent in Nipigon, 25 per cent in Blind River, 53 per cent in the Hornepayne Community Hospital, 38 per cent in the Little Current hospital, 35 per cent in Englehart, 49 per cent in the Mattawa General Hospital, 63 per cent in St. Joseph's Hospital in Parry Sound, and as much as 85 per cent of the beds will be cut in the hospital in Chapleau. That's the government's commitment to health in northern Ontario.

Mr. Martel: When the minister flies in next week he might check some of that.

Mr. Warner: Leo supports the cut. You do support the cut? How could you? Shame.

Mr. Cassidy: The same kinds of cuts are now being imposed on southwestern Ontario. One third or more of the beds are at risk in the hospitals in Clinton, in Listowel, in Seaforth, in St. Mary's, in Newbury, in Durham—where the member for Muskoka (Mr. F. S. Miller) already tried to close the hospital—in Chesley, in Hanover, in Walkerton and in Shelburne. In Palmerston they could lose 23 out of their 37 beds, according to the standards now decreed by the ministry. I have not even mentioned the threat that the entire 65-bed hospital in Penetanguishene may be compelled to close because of the minister's cutbacks.

In God's name, Mr. Speaker, what is going to happen to those communities when their hospitals are cut back like that? What will happen to the nurses and the other skilled professionals who will no longer have jobs in those communities? Why does the Minister of Health think he can impose the same arbitrary standards on Goderich as on Toronto, on Geraldton as on Sault Ste. Marie?

I say, we say, the minister must be flexible enough to make allowances for the nature of the communities that these hospitals serve. The minister has an obligation to ensure that small communities in the north, small communities in the south, every city and town in all of this province and not just our major cities, can and will have a decent standard of hospital care.

Let me raise just one more specific case. The decision to close the entire Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital makes absolutely no sense at all, and that is why I am wearing my button today. The consultants who were hired for $116,000 by the Ministry of Health, McKinsey and Company, recommended that the Lakeshore hospital be fully renovated or rebuilt. They did so because—the minister doesn't understand that—the Queen Street Mental Health Centre cannot take care of Lakeshore's patients and because the expanding population of the area west of Toronto will make a new hospital essential in five to seven years if Lakeshore is closed. It doesn't make sense to "save," so-called, $22 million today if we are going to have to spend $100 million on a new hospital just five or seven years down the line.

The community is totally opposed to the closing of the hospital. The workers have been looking for alternatives. Why is the minister so inflexible that he must bring this hospital to the ground rather than looking at alternatives that have already been proposed?

On Tuesday, the Ontario Public Service Employees Union challenged the minister to a full inquiry into the rationale for the closing and the alternatives. We in the New Democratic Party demand that such an inquiry be held at once and we are confident that it will show that Lakeshore should not be closed.

If the minister is so confident of his ground he will agree. But his refusal to have such an inquiry shows that he is on shaky ground because he knows what the inquiry would show: it would show that Lakeshore hospital should be kept in operation providing vital services, not just to one community but to more than a million people in North York, in Halton, in Peel, in Etobicoke, and in the counties to the west of Toronto.

Finally, I wish to comment on the outrageous proposals by the ministry to charge a deterrent fee for chronic care. The Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Mrs. Birch) recently said Ontario is considering even wider use of deterrent fees such as the payments that will soon be required from chronic care patients. We're glad to hear the Minister of Health has withdrawn his proposal to charge deterrent fees for psychiatric patients. But it makes no more sense, in our view, to impose deterrent fees on people who are chronically ill than to impose them on people in psychiatric beds.

Chronic patients are being forced to remain in active treatment hospital beds in Ontario because of the failure of this government to provide enough beds in nursing homes, homes for the aged, and to provide alternatives such as chronic home care. There are still only seven chronic home care programs in the 49 counties and districts of Ontario. How can the minister say that those patients should go home and wait for chronic treatment at home when in 42 of the districts and counties of the province, there is no such service yet available?

All members of last year's select committee, including the Conservative members, warned that deterrent charges would inhibit legitimate use of the health care system. The committee noted that when deterrent fees were tried in Saskatchewan under a Liberal government, it was poor people who stopped going to doctors.

The Ontario Nurses' Association has not been so gentle. It says the proposal to make chronic care patients pay is despicable and irresponsible and proves the complete failure of this government to design and operate an efficient health care system in this province.

When I began talking about health I took the liberty of trying to take the words of the throne speech at face value.

Mr. Watson: Want us to run up the Union Jack?

Ms. Gigantes: They know what they're talking about.

Mr. Cassidy: I want to repeat those words from the throne speech: "The social value of Ontario's health care program is too great to allow any diminution in the quality or quantity of such significant social advances."

Everybody in the New Democratic Party agrees with that sentiment. We believe we should not diminish the quality or quantity of the health care system. The reason we are so outraged is that whether one looks at doctors leaving OHIP, whether one looks at the minister's failure to uphold the universality of our medicare system, whether one looks at what's happening to our hospitals in the south or to communities in the north whose health services are being devastated, whether one looks at the Lakeshore situation or whether one looks at what's being done to chronic care patients, the picture is the same. The Conservatives are hypocrites when they mouth those noble words—that they want to preserve the quality or quantity of the health care system.

I want to turn now to the economy and to suggest the cornerstone of social policy in the province should be a policy of full employment. A situation where unemployment is running at more than six per cent among men, at more than eight per cent among women, and at 13 per cent among workers under 25 is absolutely intolerable. The cost of unemployment to all of us is not just a human cost to people who feel that somehow they have failed society when it is society that has failed them, but is also the sheer economic cost of billions of dollars of lost production and of enormous sums in tax revenues which would help keep this province on the rails and help ensure the viability of the social services of Ontario.

Last month the NDP caucus spent two days meeting with the people of Sudbury and looking at its economic prospects as well as its continuing needs in the area of social services. We found a community suffering from high unemployment, from cutbacks in social services, from the export of capital and not just from the prolonged labour dispute at Inco. We found a community suffering as well from yet another closure by a profitable multinational mining company, National Steel, in the town of Capreol. And we had the case put to us by Sudbury residents who see their community going the path of so many one-industry towns of northern Ontario. Either Ontario peddles our resources and we integrate ourselves further into the American economy, or we start now to shake ourselves free of our dependence on multinational corporations.

Sudbury is crying out for secondary industry that is based on its resources. Even a community as large as Sudbury will be threatened with extinction unless we make the right decisions to build its economy and to build its future. In its way, Sudbury is a microcosm of our province. To the people in New York, to the financiers in London and Dusseldorf, this whole province is like a one-industry town. When the industry dries up—that is, when our resources dry up—as far as they are concerned we will suffer the same fate that might now face Sudbury and is now facing the town of Atikokan in northwestern Ontario. Ontario is also threatened with industrial disaster unless we make the right decisions.

But those decisions require political will and we see no evidence that the Conservatives have the political will to plan for this province's future. Despite the promises of the throne speech, we are still waiting on the government for a commitment to create jobs now for the people who are unemployed in this province. Last year I proposed specific plans to create 45,000 jobs in the province through government action. We will be looking to the government's budget this year to see whether, having failed last year to create more than 142 jobs, they are prepared this year to come up to the challenge and create jobs now.

Not only that, but Ontario needs an industrial strategy. It needs to adopt long-term strategies to build our industry and to reverse the tide of deindustrialization. In its submission last year to the federal government on the effects of the GATT negotiations, the Ontario government itself admitted the erosion of the technological strength of our manufacturing sector. The government admitted the desperate immaturity of our research and development, particularly in industry. And it finally admitted what we have been saying for a long time: that government must play a positive role in the restructuring of our industry in Ontario.

But it's one thing to admit that problems exist and another thing to resolve them. So far as the economy goes, the people of Ontario deserve a great deal more.

There is still a great deal to learn about the employment development fund proposal in the throne speech, but so far it raises far more questions than it answers.

The state of our industry today provides ample evidence that the old system of corporate handouts wasn't working, so now the government is taking a new tack. The first step was that outrageous interest-free loan of $300 million to Rio Algom and Denison mines last year, two companies that had just signed a uranium contract. It was like having $2 billion in the bank. Once that precedent was set, Ontario then lavished $28 million on the Ford Motor Company whose worldwide profits in 1978 were $1.8 billion. This January it was the pulp and paper industry's turn. With their profits up 94 per cent last year, they got $100 million from the Treasurer. The contrast between this generosity for corporations and the cutbacks in social services says everything about this government's priorities.

New Democrats say that public money should only be invested in the context of a long-term industrial strategy; in other words under the economic planning that we have been calling for year after year after year, in this Legislature, across Ontario and in the federal parliament.

Ms. Gigantes: Use your common sense.

Mr. Cassidy: There must be priority to job guarantees, to research commitments by industry and to the training of Canadian workers. Canadian industry should have priority in any incentive scheme, and so should small business. If there are times when government should act like a business, Mr. Speaker, that time is surely when the taxpayers of Ontario are being asked to use hard-earned tax dollars to pour into private corporations.

The only equitable way to handle these kinds of incentives is for the people of the province of Ontario to get shares or equity in return for their grants to industry.

Surely it's obvious that one ad hoc scheme of incentives, with $200 million a year, does not amount to an industrial strategy. To achieve full employment and break the shackles of dependence that tie this economy to foreign multinationals requires an act, a will and a planning such as Ontario has never seen in peace time. It also requires a sense of responsibility and determination for our future and our resources which I despair of seeing from a Conservative government. Neither the Liberals nor the Conservatives have had the courage to plan this economy when it meant standing up to corporate power.

I want to outline the way the New Democrats believe that our industry can be planned and that we can build a strong industrial base for the province of Ontario.

First, the keystone of Ontario's economy from now to the end of the century has got to be the development of manufacturing. We have an enormous amount of ground to catch up in research and development, in training skilled manpower, in curbing the abuse of foreign control and in winning back those Canadian markets which have been neglected, or in some cases never even exploited, by Canadian companies.

There is so much we can do in a province which has the natural resources and the human talents of Ontario. It's a challenge which many people are prepared to rise to if the leadership were only shown to them by the government; but as its performance shows this week in response to the threatened loss of 700 jobs at Westinghouse in Hamilton, this government has no leadership to offer.

Alongside manufacturing, and this is my second point, we must make our resources into a tool for economic development and that will not occur as long as they are controlled by irresponsible multinational corporations. This government didn't care when International Nickel exported $250 million of profit earned in Canada to buy manufacturing subsidiaries in the United States and Europe, or when Inco got Canadian funding to pour more than a billion dollars into new nickel mines in Guatemala and Indonesia that would compete with our Canadian workers.

We believe that the secondary manufacturing that flows from the resources of northern Ontario and that supplies the resource industry of the north should be carried out in this province rather than being carried out abroad. That's why we keep saying that the resources of this province belong to the people of Ontario and must be developed in the public sector rather than being squandered under private ownership. They're our resources and we want them back.

Mr. Martel: We'll run them here instead of in New York. Remember our friends during the elections, "You don't want the bureaucrats in Toronto running it. We want them in New York running it."

Mr. Cassidy: I say now, Mr. Speaker, to the two ministers remaining in the House, my third point is this: Steel, the most successful single industry in this province, has maintained its position and has developed export markets because it made sure it secured the home market first. We must apply that lesson to every industry in this province.

I have said for two years that there was an enormous opportunity in replacing the $20 billion of foreign-manufactured goods which were sold into Ontario every year, there was work for Canadians if we could win back those markets; but there was disaster ahead if you considered that between 1966 and 1976 the proportion of the Canadian market served by imported high-technology manufactured goods rose from a third to a half of our market. This trend is still against us.

How do you give the home market priority, Mr. Speaker? You give it priority by planning for those sectors that are now heavily invaded by imports but which any credible industrial country ought to command, such as machinery and electrical products. You give the home market priority by identifying industries where we ought to establish a presence and by finding companies to do the job, or even by entering into partnership with Canadian firms to get these needs met. You give the home market priority by accelerating the Buy Canadian program—which is still lumbering to a start; by insisting on the labelling of Canadian content; and by providing assistance for market development within Canada as well as abroad. You give the home market priority by planning for the future of our industry, rather than leaving that planning to the industrial sector to decide whatever it is they wish to give the province of Ontario.

Fourth, this province needs to make a commitment to small business, and to Canadian-owned business, such as we have never seen before. Over the past decade, small business has been creating jobs in manufacturing while big corporations have actually shown an overall job loss. The figures are dramatic. Small business in manufacturing has created more than 300,000 jobs in a decade, while big corporations have destroyed 125,000 jobs or more in that same period.

We should be looking for the winners in the small business sector. Our industrial strategy must recognize the crucial role of smaller firms. It must provide for adequate financing and for management advice; it must recognize that small firms are often the most innovative in research; it must ensure that they have access to those crucial orders for parts and components from large corporations and for business from government, which together are often the difference between their merely surviving and their turning into a success.

Fifth, the record of research and development in Canadian industry can only be described as depressing. Even the most recent efforts to bribe industry into doing more research are falling far short of their targets. The federal government has now set a target to have industry spend one and a half per cent of the gross national budget on research by 1983. Ontario has endorsed that objective. But when you look at how we are doing, we are falling so far short of that target it is to despair.

To take just one example: Our automobile manufacturers are sending an estimated $230 million dollars a year to Detroit for research and development to be carried out in the United States, with all the spinoff that entails in jobs and technology in the US. Here in Canada, despite all the supposed benefits of the auto pact, they are spending only $12 million dollars a year on research. No policy of incentives, on its own, will be enough to change that outrageous kind of behaviour.

It is time, we believe, to insist that a certain proportion of every sales dollar earned by corporations in this province be ploughed back into research and development. It is time to insist, if larger companies will not comply with that rule, that they be required to contribute to an industry-wide research fund to be directed in conjunction with government.

We have skills and know-how in abundance in Ontario, but we have failed to match our human resources to our industrial needs, because that has not been a priority, either for industry or for the government. If industry will not volunteer to do the research, then I suggest it is about time we made industry do the research which is crucial to the future of our economy in Ontario.

Sixth, the record in research is matched by our failure to train the skilled workers that Ontario needs. That failure is scandalously unfair to Canadians who have a right to expect that their sons and daughters can find their way into skilled opportunities. But it is also such a handicap for our economy that even with eight per cent of the work force unemployed, we are today finding firms that have had to hold back or cut back on production because they cannot get enough skilled manpower.

Recent studies have indicated that 70 per cent or more of our skilled workers were trained outside Canada. They also indicated that our skilled work force is ageing so rapidly that the situation we face in the 1980s will be disastrous unless we start to train skilled workers now. I want to suggest that Ontario stop its cap-in-hand approach to industries which have proved they are not prepared on their own to take on the responsibility of training for skills.

We think apprenticeship and training should be a three-way partnership. The worker studies hard; he gives up time; and he or she forgoes income in order to learn a skill. The government provides facilities and training and, through the federal manpower authority, assistance with trainees' living costs. The corporations of this province should also be partners in the essential job of training Ontarians for the skills we need in the future. Those corporations not prepared to bear their share by accepting apprentices and trainees should be required to contribute to those companies and corporations that will make such a contribution.

Finally, we need a very strong and very deliberate campaign to make foreign-owned companies act in the best interests of Canadians and over the long run to reduce the degree of foreign ownership in our economy. To talk of an industrial strategy that ignores the fact that 60 per cent of our manufacturing is foreign-owned is like talking about animal life without once mentioning the fact that there is an elephant sitting in the middle of the drawing-room.

This winter I toured the very efficient CGE plant in Guelph, which makes heavy electrical equipment and transformers. It is a world-scale plant that exports around the world with but one exception. Management told me there were very clear orders from CGE not to seek business in the United States for the transformers and other equipment that are commonly used by utilities down there. That business, of course, is being left to the American parent company.

We need to come to grips with that kind of behaviour. What we need goes far beyond anyone's code of conduct. This is not a gentleman's game. New Democrats would require a share of corporate funds generated in Ontario to be reinvested in creating jobs in Canada. I'll repeat that. New Democrats would require that corporations which generate profits in Ontario should reinvest a share of those profits in creating jobs in Canada.

We would insist that subsidiaries in Ontario break free of the export restraints that now exist and actively seek export markets in places like the United States. To ensure that Canada gets the maximum benefit from subsidiaries operating here, New Democrats would require every multinational to negotiate an economic development agreement that would spell out the timetable for putting our goals, the goals of Ontario, into effect.

The task before us in the area of industrial strategy is basically political. We must develop the political will to win back control of our economy. We have got to change the priorities of government so that we can build a self-reliant economy on the basis of our human and natural resources. That too is a challenge to which many Canadians can and will respond.

Before leaving the subject of the economy, I want to express my party's grave concern at the pitiful excuse for an energy policy that was put forward by the government in the throne speech. Through both the throne speech and a carefully executed series of addresses by senior ministers, the government has effectively told Ontario Hydro to go full steam ahead with its nuclear electric expansion program. It has dismissed as prophets of doom those sane voices that have questioned this irresponsible approach.

We're not talking about pennies a day, as the Treasurer has blithely suggested. On Hydro's own figures, we are talking about overcapacity which last year cost about $12 for every man, woman and child in Ontario. Our own calculations suggest that if Hydro played the figures straight, it would be more like $40 for every man, woman and child in Ontario that we are overspending because of Hydro. This cost to the citizens of Ontario will be many times higher in a few years if Hydro keeps building new generating stations.

We are talking about the wasteful expenditure of billions of dollars that have been borrowed on the credit of the province. We're talking about Ontario Hydro's grossly inadequate forecasting methods, methods which could lead to the needless expenditure of additional billions of dollars. Just to give one example, the planned Darlington nuclear generating station alone will cost more than $5 billion and that is considerably more than the cost of Canada's latest fleet of new jet fighter planes. That's two and a half times what it would cost to acquire every share in Inco for the people of Ontario. We are seeing an enormous loss of opportunity to develop our economy because the investment capital that might be raised by Ontario to implement an intelligent industrial strategy is going to Hydro instead.

Ontario Hydro suggests itself in a submission to the Porter Commission on Electric Power Planning that it might have to have access to general tax revenues if its continued overbuilding means a shortfall in capital. Surely we don't need any more proof of the destructive effects of overbuilding the Ontario Hydro generating system.

The government's argument that the $3.5 billion worth of excess capacity that is now built into the system is just a nice little cushion, or that it can be justified on the grounds that electricity can substitute for natural gas or for expensive imported oil, is nonsense.

The technological and economic obstacles to such substitution are overwhelming. The Ministry of Energy's own projections show very clearly that, even with a determined effort to substitute electricity for oil and natural gas, and in the face of rapidly increasing fossil fuel prices, the growth in electricity demand over the rest of the century would not even come near the growth that is projected by Ontario Hydro.

On the other hand, a strong program of energy conservation could effectively, and immediately, reduce Ontario's dependence on oil and gas far faster than any conceivable substitution of electricity.

It is about time that we had an energy policy in which Ontario decided at what rate energy demand needs to grow and then took the policy steps that are required to see those goals achieved, rather than just planning on the basis of Hydro's inaccurate forecasts and regardless of cost. Such an energy policy would take full account of the potential for renewable energy sources that the Ministry of Energy has obstinately ignored. Such a policy would acknowledge the potential of energy conservation as an untapped source of inexpensive energy.

Surely there is something drastically wrong with a set of priorities which saw the government spend only $5.4 million on conservation last year and only $2.5 million on renewable energy sources at the same time that it guaranteed Hydro's borrowing—on the credit of all of us in Ontario—to the tune of $1.8 billion in 1978 alone.

Surely we must take account of the mounting evidence that even the long-term primary energy growth rate of 2.3 per cent a year, which is projected by the Ministry of Energy, far exceeds the amount of energy that Ontarians really need to maintain and improve their standard of living.

If we would just go back to the amount of oil, electricity and natural gas that we consumed on a per capita basis 10 years ago in this province, that would be a 25 or 30 per cent cut in energy demands almost overnight. I do not think anybody could maintain that we were somehow starving or freezing in the dark 10 years ago because of our level of energy consumption at that time.

Ontario now depends on sources outside the province for 80 per cent of its energy needs. Starting immediately, we believe Ontario must adopt a policy of becoming more and more self-sustaining in meeting our energy needs. But the direction that is taken cannot be one of building more and more ruinously expensive nuclear generating stations. It is already clear that solar energy and other renewable energy sources are cost-competitive with nuclear power for most uses when one looks at all the costs of nuclear electricity, and study after study is showing that, dollar for dollar, energy conservation is a many times better investment.

The government has known this for many years but it has ignored its own best advice. In 1972, the government's advisory committee on energy observed that "much of our attention has been centred on supply but there is an equally effective approach to the matter of energy, and that is to improve the efficiency with which energy is applied and to promote the conservation of its use." That came before 1973, before the sheikhs of Arabia and of Alberta had exacted their toll.

In 1976, the all-party select committee on Ontario Hydro recommended a wide range of programs for residential, industrial and commercial energy conservation. The government implemented almost none of those recommendations.

In 1977, the Ministry of Energy's document on Ontario's energy future concluded: "Investments and measures to increase efficiency and reduce energy demands are likely to be more productive over the long run than the supply investments that are displaced." To quote just one more of that document's conclusions: "The acceleration of planning and the related investments and incentives that will advance the transition to renewable energy sources must be considered to be very urgent." That is what the Minister of Energy says, but that is not what the Minister of Energy does.

We can only applaud the analysis, but at the same time we condemn the government in the strongest possible terms for its total failure to design an energy policy on this urgent basis. Let me make some specific proposals.

Mr. Breithaupt: For the few Tories who are there.

Mr. Cassidy: First, as part of an overall review of Ontario's energy future the government must make a clear commitment to reducing Ontario Hydro's rate of system expansion sharply, based on realistic assessments of future energy needs. The assessment of energy requirements must take into account the need to reduce primary energy demand to a sustainable rate of growth. This is clearly feasible without any cost to Ontarians in terms of their comfort, their convenience, their standard of living, or of their jobs.

Second, the government must make a commitment that the capital that is made available for other purposes by this policy will be used to implement a serious industrial strategy for the province of Ontario. As part of that strategy it must guarantee the creation of at least as many jobs in construction and in industry as would have resulted from Hydro's continued expansion.

Third, as part of its energy expansion program the government must begin a major initiative to reinsulate every home in Ontario to the best practicable standard over the next 10 years. The results of a study by Dr. David Brooks for the Economic Council of Canada show that this measure alone, at a cost of $1,300 per house, would quickly create 8,000 jobs in our province and that it is cost-effective now. The program would involve a combination of loans to consumers at the same interest rates that Hydro now enjoys, of incentive grants and the provision of information and technical assistance.

Ms. Gigantes: Recycling money.

Mr. Cassidy: It would lower consumers' heating bills, it would rapidly lower our dependence on imported oil and on natural gas, and it would be a far better investment in terms of energy per dollar investment than another nuclear generating station.

This should be part of a broad-ranging conservation initiative that will include programs like energy efficiency standards for all new homes and commercial buildings and financial incentives for energy conservation in the commercial sector. We need a capital pool which could be available to industry for energy-saving projects. We need rapidly expanding industrial co-generation as a source of electricity. The policy should include improved load management by Ontario Hydro to reduce the disparity between average and peak demand.

All these five programs were recommended by the 1976 report of the select committee on Ontario Hydro. Not one has been implemented, because the priorities of this government are upside down.

It's time, as well, to get serious about alternative sources of energy. Ontario was prepared to invest $100 million in Syncrude. We should be prepared to make the same kind of commitment to projects like a pilot methanol plant to use wood waste that cannot be utilized by the forest industry. Ontario should make the rapid spread of solar heating for both new and existing structures the highest priority.

This is particularly true in view of recent studies for Energy, Mines and Resources Canada, which identified in the rapid implementation of solar energy use a tremendous job-creating potential in construction, in design and in manufacturing. The study concluded that if solar heating makes sense on the grounds of energy supply it makes even more sense as part of a full employment strategy for Canada and for its regions, including Ontario.

There's nothing in the least bit new or radical or surprising in all of this. What is surprising is simply that the government has systematically ignored the realities of energy supply and demand for the future. It has systematically ignored its own advisers and its own pronouncements. It's been a captive of the folk down at Ontario Hydro.

The throne speech is just the latest example of this total unwillingness to get serious about energy policy. Except for a single-minded determination to let Ontario Hydro go its own way, this government just doesn't have an energy policy, and Ontario needs one desperately.

What troubles me most of all about the present government is that sense of defeatism, that sense of failure, which is coming through from so many quarters. One after another we've had ministers making speeches which tell us that we must pay more and get less. What effrontery. Of course, the people who will get hurt will be the working people of Ontario, and we reject that kind of strategy from the government. This is still a rich province.

Mr. Grande: The Titanic hitting the iceberg.

[5:15]

Mr. Cassidy: Our gross provincial product per capita was worth about $10,059 per annum back in 1977 and that is more than Sweden, it's more than West Germany and it's more than the United States. We can't afford things in this province? That's bunkum. We have enormous natural resources and enormously talented human resources. Our population is as large as most nations in the world and we're located in the midst of the most affluent continent in the world.

The New Democratic Party believes that if Ontario only had the political will, we have the resources, we have the imagination, we have the creativity to control our future and to create a decent life for every citizen of this province. Our goal should be nothing less.

We must maintain and enhance our universal health care and all those other public services which play such an important role in creating the quality of life in Ontario, and we can do it. We must maintain and enhance the manufacturing industry which is the cornerstone of our economic strength and, therefore, of our ability to maintain a good life, and we can do that too.

We, in this Legislature, have a responsibility not just to meet today's needs but to provide for tomorrow's needs as well. We must ensure that there will be farm land enough to feed the people of this province in the 21st century and we can do that. We must ensure that our forests will be maintained as the base of the north's economy in the next century, and we can do that. We must ensure that our mining resources are used prudently to create the strongest possible industrial base, and we can do that. We must put in place an energy policy which allows this province to look after more and more of its own needs without bankrupting ourselves in the process. All this we can do if only we have the political will, which the Conservative government of this province so obviously lacks.

It's time we moved towards more self-reliance in the way we run this province and that we set priorities that are designed to benefit the working people of Ontario and not just the corporations. We need to regain a sense of direction in Ontario, a sense of control over our lives, over our economy and over our province, and that will only happen when the rule of the Conservative Party in Ontario is brought to an end. For that reason, I wish to move an amendment to the motion.

Mr. Riddell: Get your running shoes on.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Cassidy moves that the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor now before the House be amended by adding thereto the following words:

"That this House deplores the government's policy of damaging cutbacks in services to people and its failure to manage adequately Ontario's economy and, in particular, regrets the government's failure to maintain a universal and accessible health care system in Ontario as exemplified by the severe cutbacks in active treatment hospital beds and the failure to deal with the problems of doctors opting out of OHIP; its failure to use the power of government to make multinational corporations in this province act in the best interest of Canadians; its failure to create job opportunities and to build a healthy industrial base that will make Ontario's economy self-reliant; its failure to protect consumers against unjustified increases in food prices; its failure to put into place a balanced energy strategy reflecting Ontario's need for conservation and for energy sources additional to electricity and imported fuels; and that for all of these reasons this government no longer has the confidence of this House."

Mr. Laughren: Put the question.

Mr. Cassidy: Question.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Norton, the debate was adjourned.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Norton, the House adjourned at 5:21 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, MARCH 27, 1979

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, I have a message from the Honourable the Administrator of the Province of Ontario signed by his own hand.

Mr. Speaker: The Honourable William G. Howland, the Administrator of the Province of Ontario, transmits supplementary estimates of certain additional sums required for the services of the province for the year ending March 31, 1979, and recommends them to the Legislative Assembly, Toronto, March 27, 1979.

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, the honourable members will recall I tabled a set of supplementary estimates last December amounting to $6.4 million. At that time I was pleased to note that the increases had been fully offset by decreases elsewhere, and that the government remained committed to a total expenditure ceiling of $14.482 million as announced on April 25, 1978. The supplementary estimates which are being tabled today amount to $96.165 million. Again I am pleased to report that these expenditure increases will be fully offset in other areas so that the total expenditure limit of $14.482 million for 1978-79 will be maintained.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

PUBLIC OFFICERS ACT

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, the Public Officers Act requires that within the first 15 days of every session I advise this assembly of all securities furnished on behalf of public officers and of any changes made to such securities. Since my predecessor's statement on February 28, 1978, there have been no changes in either category.

CLEANUP OF SPILLS

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, in December I introduced a bill to amend the Environmental Protection Act, 1971, with respect to spills of pollutants including toxic substances to the natural environment. The purpose of the bill is to impose clear responsibility to clean up and provide for more immediate and more effective action in these environmental emergencies and to provide a better mechanism for recovering costs and damages from the responsible parties. Early in January the bill was circulated to appropriate members of industry, to municipalities and to other concerned groups and I invited comments.

My request received considerable response and I am now introducing a revised bill that takes into account many constructive and practical suggestions I received. The compendium of background material on this bill is being updated and will be tabled shortly.

This revised bill is intended, among other objectives:

1. To impose a clear responsibility for control, cleanup and restoration on owners and those in charge of pollutants including those involved in their manufacture, handling, transportation and disposal;

2. To broaden the authority of the minister to order control and cleanup of spills and restoration of the natural environment by those responsible, and when necessary, by other persons;

3. To enable the ministry to take immediate remedial action in the event of a spill and to pursue the question of liability later;

4. To establish liability for compensation for damage resulting from a spill and for the cost of cleanup which clarifies and extends the right to compensation at common law;

5. To enable a person who has been ordered by the minister to clean up a spill, other than a person already responsible to do so, to recover his reasonable expense from the ministry. The minister subsequently will be able to recover the amount of such expenses from the owner and person in control. This amendment is meant to save the person ordered by the minister to carry out cleanup from having to collect from or sue the owner and person in control;

6. To authorize control and cleanup of spills and restoration of the natural environment by municipalities and designated persons and to provide them with the right to recover their reasonable expenses from the owner and the person in control.

In addition, among other things, the regulations to be developed will provide for the designation of certain types of discharges of pollutants as being abnormal, thereby clearly spelling out and avoiding delay and argument over what will be regarded as a spill and subject to the legislation.

Finally, the bill gives persons ordered to do cleanup and those authorized to do so, the right to enter on private land for the business of cleanup and immunity from prosecution.

As I informed the members previously, this legislation is unequalled in Canada. We hope it will lead to a decrease in the number of spills. We know it will speed cleanup, reduce potential damage and assist any injured party by placing initial responsibility on those who own and control pollutants.

Copies of the compendium required under the standing orders were of course made available during the last session when I first introduced this bill. However I must apologize to the honourable members that I do not at this time have a summary of the amendments that have been made since that date. The reason for this is that I wanted to give interested parties as much time as possible to suggest amendments and at the same time I wanted to reintroduce it at the earliest possible moment. We are currently working on a summary of the amendments made and I will be pleased to make those available as soon as they are ready.

In addition, there are three minor amendments of which I will advise the critics prior to second reading.

INTERFLOW SYSTEMS LIMITED

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, I have a second statement on another matter, if I may present it at this time.

On March 13 in this Legislature, I gave a commitment to produce a detailed account of the situation with Interflow Systems Limited and the Upper Ottawa Street landfill site in Hamilton. This statement has been difficult to prepare, due to the risk of prejudicing upcoming court proceedings and the possibility of interfering with the ongoing investigations conducted by ministry staff, Hamilton-Wentworth police and the regional municipality, but the public concern and confusion which now exists makes it imperative that I speak in some detail about the situation.

We have said repeatedly that the day-to-day operation and responsibility for what goes into this landfill site belongs to the municipality. The responsibility for operating this site in accordance with ministry environmental requirements and for deciding what waste goes into it rests with the municipal level of government. It shall continue to do so. It is their site. They are responsible for minding the gate, so to speak, as are other municipalities in Ontario.

I am not criticizing the regional municipality of Hamilton-Wentworth. They have taken prompt action when the report of our waybill audit was finished. They immediately notified police and implemented tight controls on waste being allowed into this landfill site.

My office has been informed by Hamilton-Wentworth officials that municipal staff have since been reorganized; indeed, one person was dismissed and seven were disciplined for their part in the matter. I also understand that a new bylaw is being drafted to regulate more closely activities at the landfill sites. In other words, the municipality has accepted its responsibility.

The ministry has also taken action on this matter and on the entire problem of liquid waste disposal. I need not review my seven-point plan, but I will point out that our new waybill system is proving itself effective in dealing with this situation.

Much has been made of the "samples" supplied to the ministry's regional office in Stoney Creek. I would like to make a few comments about this well-known scientific practice of pop-bottle testing.

In December 1976, two individuals dropped into our office with two pop bottles which they said contained samples from a load of waste delivered to Interflow and from another load hauled from Interflow to the landfill site. It was the understanding of the regional staff that these samples were given to them in strict confidence.

I would like to point out that the individuals were from a company operating in competition with Interflow; and it is not unusual for ministry staff to hear allegations from those in the waste disposal business against their competitors.

These samples had not been collected in an acceptable scientific manner. Since we had no way of determining whether they were representative of the loads they were taken from, no analysis was done in our laboratory.

Other than knowing what was in the bottles, an analysis would not have proved illegal activity. Disposal of liquid waste in this landfill site is not in itself illegal. The certificate of approval which we gave the municipality for the Upper Ottawa Street site allows licensed haulers to dispose of liquid waste there.

Mr. S. Smith: The fact that it came from outside Hamilton-Wentworth was illegal; that is against your certificate of approval.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: And who is running that site? Listen, please.

Mr. Nixon: No one is listening.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: It is the responsibility of the municipality; let that be very clear.

A Liberal researcher asked staff if they had had a meeting with three waste haulers. Staff said they did not recall such a meeting and asked for the date. A check of the files revealed that two persons had visited the office two years before. When reporters made inquiries, the visit was confirmed.

However, the ministry staff had suspected problems well before that visit. During 1976 and 1977, they conducted innumerable spot checks on Interflow, K-D Enterprises and the landfill site. Many visits were made incognito, as well as in the middle of the night, in an attempt to obtain evidence if illegal activities were going on. Both companies were also asked to supply additional information on the handling of their liquid waste. This they did. But no evidence of illegal activities was found.

The waybill system, with which we now keep tabs on what waste goes where, had only recently been introduced on an experimental and voluntary basis to give the ministry and industry time to become familiar with it. But it was not until April 1977 that this became a legal requirement.

During 1977, Interflow operations were closely monitored. On several occasions the ministry directed cleanups of minor spills on the company site. On November 29, 1977, Interflow was convicted on two charges for violation of the Environmental Protection Act and fined $2,500 and $500.

In December, staff supervised removal of contaminated soil and repairs to a leaking lagoon liner.

In the first eight months of 1978, staff conducted limited auditing of waybills, night-time investigations and indeed even tailed company trucks. But, again, no admissible evidence of illegal activities was found. Problems with linings of lagoons and improper piping were discovered. Requests for repairs were complied with.

It has been implied that trucks were illegally dumping waste at the site at night. We do not deny there is a lot of trucking activity there during the night. But most of it involves dumping of city street sweepings.

Mr. S. Smith: It was a foul-smelling liquid, my friend.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Is the Leader of the Opposition saying most or all? Or what is he saying?

[2:15]

Mr. S. Smith: I have between six and 12 cases of foul-smelling liquid—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Questions and answers come later.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: It isn't even a large portion. Most of it is city sweepings.

It is interesting to note that company officials complained of harassment by our regional staff—a rather interesting note, I might add, that the company complained of our harassment.

In September 1978, more work on the waybill system made it possible to do a detailed audit of records. I cannot go into the details of that audit, nor would it be appropriate to discuss further the charges that have now been laid, but I would like to point out that the ministry lawyers, as well as staff from the ministry's Stoney Creek office, have conducted countless interviews with truckers and officials from the municipality, Interflow and industries.

Statements have been made that people could die of cancer or suffer birth defects, as at Love Canal, because of this situation. Let me stress that public health is not in danger. Since the early 1960s we have regularly monitored Red Hill Creek which contains water that has seeped from the landfill site, called leachate. Monthly tests done at locations above and below the site have not found the presence of liquid industrial waste in the creek.

In the past two years we have stepped up the number of tests, and additional samples have been taken from leachate on the site itself. The results are the same. Most of the liquid waste that went into the landfill site consisted of water used to wash industrial tanks that held substances like oil, caustics and rust preventive material.

I am deeply concerned over the misleading and inaccurate information spread by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. S. Smith: Right on every time.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: He has asked for a judicial investigation. The ministry is investigating, the regional municipality is investigating—

Mr. S. Smith: Investigating itself. I am very impressed.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: —and the police are investigating. His unfounded allegations have only served to deflect much of their efforts and have delayed a comprehensive and reasonable assessment of the facts of the case.

The leader of the Liberal Party has made statements about ministry staff looking the other way because of dereliction of duty or because they were paid off. He has talked of illegal dumping and threats to health. I realize a by-election is on, but surely some responsibility should be exercised. If the leader has evidence, he should bring it forward in the interest of justice.

Mr. S. Smith: You waited until the Christmas break before bringing forward the evidence.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Let me repeat that: If the hon. member has evidence, let him bring it forward in the name of justice. And if he does not wish to present it to myself, then at least he can present it to the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) or the police.

Mr. Kerrio: Do you want them to do your job for you?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: On January 25 I asked the Leader of the Opposition in a letter, on a formal basis, to present that information. I again asked him on March 13. Instead, he has chosen to drop those insinuations in the media.

Mr. S. Smith: You ignored the information you were given.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: If you had listened to what I have said in the last 10 minutes you would know that I have not—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the minister confine his remarks to his original statement? This is ministerial statements.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I will be glad to, Mr. Speaker, if I don't have to deal with any interjections.

The Leader of the Opposition has claimed it was his pursuit of this issue that produced action. His first question in the House was on October 31, 1978. As I have pointed out, ministry staff were well aware of the situation in 1976 and have pursued it with all means at their disposal.

The Liberal leader has asked that ministry staff should be dismissed for their handling of this situation. I do not agree. He knows that on another occasion here in this very House I criticized staff for actions they took that I did not agree with. In this case I find no reason to criticize staff; in fact, I would commend their efforts.

I feel his accusations are unfair, because staff cannot defend themselves. I regret he chose to cast doubt on the integrity of those people, with remarks that in our opinion border on slander. I wish him to know that the Hamilton-Wentworth police have told us that their investigation has cleared the ministry staff of any illegal activities or involvement in taking money; or "looking the other way," as he has so often accused them of doing.

Many of the individuals working in the Stoney Creek office reside in the Hamilton region. They and their families have had to live with the embarrassment caused by the leader's charges. I have spoken to them and I know the kind of insinuations that have been made to them. I feel a great deal of compassion for them.

Mr. Speaker, I would hope that the member for Hamilton West would have the courage to offer an immediate and public apology to my staff for the suffering he has subjected them to with his unfounded attacks on their professional reputations.

The ministry has certainly had its major concerns that all was not right. But the leader does not seem to realize that we must produce concrete evidence before actions can be taken. I hope he has now learned that the kind of allegations he made cannot be substituted for careful homework and investigation.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult to ignore those interjections. In the last eight pages of this text I have put on the record what has been done. I had to be very careful in doing so because I do not wish to prejudice the trial.

In the future, I would like the leader to exercise greater care and I would welcome more co-operation from him in enforcing our laws. I intend to prosecute those who violate them, but I do not wish to try anyone in a kangaroo court conducted in the public media or in the Legislature by the Leader of the Opposition.

I have an obligation to do justice now and in the future. I wish that he shared it.

HOME RENEWAL PROGRAM

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to inform the honourable members that the very popular Ontario Home Renewal Program has been renewed for another year.

Recognizing OHRP's value to municipalities and home owners throughout Ontario, my cabinet colleagues agreed to allocate $20 million for this year's program.

Since 1974, some 22,000 home owners in some 615 municipalities have received more than $82.2 million in OHRP loans. In addition, another $4.2 million was approved for 811 loans to the residents of unorganized territories.

OHRP provides grants to municipalities to administer directly as loans of up to $7,500 to low and moderate-income home owner occupants for home improvements. A portion of the loan may be forgiven and interest rates vary from zero to eight per cent, depending upon the home owner's income.

GRIEVANCE ARBITRATION

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, later today I wish to introduce a bill to amend the Labour Relations Act. The purpose of this bill is to reform the grievance arbitration procedure.

Members will recall that in July 1978 an industrial inquiry commissioner, the Honourable Arthur Kelly, reported to my predecessor on certain perceived problems relating to grievance arbitration under the Labour Relations Act. He made a number of recommendations as to how the existing system might be improved.

Mr. Cassidy: It's taken so long, it's shameful.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I have now had an opportunity to consider the commissioner's recommendations, as well as the comments of a number of employers, trade unions and arbitrators, to whom the report was sent for comment. In addition, I had the benefit of hearing the views of some members of this Legislature during consideration of my ministry's estimates before the standing committee on resources development.

The bill I am introducing has three main purposes: first, to expedite the hearing of unresolved grievances; second, to provide third-party assistance to aid in the settlement of grievances, and third, to reduce the cost of arbitrating those disputes that cannot be settled.

The amendments proposed are simple in form but significant in impact. They enable either party to apply to the minister for the appointment of a single arbitrator 30 days after the grievance is filed, or following the completion of the grievance procedure, whichever occurs first. On receipt of such request, the minister must appoint an arbitrator who is able to commence the hearing of the dispute within 21 days of the receipt of the request for arbitration. Grievances involving termination of employment will be dealt with even more expeditiously.

The amendments further provide that upon receipt of a request for the appointment of an arbitrator, the minister may assign a grievance settlement officer to confer with the parties to assist him in arriving at a mediated settlement.

In addition, the amendments provide for the enactment of regulations fixing scales of remuneration for arbitrators and providing procedures for the review and resolution of disputed accounts.

Finally, the bill repeals the Labour-Management Arbitration Commission Act.

I believe the proposed amendments, while preserving the best features of the existing arbitration system, effectively and fairly address the problems of delay and of cost—the two major issues which led to the establishment of the Kelly commission. With the passage of this bill, and with the co-operation of employers, trade unions and arbitrators, upon which I am confident we can rely, Ontario should have one of the finest grievance arbitration systems of any jurisdiction in North America.

ORAL QUESTIONS

DISPOSAL OF HAZARDOUS WASTES

Mr. S. Smith: A question of the Minister of the Environment: In view of the statements by members of his ministry that they are seeking those dumps that may have accepted hazardous liquid wastes in the past, and that they have no record of where these dumps are, can he explain such a statement from his ministry, when there exists this document from 1974, which I draw to his attention, called Land Drainage Reference Study, Task 2B?

This document—which I may say was made up by a consultant from records in 1974, provided by the Ministry of the Environment itself—contains maps and descriptions of 13 sites in the province that are listed as having accepted hazardous wastes. I would ask the minister if the ministry has lost this information, which it seemed to have for the consultant who drew up this report in 1974? Had the officials in his ministry simply not seen this report when they announced that they didn't know where these hazardous locations might be found? Can he tell us how many of the sites referred to in this report are in fact still operating?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: On the very last portion, I would be prepared to get that information for the member. I think what we are saying with regard to the number of sites is that indeed there could be sites in Ontario that were in operation, were closed, that we would not be aware of; sites in the 1930s, the 1940s, the 1950s, the 1960s—long before we, as a ministry, were formed—that could have easily been opened and closed and no specific records known of them.

This summer we are making a further and complete search of all of those sites. We'll have as complete an inventory as it is humanly possible to do of the sites throughout Ontario.

Had we or had any government had a ministry of the environment back in the 1920s and 1930s, it would be easy to have those records. But since neither we, nor any other jurisdiction, had those records, it's now up to us to try to find as many of them as we can. It will be a difficult task, but we're prepared to do it.

Mr. Breithaupt: I presume it all happened before 1943.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Certainly; you are right.

[2:30]

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: In view of the fact that in 1974 there were records, maps and descriptions of at least 13 sites listed as having accepted hazardous wastes, can the minister tell us whether that information, subsequently incorporated into this report, has since been lost by the ministry? I think that is a reasonable question.

While he is thinking about the answer to that question, may I also ask another question by way of supplementary? In view of his response to the resources development committee last fall, in which the minister was asked for a list of sites licensed to accept liquid wastes—part of his information there noted eight sites which had accepted liquid wastes and now are closed, yet this report shows that as of 1974 as many as 15 sites were licensed to accept liquid wastes exclusively; interestingly, only three of the eight sites listed by the minister show up in the 15 here—what about the other 12? Why were they not on his list?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: We will be more than pleased to identify those and to supply that information. The point I was trying to make, and I will try to make it again, was that we do not have full knowledge of all the sites that may have been opened and closed in the province prior to any particular date. Certainly we have not lost that information. If the member wants us to correlate it in, if you will, a more logical fashion for him, we are prepared to do so. I think that is easily done. If it will help, we will do it.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: In view of the fact that the ministry itself has estimated that there are more than 2,000 landfill sites that have been used across Ontario, and not just the 13 that have been referred to, can the minister undertake, in the first place, that his ministry will be seeking to establish how many of those more than 2,000 landfill sites received hazardous liquid industrial wastes; and, secondly, will there be a complete record made available to the public at the earliest opportunity so that the public will know which of these sites will be used for hazardous wastes and what is being done about it?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: There is no doubt that we will do that, Mr. Speaker, and we are pleased to do so. I draw to the attention of the leader of the third party, however, that finding these sites will not necessarily be easy, and certainly determining what went into those sites 30 years ago is not going to be easy either. We are flying over certain areas which we suspect likely would have sites, and we are doing a great deal.

Mr. Cassidy: You should do it if we're not going to have any Love Canals in this province.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Let us not extrapolate too far.

Mr. Cassidy: Let's not extrapolate too little either.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I can tell the member that in our judgement today there is absolutely no fear of a Love Canal in Ontario. Let us be very clear on that point. But I am not going to stand in this House and give that kind of assurance when there can be the tiniest fraction of doubt. We are going to search out as many sites as—

Mr. Cassidy: That's right. Those words may come back to haunt you.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: If the member would permit me the full answer, I said that, having made that statement, it is my unconditional belief, and the belief of my ministry, that that is true. But because I have a great concern, and indeed this government has a great concern, for the health of the people, it does not give us a licence to make that statement and then to rest on our laurels. We are not going to do that. We will continue to search out as many areas as we possibly can.

I say to the member, if he has a spot he thinks should be investigated in detail, he should let us know; we will do it. Not only that, but that information will be as public as he wishes it to be. We have nothing to fear. We have nothing to hide. We will be better served if all of us know as much as we can about that problem.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: Since the fact is that in 1974 the ministry apparently knew of 13 hazardous waste sites which now it apparently doesn't know about, and since it knew of 12 liquid waste sites which the minister didn't bother to mention in his report to the resources development committee, and which again I therefore assume the ministry doesn't know about, I ask the minister if they have lost the information.

By way of answering that question, I will send the minister a list of the permit numbers of the 13 hazardous waste sites. Would the minister be kind enough to undertake in this House to send us copies of the certificates of approval for those sites, copies of any site inspection certificates and, while he is at it, copies of site inspection certificates for the Upper Ottawa Street site as well?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I just can't comprehend why the leader didn't hear me say that I would correlate that information. We haven't lost sight of what he has just said for the third time that we must have. I have rejected that statement three times. We will correlate it for him and will be glad to do it. That's no problem at all. But please don't ask me for the fourth time to say that I disagree that we have lost sight of it. We haven't, for the last time, I hope.

Mr. S. Smith: Why didn't you report it to the committee?

Ms. Bryden: Since I believe there are something like 900 fewer landfill sites now than there were in 1970, it seems to me the minister cannot say there are no potential Love canals in Ontario until he knows what is in those 900 closed sites. I would like to ask him is he just taking an inventory of sites or is he actually digging into them and taking a test of what is underneath.

Mr. Havrot: All 900. Yes, he is digging into them all.

Mr. Wildman: That would be something for the member for Timiskaming to do.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I said it was my unconditional belief that there was no danger and I am very sure of that.

As we try to address this problem, one should perhaps look at our history a little bit. I think there is a lot of comfort in that. We have been basically an agricultural community. We haven't been a highly industrialized society, a chemical society, nearly as much as have our neighbours to the south. They are now seeing some of the great side effects and unpleasant effects of a chemical industry. I think we are fortunate in that regard. It is a fact of our history.

Mr. Riddell: The farmers have saved your hide again.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I am glad they have and I am glad that I too, am a farmer and can share in that heritage.

Mr. Breithaupt: You are certainly spreading it around right now.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think it gives us a far greater assurance that it isn't likely to happen in Ontario. I will assure the member that we are now looking into those sites that we are aware of. We are digging into them. We are quite prepared to investigate them as thoroughly as she or I think it should be done. I want that done. I want it on the record that it has been done because I think we have a great obligation to the people of Ontario to guarantee the statement I just made. We will continue to work at that. We want to be very, very sure about safeguarding the health of the people of this province.

Mr. MacDonald: Tell the honourable member for Timiskaming. He laughed at it.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think the member might recognize that our greater concern is not so much what is happening here in Ontario, but in those jurisdictions which have not been so careful as Ontario. Because there is no way one can stop air circulation in North America or water entering into our Great Lakes, we have some concerns coming from other jurisdictions. But I think it is easily proved that we have done the best job of any jurisdiction in North America in many of these areas.

Mr. Martel: That's taking it too far. The minister should have quit while he was ahead.

[Later (2:50):]

Mr. Speaker: Does the minister have a point of order?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Yes. I am not quite sure whether it is order or privilege and I am certainly not trying to be provocative on this point. But I thought, regarding the point the Leader of the Opposition made to the effect that our ministry had supplied that information on the 13 sites, I note that it was from Environment Canada. We may have supplied it, but the information was from Environment Canada.

Mr. S. Smith: But the data were from the ministry.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I thought it was inferred that we had given that report, and I think in fact—well I read here: "Task 2B Report: Waste Disposal Site. Prepared for Canada Department of the Environment by two independent researchers."

I am not trying to be provocative, I am simply saying I hope it is on the record that this was a Canadian report rather than—

Mr. Speaker: Talking on the point of clarification.

Mr. S. Smith: If I may respond on the clarification: Indeed, the report, of course, is from Environment Canada. It was provided to us by the provincial Ministry of Natural Resources. But the data used by the researchers, according to the researchers themselves, came from Ontario Ministry of the Environment records. That is where they got the data to draw up these maps and it is very questionable as to whether that data still exists within the ministry.

PHYSICIANS OPTING OUT OF OHIP

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question for the Minister of Health. Now that the minister is aware that anaesthetists at Toronto Western Hospital, and for that matter at North York General, Scarborough General and Branson Hospital, have all opted out, and that consequently any patient who goes for surgery at those hospitals is then subjected to a means test administered by the physicians themselves, one would assume, could he tell us how he feels about that particular erosion of the universal health care system and whether he is prepared to accept the means test philosophy, a philosophy which is apparently well known and well liked by the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson) of this province? Is the Minister of Health willing to accept that doctors will apply that kind of means test?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Let us perhaps deal with one example I asked my staff to look into and about which they reported. In the case of the Toronto Western Hospital, where the anaesthetists have apparently been opted out for a number of years, fully 70 per cent of the services provided are billed through the billing group on an opted-in basis.

Mr. S. Smith: A means test is what you call it.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I look at it this way, and I think this is a principle that certainly has stood the test of time though I will acknowledge that perhaps we need to look at ways to reaffirm it. The principle is that wherever possible the agreement of the patient should be obtained first.

Mr. S. Smith: Wherever possible.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I say "wherever possible" because there are cases—

Mr. S. Smith: Just before surgery.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell:—where a person will be brought into hospital unconscious and wouldn't have the opportunity to agree or not. In those cases, it is my view and it is my understanding that it is general practice that they should not be charged in excess of the OHIP rate.

Mr. Swart: The doctors wait until they come to and then ask for it.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As part of our—

Mr. Warner: You are an apologist for the OMA.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. S. Smith: They apply a means test; they don't ask anybody.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I come at it from the other side. The Leader of the Opposition is coming at it in a different way.

Mr. Swart: You sure do, but not from the public side.

Mr. Warner: Go run a Mr. Submarine somewhere.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I say that the person should have the opportunity to review it and must agree before the provision of the service.

Mr. S. Smith: The minister knows they don't.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I'm afraid that's not the experience and it's not the information I have; otherwise I think we'd have hard examples of people actually being deferred from necessary medical care.

As members know, we are reviewing with the medical association how we can revise the mechanism by which we negotiate their fee schedules. In fact, we are now talking about a specific document. We're at the point where we are looking at a specific proposal. It seems to me that that principle, that an individual should have to agree beforehand, is one that has served us well. It may well be that we have to look at, and we will look at, possible ways of—

Mrs. Campbell: Opening the hospitals.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell:—reaffirming that principle.

Mr. Warner: Try ways of protecting the patient. That would be a good way to start.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, what is the minister saying? Is he not aware that certainly at the Toronto Western the chief anaesthetist is on record as saying that they don't charge certain patients the extra because they feel the patients are too poor and that they make that judgement based on their own opinion about the patient's working status and one thing and another?

Is the minister now saying that as long as a patient agrees to pay the extra, it's quite all right for the doctor to charge it, even though these people are facing surgery, but if the patient doesn't agree, then the doctor has no business charging it? Do I take it that what the minister is saying is any patient who simply says, "No, I do not want to pay the extra," shall not be charged the extra by an opted-out doctor? Is that not what the minister is saying?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: No. What we are saying is what is the strength of our system which has served the province well.

Mr. Swart: It's breaking down now. Does the minister realize that?

Mr. Warner: You put it in the past tense. The system is being destroyed and you know it.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: In fact, every province has in one means or another a variation. In Saskatchewan they have what's called balanced billing where they can patient-stream anywhere at any time, in a physician's office or elsewhere, on any account. In other provinces, they have other variations. Every province is different in one way or another, although they all meet the principles of the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act.

Mr. Swart: And this is the worst.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: What I said was, to use a specific example of someone who perhaps comes into emergency unconscious, in that particular case it is my view—and I understand it is general practice—that that individual should not pay above the OHIP rate.

Mr. S. Smith: We're not talking about that.

Mr. Cassidy: You have to be unconscious to avoid their surcharge.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: What I'm saying is, that has been the principle that has been agreed to and supported by the medical profession—

Mr. Martel: You just knock them all out first.

Mr. McClellan: Medicare for the unconscious. If you are conscious you can't have universal health care.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —and by the health plan since the beginnings of the health plan. As part of our discussions with them, what I'm saying is we are looking at whether there is any need in some way to strengthen that and to reaffirm that principle.

Mr. Laughren: Supplementary: In view of the minister's statement that opted-out physicians should not impose a hardship on people receiving health care in the province of Ontario and in view of the fact that the OMA has indicated the same, could the minister explain to me why it is that striking miners in Sudbury receiving $25 per week are receiving notices from opted-out physicians indicating that if they don't pay up their bill will be sent to a collection agency? How does that fit with the minister's indication that people in Ontario will have equal access to health care?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: First of all, I have to go back and point out that in that particular area of the province the level of opting out is extremely low compared to the other parts of the province.

Mr. Swart: You don't have to go back; you're as far back as you can go.

Mr. Warner: Look at the bills.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Secondly, the basic philosophy of our system is that it is based on options for the patient and options for the physician. In that particular area, there are a great many options available with opted-in physicians as there are in all parts of the province.

[2:45]

Mr. Warner: The only one who should opt out is you.

Mr. S. Smith: Is the minister of the belief that in 1979 the public of Ontario is ready to turn back the clock and, when entering public hospitals, is now prepared once again to let doctors decide who shall pay and who shall not pay? Is he of the belief that that kind of doctor-administered means test is once again to be part of the health-care system here in Ontario in public hospitals or does he not see the necessity to have within the public hospital system those people who are prepared in fact to work within the insurance plan?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I think again the last part of the question suggests exactly what we are talking about, that there be options, and to take the example of the west—I don't support or condone the principle of means test as you call it. What I am stating as the basic principle we have always worked upon, and which I acknowledge we may need to reaffirm in some tangible way, is that patients should have to agree and if they don't agree they should not be billed.

Mr. S. Smith: With a knife over them.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, the member engages in hyperbole. It's not a question of a knife over them. I already gave the member my views on the instance where the individual might be brought into emergency and not be in a position to agree, to even consider it.

Mr. Breugh: Could I ask the minister whether I read correctly what he has just said. He has just said to the people of Ontario that if they don't want to pay extra services, fees or over the approved rate, they simply don't agree to it; the doctor must provide the service and the patient has the option then to agree or not to agree to pay that amount of money. Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am saying and I have said all along, Mr. Speaker, that it is the availability of options that is important. In fact in hospitals it is the billing groups that ensure the options are available. What I am saying is that the patient should agree first, and if they don't then change the doctor—

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, there are bound to be some cases where they are not in a position to consider it and in those cases they shouldn't have to pay.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to address the question of the opportunities and alternatives. Is it not a fact that at North York General not only the anaesthetists opted out but so have the obstetricians? What is the function of the ministry in the funding of these so-called public hospitals where a whole staff would opt out? Has the minister given thought to his position vis-à-vis the open or closed hospitals?

Mr. Breithaupt: What are the patient's options then?

Mr. S. Smith: You give the patient a choice.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I don't see the connection between the two but perhaps the member could make the point at a later date. Essentially, what we are saying is—and this is since the beginnings of the plan—the strength of the plan has been based on the options available. The evidence would indicate, from the inquiries we have had from the public over the last number of years and the investigations we have made to date, we found, for instance at the Western, even though the entire anaesthesia staff has opted out, fully 70 per cent of the claims have been on an opted-in basis.

Mr. S. Smith: On a means test.

Mr. Breithaupt: There is no option for the patient.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I have already answered that point, I think. It would seem that in fact the public has been served well by the system that we have in this province.

Mrs. Campbell: In the past.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: And currently. There's absolutely no indication that the four principles of accessibility and universality of coverage and so forth of the plans, as embodied in the Health Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act, are being compromised.

Mr. Speaker: A new question; the member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I want to pursue with the Minister of Health this question of the degree of opting out by surgeons and by other specialists in various hospitals around the province; and also ask about the kind of options that are in fact available to patients in situations where every practitioner in a particular specialty in a particular hospital has opted out of the plan.

If I can be specific, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that there are no anaesthetists providing services at the insured rates at Toronto Women's College Hospital or at St. Joseph's Hospital in west Toronto; in view of the fact that all seven obstetrician-gynecologists accredited to Scarborough General have opted out; in view of the fact that all the pediatricians at Northwestern Hospital have opted out; in view of the fact that seven of the nine psychiatrists at Toronto Women's College Hospital have opted out; in view of the fact that many other hospitals we contacted in the past week would not, in fact, provide information on the number of opted-out specialists on their staff; will the minister now make available, for each specialty and for each community in the province, the number of doctors who opted out and the number who have remained in the plan?

Will he also say whether he really believes that the amount of opting out by specialists is not, in fact, a threat to the universality of health care in this province?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I have to go back to this fact: If members look at the history of the health plan as we know it in Ontario, I would point out that every one of the 10 provinces has a slightly different plan one way or another—

Mr. Swart: Not quite as bad as this.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh Mel, you know better.

Mr. McClellan: What about Quebec?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell:—a number of them involving additional billing options; including Saskatchewan, that allows patient streaming of any patient—any patient on any service.

Mr. Martel: Three per cent.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Patient streaming and extra billing.

Mr. McClellan: Three per cent, and they are worried about it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: You are trying to have it both ways.

Mr. Warner: You don't care about Québec.

Mr. McClellan: You couldn't care less.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Now I suspect, Mr. Speaker, if you look at any situation over the last number of years in any of the teaching hospitals, in those instances where we have groups of specialists opted out you will find an experience similar to the one we found when we inquired about Toronto Western. In that case a very high percentage of claims had, in fact, been billed on an opted-in basis. That is because for years they have had the right in the teaching hospitals to have billing groups. That right, as members know, was extended to all the clinical departments—

Mr. McClellan: Why don't you just give us the information?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell:—of the non-teaching hospitals earlier this year as a means of ensuring options for the patients.

I will take the member's other question under advisement and give him an answer in a few days.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Let me take a specific instance and then ask the minister if he can defend this.

At York-Finch Hospital all four dental surgeons on the staff have opted out of OHIP. Is the minister not aware of the particular case of a 76-year-old pensioner at that hospital, a man named Mr. Nick Laurella, of very modest means, who had a lung removed in June? He is now facing a bill for $167.50, in addition to the $433.50 paid by OHIP. His doctor has refused to listen to repeated protests by Mr. Laurella's family that they cannot pay and could they please be excused? Does this kind of charge not constitute a deterrent to vitally needed health care; and how on earth can the minister tolerate a pensioner or any other citizen in the province of Ontario being put into this kind of situation?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I have some difficulty in acknowledging that it is a deterrent when in fact the individual got the service. He got the service.

Interjections.

Mr. Warner: The system is crumbling around you and you're doing nothing about it.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The second point is: I would want to be sure that in fact it was discussed with the patient beforehand and that he agreed. What I am saying is I feel that it is a generally accepted principle—

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I said I would want to know whether it was discussed with him beforehand, because it is a generally accepted principle, certainly by the government and by the profession, that it should be discussed with the patient beforehand except in those cases which we have discussed several times already today where you cannot discuss it with him, and that they should agree to it; that they then should have the option to find a doctor who will do it on an opted-in basis. That is the important point.

Interjections.

Mr. Roy: Supplementary: Trying to understand the ministry's reasoning, and accepting the fact that as part of the opting out if the patient has a choice then the process can work—if your general practitioner has opted out you can go down the street to somebody else, Mr. Speaker—but can the minister explain, getting back to my leader's question, what choice a patient has when he is sent to one of the hospitals mentioned and all the anaesthetists are opted out? When he is in bed in that hospital or wheeled over to the operating room, at what point is he given a choice? Can the minister explain to us here, does he feel that is a choice once the patient is in the hospital? And secondly, does he expect a patient in those circumstances to just get up, pack his bags, leave and go someplace else? Does the minister consider that to be accessibility and universality?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, in that particular case the evidence would seem to indicate that—to continue that review—70 per cent of the claims are on an opted-in basis; the system has been working as it is supposed to work, in general. Maybe we will find specific ones where it hasn't.

Mr. Roy: You have been given an example where it hasn't.

Mr. Cassidy: You are hiding behind your averages.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The way we expect it to work is that it would be discussed with the patient beforehand and if the patient didn't agree that he could then seek out another physician—

Mr. Martel: Yes, get out of his bed and find another doctor.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: No, that is not what I am saying—on staff to do it on an opted-in basis.

An hon. member: What about emergencies?

Mr. Makarchuk: He is put in there by another doctor.

Mr. Rotenberg: Why don't you wait for the answer?

Mr. Warner: The system is crumbling and you know it. It is falling apart.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The evidence would seem to indicate that it is working that way.

Mr. Breaugh: I would like to ask the minister in this regard: In a telephone survey in recent days we called hospitals and the hospital would not tell us whether certain specialists had opted in or opted out. How is a patient supposed to know whether he can receive that service by an opted-in physician when the hospital doesn't tell the patient whether they are in or out, and in some cases says they don't know? How is the patient supposed to find out?

Mr. McClellan: Not from the Minister of Health, they won't.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I think, first of all, it has been widely known—and I will acknowledge that perhaps more needs to be done to make sure that it is even more widely known—that the patient does have the option, that they can choose.

An hon. member: How can they choose when they don't know?

Mr. Makarchuk: It is another doctor who sends him to the hospital.

Mr. Rotenberg: Why don't you wait for the answer? Stop yelling over there. Just wait for the answer.

Mr. Makarchuk: He doesn't have any answers.

Mr. Cassidy: Because it is outrageous, that's why.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I can only point to the record of the health system these number of years. There is no evidence whatsoever—none whatsoever—that people have in fact been deterred from necessary medical care by our system.

Mr. Martel: Answer the question. They won't give you the list.

Mr. Cassidy: The minister says there is no evidence. I just want to bring to his attention the fact—

Mr. Speaker: This is your second question.

Mr. Cassidy: This is my second question, Mr. Speaker—that in the case I just brought to his attention, Mr. Laurella, this 76-year-old fellow was Italian-speaking, there was no advance notice given to him or his family. When the family, both verbally and then in writing, made the request to the physician to say, "Look, we can't afford it"—

Mr. Rotenberg: What's the question?

Mr. Cassidy:—the physician simply insisted on continuing with his demands for $167.50, despite the inability of either the patient or the family to pay.

[3:00]

Mr. Speaker: No question yet.

Mr. Cassidy: In view of the minister's repeated insistence today that doctors should inform patients in advance if they are going to charge more than the OHIP rate, I would like to ask the minister whether he is aware that section 26 of regulation 577/75 of the Health Disciplines Act provides for disciplinary action against physicians who fail to notify patients in advance if they intend to charge more than the Ontario Medical Association fee schedule, but the regulation is in fact silent in insisting that a doctor tell a patient he intends to charge a surcharge over the OHIP fee, even though that surcharge is now averaging around 42 per cent?

I would like to ask the minister if he will undertake now, here in this House, to change the regulations in order to ensure that patients of opted-out physicians are, in fact, informed in advance if their doctor has opted out and intends to charge more than the OHIP fee, and how much more?

Mr. Swart: Give that commitment.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I can tell members that that is, in fact, what we have under consideration as part of the discussions with the OMA on the fee-negotiating process. That is the position we are taking.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Given the failure of the minister to give the commitment now—if he is really committed to defending medicare he should have made that commitment here in this House, this has been an issue long enough for him to have made his mind up by now.

Interjections.

Mr. Cassidy: Since the minister says that the consumers of health should be informed, that an informed consumer is a good consumer, is he prepared to ensure that the consumers of health can at least find a physician who is practising under OHIP? Will he do that by publishing, on a regular basis, for each community in the province, a list of those physicians who are in and those who are out of OHIP?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: It is my understanding that it would, in fact, be a violation of the Health Insurance Act—

Mr. Swart: Change it.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —to publish physicians' names. What is more, I think that, again based on the experience with the plan, ensuring the public's knowledge of their rights, ensuring that this principle is upheld, will in fact serve the public interest best.

Mr. Warner: You are destroying this system we fought so hard for.

Mr. S. Smith: As the minister goes about permitting these little erosions of the principle of universality—

Mr. Swart: Little?

Mr. Warner: The system is being destroyed.

Mr. S. Smith: —to the point of complete dismantling, is he also, in fact, prepared to countenance the matter we saw discussed in a newspaper today? That is the question of insurance companies being permitted to insure for the amounts above the OHIP rates? Does he not realize that if he permits this to happen, he could succeed in completely dismantling the system and turning back the clock to where he seems to want to go; that is to when doctors said who must pay and who must not pay?

Mr. Warner: That is the next step.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I should say I am surprised at the honourable member, but maybe I'm not. He is now engaging in the same kind of hyperbole we have been hearing from that other corner of the House, for these many weeks. There is no evidence, there is no reason of any kind, to believe that our health plan is in any way being dismantled—

Mr. Swart: That is the biggest joke I have heard in the House.

Mr. Roy: How can you say that?

Mr. Warner: The system is being destroyed and you know it.

Mr. Cooke: You are living in a dream world, Dennis.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —or that it is in any way in violation of the principles of the Health Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act. In fact, there is all kinds of evidence to suggest that it is very much in conformity. Any actions taken by this government have been to maintain the integrity of the health care system. And that includes, by the way, dealing openly and frankly with the medical profession; not trying to engage in doctor-bashing, not trying to use some kind of bludgeon; but rather to get at the real problem—

Mr. M. Davidson: Something you haven't been doing.

Mr. Swart: What is the problem?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —namely, the way we arrive at the fee schedules and the question of doctors' concern about the bureaucratic procedures of the health insurance plan. That's how you solve problems, by dealing openly with them.

Mr. S. Smith: Are you going to allow co-insurance?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: No, we are not considering allowing co-insurance.

DISCRIMINATION BY POLICE

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Solicitor General although I would be delighted to have the comments of the Attorney General at the same time.

In view of the recent statements by police officers concerning apparent discrimination against Jews, blacks and homosexuals in our society, has the Solicitor General any comments to make? Has he made any investigation of these facts as they have appeared?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I assume, Mr. Speaker, the member for St. George is referring to a recent publication of the Metropolitan Toronto Police Association called News and Views. I have discussed the article with the senior members of the Metropolitan Toronto police force and very recently with the president of the Metropolitan Toronto Police Association, who has indicated to me that he regrets very much that the article was published. As a matter of fact, I understand that the president of the police association will be having a press conference tomorrow to indicate his regret for the publication of the articles to which the honourable member refers.

I have also written a letter to the editor of that publication indicating my concern about the publication and I should be pleased to supply the honourable member with a copy of that letter.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, do I take it then that the Solicitor General views such statements by those who are engaged in the administration of the justice system of the province as being somewhat different from private statements of a similar nature made by private citizens?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Yes, I do, Mr. Speaker, and I pointed out to the editor of that publication that whether they necessarily always accept this fact or not, I think that the public regard the police as police officers 24 hours of the day. It is really impossible from a practical standpoint to separate their responsibilities as police officers and as private citizens, and although they may think that they are simply expressing their views as private citizens, invariably those views are going to be regarded as expressions of police officers and therefore I do regard them in a different position.

Mr. Bounsall: Will the minister, in his capacity as Solicitor General, suggest to the police forces across Ontario that in the annual education sessions which most of them undertake they include in that education session one of the very good courses run by the Human Rights Commission, whenever they are asked to do so, as a means of ensuring that these problems mentioned do not continue?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I am quite satisfied, Mr. Speaker, at the present time that the police forces across the province are aware of this problem and through education and through any other means available are attempting to avoid this type of incident, any expressions of bigotry or intolerance, and that is a problem about which all police forces are aware at the present time.

BRANTFORD HOSPITALS

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Health.

Now the minister has had an opportunity to talk to the Brant County Health Council, has received a petition with 20,000 names on it—I'm sure he has even had a suggestion from the Premier—can the minister tell the House whether he is prepared to accept the idea that both hospitals in Brantford, the St. Joseph's Hospital and Brantford General Hospital, will continue to be active treatment facilities?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I want to first of all read to you a press release which came from the honourable member's office this morning, and it is part of the answer to this. It said approximately 400 people will be demonstrating—I think it was 120—in front of the Legislature to protest the attempt of the government to close St. Joseph's Hospital in Brantford.

Mr. Speaker, with respect, that is totally misleading because in point of fact there is no intent, no desire at all—

Mr. Warner: You changed your mind.

Mr. Swart: You are going to leave it open.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —to see St. Joseph's Hospital in Brantford—or any other hospital for that matter—close.

Mr. M. Davidson: What are you going to do in Penetanguishene, Dennis?

Mr. Cooke: You are just going to starve them.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: We had a very good meeting with representatives of the health council, and at a subsequent meeting we had a very good discussion with about 20 or 30 people, I would say, from Brantford and area, from the member's constituency and that of the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon).

The health council, by the way, has not officially received or considered any report yet from the rationalization committee which was struck about a year ago. The committee was under the former chairman of the health council, with representatives of the board, administration, and medical staff of each of the hospitals. They have not finished their work yet—

Mr. Swart: But you'll close it anyway.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —and therefore there's no report before the health council to make a recommendation.

Mr. Makarchuk: Of course there's a report.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: No. With respect, Mr. Speaker, my information is that the rationalization committee has not finalized their work—

Mr. Makarchuk: It was presented two weeks ago on Wednesday.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: What the honourable member is referring to, I believe, is the present state of the consideration of the rationalization committee, which they discussed with the public, which they have discussed at various meetings—

Mr. Swart: You call that a report?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —but which they have not finalized, and which they have not recommended to the health council.

We do believe in decentralized planning, and we do believe the rationalization committee and the health council should have the time—

Mr. Swart: You believe in closing hospitals.

Mr. Cassidy: You have been using health councils as a smokescreen.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —to hear the representations, to consider the alternatives, and to make some conclusions. The conclusions will be based on how to maintain the quality of health care within the standards that apply.

I indicated to the health council I am prepared to see, as we have done elsewhere, at the conclusion of their work the savings that will be generated from the rationalization applied against deficits that will be built up in the interim. What is more, I indicated in a letter I gave them when they left that we are prepared, at the point where the hospitals and the health council finalize an agreement on the rationalization, to reinstate up to $390,000 into the hospital budget for 1979-80, plus recovering—which is consistent with our financial incentive policies—any additional deficits from future savings generated by the rationalization.

Mr. Makarchuk: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: The nurses say that in the past, sufficient material resources were available for sisters directing St. Joseph's Hospital as a fully-accredited, active-treatment hospital, and the present economic climate will not permit the continuation of this fine service much longer. In effect, what they're saying, contrary to what the minister has said, is that the hospital will stop being an active treatment facility.

The point of my supplementary is how much time does the Brant County Health Council have to come in with a new proposal? And is this proposal going to contain the decision to keep both hospitals open as active treatment facilities?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: First of all, the health council has not made a recommendation. My information is they haven't even had a recommendation from the rationalization committee. They will eventually make a recommendation to me, which will be based on two things: first of all, what is the most appropriate way for that community to arrive at the four active treatment beds per thousand population; and what is the most appropriate way to meet the chronic and rehabilitation bed needs of that community.

I have made no foregone conclusions—

Mr. Makarchuk: How much time will you give them?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I've made no foregone conclusions of what the recommendation will be. It will be a recommendation which is in the best interest of that community.

Mr. Makarchuk: How much time are you giving them?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I haven't put a time on it. What I've indicated—to repeat for the member's benefit—is that at the point of an agreement up to $390,000 will go back into the budget; and any additional deficit above that will be recovered, as would any capital costs associated with rationalization, from savings resulting from rationalization.

Mr. Nixon: Since the overall cut is estimated to be about $1.5 million, and the minister has indicated that close to $400,000 would be allocated—

Mr. McClellan: You are going down, Dennis, slowly but surely.

Mr. Nixon: —to give the community more time to consider its alternatives, might we and the people of Brantford assume they have approximately three months to further consider the situation before the cuts announced by the minister in January will come into effect at the present stance?

[3:15]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I didn't put a time limit on it, but I think everyone involved would want to do it in a timely fashion, so that the matter does not drag on indefinitely. I would hope it could be done in the next few months, so that we can get on with whatever is their ultimate recommendation, or set of recommendations, for the rationalization of services in that community, as we are doing throughout Ontario.

CHEST DISEASE CASES

Mr. Pope: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Labour and Manpower. It arises from a letter addressed to myself from Dr. Vingilis of the industrial chest disease service of the Ministry of Labour. Dr. Vingilis has said: "There is no excess of lung cancers in Ontario gold miners in comparison with the population at large."

Mr. Laughren: Really? He's a Tory.

Mr. Pope: My question is how can Dr. Vingilis make that kind of an absolute statement in the light of a report prepared in December 1978—that's approximately a month before this letter was sent to me—which is entitled Cancer Mortality in Selected Northern Ontario Mining Communities, including Timmins, Kirkland Lake, Elliot Lake and Kapuskasing, and which establishes exactly that there is an excess of lung cancers in Ontario gold miners in comparison with the population at large?

Will the minister immediately engage on an urgent priority basis through his industrial diseases branch to determine whether this is a valid report and to determine whether or not there is additional information that can be made available? And will he act immediately to assure the miners of northern Ontario and their families that there is, in effect, no problem or take steps to remedy the problems?

Secondly, in the light of Dr. Vingilis' statement—

Mr. Bradley: Cross the floor.

Mr. Ruston: Come on over here.

Mr. Pope:—that diesel fumes in high concentrations are known to cause chronic bronchitis, will the minister review every decision the Ontario Workmen's Compensation Board has made concerning railroad workers who are suffering from chronic bronchitis—

Mr. Germa: Speech.

Mr. Pope:—and try to ascertain whether or not they have been fairly dealt with in light of this recent conclusion?

Mr. Breithaupt: You will be a parliamentary assistant next time.

Mr. Mackenzie: He'd make that kind of minister.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, I was going to ask the member to repeat the question, but I think I won't.

Mr. Bradley: No wonder you could upset that guy.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I would be glad to have the report the member has referred to reviewed by the industrial chest disease service, and I will assure the member I will look into the other matter as well and report to the House.

Mr. Renwick: He's the first Tory backbencher to express an interest in the topic.

Mr. Nixon: Some other people are going to look into it too.

Mr. Martel: Supplementary: While the minister is looking at the bronchial problem, could he look into a report a number of years ago which indicated that 22.5 per cent of the smelter workers in Sudbury suffered a bronchial problem? In view of the fact that we have been trying for about four years to get this government to recognize that as a compensable condition, would he make a decision as to whether those workers in the smelter are also entitled to benefits? This is far in excess of the provincial average.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I'll be glad to look into that matter as well.

NIAGARA RIVER POLLUTION

Mr. Kerrio: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of the Environment. Is the minister aware of a statement made on water quality by the International Joint Commission that chemical dumps on both sides of the border must be found and clean-up must become a top priority by both countries? In view of that statement, I would also ask if he is aware of the fact the residents of Niagara-on-the-Lake, St. Catharines and Virgil have circulated a petition to be given to the New York state environment department protesting the dumping of additional chemical waste by a chemical dump company in the lower Niagara River? Is the minister leaving the responsibility up to the residents of the area, or is he, as the minister, going to assume a responsible position with the US authorities to make certain no more dumping of chemicals is going to go into the Niagara River until the residents on both sides of the border are guaranteed safe water?

Mr. Laughren: That's free enterprise. I'm surprised the member would intervene.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, I guess it was yesterday morning the member for—I'd better check the location—Lincoln, was it?

Mr. Martel: Yesterday afternoon.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Brock. Sorry about that.

Mr. Martel: I knew you'd have trouble with that.

Mr. Breithaupt: You made a real impression.

Mr. S. Smith: There was a time you were considered important in the cabinet.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: The member for Brock gave me a call in the great riding of Oxford—I don't forget the name of that one—and we had quite a long discussion on the very issue. It's my understanding that the member—and I support him fully on it—is asking for a public hearing. I think he is doing so knowing that this is the approach that we in Ontario are now taking on these items. Having set the example for the United States in this regard, I think they would do well to follow our example and have public hearings on these items.

Yes, I am well aware of the statement by the International Joint Commission. Yes, I am well aware that at the moment by far the vast majority of those who are polluting our waters with chemical toxic wastes are from the other side of the border.

No, we will not sit idly by. We are very aggressively monitoring all of the water supplies. Let me be very, very positive about that.

Mr. Martel: You used to walk across the water, George.

Mr. Warner: You are watching vigorously.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: There is absolutely no danger to the present water supply of those municipalities.

I share the concern the member for Brock (Mr. Welch) expressed to me very forcibly about the future.

An hon. member: Does that mean you are going for a swim?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: We will remain concerned. But until it is proven otherwise—and I think the only way you could prove it otherwise is to seek tests that would indicate there is a problem and at the moment there is not one—there is no problem with the water supply in your riding, or indeed in Brock.

Mr. Warner: You will wait until we can have foot races across the river.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: We feel very confident that the water supply is in a very safe condition right now. We will monitor it. We have stepped up our monitoring of it and we will do everything possible. I hope the member for Niagara Falls will join the member for Brock and myself in saying we are sure today the water is all right. If there is any change in the tests the member will be the first to know—the people will be the first to know.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Any time you want a public hearing.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: It is important that in the other jurisdiction over which we have no direct control we will not remain silent. I only hope they take the suggestion of the member for Brock and have a public hearing—have it out in the open so we will all know.

Mr. Kerrio: I just want to bring something to the minister's attention.

Mr. Speaker: By way of a question, hopefully.

Mr. Kerrio: Yes, thank you; I will bring the supplementary immediately.

I wonder if the minister is aware of the fact that both the Love Canal and the Bloody Run Creek are connected to that international waterway? Is he aware that one is in the upper Niagara River above the falls and the other is in the lower river? I hope he will not continue to make the statement that we will not have a Love Canal incident here, because it is connected with our waterways. I want to make that point very clear.

Also, I would ask if the minister is aware that if this dump site goes in in Lewiston, New York, they are contemplating moving some of the chemical waste over the Penn Central Railway in southern Ontario? I wonder if he would look into the matter to be certain that if any of these dangerous chemicals are going over the rails to that disposal site, he might be the first to know about it and therefore monitor it very diligently.

Mr. Martel: He is going to walk alongside the train.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think that the legislation I will be introducing in a matter of minutes has a great deal to say about the transportation of those dangerous chemicals. People from the industry have indicated to me it is pretty tough legislation because they will be held responsible. That kind of action on our part has alerted them.

Mr. S. Smith: The spiller must pay.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Well, indeed they have. It is so difficult not to react to the interjections, Mr. Speaker, but the material that will be moved by the transporter and/or the industry that owns it is their responsibility. I know now from the reaction of both the transporter and the industry that they are very concerned on the safe transportation of the material.

Mr. Nixon: Shades of George Kerr.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: While I may not know in advance it is being moved, indeed, they know in advance it is their liability, their responsibility and that is very clear in this legislation the member will see today. I think that is a very important piece of legislation, to answer the question.

HEALTH INSURANCE

Mr. Renwick: I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. It relates to the private insurance industry and the Ontario Health Insurance Plan and the consequences of the doctors opting out.

As the continuance of the Ontario Health Insurance Plan as the sole insurance carrier under the Health Insurance Act, 1972, is the guts of our health care system, will the minister tell the House whether private insurers can now re-enter this field to insure the public against excess doctors' fees over and above the fees permitted under the Ontario Health Insurance Plan, having regard to section 19(1) of that act, which reads in substance as follows: "Every contract of insurance for the payment of any part of the cost of any insured services performed in Ontario for any insured person under this act is void and of no effect"—and these are the words that bother me—"insofar as it makes provision for insuring against the costs payable by the plan, and no person shall enter into or renew such a contract"?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Just a few moments ago, my colleague, the Minister of Health, replied "No." Since obviously for more than a decade there has been no co-insurance, I really fail to understand the concern of the member over those words.

Mr. Renwick: By way of a supplementary—and this is precisely why I asked the question—that subsection of the act states that there can be no insurance insofar as it makes provision for insuring against the costs payable by the plan. My supplementary question is: are those words not sufficient as at the present time to permit the private insurers to come in to insure the excess costs being incurred?

Mr. Breithaupt: Beyond that.

Mr. Renwick: If the answer to my question is that they are not an open gate for the private insurance industry to re-enter the field, will the minister consult with his colleague, the Minister of Health, and with the ubiquitous Attorney General of Ontario and let us have an opinion of the law officers of the crown as to whether or not that permits at this time private insurers to come in on the Ontario Health Insurance Plan and add to the destruction of that plan, which is taking place now?

Hon. Mr. Drea: First of all, I can answer the bulk of that supplementary question by saying, "No, not as long as I am the minister." Secondly, if the member wants an opinion from the chief law officer of the crown, why didn't he have the courtesy to ask the Attorney General? If the member wants me to get it for him I'll be delighted to get it for him.

Mr. Martel: He didn't have the courtesy to be here.

HOSPITAL BED ALLOCATIONS

Mr. Hennessy: My question is to the Minister of Health. In view of the repeated requests from the city of Thunder Bay, the local hospital boards and myself for a meeting with the Minister of Health to discuss the hospital bed situation in the city of Thunder Bay, has the minister set a date for such a meeting?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As I recall, there is a meeting being arranged for April 3, I believe, with a group representing the city, the health council and the various hospitals.

Mr. Speaker: The time for oral questions has expired.

MOTIONS

COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that commencing Thursday, March 29, the House may resolve itself into a committee of supply.

Motion agreed to.

STANDING GENERAL GOVERNMENT COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that the standing general government committee be authorized to meet this afternoon and this evening concurrently with the House, and on Wednesday, March 28.

Motion agreed to.

STANDING ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that the standing administration of justice committee be authorized to meet on the morning of Wednesday, March 28.

Motion agreed to.

[3:30]

STANDING STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS AND MEMBERS SERVICES COMMITTEES

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that the statutory instruments committee and the members' services committee be authorized to meet on the morning of Thursday, March 29.

Motion agreed to.

STANDING SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that the standing social development committee be authorized to meet concurrently with the House this afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, might I use this opportunity to table the answers to questions 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 61, 62, 63, 64, 86, 89, 90 and 92, and the interim answers to questions 8 to 60 inclusive, 65 to 85 inclusive, 87, 88 and 91, standing on the Notice Paper. (See appendix, page 300.)

MEMBER'S BOOK OF POETRY

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I regret that the member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor) is not here in the House at this moment. It is very seldom that we have actual tangible evidence that one of the members of this chamber is literate; many people have had doubts on that particular question. I want to assure you, Mr. Speaker, and all members of the House that the member for Lakeshore is very literate and that today, in fact, he has published the outpourings of seven or eight years of poetic endeavour—endeavour which I believe puts him in a class with such famous commentators, wits and reviewers of our time as Pope, Dryden and Ezra Pound.

The tome is known as The Psychotic Personality of Our Time. I wish to read one short introductory portion of it which I think sums up the thrust of the whole thing in reflecting this chamber. If I can quote Lawlor quoting Rilke's Second Elegy: "Jeder Engel is Schrecklich"—"Every angel is terrible." And if I can quote Lawlor on this place, he begins his first canto in this tome: "The times are mad."

I have had an offer from the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick), who was anxious to avoid any appearance of conflict of interest from having the member for Lakeshore peddling his own tome; therefore, the member for Riverdale will be happy to take orders for this particular work. At $10 a copy, the member for Lakeshore will be happy to sign them.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, having referred to the very distinguished member for Lakeshore as the poet laureate of this House on more than one occasion and having known him perhaps for more years than the present leader of the New Democratic Party, I would like to express my real congratulations to him. I guess it's a more creative effort than one that I have been told about emanating from a former caucus member of his. When I say more creative, it probably will add more to the literary style of this province than Morton Shulman's book will to the history of this province. I am not sure of that, but I am told that is the case.

I think it is only fair, as well, to point out to our very distinguished member that while I have no objection at all in paying $10 for access to this book—and I am quite prepared to speak to the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson) about having it on circulars 14, 15 and 16; I know that the school students of this province are avidly awaiting the introduction of this text in the compulsory English courses that may or may not exist—I think it is only appropriate, in that he is of this very generous nature, that he look across the House—and even to his right, if he can—and come to the conclusion that he should sign copies for all members of the House at a nominal fee of zero. We would all be deeply appreciative of this gift. There would be no conflict. We would be delighted to have it. We would even promise to read it as bedtime reading, which would be much better than most of the things that the leader of the New Democratic Party reads in any event. But I would be quite prepared to accept a free copy.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, if I also may be permitted a word of congratulation, I presume that a text with such a title as The Psychotic Personality of Our Time might be one of autobiography. Indeed, it might be one of dedication to his present or future leader. Of course, it could also be that it was written because of his caucus colleagues or in spite of them; I am not sure which.

In any event, we welcome this literary outpouring. I presume that for those members who cannot obtain a copy in the next few months, no doubt when Dr. Shulman's book receives greater prominence, perhaps in the future we could all get them as a pair at Coles for about $3.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, as business agent, I just did not want any misunderstanding. The figure of $10 is for the paperback. For the hardback book, which is in limited edition, the price is—well, it is almost going for auction now; of course, with the member's signature on the flyleaf of the book, I doubt if any member of this House could afford to buy such a copy, but I am willing to accept any offers at all for his work.

Mr. Sargent: He's trying to beat Maggie Trudeau.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, there is a lot of competition abroad in the publishing field these days. I do not know how anyone reads anything; there is so much to do.

However, I would warn the Premier that, by heavens, before he says very much about it, he had better read it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That's why I am not paying for it first.

Mr. Lawlor: He will remember the famous colloquy of the critic who spoke to Robert Browning about these things. Robert said: "Oh, yes, there was a time when I and God understood what it was all about. Now only God knows." I take that position almost from the time of its birth.

Writing poetry—I suppose writing anything—is a form of self-exposure; it may be indecent exposure, although I suppose it is not arrestable quite yet.

As far as my friend over here is concerned, he is included, let me assure him.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Parrott moved first reading of Bill 24, An Act to amend the Environmental Protection Act, 1971.

Motion agreed to.

LABOUR RELATIONS AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Elgie moved first reading of Bill 25, An Act to amend the Labour Relations Act.

Motion agreed to.

HURONIA DISTRICT HOSPITAL ACT

Mr. G. E. Smith moved first reading of Bill Pr4, An Act respecting the financing of the Huronia District Hospital.

Motion agreed to.

VILLAGE OF COOKSTOWN ACT

Mr. G. E. Smith, on behalf of Mr. G. Taylor, moved first reading of Bill Pr6, An Act respecting the Village of Cookstown.

Motion agreed to.

CONSUMER PROTECTION AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. B. Newman moved first reading of Bill 26, An Act to amend the Consumer Protection Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to require that every product offered for sale by a retailer that is marked with the universal product code must also be clearly marked with its individual purchase price.

PORTABLE FIRE EXTINGUISHERS SAFETY ACT

Mr. Stong moved first reading of Bill 27, An Act to regulate the Manufacture, Sale and Servicing of Portable Fire Extinguishers.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Stong: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill is to protect the public from the fire hazard created by inadequately manufactured and serviced fire extinguishers.

INNOCENT PERSONS PROTECTION ACT

Mr. Stong moved first reading of Bill 28, An Act to protect the Reputation of Innocent Persons from Untimely Publicity.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Stong: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill is to prohibit publication of the name of or otherwise reveal the personal identity of persons charged with offences until such time as a court begins to hear evidence in the case or the person enters a plea of guilty to the offence.

MOTION TO SUSPEND NORMAL BUSINESS

Mr. Foulds moved under section 34 of the standing orders, that the ordinary business of the House be set aside to discuss a matter of urgent public importance, namely, the failure of the Minister of Health to provide adequate funding for hospitals throughout the province, as evidenced in northern Ontario by Thunder Bay, Kirkland Lake and other small communities; in Metropolitan Toronto by Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital; and elsewhere in southern Ontario by Brantford and Windsor; so that the reduction in hospital facilities and services is causing severe hardships to citizens of this province and is seriously threatening the level of health care the people of Ontario have a right to expect.

[3:45]

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member has up to five minutes to explain why he feels this is of urgent public importance.

Mr. Foulds: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe the matter dealt with in the resolution is a matter of urgent public importance for the following reasons:

One, my attention was first focused on the issue by the effects of the active-treatment bed allocation method. It was devised by the Ministry of Health and sets the new and arbitrary bed ratios at 4.5 per 1,000 of population in northern Ontario and 4.0 in southern Ontario, to be reduced further to 4.0 in northern Ontario and 3.5 in southern Ontario by 1981. Although that came to my attention because of the devastating effects it was having in Thunder Bay and northwestern Ontario, I believe the evidence is mounting throughout the province in places such as Etobicoke, Windsor, Brantford and throughout northeastern Ontario that it is a province-wide phenomenon. It is just that we are now seeing the first evidence of it most strongly in the communities mentioned in the resolution.

Two: the first phase of the ministry's plan goes into effect just four days from now, April 1, so the matter is urgent if we are as a Legislature to express our opinions and try to persuade the ministry they are set on a wrong course of action.

Three: we have no other avenue for discussing this most serious problem at the present time. The matter deserves debate and discussion, not merely questions that can be fobbed off by ministers during question period. For example, the Ministry of Health estimates will not come up for debate until after April 1; in fact, they are, in my understanding, slated to come somewhat down the road of legislative consideration.

Also, it is my understanding there is no opportunity for debate in the throne speech debate this week, and the throne debate itself does not focus sufficiently on an issue of this importance and magnitude throughout the province.

Four: this is the first opportunity since the House has resumed after the March break to discuss a matter of substance. Surely, the health of the populace must be one of our top priority considerations in this Legislature.

As I understand it, on the previous occasion when a matter of health was brought up for emergency debate—the Chesley Hospital debate in November 1975—the Speaker ruled against such a motion that was confined to one situation. The House expressed its will otherwise so the debate proceeded because it was used as an example of the plan in 1975 which would decrease the effectiveness of the delivery of health care to the people of Ontario.

Five—and I just want to use this as an example—in my own area the matter has been brought to my attention very forcefully. I have received over 1,000 letters on the topic in the last 10 days to two weeks. There has literally been a news story every second day in the local media, which are being contacted by individuals. There has been concern expressed by city council and several representations to city council by McKellar General Hospital, St. Joseph's General Hospital, the senior citizen groups, the district health council and many individuals.

I note the efforts of my friend, the member for Fort William (Mr. Hennessy), who has been trying to line up a meeting between responsible civic officials and the Minister of Health and/or some of his colleagues to discuss this urgent matter.

I am sure when this debate proceeds, my colleagues from Brantford, Oshawa, Windsor, and Algoma will be able to present ample evidence of the urgency of this motion as it affects many areas of the province.

To sum up, Mr. Speaker, the hospital bed cutbacks, the implementation of the bed ratio rates, is only four days away. This Legislative Assembly has the final authority and has not had an opportunity to discuss this urgent matter until now. The regular avenues of debate are not open to us.

Three, the House expressed its will with regard to the Chesley debate on November 20, 1975.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the matter of health care is one that has been badly handled by the government. A government cannot cut back on active treatment beds the way it has until alternative services are in place and we shall make those arguments when the debate proceeds, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, my colleagues join me in urging you to accept the resolution and recognize that the matter put before us in the resolution is one of urgent and public importance. It has already been put to you, sir, that the effective date of April 1 is just two or three days away as far as the application of the budget cuts are concerned.

One matter that sometimes is forgotten is that in those areas where the budget cuts are going to persist—I do not know whether there are any or not—the layoffs, if they have not already been undertaken, are going to have to be paid for from some source. I would suggest to you, sir, it will be the responsibility of this Legislature to find those funds.

There will be an opportunity, I trust, sir, having a lot of confidence in your good judgement, to discuss the specific matters later this afternoon, but I should tell you that when my colleagues examined the resolution, notice of which was given to us, we wanted to indicate that other communities not listed in the resolution certainly should have their problems aired and discussed and put before the Minister of Health here. I refer to the hospital cutbacks which are going to cause a serious depreciation in health care facilities in Fort Frances, in Goderich, in Wingham, in the Four Counties Hospital at Newbury, and of course I, sir, want to bring your attention to the problems faced by the citizens in Brantford.

Frankly, I was a bit offended that the minister in a rather cavalier way indicated with some disparaging tone that only a handful of people appeared in front of the Legislature today to argue against his cutbacks of the services in our own community. I should tell you, sir, that in fact it was a very important delegation indeed, well versed in the problems that we have. As a further indication the policy seems to be still fluid, the minister in his comments in question period today indicated there was going to be the flexibility of about $400,000 in the situation in Brantford itself.

Unless we have a chance to put our arguments before the minister and to hear his responses in this connection, I would put to you, sir, that the citizens in our various communities, directly and deeply concerned with this matter, will otherwise not have an opportunity for the argument to be put by their elected representatives.

I end my comments, sir, by urging you once again to indicate that in your good judgement this matter would be properly before the House this afternoon for special debate.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I would go along with the comments made earlier about the value of the discussion this afternoon of the various concerns with regard to hospitals. May I say, sir, in answer to the comments of my friend from Brant-Oxford-Norfolk, I certainly meant no disparaging tone or intent at all with regard to the group with whom I met. In fact, this morning when I got into the office—I had been up to Penetang yesterday afternoon—I got the notice that the group was coming and I had been asked to meet with them. I readily agreed, although I couldn't meet at the time they suggested and they were good enough to come at a time when I was free.

As I said earlier, it was a very good meeting. I think it was a constructive meeting for me and I hope for that group as well. We shared information and views.

Mr. Speaker, this subject is one that consumes a great deal of my time every working day in dealing with the district health councils and hospitals, and has as long as I have been in this portfolio, since the evolution, the transitional phase of our health care system is one that has been going on for quite some time and will go on for quite some time into the future. As the health care needs of the province have changed, are changing, and will change, so too will the means of addressing those needs be changed so as to maintain the quality of the health care system.

I will, therefore, be glad to participate. The time limits of such a debate are such that all the points can't possibly be answered. Whenever my estimates do come on—I don't know when they're going to be, whether it's spring or fall, or whenever—or during question period, or for that matter privately with members, I'll be glad to discuss more than what can be covered in this limited time today.

I have arranged meetings with a number of members. My friend, the member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Gaunt), was in touch with me recently about the possibility of a meeting with some hospitals in his area to pursue the question of planning for additional chronic needs in that area to be met out of surplus active treatment facilities. I certainly readily agreed to that. In fact, I think we're meeting on April 6. I'm meeting on April 3 with a group from Thunder Bay, dealing with local people, to solve local problems. I'll look forward to the debate.

Mr. Speaker: It is the responsibility of the chair only to decide whether or not the motion was in order. Proper notice was given. The main criterion is that it be of sufficient and urgent public importance. Given the comments I have heard I would rule that it is, so it does meet the criteria of standing order 34. The only thing that remains is that the Speaker ask should the debate proceed?

Motion agreed to.

HOSPITAL BED ALLOCATIONS

Mr. Foulds: In my remarks I'm going to focus on the problems as they have arisen in northwestern Ontario and Thunder Bay. Even in the 10 minutes allotted, I'm sure I cannot do that justice, as you will recognize. However, my colleagues will—and perhaps you could—describe the areas outside of Thunder Bay. I certainly feel inadequate to the task.

First of all, I want to say that my colleagues will be outlining situations in other areas of the province. I want to outline very briefly some of the facts, as I understand them, as they affect Thunder Bay and northwestern Ontario.

I think the big problem that has arisen is that the reductions that were announced by the minister and the ministry in January have put a crimp in service because we have not had in place ahead of time adequate alternative care—adequate chronic care, adequate extended care. For all the will in the world, and for all the attempts, frankly—I know what the minister is going to interject. I'll let him use his time to do that—adequate chronic care and extended care have not been provided first.

For example, in Thunder Bay we have lost 200 beds since 1974 and now must reduce by an additional 27 beds by April 1, 1979, and by 114 beds by April 1, 1981. In small areas of northwestern Ontario there are reductions that I'll go into later on. There are over 100 chronic care patients and 100 extended care patients in Thunder Bay awaiting adequate placement. Until alternative facilities are in place, no active treatment beds should be cut.

We get to the question of how the ratio is established. I think we have to recognize that the ratio is largely an arbitrary one, that it is set up arbitrarily and can be changed arbitrarily. It is not dependent on any rationale.

For the remaining 77-bed reduction after April 1 that must be implemented in Thunder Bay by April 1981, we haven't had details of that and there is no way of knowing at the present time if a four per thousand ratio is the final goal. We have not had a clear statement of that by the minister. As alternative services increase, hopefully, the minister may lower that ratio further, but because it is an arbitrary standard, it can be changed arbitrarily.

At the present time, my understanding is that McKellar General Hospital will be reduced by 16 beds, Port Arthur General Hospital by 12 beds, and St. Joseph's General Hospital by nine beds.

[4:00]

In the last factor, the only real standard is how much the public will accept. Clearly, the provincial government believes we will accept it. I want to assure the House that until those alternative services are in place, we in the north will not accept it. It's simply not acceptable. The conditions that exist are simply not acceptable.

I prefer not to use waiting lists as a criterion because they are not a full criterion for judging how crowded or overcrowded facilities are. But when you have occupancy rates of over 85 per cent, when you have patients staying overnight in emergency beds while they await admission to a regular bed, and when you have intensive care beds often full or nearly full and you have an increased number of patients being admitted as emergency cases rather than as routine admissions, then there is a widespread sense of chaos and pressure throughout the hospital. Those are the rules of thumb I would like to speak to.

The chronic care situation seems to me to be the crucial one to relieve the difficulty with active treatment beds. Although St. Joseph's Heritage is slated to open before long with 100 nursing home beds, there is almost as much need for 100 chronic care beds. At the end of February I believe the waiting list was 102 for nursing home beds and 129 for chronic care beds. Even the recommendation by the district health council has not been approved that 24 of those beds—just 24 of those beds that are in St. Joseph's Heritage which the minister likes to talk about—be designated chronic care. The minister cannot say the alternative services have been provided in Thunder Bay.

I just want to quote very quickly and briefly from one of the submissions made to the city council, I guess it was by St. Joseph's hospital. They indicated that occupancy rates are 100 per cent in their medical and surgical units. They indicated that—and I'm quoting—"patients requiring in-patient medical care are subjected to staying in emergency for one or more nights. Emergency is not equipped or staffed to provide in-patient type of care and vital space is taken up to the detriment of bona fide emergency cases. This (the imposition of the present bed ratios) has resulted in a decline in the number of elective surgical bookings which can be made. Some patients are inconvenienced by multiple intrahospital transfers before they are appropriately accommodated. Physicians are coerced by the demand for beds into making decisions on discharge under pressure.

"We believe that some of these patients are justified in believing they have not experienced the quality of care they should have expected from what was thought to be one of the better health systems in the world. The impending sense of chaos was heightened recently when one night every intensive care unit bed in the city was filled. Each of these beds held a patient who genuinely required intensive care unit treatment. This apparently has never happened before.

"The precarious situations described are real and render impossible the systematic and orderly management of patient bookings and admissions. With our 100 per cent occupancy rate, the patient booked in the 'urgent' medical category has almost no chance of being admitted. They get better or are eventually admitted as emergencies. About 68 per cent of all patients are admitted as emergencies."

As I understand the situation, that is serious. Those are not my words. They emphasize, too, the necessity for long-term care.

They also emphasize the necessity, quite rightly, of the pilot project that has been suggested by the district health council, but that won't provide for an immediate solution to the problem. What they suggest is a delay of the implementation of bed and financial cuts until the study is complete and long-term requirements are met.

The general hospital, 221 beds total: It has an 85 per cent to 95 per cent occupancy rate, and an elective waiting list of three months. Medical patients are being admitted on an urgent basis only. They have not yet determined where the cuts will come but it will probably be 12 beds.

St. Joseph's hospital I have dealt with, but I wanted to add they have an elective waiting list of 206, urgent waiting list 55, five rheumatic, eight rehabilitation, 15 psychiatric, nine medical, 18 surgery; all admitting being done on an emergency basis first.

The McKellar hospital has 98 per cent occupancy rate for medical-surgical, 100 per cent in all other fields, patients staying overnight in emergency because of bed shortages. They will have to close 21 beds, even though they are slated to close 18, because they have to close one unit to make it economical.

I want to touch very briefly on the region because in Geraldton they are being reduced from 45 beds to 25, in Nipigon 33 to 20, in Red Lake 44 to 27. My colleagues will deal with some of those, but when the ultimate cut comes to 27 in Red Lake, the administrator there is being quoted that the occupancy rate at peak periods would be in excess of 117 per cent. That is just not possible.

I think we have to decide, for the regions outside, what is a hospital? When you are 190 miles away from your referral centre, no matter how small the community or given it is a reasonable size, surely there is need for the essentials of a hospital. You can't cut physiotherapists or an x-ray technician when you have only one. So that those communities like Nipigon, Geraldton and Fort Frances are in danger of losing doctors.

La Verendrye Hospital and Geraldton Hospital, for example have had no increase at all.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Foulds: If I just might conclude with one or two sentences, Mr. Speaker, I think the present cutbacks in the northwest are just not reasonable. We are not asking for the moon. We are saying, "No. No more cutbacks until you provide the alternative chronic care and the extended care first."

There is no lack of space in the north for those places. There is no lack of possibility of providing those under the present system.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Your time has expired.

Mr. Foulds: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to say, then, we in Thunder Bay and in northern Ontario do not—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Nixon: I want to take this brief opportunity to convey to the minister how much the people of Brantford and Brant county resent the application of centralized power to the provision of their hospital services. They are all aware of our participation in the overall medical insurance program but the minister must surely understand how the area has been, I suppose, sensitized by the attempt by his predecessor, the present Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller), to move into a small community in the area, Paris, and simply unilaterally close the Willett Hospital.

The courts found that the government didn't have the power to do that, Mr. Speaker, and the hospital still continues to give the excellent service for which it has established a well-earned and high reputation.

The minister, coming from his own more or less small community in the centre of Metropolitan Toronto, must surely realize the pride which people have in hospital facilities which they have, in fact, built themselves. With the initiative of the citizens of Brantford and more latterly the Sisters of St. Joseph, we have built there one of the finest hospital establishments probably anywhere in Canada, if not in the world. It has been done with our own initiative and, until about the last eight or 10 years, it has been done largely with our own money.

I see the minister is frowning and he may have a moment or two to tell us about it, but I simply recall to him, that at the time when the grants were coming from the Treasury of the province of Ontario and we were in an expansionary situation, there was no health council. The announcements of the grants were made by the Minister of Health's predecessors, going back to Matthew Dymond and before and, of course, that assistance was very much accepted. There was all sorts of gratitude expressed to the ministers of the day.

Now that we are in a situation with the budgetary problems associated with the mismanagement of the government, the minister has set up a health council which has to do the minister's dirty work in this connection. I tell you, Mr. Speaker, I resent this very much. The people in the community who serve on the health council are outstanding men and women. I feel that they have somehow been seduced by the minister into thinking that they are going to provide the views of the community regarding provision of the very best medical service.

Now, if they had been in operation a decade ago, when we were building these things, that would be fine. But, under these circumstances, these people have to make the tough decisions to apply the cutbacks which have been handed to them unilaterally by the minister. Perhaps they were handed to him unilaterally by the Treasurer or even the Premier. I'm not so sure that it happens quite as directly as it did when Darcy McKeough was holding the purse strings. But surely this is an area for real resentment as far as the people in our area are concerned. We have built these fine hospitals. We have two active treatment hospitals and I submit to you, Mr. Speaker—and the Minister of Health, I think, would agree—that we need them in the Brantford area.

Now the cutback of $1.5 million which goes into effect on April 1, a few days from now, is in the opinion of the medical authorities in Brant county going to degrade seriously the quality of the medical service in the community. There appears to be an attitude on the part of the ministerial officials that our doctors put too many people in the hospital and leave them there too long.

Now, I believe there is no evidence to indicate that the "cookie cutter" approach of the Minister of Health to the provision of hospital services should be applied to a community such as Brantford. That it is unfair and, I believe, it is bad judgement to apply this kind of uniformity to the communities right across the province.

As you know, we are not favoured with a university or community college campus in Brantford. But the statistics do show, and these are available to the minister as well, that the average age in the community is perhaps higher than in many other areas. We don't have the hundreds and in fact thousands of young people going to university as they do, say, in Guelph, or in other communities, who, fortunately, don't have to have hospital services. When they do, they normally return to their own home.

There are many factors which I'm sure the health council and the delegation from Brantford brought to the attention of the minister. I'll say I applaud the fact that the minister did see fit to discuss the matter with both delegations. I'm glad he has at least relented to the extent that the final decision is postponed for some months—three or four months in the Brantford area.

To tell you the truth, Mr. Speaker, I was not entirely clear as to the meaning of the minister's comment when he said there would be a flexibility of approximately $400,000 with regard to our own hospital situation. But the only meaning I can give it is that in fact the immediacy of the decision has been withdrawn.

You know, the minister—at least, spokesmen for the ministry have indicated that Brantford and Brant county had been warned that this cutback was coming. I suppose in some respect that was so. But we never believed either the minister or his officials. After all, they came and said that the Willett hospital was going to be closed, and the Willett is still functioning and it is functioning properly.

I would submit to the minister that, if this deleterious decision was going to be made in a hard and fast way, we should have had at least a year's notice of a hard and fast decision. Then the delegations and the health council could have discussed it further with the minister and the administrative officials of the Health ministry. Then they could have made the rationalization required if the ministry of the day could not be persuaded that our needs were greater than indicated by the budgetary cuts.

Instead of that, the announcement was made, I believe on January 19, to come into effect April 1. It has simply not been practical or even possible for anything but the toughest sort of rationalization, involving removing active treatment from the St. Joseph's hospital; centralizing it at the Brantford General Hospital; and removing the emergency service from St. Joseph's hospital, which is closest to our large and we hope growing industrial area. These are the sorts of decisions that can only be reflected by the needs of the community itself.

My leader has spoken and will speak again perhaps later this afternoon. But in the question period today and also in speaking to the group in front of the parliament buildings this morning he indicated that for the officials to work with a computer, having something to do with the number of hospital beds per 1,000, without looking at the special needs of individual communities is really in our type of government simply unacceptable and that's why I feel this debate is of such great importance.

I say again I am very glad indeed that the minister has softened his former inflexible approach. I have been somewhat critical of the health council of Brant county for not responding to the minister immediately with an indication that it feared the quality of our hospital services would be reduced to a point where it would endanger the good health of the community. I regret that their first response was to take the directive as if it had come from on high and simply determine how it was going to be implemented. This, if anything, is going to detract from the continuing value of a health council which must speak for the community first and not the Ministry of Health.

I feel that the members of the council individually feel that and I trust and hope that the Minister of Health feels the same way. I have a suspicion, however, that the health councils are, in the mind of the minister, designed simply to do his dirty work and leave him free to cut the ribbons. After all, he and his predecessors have not been too well favoured with the kind of brains that have seen the good allocation of public funds. You don't have to go very far down University Avenue to find a major world-class hospital that had been sitting empty for eight years until it was more or less reprocessed as a chronic care hospital opening just a year ago. You know the one I mean, Mr. Speaker.

You don't have to go very far away from here, just to McMaster University, I say with great respect to my colleague the leader, to find a $100 million facility that has been built and operating now for many years, and I don't know what the percentage of utilization is but I believe that for all of these years it has been considerably less than half utilized. All of those millions of dollars, in fact, have been wasted in trying to persuade the community to use this facility. I believe that the planning of the Ministry of Health has been terrible and that this minister now is simply carrying the old ashcans that the former Treasurer had to set down when he found that his approach—that is, going out and unilaterally closing the small hospitals in some of the Liberal areas of the province—was unacceptable and that he could not proceed in that way.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Nixon: I appreciate that, Mr. Speaker. I am glad to have had the opportunity to at least put before the Minister of Health some of the very strong feelings felt by the citizens of Brantford and Brant county.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I will try to deal with this situation in 10 minutes, but I ask your indulgence if I go over. Perhaps I could steal some time from my colleagues in this party.

Some hon. members: No.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: In that case, Mr. Speaker, I won't try to respond to the specific situations that have been described so far and will be described later in the debate. Those are dealt with regularly in this House as we consider questions and regularly on a daily basis as I deal with individual members and health councils and delegations from various parts of the province, some of which I discussed earlier today.

First of all, let me respond though to one point, that being the question suggested by the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk about giving a year's notice. In point of fact, what the ministry has done is to give three years' notice that we are moving in the health care system in the province towards the identification of and meeting of chronic care and extended care needs and the reduction of active treatment beds in recognition of that and in recognition of changing patterns in the provision of health care services. The standards that currently exist, of four beds per thousand in the south and four and a half in the north, are the standards which have applied in this province since 1972 and the goals of three and a half in the south and four in the north are for 1981, so, in effect, we are talking about moving over three years to achieve those levels.

I think our policies are well known in dealing with the hospital community. What concerns me—and I think it's worth putting on the record, though I don't do it in a pejorative sense but as they have not put it on the record, I will—is that certain of the policies of my friends in the third party are not referred to by them from time to time so that the people in a place like Brantford would know what the alternatives are.

I am concerned that if they ever sat on this side of the House it is their policy to abolish all hospital boards and establish social service and health boards. It is in their green paper and it is apparently stated as their policy. I think the people in Brantford, for instance, should know that at St. Joseph's, the Willett and the General they would abolish all their boards.

Mr. Makarchuk: It is better to have them elected than appointed by the minister.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: They should know that that party's green paper in effect is prescribing for Ontario a prescription on their part very similar—in fact, it is almost identical—to that which is in place today in the United Kingdom. I think it is well known by any objective observer that the national health service of the United Kingdom is an unmitigated disaster. The policies of the third party, like those of the United Kingdom, would give effect to excessive bureaucracy and bureaucratic centralized control.

Mr. Makarchuk: That's not true. What is the mortality rate?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: In my time in the ministry I have spoken repeatedly—literally hundreds of times—in every corner of the province about the need to move our health care system through what is admittedly a difficult period of transition, a period of restraint in government spending, a period when the health needs of the province have clearly changed, are changing and will continue to change.

We have set standards for the province which compare well with any jurisdiction which one chooses to bring forward in Canada or North America or, for that matter, anywhere in the world.

Mr. Cassidy: That's not true. It is the second lowest in the country, and the minister knows it.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, if you go back to the deliberations of the select committee in the summer and fall of 1978, they found that in terms of health spending for the provision of beds and on doctors or whatever Ontario tends to be pretty well on the national average. Some are higher. For instance, British Columbia spends more proportionately on doctors than we do, and proportionately less on hospitals than do we in this province.

It is interesting that this morning at the conference at the Constellation Hotel, which I believe my good friend from Renfrew North (Mr. Conway) was attending, apparently a gentleman, who is one of the principals in the firm of McKinsey and Company of the United Kingdom, made the observation that in the National Health Service, the Valhalla of the third party, they spend one-third as much on health care per capita as do we in Ontario. That is only one comparison. There are many and, in fact, people continue to come to this province to look at our health system as a model for other areas of the world.

Mr. M. Davidson: A lot of them are leaving because of it too.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: We are encouraging rationalization. In my time as minister I have been pleased to see the initiatives taken by health councils and by hospitals. Let me just refer to two or three. In Windsor, when I came to the ministry, there was an ongoing holy war—that's the only way I can describe it—between the ministry and the hospital community in Windsor. It revolved around one particular hospital.

There I said to the hospitals and to the health council that if they can find a way to rationalize services, to increase the numbers of chronic-care beds and to reduce duplication and overemphasis on active treatment, then the money would be ploughed back in for additional chronic beds—

Mr. Cooke: Tell us the whole story.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —for chronic home care, for a CAT scanner and so forth. They grabbed the initiative. This wasn't an imposition; this was working with the hospitals. The representatives of the boards, administrations and the medical staff—

Mr. Cooke: You tried to impose a lot of things, but we wouldn't accept them.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —arrived at an agreement which embraced all but one of the hospitals in that county and which will see, beginning April 1, albeit a reduction in the number of active treatment beds, an increase in the number of chronic and additional new programs throughout the county.

Mr. Cooke: Tell us the whole story.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The whole story is the ministry learned from its earlier experiences on how to work with a community like Windsor, how to work with a community like Brantford, how to work with Sarnia, how to work with Sault Ste. Marie and how to work with Cornwall.

This is the other point I wanted to respond to. My friend from Brant-Oxford-Norfolk says the people resent the application of centralized power. I would tend to go along with that. I live now and have for some years in a place called Don Mills, which we consider to be a small town within the bounds of a large metropolitan area, but I come from an even smaller area, so I think I understand that mentality as well as anyone here.

We cannot escape the fact this ministry does have a responsibility to set some standards, whether active-treatment-bed standards or of whatever kind, and we ultimately have to answer for the considerable amount of money we spend, which is running at about $11 million a day. As far as the planning is concerned, how to apply those standards and how to ensure the maintenance of the quality of health care, we do more and more rely on the health council. There are going to be good times and bad.

Mr. Nixon: There aren't good, just bad. When are they going to get good?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: There are going to be easy decisions and there are going to be tough decisions. I have to tell you, I am impressed beyond description with the way in which our health councils by and large have been working with their communities and advising them. I have to tell you too our batting record is about 95 per cent as far as the acceptance of the recommendations with which they come forward. So they are not just there to be a buffer, they are not just there to take the flak, they are there to work.

Mr. McClellan: Like Riverview?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Yes, like Riverview, exactly. That was a recommendation of the health council.

Mr. Nixon: So definitive and autocratic they never think of questioning them.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I want to talk about North Bay. In North Bay there isn't a health council, so we are talking about other types of communities. There, the hospitals grab the initiative very early on. I have to tell you the day I got back from Windsor and a meeting with the health council to announce the agreement of all the hospitals but one, there was a phone message for me from Sister Margaret Smith, the administrator of the hospital in North Bay, St. Joseph's. The message was very simple. We are going to make Windsor look like child's play.

I was up there a few weeks ago to approve formally the proposal put forward by those two hospitals to move to the second phase of rationalization. The fact is that rationalization has been going on for the last four or five years in any number of areas and it has not meant a reduction in health care. It has meant a maintenance of the quality of health care. I would argue, where you are combining departments such as obstetrics where they have been run down in size, and putting them together and concentrating skills, that is actually an improvement.

I want to say one pejorative thing—I will forewarn the House. I think if there is a problem in health care today it is the kind of things I see coming out regularly from that caucus at the end there, the kind of press releases that come out, the kind of statements that are made. If there is a threat to health care in this province it is the hyperbole and it is the distortion and it is the inaccuracies which regularly flow from that caucus in their public utterances.

Mr. Makarchuk: Twenty thousand people must be wrong.

Mr. Cassidy: I regret those last comments by the minister, I have to say, because I have been putting forward a great deal of accurate information about just what is happening in the health care field and in the hospital field. I have not yet seen a word from the minister to refute any of the facts which I used in the throne speech debate a week and a half ago. If the minister wants to refute any of that let him put it on the record.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: On a point of privilege: I fail to understand how the member can claim that, when he has been going around claiming the ministry is trying to close 17 or 18 hospitals which is blatantly untrue.

Mr. Cooke: They are starving.

Mr. Cassidy: I did not say that at any time. I said the number of beds which are being closed by the Ministry of Health is in fact equal to 17 or 18 major hospitals across the province. That is the scope of the cuts and I am putting it in those terms in order to illustrate just how savage the cutbacks being imposed by this ministry are in terms of health and hospital care across the province. I will put some figures on the record, Mr. Speaker. A cutback in two and a half years—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I take it then that the honourable member—

Mr. Cooke: This is not a point of privilege.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell:—denies the statement attributed to him in the Canadian Press story of the eighth, wherein he claimed that the ministry's policies are in fact going to result in a closure of more than 17 hospitals and a loss of 4,500 jobs, neither of which is true. Does he deny that?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I would just say quite simply that I did not say they would result in the closure of 17 or 18 hospitals, and if that is what CP reported—

Mr. Turner: You were quoted.

Mr. Cassidy:—then it is a misquote. I did say there would be a loss of around 4,500 jobs and I believe in fact that may well be an underestimate rather than an overestimate. We can calculate that with eight million and some people in the province, and something over a half a bed per thousand being cut, it is very easy to show how 4,500 beds are to be cut from the hospital system of this province according to the plans of the Minister of Health. The minister and his ministry have yet to come clean with communities across the province to say precisely how many beds are going to be cut in Hamilton, how many here in Toronto, how many up in Ottawa.

[4:30]

We have managed to learn of certain cases where there are going to be very substantial cuts. In my reply in the throne speech debate a few days ago I spoke about what was happening in Geraldton, where 20 of the 45 beds in their hospital are going to be cut. I read into the record a letter from the physician who practises in the area. He said, and I quote: "A viable hospital is an important factor in determining the scope of service a physician can provide. Competent doctors will be very difficult to attract or to keep here, should the hospital be reduced to the status of a first-aid post." That is a small, isolated community 300 kilometres from Thunder Bay—the problems of which my friend from Port Arthur was speaking about just before me.

Mr. Hennessy: How about your friend in Fort William?

Mr. Cassidy: We know, in other words, that about 25 beds are due to be cut in Geraldton. But I understand that several hundred beds have to be cut in Hamilton and very substantial numbers of beds have to be cut in Toronto and other parts of the province. All we have had is "one shoe dropped." People don't know when the other shoe is going to be dropped, in terms of how many more beds are going to be cut and what impact that is going to have on the quality of health service across the province.

I do want to suggest, though, that if this cut—which is arbitrary and not being made on any medical basis that we can see—if the minister is set in this pattern then we will get down to 3.5 beds per 1,000 in southern Ontario by 1981. We will be down to three beds by 1984; to 2.5 beds by 1987; to two beds by 1990; and by the turn of the century, there won't be a hospital left open in the whole province.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: That's nonsense—unmitigated nonsense.

Mr. Cassidy: The minister says "nonsense." I presume that somewhere there is going to be a stopping point. But let it go on the record that from the statistics we have been able to gather from Statistics Canada, Ontario at the present time has the second lowest proportion of active-treatment hospital beds per thousand population of any province in Canada. Now, that's already very low, and for the minister to say there are medical grounds for suddenly, sharply and arbitrarily going down even further suggests to me he is looking at his budget—but not at the quality of health care in Ontario.

As far as the workers are concerned, I met yesterday with some health-care workers in Windsor. I haven't the notes with me and I can't reproduce specifics, but they were telling me of 30 and 40 per cent cutbacks in the work force in specific hospitals because of the effective budget squeezing by the ministry up until now—before the further squeezing which is going to take place. I think the minister will accept there is at least one health-worker job for each hospital bed in Ontario; I believe the ratio tends to be a shade higher than that.

Not only that. When I met with the administrator and the medical director of the Welland General Hospital in Welland a few weeks ago they told me the minister had decreed that for this year their hospital, which is a very efficient one, is to have a cutback of 16 beds. The efficiency of the hospital and the fact that its per diem is far below some hospitals which may have conceivably a bit of fat to cut is not considered. They are finding that they have to cut a whole ward, or 29 beds. Even then, they will be $210,000 short of the overall cutbacks that the ministry wants to achieve.

If that holds true across the province—and I have heard other hospitals tell the same story—then what we will be seeing over the course of the next couple of years is not 4,500 beds being cut, not 12 per cent of the hospital beds in the province being cut, but a much higher proportion. How, I ask, can the quality of hospital care be maintained in that case: when we have never had a plan for health and hospital care in Ontario; when we have never had any rational ordering of priorities to ensure that services are available in the community before these savage cutbacks take place.

The health-care workers I met in Windsor told me a very troubling story. They said: "Our hospital used to be a happy place." Everybody understands that if you have a happy hospital it is a healing hospital as well, because if people are happy, that will be transmitted to the patients.

Mr. Wildman: Is that your solution?

Mr. Hennessy: It's yours.

Mr. Cassidy: Half the art of medicine is psychological, not just medical. But now they say the tension and the pressure have transmitted themselves right down to the people who make the salads and do the work in the dietary facilities in their particular hospitals.

They told me stories about how workers are under such pressure now because of the cutbacks already in place, even before the latest round, that they are having to take sick days in order to get their act together, they are feeling such pressure. They tell me that when a worker is sick, that worker isn't replaced, so the pressure on the colleagues who remain at work is increased. When workers go off for pregnancy or take a holiday they are not replaced, so other people have to cover up for that particular job.

They are telling me that among health-care workers in Windsor the number of compensation cases for people whose backs are injured from lifting without the aid of the second person who used to be there, is on the increase. They are telling me of head nurses in wards who are bursting into tears because of the difficulties they are having in order to try to provide adequate care.

They were telling me yesterday of older employees in the hospital who may have 10 or 12 more useful years ahead of them in providing care, dedicated conscientious people who have been working there for many years, who are now considering or, in fact, taking early retirement because they can't hack it any more because of the kinds of pressures that they are coming under. They are telling me of tensions which are transmitted from support workers to nurses, from nurses to doctors. You and I know, Mr. Speaker, that if people are under that kind of pressure it is going to be translated into pressure on the patients, and if the patients are feeling the pressure, there is no way those hospitals can be healthy healing places where people get better.

They were telling me that in the chronic-care facilities there seems to be an increase in the incidence of bedsores because there is not enough staff to ensure that the people in those facilities are getting turned frequently enough and are being looked after adequately.

Let me give the House another example. My colleague Mac Makarchuk will talk about Brantford. My colleague Jim Foulds has talked about Thunder Bay. In the throne speech debate I talked about the enormous number of hospitals, in the southwest and in northwestern and northeastern Ontario, which are registering not just zero increases this year but have to endure very sharp bed cutbacks in areas where there is absolutely no alternative available, where the options the minister says should be available to the people who are consumers of health care are clearly not going to be available.

My colleague the member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor) will talk about the problems there where the minister didn't consult any kind of a hospital planning council before he closed the Lakeshore Hospital, he just acted arbitrarily. A letter from the Goderich Medical Centre to the Minister of Health reads: "I would beg you to read this letter on my enclosed chief of staff's report which has been appropriately underlined. The bed situation at Alexandra Marine and General Hospital is serious and if the bed cuts go through as proposed by the Ministry of Health we will be confronting a dangerous and potentially lethal situation." Dangerous and potentially lethal.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Cassidy: I will just be 30 seconds more. The minister bridled the other day when my colleague from Windsor-Riverside (Mr. Cooke) raised the case of a 78-year-old patient who was sent away from hospital because there wasn't room in the emergency facility and who subsequently died. The physician who did the autopsy put the blame on the cutbacks. He put the blame directly on the cutback policy of this minister. It is not just my colleague raising this, it's doctors themselves.

Mr. Deputy Speaker. The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Cassidy: People are consistently being backed up in the emergency ward—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, order, order.

Mr. Riddell: Mr. Speaker, I am amazed at how quickly history repeats itself within this government and more particularly within the Ministry of Health. It seems to me that three years ago I, along with many of my colleagues, pleaded with the Minister of Health—

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I want to respond, if I may, on a point of privilege. I had hoped I would have been asked earlier in the day—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: What is the privilege? What is the point of privilege?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The privilege, sir, is the allegation that somebody knowingly let somebody go away and die because of some policy of a hospital or the ministry. The fact of the matter is my staff did investigate the matter for me and informed me it was a case where the attending physician felt the individual was well enough to go home and not requiring—

Mr. McClellan: We'll see what the inquest says.

Mr. Cassidy: We'll see what the inquest says.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: We will, sir. But let's let the inquest do that; let's not have members prejudge it; shall we?

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, on that point of privilege?

Mr. Warner: He's abusing the rules of the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I don't believe you raised that question.

Mr. Cooke: I raised the question the other day. I originally raised it in this Legislature.

I would like to point out that this caucus is not prejudging that particular incident. Dr. Broadwell, the coroner in the city of Windsor, stated the following in the Windsor Star; referring to my comments that the policies of this ministry are causing people to die in this province, he said the following: "Dr. Broadwell, in a telephone interview, said: 'Good for him, I think he's right,' when told of Cooke's comment." Those were Dr. Boardwell's comments, not ours.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I was referring to the comments of the—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Cassidy: On the point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, since I raised this just now and the minister was responding to it: I met yesterday with a patient whom I believe was at Hotel Dieu or Metropolitan General Hospital in Windsor on January 19. That night when she had to be taken into the emergency ward there were six people stacked up overnight in the out-patients and eight people stacked up in the emergency ward itself; and that, surely, prejudices a doctor's decision about whether or not—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. This is becoming a debate.

Mr. Roy: That's right.

Mr. Cassidy: That's what we are here for.

Mr. Riddell: Before I was so rudely interrupted by the Minister of Health, I was alluding to how quickly history repeats itself in this government and within the ministry.

It seems to me that three years ago I, along with many of my colleagues, pleaded with the Minister of Health to find other ways of cutting the ministry's expenditures without having to employ the heavy-handed tactics of closing hospitals. With the aid of the courts we were successful in keeping the hospitals open, with the exception of two psychiatric hospitals which were owned by the province. I would hope the minister and his officials have had an opportunity to assess the tremendous error they made in closing these facilities.

Whether it was due to sheer spite, knowing that the ministry had no authority to close the hospitals, or due to a determined effort to cut the budget at any cost, the minister now appears to be accomplishing the same mission by reducing the number of hospital beds to a point where the hospitals will find it very difficult to continue the provision of a much-needed high quality service, or even to operate.

I don't think I need to tell you Mr. Speaker, the tremendous impact that the policy statement of the ministry has had in the riding I represent. I'm sure the minister has been deluged, as I have, with letters from Goderich and surrounding areas. They aren't just ordinary letters from constituents. They are letters filled with fear and frustration. Many of these letters are from senior citizens who are terrified of becoming sick and immobile, with no place to go and no one to take care of them.

In their letters, some of them suggest that society, due to the actions of this government, is moving closer and closer to legislation that would permit euthanasia. Men and women growing old in Huron county after a life of struggle and care, are actually living in fear that they will be reduced to little more than bothersome burdens, without dignity or respect. Surely the most fitting word to describe this is sad.

Not only have there been large public meetings in both the Wingham and Goderich areas over the ministry's proposals, but the member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Gaunt) and I, along with our health critic, visited both the Wingham and Goderich hospitals over a week ago to talk to the grass roots of Ontario about the delivery of health-care services.

Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, we got an earful. If the senior citizens in Goderich and area are frightened by the trends in health care across the province, the doctors in the community are even more afraid. They made it amply clear that the Ontario Ministry of Health, and the Minister of Health, along with his civil servants, are playing a numbers game that is purely political. The government is attempting to eat into the large deficit which it has accumulated over the years. The Minister of Health has decided to reduce hospital beds for no other reason than to meet a budget which was struck by his ministry officials.

The minister came up with a formula of 3.5 beds per 1,000 referral population. Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the minister is making a serious mistake when endeavouring to base health care on a formula. You simply cannot formulate health care.

It is obvious that the government doesn't care about who will suffer from the bed cuts; and I think that is a sad commentary indeed.

A number of my constituents have met with ministry officials, and the first question that was asked of them was, "What in the world is going on in Goderich? The only letters we seem to be getting are from the Goderich area." It's obvious from this debate today that this is simply not true. But if apathy does exist in certain areas of the province, it may be that so much has been happening on the health-care scene lately that people don't really recognize the implication of the bed-cutting edict.

[4:45]

In Goderich's Alexandra Marine and General Hospital, a community hospital providing nearly 90 per cent of all the required medical services for the people who live in the area, and a hospital that has just come through one of the most rigid and strenuous cost-cutting exercises anywhere in Ontario, the bed cuts are a hardship and a terrible hardship. What's more, it is dangerous. Doctors at Alexandra Marine and General Hospital have become unbelievably scared, because they have been trying to mix patients inappropriately, breaking the rules of good medical practices and squeezing the situation so tightly as to invite disaster. The doctors using the facilities of the Alexandra Marine and General Hospital have looked at other ways of running the hospital, but they don't really have any idea of what the costs will be.

For instance, day-care surgery has gone away up at AM and G recently, and probably will continue to climb. There is a whole list of surgical procedures which are approved for a day-care surgery unit. It means the patients are brought into the hospital in the morning, the operations are done, the operating and recovery room staff take care of them for the day, and in the evening the unit is cleared of staff and patients. Everyone goes home.

Doctors are looking more and more to home care for patients in Huron county, but the home-care program is limited to a very restrictive set of criteria. Not every patient qualifies for the program that gets people out of hospital and into their homes where the medical treatment continues under OHIP funds. The services of the Victorian Order of Nurses and the staff of the Huron county health unit are also possible alternatives to in-hospital care for some patients, but provincial funding for these services hasn't increased sufficiently to expect them to accept any increased load.

There may indeed be other ways of coping with the reduced hospital bed situation, but many of the programs aren't in place in Huron county, as they are in some other counties, and really don't provide a viable alternative. The reason such programs are not in place is that the government has refused to fund such things as additional nursing homes in places like Goderich.

In all due respect, the ministry itself understands some of this conundrum and has provided small hospitals with a 10-bed float during the switch-over period, but this isn't of much use to AM and G. This hospital has been on a tight money-saving regime for months, trying to make up a deficit, and will pay a fine of $60,000 for having more beds open than the ministry guidelines decree. AM and G can't afford to run a 10-bed float. We in Goderich are really quite bitter about the penalties imposed by the ministry for being over-bedded.

We believe the penalties are not legal, and it would not surprise me if there was a move afoot to take the ministry to court on this matter. It might well be that the ministry has no right to penalize hospitals and withhold funds. It is very difficult for people to understand that on the one hand AM and G got an overwhelming vote of confidence when it received a three-year accreditation recently, and on the other hand the hospital gets hit for a $60,000 penalty. Somehow we have to maintain good care in spite of it all.

But there is even more to fear. No one knows what further penalties will be imposed by the ministry. Alexandra Marine and General Hospital simply cannot afford any more budget surprises this year, next year or any time. The ministry has decreed that for 1979 four beds per 1,000 referral population will be approved. That computes to 43 active treatment beds for AM and G. In 1980 that number will drop to 3.5 beds per 1,000 referral population, or 37 beds for AM and G. It is understood that the bed allocation will be approved annually by the ministry and that the only way to increase the hospital's bed allocation will be to document an increase in the referral population. This we think we can do, and I am pleased that the minister has agreed to meet a delegation from the Goderich and Wingham area to discuss this very matter.

It is the referral population that is concerning all of us in the Goderich area, including the community doctors and the hospital boards. Board members have been in the ministry office time and time again to ask questions and to express concern. Until recently, board members and doctors felt they were not getting the number of beds to which they were actually entitled under the ministry's own guidelines.

Just a short time ago it was explained to the board that the ministry accepted 10,032 as the referral population for AM and G, while the hospital board had assumed from its calculation that the referral population was 14,581. The administrator of AM and G Hospital said it was an honest mistake on the board's part. He said the board was adding in 4,549 referral population for obstetrics based on cases discharged from the hospital, but for ministry purposes the obstetrics population was included in the 15-to-44 age group referral population, and the board isn't quite satisfied that this is fair. The population allowed by the ministry for the 15-to-44 age group is 4,603; that is both men and women.

By the ministry's own calculations, the referral population includes 4,549 for obstetrical services only, which shows that some women are using AM and G when they have their babies and other hospitals for all other medical procedures. The delegation which has spoken to ministry officials on a number of occasions finds it is futile to dispute the ministry statistics, but it still has some doubts about the referral population figures and doesn't seem to be able to get satisfactory answers to that.

The doctors have even more doubts. The doctors say the referral population is based on 1977-78 referral patterns and there seems to be little argument these referral patterns have changed drastically within the last year or so.

Practically the entire medical staff in Goderich has changed since these referral patterns were established and the board agrees. Whereas doctors who formerly practised in Goderich often sent their patients out of town for medical care, doctors in Goderich now prefer to treat their patients themselves in the local hospitals. This creates a greater need for hospital beds at the Alexandra Marine and General Hospital.

In a question I posed in the Legislature, I expressed the concern that the ministry has not taken into account the fact that Goderich is a tourist town, and as such has an increased population in the summer months. I have seen figures which would substantiate a claim that the summer population in the area swells by 9,311 persons in the area including Goderich and surrounding townships and villages.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member's time has expired.

Mr. Riddell: I could go on for some time, and I intend to do so when I reply to the throne speech, but suffice to say at this time that the government, in my way of thinking, stands to be condemned for its policies reflecting its philosophy: the survival of the fittest.

Mr. Wildman: Then support our no-confidence motion.

Mr. Laughren: I am worried about the Liberals' restraint package.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member for Brantford.

Mr. Makarchuk: I would like to—

Mr. Acting Speaker: I am sorry, the member for Peterborough. I was looking on that side and didn't see anybody standing. The member for Peterborough has priority.

Mr. Turner: I apologize for my diminutive size, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McClellan: Tell us about Peterborough; tell us about health care in Peterborough.

Mr. Laughren: Tell us about how many doctors have opted out in Peterborough, John.

Mr. Turner: I can tell the member the figures are not what he is quoting.

An hon. member: They are only half as bad.

Mr. Turner: They are not even close. He knows that and he is deliberately distorting.

Mr. Cooke: We have seen your articles in the Peterborough paper.

Mr. McClellan: A point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I would ask the honourable member to withdraw that remark. Mr. Speaker, you will ask the honourable member to withdraw that remark.

Mr. Eaton: He didn't name anybody.

Mr. Turner: I didn't name anybody.

Mr. Acting Speaker: You don't tell the Speaker what he is going to do until he has a chance to consider it. What is the remark that you want withdrawn?

Mr. McClellan: He said we were deliberately distorting.

Mr. Eaton: He didn't name anyone.

Mr. Wildman: Oh, so he can generally state it, is that it?

Mr. Acting Speaker: As I recall, he said the figures you were using were wrong, and I think that is a matter of opinion.

Mr. McClellan: And that we were deliberately distorting them, is what he said.

Mr. Acting Speaker: I don't recall him saying deliberately distorting them.

Mr. Makarchuk: You had better withdraw, John.

Mr. Turner: Why? I am all the time. That is one of my problems, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Laughren: Either withdraw or take off those glasses.

Mr. Turner: I can't comply with the member's request, Mr. Speaker, because I have lost my reading glasses and I must rely on these.

Mr. M. Davidson: We know you are the member for Peterborough now.

Mr. Turner: That is firmly established. It is interesting that the Ministry of Health is probably mentioned now in more headlines than I suppose any other ministry in government. The subject of health care has obviously become a matter of debate throughout the whole of our society, and I would suggest it is an interesting paradox.

On the one hand the people of Ontario are satisfied with the health care they are receiving. According to a survey, fully 84 per cent of people have indicated the level of health care they are receiving is acceptable or satisfactory to them. I would have to say, as a politician, there is some comfort in numbers of that kind.

We also have endorsements from other jurisdictions, particularly from our friends to the south of us who wish they had a health care system such as ours.

Mr. M. Davidson: You haven't got anything; you are going to endorse something.

Mr. Turner: On the other side of the equation there are some interesting factors involved. Hospital administrators are upset that we are limiting their increases to a four-and-a-half per cent figure. The Ontario Medical Association is concerned about the level of income for their physicians, and the consumers have indicated very clearly that they are concerned about the rising cost of living, as we all are. It is the concern for money, I suppose, that has been focusing attention on health care on the front pages of our newspapers, and I would suggest that it is the cost, rather than the quality or the amount of service, that people are concerned about.

Basically, it is fair to say, the people within the health-care system want more money than has been budgeted for them. The ministry and the taxpayers want restraints. So obviously there is a difference of opinion. But some misconceptions are developing, and I think they should be clarified. I think there has been perhaps some exaggeration. We hear people talking about cutbacks and restraints—and undoubtedly we are in a period of restraint—however, it is interesting to note that the Ministry of Health figures this year will increase by 8.1 per cent.

Mr. Laughren: Did the member for Fort William (Mr. Hennessy) write this speech?

Mr. Turner: No. I would suggest that increase is considerably more than the increase that has been allowed for social services, education, government administration or support to local governments. Quite obviously, health has not ceased to be a priority of this government, and it will not.

What really lies behind the headlines and the debates about the cutbacks and the spending restraints is a fundamental shift in our approach to health. In its simplest terms—and I do not want to be accused of oversimplifying it—the strategy is to take money out of some of the traditional high-cost areas and to shift these resources to new priorities such as community health, home-care and chronic home-care programs.

Mr. Wildman: Where are the chronic-care beds then?

Mr. Laughren: A long silence.

Mr. Turner: Not really. That is one of the things that is happening: Beds are being re-designated and will be used for chronic care.

I would suggest that an analysis of health spending yields three important conclusions.

First, the general level of health in our province is not rising as quickly as our expenditures for it. We are experiencing diminishing returns on our health-care dollars, and this would indicate that perhaps we are spending our money in the wrong places.

Second, quite obviously society is changing; we are getting older. The health-care system is not oriented towards the treatment of degenerative and chronic illnesses which now are on the increase. Thus, quite clearly, we find patients in intensive-care facilities designed to treat acute illnesses who really need physiotherapy, counselling or housekeeping assistance.

Finally, we have to recognize that we have not made enough progress in prevention. Medical research increasingly points to the fact that many of our diseases are preventable or controllable if we can simply learn to lead more intelligent life styles. It makes no sense to continue spending more and more money to fix up the problem when we can prevent it in the first place and, I would suggest, without the pain and suffering created by unnecessary illness.

Thus, we are not exercising restraint simply because we want to cut spending; this is an important consideration, but it is not the whole story. And I would like to emphasize that it is not because we lack resources; there is enough money to go around. It is just that we believe now that spending more on hospitals is not the best way to improve the system.

There is no question that building acute-care hospitals has had some real benefits. There's no question that providing these health-care resources has been of great benefit to the various communities. But, as I mentioned before, the population is changing. We cannot continue to make progress if we continue our apparent love affair with high-technology hospitals and acute, in-patient hospital care.

[5:00]

I would emphasize that our target is not a healthy system but in fact a healthy population and that's why we have developed a strategy to restructure the health system in Ontario. Quite obviously, we are de-emphasizing hospital care. I mentioned that earlier. We continue to budget more money for these institutions but we are also redirecting funds to develop less-intensive facilities and forms of care such as chronic-care facilities, as I mentioned before.

Mr. Laughren: Where are they? Where are they?

Mr. Turner: Floyd, you know as well as I do, they have been mentioned many times: day surgery clinics—somebody mentioned that on that other side—day hospitals and out-patient services.

Mr. Laughren: Ask the member from Timmins. Ask the member for Cochrane South (Mr. Pope). Boy oh boy, send them from Timmins to Peterborough; what a joke.

Mr. Turner: These developments, I would suggest, reflect the fact you don't have to be a passive patient occupying an acute-care hospital bed having your every need attended to to receive effective treatment.

Mr. Wildman: You need a chronic-care bed if you are going to move.

Mr. Turner: The alternatives I mentioned are needed to treat degenerative disease, which is relatively unresponsive to high-care intensive hospital care.

Mr. Laughren: Quit while you are losing.

Mr. Turner: Secondly, disease prevention and community health programs are being expanded. We are moving towards creating a uniform province-wide standard for community health because we recognize this is the best and most cost effective way to improve the general level of health. Thirdly, we are promoting the concept of individual responsibility for health. We believe so-called self care holds enormous untapped potential for improving the health of the people in this province. The other day I read an interesting report by Dr. Robert Levy who is director of the National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute in the United States. He says if the rate of death in 1976 had been the same as it was in 1968, 164,000 more Americans would have died. His conclusion is based on the number of people who would have died from heart attacks and strokes had they not made significant changes in the lifestyles they had been leading in the past decade.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Turner: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member for Brantford.

Mr. Makarchuk: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member for Peterborough said the people of Ontario are satisfied with health care. Today, the people of Ontario from one community delivered to the minister a petition with 20,000 names which were collected in less than two weeks, saying they are not satisfied with the health care. I have a feeling the people who signed that petition are more accurate and know more about what it's all about than the member for Peterborough.

I would like to get into this debate to point out to the Minister of Health and to the members here exactly how they go about implementing some of their decisions. In Brantford, the local health council called a meeting on a Wednesday night. The meeting went on for two and a half hours of steady droning by officials from the ministry. After the droning was over the message came across that they were going to close St. Joseph's Hospital and make it into a chronic care facility. There were a lot of people who were upset. They wanted to ask questions. They wanted to find out. They were denied absolutely any opportunity to question the report, or question the officials.

That's the way they operate. They ram it down the throats. We had a member before known as the great McKeough. Remember him? Every time he got up, the guys used to shudder. I think the feeling is developing. I notice when the Minister of Health was sitting over there, there seemed to be the cordon sanitaire around him that used to exist around McKeough when he brought in that OHIP budget.

Remember those days when the Attorney General said: "It's not my budget, it's his"? The Premier (Mr. Davis) had to get a solidarity group together there for a while. I think the same thing is going to happen with the Minister of Health. The Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Drea) is saying right now that obviously Timbrell doesn't know what he's doing. I have a feeling the Premier is going to call the boys into the back shed and have another chat about sticking together on the situation.

The Minister of Health gets up in this House day in and day out and says all the beds are available, despite the fact doctors, people and everybody else cannot find beds for the people in hospitals at this time. He says there are beds. I will give you an example, Mr. Speaker, of how good the bed service isn't in Ontario.

There was a mental patient in Brantford who had enough sense to realize he was suffering an acute attack and he needed to go into hospital. He contacted the hospitals or his doctor; they could not place him in the hospital because there were no beds. He contacted the hospital in Hamilton; there were no beds. He contacted the police; there were no beds. Finally, in desperation, this man got into his car, drove down to the local OPP station and demolished their fleet. After he had demolished their fleet, they found him a bed.

That is the health-care service of Ontario; there is an example of what the people opposite are doing.

Regarding the Brantford situation, something the minister and his group failed to realize is the fact that we have two hospitals, but one of them, St. Joseph's, which the ministry plans to close, is situated next to an industrial area in which some 5,000 or 6,000 people are employed. It is convenient; it is adjacent to the industrial area. Having an emergency department close to an industrial area is very necessary. Everybody would agree to that, maybe even the minister.

Other factors are involved. The minister uses the population in the Brant county area of about 98,000 population. But he does not recognize the fact that the hospitals in Brantford receive patients from Norfolk, from Haldimand, from Oxford and from Wentworth. These people also come and feed into the Brantford system. But this is not taken into account in a decision when he goes about with his "cookie cutter," as someone described it earlier, and chops off the beds and chops everything else.

It should also be recognized that there is a good deal of opinion and medical research available now pointing out that if you have a hospital with other services than chronic care—it doesn't necessarily have to have all the services, but it does have other services; it has an emergency; it has an operating theatre—this kind of hospital operates better, provides better service for chronic-care people, provides better service generally all around. This is a factor that should receive great consideration from the minister and his officials when they try, as they have been attempting in Brantford, to close down the hospitals.

The assumption is that there are hundreds and hundreds of people in hospitals lolling about in the beds; just lying there. I challenge any member here in the House to name one. I challenge any member to name one patient he knows who is lying around in the hospital just because he or she likes to lie around.

Something the minister forgets to recognize is the fact that they have admission committees, they have discharge committees. In some cases, they may fall down on their jobs. In some cases, there may be some influence on the part of the doctor to ensure he has nine, 10 or 15 patients in the hospital so that when he comes through on his royal tour in the morning he can bill for nine, 10 or 15 patients for saying "Hello." That is a well-paying business. But if you have a proper administration and if you have the committee set up, this should not be a problem.

No amount of computer input, or whoever uses a crystal ball in the back room, or something like that, can decide exactly or specifically how many beds should be there. The only way one could really decide on that is by knowing whether the beds are being used, used to capacity and the people in there need to be in there. Then, obviously, you have to keep that hospital open because you can't play around with human lives. It was mentioned by my colleague the member for Oshawa (Mr. Breaugh): How high must the body count be before the minister changes his mind?

We have mentioned the one incident in Windsor. There was another incident in Brantford that involves a coroner's inquest right now, a very similar situation. How many more do we have to go through before the minister starts looking at this thing from a human, sensible, point of view?

I want to conclude by pointing out to the minister that the doctors in Brant county disagree with him. In fact, one of the doctors on the health committee, who decided to express his views publicly, was chastized by the health committee: "You should not say these things." The man was concerned that they are demolishing the health system here. He put a letter in the paper and the local health council immediately sent a letter to Timbrell dissociating itself and then sent a letter to the doctor criticizing him for speaking out for his community.

That brings into mind just what kind of people are on the health council. Mind you, a lot of them are old Tory hacks. I can understand they do have their political biases and they do have the intentions to protect the minister. But somewhere those of us who are not Tory hacks have some concern about the community, and sometimes we wish that some of the Tory hacks we have on some of these committees would show some concern for the communities.

I suggest in conclusion that doctors say the minister is wrong, the people have said the minister is wrong, and it is damned near time the minister started to listen.

Mr. Gaunt: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to make a few comments in this debate because Huron county, and particularly the Wingham hospital which I represent and which is in my constituency, are greatly concerned about this matter.

It has been mentioned this afternoon that the hospital bed-cutting program isn't a program that is generating universal concern across the province and that is quite true. It is not doing so for a very good reason I suspect—perhaps a number of reasons. One of the reasons was alluded to by my colleague the member for Huron-Middlesex (Mr. Riddell). The other reason I suspect is that a number of hospitals in Ontario are currently operating at the 3.5 beds per thousand level or below, and approximately 50 hospital centres are already at the 4.0 bed per thousand level which is the guideline applicable for 1979-80. So those hospitals that are already at the 3.5 or even at the 4.0 level certainly won't be greatly concerned and raising any sort of a fuss at this time because they are really not being affected.

But I repeat that in my community there is a lot of concern, particularly as it relates to the Wingham hospital. There are concerns on the part of the workers who are afraid of losing their jobs—a legitimate concern. There are concerns on the part of the medical staff. The medical staff feel that their ability to treat patients and their ability to deliver a first-class health-care system in the community are going to be somewhat limited and interfered with if they don't have the active-treatment beds to which they can refer patients in need.

There are concerns expressed by senior citizens who fear that when they get sick there won't be a bed in the hospital available for them. There are concerns expressed by the community generally—legitimate concerns—that once the ministry enacts its program of this particular bed cut three or four years down the road there will be another cut and eventually the small, rural hospitals will be reduced to a level that really won't be economical in terms of operation.

I was at a hospital meeting last night in Goderich—my colleague was there as well and he alluded to it—where one of the medical staff said that in his view a hospital that doesn't have at least 30 active-treatment beds cannot be operated efficiently. There is a great fear that the ministry will just gradually cut back and ultimately say to some of these smaller rural hospitals, "I'm sorry, you only have 20 or 25 active-treatment beds, you are no longer operating efficiently, you are too small." And so the hospitals will go by the board in favour of a larger, centralized operation.

Mr. Riddell: That is what you call coming in the back door to close hospitals.

Mr. Gaunt: That's right. I think my colleague is right. The government wasn't able to do it via the hospital closure route and now it is attempting another measure in effect to accomplish the same thing. That is the fear that is being expressed.

Mr. Cooke: Closure by instalment.

[5:15]

Mr. Gaunt: Closure by instalment. I think there are some fears, particularly on the part of medical staff who have come from England and who have seen their system operate over there and fear that the same thing is happening here. The same sort of program evolved and eventually they got themselves into a real dilemma in terms of health care delivery, where even for a gall bladder operation a person has to wait for a year in some cases.

Let me cite some figures applicable to the Wingham hospital for the period April 1, 1978 to December 31, 1978 in respect to the use of active treatment beds. My colleague has dealt with the Goderich situation. Both of us are concerned about that as well, even though it isn't in my riding, because there are people in my riding who are referred to the Goderich hospital. We really have major concerns with respect to both hospitals, but my colleague having dealt with the Goderich situation I will concentrate on Wingham for a moment, if I may.

First of all, those 65 years of age and over constituted 30.6 per cent of all the patients admitted during that period to which I made reference. There were 677 admitted for a total of 8,089 hospital days, which was 49.2 per cent of the total hospital days. The average length of stay was 11.9 days.

For those under 65, there were 1,536 patients admitted. They constituted 69.4 per cent of all patients and represented 8,343 hospital days out of a total of 16,432 active-treatment hospital days. In other words, of the total admissions for active treatment, 30 per cent were in the age bracket of 65 or over but constituted 50 per cent of the total hospital days.

At present, there are 33 long-term or chronic patients over 65 in the hospital, even though there are only 18 designated chronic beds in the Wingham hospital. In addition, there are six chronic patients under 65, for a total of 39 chronic patients but only 18 designated chronic beds.

The point I am making is that the hospital needs more chronic care beds than we presently have because the population makeup in Huron is well above the provincial average insofar as people 65 years of age and over are concerned. As a matter of fact, Huron is 50 per cent higher than the overall provincial average in that respect; 12.9 per cent of the people in Huron are 65 and over compared to the overall provincial average of 8.6 per cent.

There are only five counties in the entire province that have a higher percentage of aged population. In Bruce county, 13.3 per cent of the population are 65 years of age and over. There are only three counties in the province of Ontario that have a higher percentage of aged people. These figures, incidentally, are taken from the March 25, 1977 figures supplied by TEIGA.

Further, I should point out what is happening at Huronview, the county home for the aged. At the moment, there are 292 beds being occupied out of a total of 310. There are 148 patients who require extended bed care, which means that those who occupy those beds require at least one and a half hours of nursing care per day. 78 out of the 292 require some nursing care and only 66 are able to totally look after themselves. There are 27 on the waiting list. Of those, 14 will require bed or extended care while 11 can partially take care of themselves.

The point in all of this is that the home for the aged for practical purposes has now been turned into a chronic hospital. There should be more chronic hospital beds designated in the county and more nursing home beds approved to return the county home to its original purpose. The Ministry of Health has continually refused to grant any more nursing home beds in the county. We have made a plea on numerous occasions, year after year, but consistently the ministry turns the applications down. The need is there and can be shown, and I hope the ministry responds accordingly.

Surely in an area as important as health care the ministry has to be sensitive and alert to the needs of every community across the province. Obviously there is difficulty in applying a policy uniformly and universally across the province because there are differences in communities, there are differences in population makeup, there are differences in the degrees of hospital efficiency across this province, and those matters should be taken into account.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that those matters, up until now, have not been taken into account. The Wingham hospital, for instance, has come in under budget on three successive occasions, the latest of which is this year.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Gaunt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. May I just conclude by saying that the minister has indicated to me in a letter dated March 16 this year that reclassification of surplus active beds to chronic care will be considered in those areas where there is a demonstrated need. In my view we can demonstrate that need and I hope the ministry responds accordingly. Not only do we need to maintain our active treatment beds, but we need more designation of chronic beds as well.

Mr. Hennessy: I rise concerning the district of Thunder Bay. I am greatly concerned about the cutting of hospital beds. I have not before had as many calls, as many people who were concerned about an issue as they are about this one. If you live in a remote area far from major places of medical attention, if you happen to live up in northwestern Ontario and realize the long distance between various towns and municipalities, you then come to appreciate what it is to be a northwestern Ontario resident. It is very, very difficult to reach one area from another, especially if medical attention is seriously needed. You have difficulty maybe with air transportation—because of the weather it might not be feasible. At various times the weather changes within 50 miles' radius with a large snowstorm between different towns.

I can't buy the idea of cutting back beds. In all sincerity I cannot buy it. Even being a member of the government, I just cannot buy it as a human being.

Mr. Riddell: Come on over, Mickey.

Mr. Hennessy: No, this side is still better. With all due respect, we all have our own thinking. I feel that I would not be fair to myself if I was just to agree it's right financially; in a humanitarian way it's not right. When you have somebody in a hospital, Mr. Speaker, whether it be a mother, father, sister, brother, a relative, whoever it might be, there is nothing that leaves a more lasting impression than the medical care and attention they receive. You also consider in your mind whether you got in there soon enough, or were you too late, or did you do the right thing. I think the members know what I am talking about when I talk in this vein.

When you have to go to a hospital and be put in a hallway to wait overnight to receive a bed, it does make the person wonder—it does make the people, the parents, whoever it may be, wonder—about the welfare of the people who are there. I guess it is very nerve-racking, because when you are sick you do a lot of thinking, you have a lot of time to think.

I am concerned about the possible loss of jobs. The economic condition is not that good. There are many people who are working in hospitals who could possibly lose their jobs after 15 or 20 years of employment, people who maybe do not have much of a bankroll stashed away, if you want to put it that way; or who don't have many benefits in regard to a pension fund and therefore would be more or less destitute and perhaps spend their remaining years in poverty, to some extent.

I am greatly concerned and, as I mentioned to you before, there is the problem of the long distances involved. I think that the lack of chronic-care hospitals or beds in Thunder Bay is like putting the cart before the horse.

We mentioned the other day at a hospital meeting I was at with my colleague the member for Port Arthur (Mr. Foulds) and the members of the hospital board, and I'm very pleased to say this, that a meeting has been arranged for this coming Tuesday with the mayor and council, the hospital boards and the Thunder Bay District Health Council, along with the local representatives. The Minister of Health and his colleagues no doubt will be there. I hope that something satisfactory can be arranged through sensible dialogue between all parties concerned. I don't think any ranting, or any yelling and shouting, is going to solve the problem. I think if we sit down with people who know something about the medical situation in Thunder Bay perhaps we can come to a suitable arrangement. I sincerely hope so.

Knowing the long waiting period, one can understand the anxiety that is experienced by people in Thunder Bay who have somebody who is sick and are worried about whether they can get to a hospital to receive medical attention—particularly when you realize that Winnipeg is 450 miles from Thunder Bay and in between, from Kenora on, you have to go either to Winnipeg in the province of Manitoba, or to Thunder Bay, for major surgery. Even when you look to Manitowadge and White River, you're still talking about 200 miles or 300 miles which you have to travel. It's very difficult.

Before I became an esteemed politician—if you want to call it that—I was a liquor salesman.

Mr. Ruston: Oh you are very esteemed, Mickey; sure you are.

Mr. Hennessy: I'm talking about you fellows too.

I was a liquor salesman and I had to travel those routes in the wintertime. Even at the best of times, coming from Red Lake was no prize. I almost got killed a few times. I still think to this day that it was the Liberals who were trying to kill me, with all due respect to Bob Nixon.

To get back to the subject—

Mr. Kerrio: That's why you were a Liberal, eh Mickey?

Mr. Hennessy: That's right, a black one.

Mr. Wildman: Black and blue.

Mr. Hennessy: I would hope that this situation can be rectified to some extent.

I hope that money for maybe a sewer or a road is not as important as the life of a person who depends on the medical attention they may receive—whether it's a woman or a man or a child, a boy or girl. That's the last stage in life, when you're going to a hospital and everything depends on whether you will have the right attention and whether the facilities will be available for you.

I think that medical facilities should be made available. After all, you're dead a long time. There's lots of sorrow left behind when a person departs from this world, perhaps through no proper facilities being available or the right precautions taken. As far as I'm concerned, I would very much like this meeting on Tuesday to produce more chronic-bed care so perhaps we can make more beds available in the hospitals in the city of Thunder Bay.

Mr. Wildman: I rise to participate in this debate because of a concern for the problems we have in northern Ontario in terms of hospital beds. I appreciate the comments of the previous speaker because we know the feeling he has and I understand the difficult position he finds himself in.

We have today a very serious situation in northern Ontario, and even the government is aware of it. When you consider studies that have been done by this government—for instance the health policy evaluation study, in part of the review for the "Design for Development in Northwestern Ontario" two or three years ago, where the government was told the death rates, particularly violent deaths and infant mortality, are much higher in northwestern Ontario than they are throughout the rest of the province. When you consider that, one has to wonder why we are cutting services. It seems to me we should be increasing services, not cutting them.

Members might argue that hospital services won't deal with these major problems, but until we have more community-based services in place it doesn't make sense to cut the active-treatment care facilities we have now. As the previous speaker said, we seem to be putting the cart before the horse.

[5:30]

If one argues, as the parliamentary assistant did, that we need more chronic care, we had better provide that before we cut the active-treatment beds. We can't do it the other way around.

The study I referred to a moment ago pointed out that in northwestern Ontario we have a shortage of chronic-care and nursing-home beds, as well as psychiatric-care beds. When you consider that we have the shortage already, and the distances that are involved in my own riding, in the northern part of Algoma, we are having a terrible time attracting doctors. This is a problem throughout the province. Unless we can provide adequate services, we are going to have an even more difficult time. Even when you have those facilities, it is sometimes difficult to attract doctors; if you do not have them, it is even more difficult.

We have to take into account the geographic factors in northern Ontario. If the government cuts hospital beds in Thunder Bay or in the small hospitals throughout the northwest, with the result that there just are not beds available, people are going to have to travel much greater distances if they need care. We cannot accept that.

The government might argue that the 10-bed cushion it has given to small northern rural hospitals this year is dealing with that kind of flexibility. Frankly, I do not think it is good enough, because we do not know what is going to happen next year. Are these hospitals to continue having a 10-bed cushion or is it going to be denied next year? If it is going to be denied next year, are we going to be able to maintain viable hospital services?

The problem that a small hospital has, unlike a larger one, is that it cannot cut a ward, because it has only one ward. How do you cut a ward? You cannot lay off a technician, because you have only one technician. You cannot lay off nurses, because you only have enough to provide the one service now.

If I feel emotional about this, it is because I have dealt with small hospitals which have difficult times now in attracting doctors and in providing the services necessary. And what do we have? The government is cutting budgets to them.

Just look at some of the things we see in northwestern Ontario. Look at Kenora, Rainy River and Fort Frances. For La Verendrye Hospital, there is no budget increase this year. For Red Lake, there is an increase of only 0.87 per cent in money this year. When you consider that, you wonder what happened to the Ministry of Health's commitment that hospitals with fewer than 50 beds would receive at least a 5.3 per cent increase. Those hospitals do not have more than 50 beds. Red Lake, for instance, has only 44 beds now, and yet it is getting a 0.87 per cent increase. Why is it not getting the 5.3 per cent? That is true also in Geraldton District Hospital, Manitouwadge General Hospital and Nipigon District Memorial Hospital. The first two are not receiving any increase this year, and Nipigon is getting 3.6 per cent. Well, 3.6 per cent is not 5.3 per cent. I would like an explanation from somebody on that side as to the reason for this.

Altogether, these six rural hospitals from Geraldton to Terrace Bay are receiving only a 2.8 per cent overall increase in funding this year. I know the Speaker is interested in this. I would like to hear an explanation. How does the government justify it?

Throughout the north we have this problem, of course. Cochrane is being hit particularly hard. If you consider Bingham Memorial Hospital in Matheson or Anson General Hospital in Iroquois Falls, they also qualify for a 5.3 per cent increase, and yet they are receiving a zero increase.

The eight hospitals in Cochrane district have been the hardest hit: 71 beds are to go next year, or 141 altogether, if the small-hospital allowance of 10 beds is not taken into account; and we do not know that it will not be next year.

I would like to have some explanation from the people on that side. When they started off with a 4.5-bed-per-1,000 ratio a few years ago, that was completely arbitrary. They could not justify it at that time; now they are cutting it, and they do not give any justification.

Overall, we are getting a 3.6 per cent increase in funding for this year in northern Ontario. That is a long way from the eight per cent that was mentioned by the parliamentary assistant. It is not enough to have a general bed formula where you say 4.5, 4, 3.5 or whatever number of beds per 1,000 for a geographic area, because when you talk about the districts in northern Ontario you are talking about a lot bigger area than the counties that were mentioned by our colleagues from southwestern Ontario; and they've got problems. If you don't have the beds in Hornpayne and you don't have beds in White River or Wawa or Geraldton, it's a hell of a long way to Thunder Bay or Sault Ste. Marie.

I would like some explanation from over there.

Mr. McGuigan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to join this debate and to express the concerns of Four Counties Hospital at Newbury. This hospital is not in my riding. It is about four miles outside in the riding of the honourable member for Middlesex (Mr. Eaton). It serves four counties. About 50 per cent of the patients, I believe, come from the two townships in Elgin that I represent, approximately 40 per cent from the county of Middlesex and approximately 10 per cent from Lambton.

A total of 15,950 days of care were given from January 1, 1977 to March 31, 1978. This is one of a group of seven small hospitals in southwestern Ontario coming under group nine in the hospital statistics. These are hospitals with from one to 49 beds.

I note that only two of this group of seven have no chronic beds. I visited the hospital last Friday and talked with the administrator and with the nurse administrator. They tell me they have not sought chronic beds in the past because the area is well served with nursing homes.

In this hospital they do carry out a very extensive out-patient commitment. Their people go to the various nursing homes and assist them in their care of chronic patients so that they prevent bed sores and debilitating diseases such as those that result in rehabilitation care within the hospitals. So this hospital is going to the people.

While they do not require these chronic beds, or they have not in the past, they do require the finances to carry out this program. Now with the reduction of five beds, starting April 1 their budget is reduced by $60,000. By 1981 they are supposed to go down to 19 beds so they would have only a total of 26. This brings up the point the honourable member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Gaunt) brought up: when they reach that figure of 26, how economic will the hospital be? It will have lost economy of scale and will probably cease to exist; or at least the people certainly feel that.

This hospital has a somewhat different problem than those mentioned by other speakers. Their problem is not so much in active-treatment beds; their problem is a matter of having the finances to carry out their out-patient work.

I would mention that a number of years ago this hospital attracted a specialist from London who over the course of years attracted other specialists. Today we have people visiting the hospital on a daily basis—an eye man today, internist tomorrow, a bone specialist the next day and so on. These people come out from the city of London and do a great deal of their diagnostic work in that hospital, a hospital that operates on a cheaper per-bed item, than say in the city of London where some of these patients are eventually sent for very serious treatment. They receive the diagnostic evaluation in the smaller hospital because of these specialists coming out there. So they have a very active in-patient and out-patient program that is somewhat unique in the hospitals, so they tell me, in Ontario. This is carrying out, I believe, some of the aims of the ministry in that they talk of shifting from active-treatment beds to preventive medicine. This hospital has been carrying this out to a very high and excellent degree but the people find now that their finances are being threatened and they're very concerned.

Their occupancy rate is not as high as others that have been mentioned. It's about 80 per cent. They can possibly survive the five beds that they are going to lose on April 1, but they cannot survive the loss of money. I would point out, as others have pointed out, that the people are proud of the hospital and they regard the assaults on their hospital as an assault on a small community. They ask, if the hospital is reduced to only 26 beds, if the hospital will survive.

I understand that the board has asked the ministry for a team of officials to visit and examine the total operation of the hospital. They have told me that the honourable member for Middlesex has indicated that such a team exists and we would certainly urge that if this is so that work go forward.

Mr. McClellan: Send one up to Cochrane too.

Mr. Eaton: All you have to do is work on it.

Mr. Kerrio: Just think, we've got a champion looking after your hospital, Bob.

Mr. McGuigan: Mr. Speaker, I've been sent a petition from just over 50 local people and I received many letters, which I have in my hand. I'd like to read you one letter which I think eloquently expresses the—

Mr. McClellan: How many people?

Mr. McGuigan: About 50; just over 50. I'd like to read a letter that eloquently expresses the feelings of the local people.

It says: "As your constituent, I am respectfully submitting the following concerns for your action. As you are aware, the budget for the Ministry of Health has included the cutback of services of various hospitals, including that of Four Counties, Newbury, which serves your constituents. As a previous patient of that hospital, as a present volunteer member of the auxiliary of that hospital"—and this person goes on to list many activities within the community—"I urge you to use all the political clout you possess to halt the present cutbacks of hospital services especially in the area you represent."

The writer asks: "Have you personally noted the list of consultants"—I did this last Friday—"outside the door of the emergency room at Four Counties? Have you noted the varieties of disciplines from which they come? Have you computed the miles of travel and hours of heartaches of your constituents that have been saved by these services? Do you know that surgeons from London, the best, who have performed operations at this hospital also return the next day to check on their patients? Do you know what the daughters of many of your constituents have served and are now serving as candy strippers daily in that hospital? Do you know that as of April 1, 1979, five beds will be unavailable to your constituents and that in future months many more will 'be unavailable?" It just asks for acknowledgement of the letter, which I have done.

I would point out in closing that this hospital is somewhat different in its situation than others that have been mentioned but the people there have a very real concern for the quality of care that they can offer to their patients both in and without the hospital, and they have urged me, and I through you, Mr. Speaker, that the government seriously consider measures to maintain the very excellent services which this hospital has been able to perform.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, I'm trying to leave some time for another colleague of mine—

Mr. Eaton: Mr. Speaker, the rotation is going this way. We should be next.

Mr. Riddell: You really don't want to speak on Newbury, Bob, do you?

[5:45]

Mr. Eaton: Oh, yes, I do. I would like to continue and add a few remarks to what the member for Kent-Elgin has said in regard to Four Counties General Hospital because it is a very fine hospital and performs an excellent service in the community and will continue to perform that service.

Mr. Kerrio: Even if they have no beds.

Mr. Eaton: I suppose I reacted rather hastily, as I usually can when something like that comes up, and I expressed a few strong feelings to my friend, the Minister of Health, as I can. When someone reads in the paper that a hospital is going to be cut from 45 beds to 26, he naturally gets pretty damned concerned pretty quick—

Mr. McClellan: Doesn't the minister talk to you?

Mr. Eaton: —and gets a little hot over it. We went into the matter a bit and, as members know, they weren't cut that much in the first cut that was made. In fact, the budget worked out for this year not as $60,000 less, as the member for Kent-Elgin has stated, but they have a one per cent increase in their budget. With inflation, that's pretty hard to take. But I sat with the board and we discussed that and the board said: "We can live with that. We can do it." That's the attitude of the people in that community in regard to their hospital. They know they want to operate it. They know they can do it that way.

Mr. McClellan: Despite the government.

Mr. Eaton: The member for Kent-Elgin mentioned the chronic-care situation. It was indicated to them a number of years ago that they should be applying for chronic-care beds and the board did that at their last meeting. They have now applied for the chronic-care beds that will be necessary in that area. I understand from the ministry that they are going to be approved and that they will be supplied with those chronic-care beds, which will almost take up the number of beds that is being cut from active-care treatment. It just stands to reason if that's the kind of service that is being provided, a chronic-care situation, then that's the kind of beds they should be classified as.

In some instances in large hospitals, where a whole ward could be converted to that, it would probably mean fewer dollars in the budget because they can operate a complete ward for less money when it comes to chronic-care services. In the case of a small hospital, they are probably going to get the same dollars for the chronic-care bed as they are getting for the active-treatment bed, so they are still going to end up with the same budget. In fact, if there's an increase coming next year, they will be eligible for the same increase as other hospitals are based on their active-treatment beds and based on their chronic-care beds.

Mr. Bradley: That ought to make them happy.

Mr. Eaton: That's right. It should. The member can be sarcastic but when we sat down and examined the situation and worked out with the ministry what was really happening, we are going to have as many dollars for that hospital. We are going to have the increases that are going to be necessary each year to operate that hospital and we can continue to provide the services that are being provided there now. They are fine services and the people have a very great right to be proud of what they have developed in that area.

Mr. Sterling: And proud of their member.

Mr. Eaton: One can go a little farther. I think one of the members over there referred to the fact that there are many people coming from Brantford to his hospital and they weren't considering the people that came from outside there. When I saw the first figures for our hospital down there in Newbury, I reacted the same way. I said, "Jesus, there are more people in that area than that."

We sat down and examined it. The ministry has the exact figures of how many people came out of Wardsville and went to that hospital, how many people came out of Wardsville and went to London, how many went to Chatham. It is the same thing for the townships in the area of the member for Kent-Elgin. They know exactly how many are involved in the particular area and have worked it out very well.

When we sit down calmly and work at this, when we work with the boards, then the situations can be worked out. I think if some of the other members who have reacted in the same way as I probably did in the first instance would sit down and work their way through these, we can find that the hospitals can still continue to provide the services. I don't think that anyone on this side or that side wants to see any health services cut in any way. What we are interested in is seeing that health care is delivered efficiently in those areas. It can be done and it will be done—

Mr. Foulds: And humanely. It is a humane thing. Didn't you hear the member for Fort William? Humanitarian.

Mr. Eaton: —with the administration of our Minister of Health and this government. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Windsor-Riverside? The member for Lakeshore—finally.

Mr. Lawlor: Thank you. I shall try to be brief and allow time for my colleague.

May I just put it rather bluntly to the minister in the empty spot he is occupying over there—I mean the blankness that I received from him this day is just about equal to the hiatus that exists as I look across the floor. You get about as much response in one circumstance as in another, so it doesn't really matter very much whether he is here or not, does it, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Hennessy: He is, Pat, you can't see him.

Mr. Lawlor: The minister is making a very bad mistake in closing Lakeshore. He only has three psychiatric hospitals in this greater Toronto region serving as far out as Halton, including south Halton. He just won't have the capacity in a very short time, certainly in two or three years, to—I find it much more palatable talking to him this way than I have to do normally.

Mr. Breaugh: He is much more intelligent.

Mr. Roy: Well, he is doing just as well there as he did in the question period this afternoon.

Mr. Lawlor: I have to do this quickly. So I say the minister hasn't got the capacity. The figures are all set out for him in a brief submitted to his office, and which I trust he has looked at, by the union involved.

Mr. M. Davidson: I wonder where he is.

Mr. Bradley: He is here in person.

Mr. Lawlor: At page two, they say—indeed, this is a quotation from your own McKinsey report—ah, here he is. Now, I may as well sit down.

According to the McKinsey report—indeed at least as measured by in-patient beds, by international standards—both Ontario and greater Toronto have already reached a minimal level of psychiatric hospital resources. I quote: “We believe it would be unwise to plan on a reduction on the rate of admissions to cut the growth in beds needed at any of the psychiatric hospitals, especially Lakeshore.”

Then, if the minister would peruse what is contained on page 24 of this brief: “It is seriously questionable whether Queen Street will be able to cope with the physical transfer of 296 patients and 286 staff to its facilities. Despite all official claims of excess capacity at Queen Street, the government’s own study indicates that there are only 125 to 150 beds realistically available to accommodate the transfer.

“Originally built for 700 beds, Queen Street has 416 beds currently set up and staffed, leaving 284 beds theoretically available. However, of these 284 beds, 68 are dedicated already to Metro court referrals for assessments and cannot be used.

“The use of another 138 beds would require the physical relocation of several programs and interfere with the utilization of the psycho-geriatrics unit in the 1956 building and, therefore, only one third to two thirds of these could be used and only with difficulty. Only 78 of the beds could be used without disruption. That brings the number of beds that could realistically be available to 125 to 150.” This was borne out in further figures contained later on.

I recommend to the minister and have recommended and will continue to recommend to the minister that, first of all, he cannot place human lives over against a balanced budget and that is precisely what he is doing. The impersonality and the arbitrariness of the whole thing—

Mr. Riddell: That’s right.

Mr. Lawlor: —and the impact on mental health care—which is what I am concerned with today—is just too great in terms of human suffering and the minister is responsible for that.

What I recommend he does is not move in with new facilities immediately. But he says there will be no capital expenditures throughout the 1980s. That is totally absurd. There must be fairly substantial capital expenditures on hospital construction, renovation and whatnot throughout the 1980s. So, don’t move in on Lakeshore immediately; use a phasing or a planning concept. If the minister wants to take down one of the older buildings, let him place a smaller hospital or some portion of a smaller hospital on those very extensive grounds. It doesn’t have to use all the grounds by any means. In 10 years’ time—or, trusting that the economic conditions will improve, in lesser time—the minister would have a 150-bed hospital there; he would take down the other buildings gradually and phase it in.

That would save the minister all his difficulties with respect to this out-patient scare. In my opinion, he is just not going to find the facilities in Lakeshore to accommodate the Alcoholics Anonymous unit, the utilization of the vocational and therapeutic training that people presently get on the grounds—and, incidentally, in fairly new buildings too, which the minister is going to have to raze to the ground.

Why does the minister not work it in a far more intelligent and long-sighted fashion? Unless he has a peculiar animus against Lakeshore, or even possibly against me, he would reconsider his position in that light. He would give further thought to how this could be worked out with retention of the present facilities without the disruption he is going to cause and leaving his own hand short, because he is going to spend five times as much money in capital expenditures by 1985 on a location somewhere else. We are going to have to buy new land because he will find that he is going to be dreadfully short of hospital beds and the dearth will come home. He may not be the minister at the time but he must look forward. It is his responsibility now.

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, in the last few minutes available to us, I join this debate and express the concern that many of the members of the Legislature have expressed this afternoon, whether it be on matters that directly affect their own constituency as they relate to the closing down and cutback of certain areas of hospitals, or whether it be on a province-wide basis.

I had the opportunity to sit for a number of years on a hospital board in the city of St. Catharines and saw evolving the financial problems which hospitals are running into. The member for Middlesex (Mr. Eaton) mentioned that the members of hospital boards had the opportunity to analyse what the province was doing over the years, and that to a certain extent they were prepared to live within the confines. Few of us would deny the fact that there was a need for a rationalization of services, that there was a need to move towards efficiency.

At the same time, I think we recognize, certainly from the input of our own constituents, that the public by and large supports extensive expenditures in the field of health, for the purposes of health care and specifically for hospital facilities within communities. This is something I think we have to keep in mind, because the public, while it may not tolerate expenditures in other areas—and I heard the member for Fort William mention that people can do without certain other services—I think we would have to recognize that the public sees as at least within the top three essential services being provided through the auspices of the provincial government, indirectly or directly, the provision of health care services.

I think we see frustration at these cutbacks in those who are involved directly in delivery of medical care services, because the potential is very great. We have evolved and developed in this province an excellent health care system. Many from other jurisdictions in North America and certainly across this world look upon us with a good deal of envy. We have the potential to further develop this to a great extent, except that we have the possibility of losing good medical people to other areas when they see extensive cutbacks, when they become frustrated by the fact that the equipment may not be available, the facilities are not available, and that the potential exists in other areas to a greater extent than in our own.

We also look at the fact that research in this particular province has a lot of potential and that if there were funds available for the facilities for this research we would attract even more people to the province of Ontario and to our country to provide services that would be excellent for those of us who live in the province.

So I urge the Minister of Health to re-examine very carefully the program of cutbacks that he has announced from time to time and that he take into consideration the feelings of the people of Ontario as expressed through their members in this assembly that we want to see a high level of service continue in this province. It can continue if we are prepared to fund it efficiently, yes, and rationally, yes, but fund it also in a humane manner so that the cuts that are made are not made at the front line. They are becoming very noticeable particularly to those at the nursing level, the actual care level. When the minister is looking at cutbacks, and he must, of course, look over the shoulders of local authorities, he can ensure that some of the administration shares those cuts which are forced.

So I plead with the minister, and with the members opposite to put the pressure on the minister, to maintain an excellent health care system in this province, one which is supported by the people and certainly by the opposition in this House.

Mr. Speaker: The time allocated for this debate has expired.

The House recessed at 6 p.m.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPERNON-RESIDENT LAND TRANSFER OR SPECULATION TAX

1. Mr. Ziembra: What are the names, addresses and realty transactions receiving exemptions or deferrals by way of application directly to the Ministry of Revenue itself with respect to the Ontario non-resident land transfer and/or speculation tax? What are the addresses of the exempted properties and the reasons for the exemptions? [First tabled November 17, 1978. Interim answer December 1, 1978. Tabled March 6, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Questions similar to the above have been asked on three occasions in the past by the honourable member. The ministry has answered these questions. The present question asks for the provision of additional information to that provided in the answers to earlier questions. The additional information is not readily available without a review by the ministry of each file. Such a review would, in the opinion of the ministry, entail the probable cost in time and effort of approximately $10,000. The ministry does not feel that in view of the information already supplied, the additional cost is justified; but the ministry will be pleased to provide any additional detail required by the honourable member for any of the specific properties about which information has been given in the answers previously provided by the ministry to similar questions from the member, or for other properties to which his question may now refer.

LOTTERY FUNDS

3. Mr. Grande: Will the Minister of Culture and Recreation table: I. (a) the amount of Wintario funds coming in from the Ontario Lottery Corporation to the General Revenue Fund on a monthly basis, beginning from November 1, 1977, to the end of October 1978; (b) table for the same months, November 1977 to October 1978, the capital commitments the ministry has made on a monthly basis; (c) the non-capital commitments; (d) the actual money that has been sent out in capital and non-capital grants for those months. II. Since the Ontario government receives 50 cents per Loto Canada ticket sold in Ontario, will the minister responsible table what funds were passed from the federal government to the Ontario government in the last three years? Will the minister also inform as to what specific purpose these funds have been used for? [First tabled November 9, 1978. Interim answer November 23, 1978. Tabled March 6, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Answer to question 3 I(a): Amount of Wintario funds from Ontario Lottery Corporation to general revenue fund:

Months	Funds
Nov. '77	$ 6,000,000
Dec. '77	3,000,000
Jan. '78	9,000,000
Feb. '78	4,000,000
Mar. '78	8,000,000
April '78	3,000,000
May '78	8,000,000
June '78	4,000,000
July '78	4,000,000
Aug. '78	2,000,000
Sept. '78	6,000,000
Oct. '78	2,000,000
Total	$59,000,000

Answer to question 3 I(b):

Wintario capital commitments:

Year	Month	($000s)
1977	November	5,521.3
	December	5,743.1
1978	January	4,370.4
	February	3,589.2

	October	7,869.7
	Total for
	12-month period	$61,834.3

Answer to question 3 I(c):

The ministry does not enter into "commitments" on the Wintario non-capital program. Grants for Wintario non-capital projects are processed and paid as they receive approval.

Answer to question 3 I(d):

(1) Wintario grant payments — monthly totals November 1977 to March 31, 1978.

Months	Capital	Non-Capital	Total
November 1977	5,542,421.10	1,164,886.60	6,707,307.70
December 1977	3,703,520.65	524,875.31	4,228,395.96

August 1978	2,882,923.18	1,434,969.60	4,317,892.78
September 1978	5,172,190.47	1,309,441.22	6,481,631.69
October 1978	2,574,346.36	913,298.22	3,487,644.58

Sub-total — April October 1978—34,492,332.27

Grand Total $62,621,319.23

Answer to question 3 II:

Revenue from Loto Canada is remitted to the province on the basis of 12½ per cent of net proceeds on the tickets sold in the province.

Revenue has been remitted as follows:

December 31, 1976	688,000.00
March 31, 1977	388,827.00
June 30, 1977	553,499.00
January 3, 1978	1,089,102.00
March 31, 1978	752,360.00
June 30, 1978	620,266.00
October 4, 1978	495,220.00
January 2, 1979	779,945.00
	$5,367,210.00

Final arrangements in regard to the use of these funds have not yet been concluded.

WINTARIO GRANTS

4. Mr. Grande: Will the Minister of Culture and Recreation table a report on the 23 golf and country club applications for Wintario capital grants including the following information and documentation: (a) the amount of the grant given; (b) any or all documentation between the ministry and the principal agents of the golf club from the receipt of the application up to and including the letter of final approval; (c) any or all post-audits that have been done by the ministry in order to satisfy itself that the golf clubs in question have applied the moneys granted for the purpose for which the grant was given; (d) any information, documentation or both which indicate what steps the ministry has taken if the post-audit was not satisfactory? [First tabled December 4, 1978. Tabled March 6, 1979.]

7. Mr. Grande: Will the Minister of Culture and Recreation table a report on the 30 yacht and sailing recreation amenities applications and on the 29 flying club applications for Wintario capital grants including the following information and documentation: (a) the amount of the grant given; (b) all documentation between the ministry and the principal agents of the establishments in question from the receipt of the application up to and including the final letter of approval; (c) all post-audits that have been done by the ministry in order to satisfy itself that the moneys allowed have been applied for the purpose for which the grant was given; (d) any information, documentation or both, which indicate what steps the ministry has taken if the post-audits were not satisfactory? [First tabled December 5, 1978. Tabled March 6, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Answers to questions 4 and 7:

Each Wintario capital project file contains all documentation between the ministry and principal agents of the organizations from receipt of applications up to and including the letter of final approval. Documents would include the application form submitted to the ministry field office, any correspondence between applicant and field consultants, internal memoranda, records of approvals, further correspondence between the applicant and ministry, breakdowns of cost, certifications of private support and other sources of funding, in many cases submission of all bills and invoices, letters of endorsement by municipal officials and statutory agreements where applicable.

Because of the size of the files, it is simply not practicable to table the requested information. However, the ministry would be pleased to make available for inspection by honourable members any specific file.

Every Wintario grant is subject to three kinds of scrutiny:

Ministry inspection: All documentation is inspected by ministry staff both in the community and at Queen's Park. Capital projects in particular are examined for their relevance to community need, community support, public participation and ability of the applicant organization to handle ongoing operating costs, among other concerns. The ministry has paid particular attention to situations where public access and participation may be in question, and has entered into legal agreements with such organizations to ensure acceptable terms and conditions relating to these issues. Any breach in these agreements may result in the ministry requesting that the Wintario grant be returned.

Ministry audit: The ministry internal audit unit performs regular audits of Wintario grant recipients, selected on a stratified random sampling basis. The audit goes beyond the normal financial audit of an organization's records and includes an audit of compliance to any terms and conditions agreed to by the organization when receiving a Wintario grant. Internal audit reports are made available to the provincial auditor, who reports directly to the Legislature.

Public scrutiny: A press release is issued to announce every Wintario grant. The release is sent to all media in the community to help ensure that the public is made aware of the facilities and projects which Wintario has assisted. Any citizen having knowledge of any inappropriate use of Wintario funds is encouraged to contact the ministry so that a formal audit may be undertaken and compliance assured.

HERITAGE LANGUAGE PROGRAM

5. Mr. Grande: Now that the Heritage Language Program has been in operation for a full year and the former Minister of Education stated that a full review of the program would be done in order to ascertain whether a change in the funding formula is indicated, would the Minister of Education table the review and also table any communications the ministry has had with boards of education across the province and responses to that communication? [First tabled December 4, 1978. Table March 6, 1979.]

Hon. Miss Stephenson: A "full review of the program" has not yet been completed because it was felt that the program has not been in existence long enough for a valid assessment to be made. Also, there has not been extensive communications between the ministry and local boards subsequent to the initial announcement dealing exclusively with the Heritage Language Program.

However, the funding formula has been reviewed by officials of the Ministry of Education as part of the continuous reviews of all parts of the general legislative grants provisions. Over the past year, special attention has been given to continuing education funding, which includes Heritage Language funding, and as a result, changes will be made in the funding of summer school programs effective July 1979, and the Heritage Languages Program and driver education classes effective September 1979.

The work that has been done with specific reference to the Heritage Language funding has included an internal ministry review of the cost of the program and the funding provisions. A survey prepared by the Association of Continuing Education School Board Administrators with respect to the actual cost of instructional salaries related to heritage language classes is attached.

ESL PROGRAMS

6. Mr. Grande: I. Will the Minister of Education inform the House how Metro Toronto Board of Education disposed of the $3 million that were generated from the English as a Second Language grant formula for the academic year 1978-1979? II. Will the Minister of Education report as to the status of the negotiations between the provincial government and the federal government on the proposal of the ministry that there is a need in English as a Second Language costing about $20 million? Will the minister table any communication and reports from the ministry officials on these negotiations? [First tabled December 5, 1978. Tabled March 6, 1979.]

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I. The language instruction weighting factor introduced by the Ministry of Education in 1978 generated $6.9 million for the Metropolitan Toronto School Board for the 1978 calendar year—$4.9 million at the elementary school level and $2 million at the secondary school level. This revised approach to weighting factors provided the Metropolitan Toronto School Board with an additional $3 million in respect of English as a Second Language programs and services for the 1978 calendar year.

These revenues, including the $3 million, were used by the Metropolitan Toronto School Board to offset the cost of teachers, supplies and support services for English as a Second Language programs. The number of English as a Second Language teachers employed by the six area boards as of September 1978 was approximately 252 at the elementary school level and 130 at the secondary school level.

II. At present, there are no negotiations between the Ministry of Education and the federal government for financial assistance for English as a Second Language. We are, however, pursuing the issue through the Council of Ministers of Education.

My predecessor as Minister of Education had informal discussions with Mr. Roberts, the Secretary of State, on several occasions in 1977 and 1978. The response to our request for funding assistance was negative. Mr. Roberts had indicated that this problem should be discussed between the federal government and all the provincial Ministries of Education. Because of the federal government's unwillingness to provide funds in response to Ontario's request we are taking this approach through the council of ministers.

This matter has been discussed by the Advisory Committee of the Council of Ministers of Education. I am tabling for information in this connection the summary of provincial positions on funding of ESL programmes prepared by the secretariat of the council of ministers.

COUNCIL OF MINISTERS OF EDUCATION, CANADA

19th Advisory Committee Meeting,
August 23-24, 1978

Topic: Federal funding for children of immigrant parents.

Item No. 15.

Reference: Attached.

Source: Ontario—Education.

Budget Implications: None.

Background: At the 18th advisory committee meeting, the Deputy Minister of Education in Ontario raised the subject of possible collective action in seeking federal funding for educating children of immigrant parents.

In order to get a clearer picture, the advisory committee directed the secretariat to prepare a summary of provincial positions for further discussion by the advisory committee. From the information received, it seems that Saskatchewan and Nova Scotia have signed agreements with the federal government, Alberta, Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec have not yet signed, and the provinces of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island do not find the financial problems associated with the education of immigrant children to be a significant one for their respective governments.

A summary of the responses received is set out below:

Saskatchewan: The Saskatchewan Department of Education identifies two problems relating to costs associated with the education of children of immigrant parents. The first involves the situation where immigrants of a "refugee" situation are placed in a province by the federal government. As this situation involves entire families in a resettlement program, full support and training for all members of the family, including school-age children, should be financed by the federal government on a project basis.

The second situation involves school-age children of landed immigrant parents, to whose children the requirement of teaching English as a second language is necessary. The Department of Education feels that as a reflection of federal immigrant policies, a cost-sharing formula for the education of school-age children of immigrant parents should be considered covering probably the first two years after arrival.

Alberta: Alberta has not yet signed an immigration agreement with Canada, but has concerns regarding the provision of services to the several categories of immigrants to the province. Alberta's concerns focus generally on the broader issue of providing required settlement services to immigrants. A significant dimension of settlement services is of course the education of children of immigrant parents and the provision of language training for adult members of the family.

In providing educational services to the children of landed immigrants, Alberta has adopted the position that since school-age children are required by law to attend school and since language training forms a part of our general education program, the matter remains a provincial responsibility. However, where immigrants arrive in Alberta under strictly federal auspices, the province would favour federal assistance for language instruction under a funding arrangement which clearly safeguards the provincial education jurisdiction against federal intrusion.

Alberta is in the process of opening negotiations concerning their citizenship training and textbook agreement with Canada. Under the current agreement, the province recovers 50 per cent of salary costs for providing English as a Second Language (ESL) training and a five-year averaged cost for providing textual materials for these programs. Federal support under the current agreement is considered to be inadequate.

Manitoba: Studies done in the province of Manitoba indicate that the province receives a significantly large number of immigrants speaking neither French nor English and that Manitoba's expenses related to the education of students of immigrant parents is quite substantial.

Whereas no new agreement with the federal government has been signed, a number of changes are being proposed by Manitoba. These changes are intended to obtain greater assistance from the federal government in meeting the costs associated with providing immigrant services through the provision of social services and language training.

For your information and reference, the detailed report on this subject prepared by the provincial immigration co-ordinator is attached as Appendix I to this summary.

Ontario: Financial assistance was requested at the federal-provincial meeting held in Ottawa on December 2, 1976. No further discussions have been held on the matter.

An independent request was made by the Board of Education of the borough of Scarborough to the Honourable Bud Cullen, Minister of Employment and Immigration on September 16, 1977. The school board was advised that his department could not provide funds.

In 1978, the Ministry of Education, Ontario, established a weighting factor that recognized the cost of providing additional language instruction for new Canadians in English and French. The new weighting factor recognizes the additional cost of providing instruction for new Canadians programs and services that are in excess of the cost of a basic level of four teachers per 10,000 elementary pupils and two teachers per 10,000 secondary pupils. The cost to the province in 1978 is estimated to be $8 million and this amount is in addition to the basic expenditure ceilings of $1,299 per pupil elementary and $1,841 per pupil secondary.

Quebec: The Ministry of Education authorized school boards to establish various integration procedures for children of immigrant parents who might have difficulty adapting to the school system because their knowledge of the French language is insufficient.

The provisions include: Full-time integration kindergarten for four- and five-year-olds (normally kindergarten classes accept only five-year-olds and for half-days only); integration classes for children at the primary and secondary levels; various individual integration arrangements for cases in which the number of students does not warrant setting up integration classes.

The Ministry of Education also established a co-ordinating board for integration classes (Bureau de co-ordination des classes d'accueil).

The additional costs entailed by these provisions are fully supported by grants from the Ministry of Education. An allocation of approximately $10,000,000 has been made for this project, as well as an additional $2,000,000 for transportation costs.

The Ministry of Education did not enter into negotiations with the federal government concerning this matter, but stands ready to participate in any meeting which the Council of Ministers of Education, Canada, would arrange with the federal immigration authorities.

New Brunswick: It appears that this particular problem is not a relevant one for New Brunswick, with the possible exception of one school district in which children of parents immigrating from Portugal received special curriculum materials provided at additional cost to the school district.

Prince Edward Island: The number of children (0 to 17 years) of immigrant parents coming to Prince Edward Island annually is quite low. The costs of educating these children are absorbed by the province in the same manner as the educational costs of regular non-immigrant children. School boards within the province do charge tuition for the education of students who now qualify for landed immigrant status.

Comments by the secretariat: The advisory committee may wish to consider the following alternatives: 1. That an interested ministry develop a discussion paper on this subject for the consideration of provincial officials who would be brought together to discuss the issue and to develop recommendations for the consideration of the advisory committee; 2. that no collective action be taken and that each province agree to share information on developments in their respective jurisdictions through the secretariat.

CHILDREN'S MENTAL HEALTH CENTRES

62. Mr. Breugh: What new programs are available to establish children's mental health centres? Are any financial incentives being proposed? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Norton: The Ministry of Community and Social Services has previously announced its intention to develop children's mental health capacity in special areas such as for francophone populations, particularly in the east and north, and for the native peoples of the north. Financing, albeit at a moderate level, is available for such programs, and indeed I would draw your attention to the successful development of programs in the counties of Prescott-Russell and Renfrew, and in the north.

CHILDREN'S MENTAL HEALTH RESEARCH

63. Mr. Breugh: What programs are available to undertake research into treatment effectiveness and costs for children's mental health centres? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Norton: A great diversity in both treatment philosophies and the nature of agencies responsible for provision of services makes a simple answer impossible. Children's mental health services are provided to children in an age range from pre-school to early adulthood, and for a variety of problems ranging from the very special and unique, such as autism, through to more broadly defined emotional disorders. A vast majority of agencies are operated by private boards which, individually, have the responsibility for program effectiveness. In many cases, program evaluation is identified as a separate activity for the agency. One of the reasons for the creation of the children's services division was to improve our ability both to understand and manage programs so that effective improvements could be achieved.

The division is at present developing a policy on research and has been awarded $4 million of provincial lottery money to be spent on research.

CHILDREN'S MENTAL HEALTH PROGRAMS

64. Mr. Breugh: What new programs for children's mental health are being established to correct or prevent early child development problems? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Norton: The correction or prevention of early childhood development problems is a matter requiring application of many disciplines. The children's services division has commissioned Dr. Naomi Rae-Grant, a prominent child psychiatrist with a strong academic background, to produce a paper on prevention. Resulting from this paper the division will be identifying ongoing areas for both new funding and possible reallocation for prevention activities, including early childhood development problems.

KINDERGARTEN CLASSES

86. Mr. Grande: Will the Minister of Education table all the research that was undertaken by Boards of Education across this province that ran one or more senior kindergarten class on a full-day basis? In particular, will the ministry table any reports or research articles from those boards of education which the ministry funded to provide all-day kindergarten classes? [Tabled March 8, 1979.]

Hon. Miss Stephenson: The Ministry of Education is not aware of any research conducted by boards of education pertaining to full-day senior kindergarten classes. However, the ministry has undertaken one research project in this area—Kindergarten Programs: Effects of Regular Half Day, Alternate Full Day, Daily Full Day Programs—A. Biemiller, Principal Investigator and a copy of the report including an abstract is attached. (See sessional paper 21.)

ASSISTANCE TO STUDENTS

89. Mr. Cooke: Will the Minister of Colleges and Universities table the following: (a) the average dollar value of grants and loans received by students under the OSAP program in the year 1978-79; (b) the mean dollar value of the grants and loans received by students under the OSAP program in the year

1978-79; (c) the number of males receiving: (i) grants, (ii) loans; (d) the number of females receiving: (i) grants, (ii) loans; (e) the average combined income of the parents of the students that received: (i) grants, (ii) loans; (g) the comparable figures for the above for the academic year 1977-78? [Tabled March 8, 1979.]

Hon. Miss Stephenson:

(a) As at February 28, 1979:

Average and value of grants

Average $ value of loans (both CSL and OSLP) for students who received both grants and loan assistance

Average $ value of loans (both CSL and OSLP) for students who were eligible for loan assistance only

$1,553

$861

$1,759

As at May 31, 1978:

Average $ value of grants

Average $ value of loans (both CSL and OSLP) for students who received both grant and loan assistance

$1,063

$1,059

(b) As the word "MEAN" is synonymous with the word "AVERAGE", the answer to (b) would appear to be the same as the answer to (a)

(c) As at February 28, 1979

Number of MALES receiving

(i) Grants 21,595

(ii) CSL and/or OSLP Loans 16,575

As at May 31, 1978

Number of MALES receiving

(i) Grants 32,331

(ii) CSL and/or OSLP Loans 10,839

(d) As at February 28, 1979

Number of FEMALES receiving

(i) Grants 23,813

(ii) CSL and/or OSLP Loans 11,730

As at May 31, 1978

Number of FEMALES Receiving

(i) Grants 29,438

(ii) CSL and/or OSLP Loans 8,543

(e) As at February 28, 1979

Average combined income of the parents of students that received

(i) Grant Assistance $13,562

(ii) CSL and/or OSLP Assistance only $20,596

As at May 31, 1978

Average combined income of the parents of students that received

(i) Grant Assistance $11,175

(ii) CSL and/or OSLP Assistance only $16,225

(f) As the word "MEAN" is synonymous with the word "AVERAGE" the answer to (f) would appear to be the same as the answer to (e)

(g) The figures identified above for May 31, 1978 represent the final figures for the academic year 1977-78.

PATIENT ABUSE

90. Mr. Blundy: How many investigations into resident abuse at each and all provincial institutions took place in 1978? What were the charges laid in each case and how many ministry employees were held culpable of the charges? Who or what agency conducted the investigation in each case? What was the outcome of each charge, ie. suspension, reinstatement, total absolution, further charges, further investigation? [Tabled March 8, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Norton: In 1978 the ministry undertook 12 separate investigations involving 28 incidents of resident abuse or suspected cases of resident abuse in provincially operated facilities for the mentally retarded. The following charges were laid in each case:

Nature of Instance	Number of Instances	Facility
• Placing tape across the mouth of a resident	(1)	Huronia Regional Centre
• Striking residents	(18)	(8) Rideau Regional Centre (4) Northwestern Regional Centre (1) Prince Edward Heights (1) Midwestern Regional Centre (1) Huronia Regional Centre (1) CPRI (1) Southwestern Regional Centre (1) Muskoka Regional Centre
• Provoking residents to strike each other	(2)	Northwestern Regional Centre
• Sexual intercourse with female residents	(2)	(1) Muskoka Centre (1) Rideau Regional Centre
• Cigarette burns inflicted on residents	(2)	Rideau Regional Centre
• Pouring cold water on a resident	(1)	Northwestern Regional Centre
• Lacerated penis	(1)	Rideau Regional Centre
• Crushed penis	(1)	Rideau Regional Centre

It should be noted that in the case of Rideau Regional Centre, Smiths Falls, of the 13 instances of resident abuse, 11 of these were attributed to one employee. Further, at Northwestern Regional Centre, Thunder Bay, of the seven incidents outlined above, all eleven were attributed to one employee.

Twelve employees were implicated in the foregoing incidents of alleged resident abuse. All 28 incidents were thoroughly investigated by senior ministry personnel while the Ontario Provincial Police or the respective local police force conducted their own investigation into 23 of the 28 alleged instances of abuse. In the remaining five cases, senior ministry officials did not feel that the allegations warranted the involvement of the police, as a result of their own investigation at the time.

The outcome of the ministry investigations was as follows: three dismissals; two removals from work without pay for extended periods of time; four written warnings; three allegations not proven due to insufficient evidence.

(Note: charges were laid by the police in five of the above-mentioned incidents of abuse.)

It should be pointed out that two employees were involved in 18 of the 28 reported incidents of resident abuse. Both of these individuals have since been dismissed by the ministry although one has grieved his dismissal before the grievance settlement board.

In addition to the above, it should be noted that at the request of the ministry the criminal investigation branch of the Ontario Provincial Police conducted an in-depth investigation into a number of alleged resident abuse incidents at Huronia Regional Centre. The Ontario Provincial Police were unable to substantiate any of the allegations due to a lack of evidence. This investigation was the subject of a statement made by the minister in the Legislature on March 8, 1979.

UTDC TENDERS

91. Mr. Philip: Will the ministry provide details of all tenders for which UTDC has successfully bid? Will the ministry also provide details of all tenders for which UTDC has unsuccessfully bid? In all cases, will the ministry provide the total value of the contract and details of what was or is to be developed or built as a result of the contract? In cases where UTDC was unsuccessful, will the ministry provide all details of the successful tender? [Tabled March 13, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Snow: Because of the difficulty of preparing a response in the time permitted, the final response will be introduced on or about April 10, 1979.

LAKE ST. CLAIR COMMERCIAL FISHING

92. Mr. Bounsall: For the last full year (1969) of commercial fishing on Lake St. Clair, would the Ministry of Natural Resources indicate the different types of nets used and the numbers of different species of fish taken in each of the lot divisions of the lake; the number and names of the active hoop net fishermen, pound net fishermen, and seine net fishermen, and in what lot areas they fished, how much did the government pay to each of the active commercial fishermen and of the $250,000 paid by Dow, which fishermen received what amounts? (Tabled March 13, 1978)

Hon. Mr. Auld: In 1969, the Lake St. Clair fishery used pound-nets, hoop-nets, seine and baited-hook lines (trot lines).

By long-standing agreement with the industry, the ministry does not publicize the details of individual fishermen's catches. Attached is a table showing landings by species for the years 1966-70. Following is a table showing the names of active licensees in 1969, the gear type for which each held licences, and the lots on which each fished when this was applicable. Loans to all fishermen on Lake St. Clair totalled $237,445 in fiscal year 1970-71, $180,504 in 1971-72, and $90,067 in 1972-73. Details of individual loans are shown in public accounts as follows:

1970-71 Page 11-15
 1971-72 Vol. III, Pages 80, 81
 1972-73 Vol. III, Page 101

The ministry was not informed of the division of funds paid by Dow.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, MARCH 27, 1979

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

RESIDENTIAL PREMISES RENT REVIEW AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Drea moved second reading of Bill 20, An Act to amend the Residential Premises Rent Review Act, 1975.

Hon. Mr. Drea: It is really self-explanatory. It extends the provisions of the current rent review act for another 90 days to enable the committee to continue its deliberations on Bill 163.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, I think this is perhaps the fourth time we have been called upon to extend this legislation because of the continuing involvement of the committee and of the House in the procedure which is currently going on with respect to Bill 163.

We recognize, of course, it is necessary to ensure the whole project of rent review continues without interruption or delay to have this kind of an extension until the new legislation is in place. As a result, of course, this bill is in the tradition of the one line bills that require a certain extension. We will, of course, support the bill and I hope, particularly being the critic although not a member of the committee which is currently continuing the discussions with respect to Bill 163, that bill will soon be reported back to the House with the hopes that a continuation of rent review will be in place as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member for Scarborough-Ellesmere.

Mr. Ruston: The one and only.

Mr. Warner: There's only one member for Scarborough-Ellesmere here. Mr. Speaker, we will be supporting Bill 20, in a spirit of co-operation of course. It is to be understood, of course, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure you understand, this bill is made necessary because of the seriously flawed bill which the committee has before it, Bill 163. I think members of the committee understand the bill is quite substantial and we're not likely to see, before the committee or before this assembly, major changes to the Landlord and Tenant Act for some time. I think all members in the assembly can appreciate that if we are to make needed changes in the legislation and ensure those changes will benefit the tenants of the province of Ontario, time must be taken and care must be given to ensure the legislation is the very best we can get. Therefore, that is going to take a while. Unfortunately, the bill we were handed was not as good as it perhaps should have been so the extension becomes legally necessary. That is why we have Bill 20 in front of us today. So we will support Bill 20, which makes the extension and allows us to carry on our work in the committee with Bill 163. Hopefully, in the not-too-distant future that work will be completed and the bill reported back to the House. We support Bill 20.

Mr. Nixon: There are many things for which I personally am grateful. Near the top of the list is that I have never had to sit on a committee dealing with the series of abominations—these bills the member has brought forward—which have complicated the whole aspect of rent review to such a great degree.

Did it ever occur to the minister that the two concepts might very well have been separated so that we would not have to deal with these individual bills in this specific way? Landlord and tenant relationship and the law pertaining to it, as the minister knows far better than I, and my colleagues know far better than the minister, is a complex matter. It has been before this House for a decade in its more recent emanations, and even longer.

It seems really—and I feel this often as House leader—that we're asking a great deal of our colleagues when they have to sit month after month after month—

Mrs. Campbell: Year after year.

Mr. Nixon: My learned colleague, and friend, corrects me—year after year dealing with the intricacies of the changes that the minister, in his wisdom, has put before this House, and which apparently have been so unacceptable to the community and to many members of the committee.

My colleague, the member for Kitchener (Mr. Breithaupt)—he's always an optimist—has expressed the hope that the bill from the committee will be before this House. I forget his words but—

Mr. Breithaupt: I think "soon" was assumed.

Mr. Nixon: "Soon", perhaps, is the word he used.

Sensing the emanations from the representatives of all parties, but particularly the socialist party, I doubt if we will see this until June. I have a feeling that we may even commission the committee to deal with this matter for a further series of weeks during the summer. I really think that is an atrocious thing the minister is asking the House to do. I really think that's so.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Would you like me to withdraw the bill?

Mr. Nixon: I really regret that he could not have brought forward a landlord and tenant bill that could have moved forward in the grand traditions that have been recorded in the Hansard records of this House by Vernon Singer, QC and so many other learned and advanced spokesmen on these matters.

As a House leader, and I think perhaps my colleague the government House leader would agree, I hesitate to ask my colleagues to work on that committee which has gone on for so many months.

Hon. Mr. Drea: It hasn't gone on for so many months.

Mr. Nixon: It's certainly gone on for more than a year. This is the fourth time we've had this kind of artificial extension. I just think it is really a shame the way the government has dealt with the situation.

Mr. Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak to the bill? If not, the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Just to set the matter straight for the House leader of the opposition party: First of all, the decision to bring forward the Residential Tenancies Act, which combined the existing Landlord and Tenant Act and rent review, was a decision made by all three parties. I draw that to his attention.

Mr. Hennessy: That's right.

Hon. Mr. Drea: It was a decision made in the committee report.

Mr. Nixon: You should have had the initiative to cut them.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I wasn't the minister then.

Mr. Nixon: You are now.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I just draw to the member's attention that the bill, in the combination form it is in now, was brought forward by all three parties. Second, there has been—

Mr. Foulds: Too bad you don't take all of our suggestions.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I take a great many of them, like this afternoon's. I would say this, too. The experience with rent review—and prior to going into Correctional Services I did have experience with rent review—showed that the most common difficulty was the lack of one-stop service. People were coming to rent review because they had a landlord and tenant problem; therefore, they should properly be put together.

Rather than saying that this committee is acting with a flawed act, the truth of the matter is that no committee has ever dealt with an act in such a participatory manner, where the public can come in and talk on any clause at any time. There is no question that when that happens progress sometimes is slow.

I, for one, prefer that with regard to something that is going to affect people for a great many years; something that I happen not only to know, but which as I have just learned from some of my colleagues in the province of Quebec, is considered now to be the finest piece of residential tenancy legislation in this province.

Mr. Nixon: Oh, you are catching that old Tory disease.

Hon. Mr. Drea: No, no, no. The government in the province of Quebec is not of my party, and not of yours.

Mr. Nixon: But you have the disease of repeating these carefully selected comments from among your ministerial colleagues.

Hon. Mr. Drea: With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, for a number of reasons I don't want to get into a debate with the Liberal House leader tonight, but I say to him in all seriousness—

Mr. Nixon: Want to step outside?

Hon. Mr. Drea:—that when he does this type of thing he does a grave disservice to tenants across the province; and really, for the public perception of himself, coming from a non-tenant area, I would suggest that perhaps he might consult with his colleague, the member for St. George (Mrs. Campbell), about the process by which this is being done.

Mr. Nixon: I just thank my lucky stars I wasn't associated with you in this bill.

Mr. Speaker: The member for BON has already spoken.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

COUNTY OF MIDDLESEX ACT

Hon. Mr. Henderson moved second reading of Bill 2, An Act respecting the County of Middlesex.

Mr. Speaker: Does the honourable minister have an opening statement?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would like to put two or three items on the record.

Firstly, this bill came about as a result of certain negotiations. Many members will remember that a year ago there was concern by the members from London about a similar bill that was proposed to be brought in as a private member's bill. Following that concern, I have had the opportunity to meet with the federal officials and I have had the opportunity of meeting with the Middlesex county officials, and we agreed to a scheme whereby the province of Ontario will introduce this legislation which will remove a cloud from the title of the previous courthouse. At the same time, the federal government, in a letter dated some two years ago, suggested that they would share on a 50-50 basis with the province of Ontario the cost of the actual refurbishing of this bill—building.

The actual cost, as the architect appointed by the county—

Mrs. Campbell: What did you refurbish? The bill or the building?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The building. The federal officials suggested that they would share the costs equally with the county and the province, or they would share equally with the province on a 50-50 basis. The Middlesex architect suggested that the total cost of the building refurbishing would be $2.2 million. One point six million dollars will go towards the refurbishing of the building. The other $600,000 will be for additions that were not actually part of the previous building.

Mr. Peterson: What about the jail?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I will come to that. The air conditioning, elevator and other items are not part of the refurbishing. For this reason I met with the county, and I could read the members the letter; the members for that area have all had a copy of the letter. I pointed out that we as a province are willing to supply $800,000 towards refurbishing, providing the federal government puts up $800,000, and providing that Middlesex county finishes the job at an expected cost of $600,000.

[8:15]

There was a question with respect to the jail. There was concern a few months ago about preserving the county jail.

I have made it clear to the member for London South (Mr. Walker) and to others who have requested what are we doing with the jail, that before Middlesex will receive a clear title we will have an understanding with them that they keep the jail for five years.

Mr. Peterson: Why only five years?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: We don't feel that we should keep the building sitting out there for generations to come if no organization is interested in it.

Mr. Peterson: If they have clear title it is clearly theirs.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The purpose of it was that Middlesex, the day after they get clear title to it, can't come along with a bulldozer and bulldoze it down. We want to preserve it. If there is a group in London which thinks it should be restored as a historical building, we want to keep it that way for up to five years.

Mr. Peterson: Then they will tear it down in five years?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: We will remove the restrictions at the end of five years.

Mr. Peterson: But you are not accomplishing anything.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Maybe not, but I think—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the honourable minister conclude his opening statement?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Yes, we think we are accomplishing a satisfactory solution.

Mr. Ruston: We certainly have no objections to this bill. I am sure the member for London Centre may want to speak on the bill, and the member for Huron-Middlesex (Mr. Riddell) will, I am sure, be speaking in favour of the bill.

Mr. Peterson: Speak for yourself.

Mr. Ruston: I would just like to put on the record the official stand of our party. We agree with this bill and will support it. I may have to use my whip a little, but I think we will manage all right. There may be some discussions on it, but we have no objection to the bill and will support it.

Mr. Nixon: Okay, Jack.

Mr. Riddell: This bill resolves a dispute which has been going on for some time now involving the city council in London, Middlesex county council, and other agencies I expect.

I want to commend the minister. It is not often I do that, but I want to commend him for bringing this thing to a head and in getting this thing moving to the point where we are going to get, hopefully, a federal grant out of it, although it is too bad we didn't have a chance to debate this bill before the federal election was called. I don't know what that is going to do; whether that will hold up the $800,000 that we were hoping to get from them or not.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: They will be quick to pay now, Jack.

Mr. Riddell: We certainly were hoping we might have had a chance to debate this bill before that time.

Mr. Nixon: Count on Trudeau; he will look after us.

Mr. Riddell: It involves the courthouse block in London, which is all of the property which has been used for the administration of justice since London was first surveyed.

As a matter of interest, Mr. Speaker, I don't know whether you have ever had occasion to read the book The Black Donnellys, about a group that came out from Ireland and settled in Lucan. There was a little bit of feuding that was carried over from the days back in Ireland and there was a massacre.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Any relation, John?

Mr. Riddell: The trials were held in this courthouse in London and I believe there were maybe even some hangings at that time, if I am not mistaken, in this jail in London.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The rope broke.

Mrs. Campbell: Are you sure that is not discrimination?

Mr. Riddell: Originally it was the courthouse block and as buildings were needed for special purposes they were built by the county. I want to stress that fact to my colleague to my right. These buildings were built by the county. The city did participate in some of the costs, I will have to admit that.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Not much.

Mr. Riddell: That is right, not enough. Since the province took over, the buildings in the block were abandoned. I believe only the registry office building is presently being used, but this is only on a very temporary basis. The buildings take up one whole city block and yet only one of the buildings is a modern building.

As a matter of interest, the courthouse goes back before there were counties or districts established and probably was started by the government of Upper Canada in 1827; I believe it was opened in 1828. That gives members some idea how old these buildings are.

In 1846 the district of London, the antecedent of the present county, built the county jail. The counties were formed in 1850 and the county was responsible for the administration of justice at that time.

The county had to build its administration building in 1860. At that time the province deeded this property to the county of Middlesex, but it was deeded to be used strictly for a courthouse, a jail and a registry office. As time went by, the county added on buildings as they were required and maintained them. The county bought land in London township and as a centennial project built a library. It was always felt when the present building could be sold a new one would be built on the land the county had purchased.

They approached the province to see if it would be interested in the present building, but the province didn't want it. Then they approached the city—and again I must stress this for the benefit of my colleague to the right; the reason I say that is because he's going to get up and talk about how these buildings should be turned into something of great historical value, with fancy restaurants and all this kind of stuff.

Mr. Peterson: How could you possibly allow my colleague to put words in my mouth? I think you have to call him to order immediately, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hennessy: Which one of you fellows is the conservative man in the party?

Mr. Riddell: They did approach the city to purchase the property but the city didn't want it. The federal government declared the courthouse a historical building and therefore was willing to contribute to the restoration to the extent of $800,000 to which the Minister of Government Services alluded.

The province has also agreed to pay 50 per cent, or $800,000, for restoration costs. As the county is involved, if they were going to use it as offices they would be responsible for certain additional costs, such as installing an elevator, lighting and to meet the standards of the building code and fire code. The estimated cost for this was $600,000.

It was going to be left up to the county whether to restore the jail for a public hall and banquet room. In addition, there is landscaping for a park area and additional costs for the parking area to fit in with the landscaping. The property, Mr. Speaker, and you'll have to come to London to see it, looks down to the forks of the Thames River, which is a very historic site, just simply beautiful.

The county will use the building as an administration building and maintain it out of funds for administration. It will be open to the public. When completed the county will conduct tours. I've already indicated it's a very historical building. It's the original courthouse, although it was altered and a major reconstruction took place in the 1870s. People are very concerned that it be preserved as a historic site.

A group was incorporated back a few years ago known as the Middlesex Court Centre Board, and I believe my colleague here was a member of that if I'm not mistaken.

Mr. Peterson: That's right.

Mr. Riddell: They saw a potential and they wanted to turn the property into a people place; build restaurants, have arts and crafts, theatres and all the rest of it. However, they did not include the county in their plans. They had a study made of the uses of the property. They had considerable funds committed to them from the province by the then Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Bennett). They included the county later by asking them to make an appointment to the board. They never approached the county to buy the property; they wanted it given to them, plus funds for the project.

As indicated previously, the county had equity in the building, particularly the modern building that is standing now. They paid for it and they certainly were not going to walk away from it. They wanted some equity out of the place. If the county can obtain funds for restoring the courthouse, and providing they get clear title to the property, they can use it as the county administration building. We have a bill before us that vests the title of the land in the corporation of the county of Middlesex in fee simple. The county can now go ahead and turn the building to the purposes for which they want it. I think it will make an outstanding county building in the city of London, despite what my colleague may say in a few minutes time.

Mr. Eaton: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise and speak on this bill because it's a project we have been working at in Middlesex for some time. I had a private bill before this House about a year ago to try and clear the title, which was turned down by the commissioner of estates. I want to thank, on behalf of Middlesex county council, our colleague from Lambton, the Minister of Government Services (Mr. Henderson), for his assistance in bringing this bill about and assisting in bringing about the funds to see this project through. As my friend from Huron-Middlesex has mentioned, it is a very historic site in Middlesex county, in fact in Ontario. It is modelled after Malahide castle and designed originally by Colonel Talbot.

Once, in fact, it was even designated the capital of Ontario when Colonel Talbot was first seeing that area of the province settled—

Mr. Peterson: John Robarts was representing the riding.

Mr. Eaton: I guess at that time it was the capital, when we had John there.

Mr. Nixon: Weren't those great days, Bob?

Mr. Eaton: I would say that this site will be a credit to the city of London. There has been some considerable amount of work carried on already; and if my friend from Huron-Middlesex had been around there lately he would know that the registry office disappeared last fall, it isn't there now.

Mr. Riddell: The building was still there.

Mr. Eaton: They have done some work on landscaping already. They actually own the modern building the member for Huron-Middlesex made reference to. The land it is on is owned outright by the county now, and the land that has been in dispute is the land the courthouse itself and the jail sit on. There hasn't been a movement by the people in Middlesex, really, to raise the funds to see the jail preserved; although they have done some preparation in their plans for the refurbishing of the courthouse in that they did make provision for a museum and a large reading room and banquet hall in the top of the jail facilities. If there are people interested in coming forward with funds or other forms of support, people who want to see this section of the building preserved, then the county is willing to work with them to try to preserve that part of the building as well.

But it's not as old, it's not as historic, as the courthouse itself, and the county just doesn't feel it has the funds to put directly into the jail project. They feel that by putting the funds into the courthouse, they can preserve it for history and at the same time use it for a practical purpose, maintaining their administration within that building and keeping the building open to the public as a historic site in Ontario.

I would certainly like once again to thank the minister for his support of the bill. I am sure with the support of the Liberal Party, no matter what the member for London Centre (Mr. Peterson) might have to say about the project, it will go ahead and it will be a credit not only to Middlesex but the city of London and the province of Ontario.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, although the member for London Centre may be opposing the bill, I wish to speak in favour of it. After all, any bill which spells jail g-a-o-l can't be all wrong. I think that was the first indication this was a bill definitely intended to help preserve a bit of history in the province of Ontario.

Mrs. Campbell: Don't bring in Magna Carta tonight.

Mr. Warner: Certainly the Minister of Government Services has had an interest in preserving things. We are certainly in favour of preserving old jails and old courthouses. We are just not in favour of preserving old Tories. So we certainly will lend our unqualified support for Bill 2 and assist in its passage so that the jail and the courthouse can be preserved. Now perhaps we can hear from the one member of the assembly who is opposing the bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[8:30]

Mr. Peterson: I want to bring sober rationality into this entire debate, Mr. Speaker, and I want you to know this probably has been one of the most difficult issues faced by our caucus in my brief tenure here. We had a major division today in our caucus; it occupied a considerable amount of time in the agenda. There was a major spread in the caucus; the Nixon wing of the caucus sort of went against me, Mr. Speaker, I should point out. You can identify the Nixon wing in our caucus; they are all the guys in the polyester suits and the white shoes.

I know it is going to take time but, with a lot of goodwill from my brethren and my sister in the caucus, I hope that we will be able to repair this damage, because it has been a most difficult matter of principle.

I have got a little surprise for you, Mr. Speaker. I am going to support the bill, just because I do not like to be left out; I have a feeling that, if it is 124 to one, there must be something the matter with me.

However, I do appreciate the opportunity to put a few facts on the record. We have been treated to an excellent historical dissertation by the two rural members who represent various pieces of Middlesex county, and I think they have done an admirable job of presenting the background.

Let me say that, in my judgement, this is the single most important historical asset in the city of London. It is the focal point; it is the centre; it is at the forks of the Thames; it is almost the geographical centre of the city. We had a marvellous opportunity to make something out of that historic site at the forks of the Thames. It was the end of the old Highway 2; it stopped right there, coming all the way from Hamilton and indeed from Toronto. As my colleague from Huron-Middlesex pointed out, it is steeped in history.

Now we have taken that marvellous old building and turned it into an office structure, a county office building. I am not saying, given the circumstances of today, that it may not be the best choice. I just think that the local politicians, the former mayor of our city, fumbled this ball so dramatically that I, for one, am dramatically disappointed.

We had an opportunity, a wonderful opportunity, to turn this into a people place, into a building at the historical centre of our city where people were welcome all the time. It had flower shows, it had ethnic shows, it had art galleries the kinds of things that create activity. In so many of these county buildings, even though they are there for public access, who wants to go there unless you have official business, unless you want a severance, unless you want to go to a county council meeting or whatever?

We have lost the opportunity to breathe life into that old girl, and we will never be able to salvage a situation that we have lost. This was part of a whole redevelopment scheme along the banks of the Thames River, involving the old Eldon House, the Labatt's restoration—some of the most marvellous restoration you could possibly imagine in any urban area in Ontario. Then we had juxtaposed thereto, right on the banks of the Thames, the old courthouse—and the old jail, I should add, which is of a different period in terms of architecture but is equally significant and equally meaningful, in my judgement at least, in the history of that particular city.

Of course, there were many other complications that went on with this issue because of the mishandling, as I deem it; essentially by the former mayor, but by the council and by a lot of meetings that went on in private. I will not bore you, Mr. Speaker, with all of the details attendant thereto, but a very strategic and important piece of property owned by the city that could have been park land at the end of a wonderful mall down Dundas Street, the main business street in London, which could have created one of the most magnificent urban atmospheres in this province. We blew that opportunity because we decided to build a brand-new concrete-and-glass art gallery in the middle of this historical skyline. We would have had an unparalleled vista in this province; we have lost that opportunity.

I have been intimately involved with this situation from the beginning and, with some humility, I say that I lost on almost every position I took on this matter. I am sorry about that, but I am sure that thoughtful people 20 years from now will say we made a mistake. We could have located that art gallery—I grant that London needed an art gallery, and I would point out that the original concept some seven or eight years ago was that the entire courthouse and jail could have been turned into an art gallery; and it would have made a magnificent art gallery. Again, it would have breathed new life and purpose into that old structure.

We cannot afford the luxury of historical buildings sitting around doing nothing. The challenge is to breathe new life into them and to give them a new vitality and a new purpose. An art gallery would have been a marvellous thing and we would have had, beside it, a magnificent park on the banks of the Thames, with bicycle paths and paths all along the Thames from Fanshawe right through to Springbank Park.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, I know that you have a daughter at the University of Western Ontario, a very intelligent girl like her father, and I am sure she has told you the identical thing. I am sure that if you are ever in a position to leave your nonpartisan role you would come down and agree with every single word I am saying in this House tonight.

We had that opportunity. Then, certain people decided they wanted a new, magnificent glass-and-concrete structure, an art gallery modelled on the Fort Worth Louis Kahn art gallery; and so it was brought and placed right plunk in the middle of this historic skyline. That is a reality and London will have that. I think it could have been much better planned. I think we could have used the strategic area to create, as I said, a totally unique area.

The art gallery proposition having failed then, Mr. Speaker, as I said the people looked for new purposes. Again, they wanted to make it a people-oriented place, to have it a community centre for ethnic clubs, for service clubs, for banquet halls; a gathering place in our community right smack in the middle of the city, and again a place of great historic and strategic advantage. That was another opportunity we lost.

I have to support this bill, because in fairness to the county the county had no other options. There were no other takers for the building. Had the county not come in to salvage this building it probably would have fallen to further wrack and ruin.

But the concept I have been talking about, of the people place and the magnificent structure in the middle of the city, had at one point the support of the province of Ontario. I remember coming, long before I was elected, as a private citizen to a committee. I remind you that the leader of our committee, the chairman of the Middlesex Court Centre Board at that time, was none other than J. P. Robarts. We came down before a committee of cabinet; we gave a presentation. I think perhaps the honourable House leader was there at the time, I am not sure. It was a magnificent presentation, I think members will agree.

The province at that time agreed to give us $50,000 for a feasibility study by Marshall, Macklin, Monaghan; a feasibility study which said that the concept could be done, done cheaply, and done well. As I recall, the province committed $2 million at that time. That money was held back because of the failure of the city and the internal politics carried on in secret; it was one of the most reprehensible series of transactions in municipal politics anywhere.

I wish some day I could stand up in public and tell members everything that I know went on. Because I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, the citizens of London were the only losers because we had missed this great opportunity.

Of course the county was resigned to this. The county had bought property in Arva, five or six miles out of London. They were prepared to sell their one modern structure, the beautiful green building with funny green glass, to the city or whoever and move out to Arva and be in a brand new structure. Because, you see, logically, even though London is the county seat for the county of Middlesex, the people of the county don't necessarily identify with the old Middlesex courthouse in the same way that the people of London would, because it is physically in the middle of the city. This clearly should have been the city's responsibility. I look back with great regret, I look back with great sorrow; because we had an opportunity to preserve something for our children, an opportunity to do something magnificently unique, and we blew it. I am convinced, as I said earlier, that people 20 years from now will look back and say: "We had so many good options then, why didn't we take the far-sighted view?"

I just want to put in one disclaimer, one thing that worries me. I say this to the honourable minister, to the member for Middlesex and to my colleague from Huron-Middlesex. I am not very impressed with the sensitivity of the county towards that historic structure. The first thing they did, when it appeared they were going to get title—and I remind my friend the county didn't own it; if the county had owned it we wouldn't have this bill here tonight. There was a reverter. The county had title for the purpose of the administration of justice, with a reversion back to the province. We are here to clean up that title tonight.

There are various legal opinions on it. The Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) had a legal opinion on it, as did various other people, but the consensus seemed to be, clearly, that titled probably rested in the province. When it appeared that the county was going to get title to this building they moved in and immediately tore down some walls around this jail, a unique property. Those jail walls that were the scene of various hangings could have been incorporated with all the local history in a beautiful plan, and they started to tear the walls down. Any organization that shows such lack of respect for a historical building I think has to be considered somewhat suspect.

I am disappointed, and I can say with some pride that my colleague the member for London South (Mr. Walker), who is the Minister of Correctional Services right now, and I were intimately involved in trying to prevent the county from doing something precipitous in tearing down an asset that in no way could be rebuilt—and it can't be, and we have lost that opportunity.

I say to the honourable minister, when we are dealing with a group that has displayed that lack of sensitivity towards a historical object, a historical monument, I would like to be assured by him that they are going to treat the jail and the remaining walls with great respect.

I understand the problem of raising the money to resurrect that building; but I am disappointed that the time limit on that is only five years. I would ask the minister, as a reasonable man, to extend that in perpetuity. They can close that building up now if they don't have the funds to preserve it; but some day they will, and let us prevent them in perpetuity from doing something silly, from destroying a precious heritage—at least in my opinion it is, and in that of various other people that I respect.

Let's prevent them from destroying it, because I can assure the House that at some time in the future, and I cannot assure the members that it will be less than five years, some far-sighted, conscientious citizen concerned about the environment of the city will come forward with a viable proposition on how to salvage that jail. Let's not let them tear it down. As I said before, I am somewhat sceptical, when they have demonstrated a lack of sensitivity in the past. I would like the minister's assurance, and I hope he will give it to me, that he will use his good offices as well as the power of this Legislature to make sure the county does not tear down that jail.

I can say that I have seen the plans for the old courthouse and frankly I think the plans are magnificent. I think they are doing the best that can be done at this stage, now that the city has totally fumbled the ball. They have a magnificent architect in Norbert Schuller, who breathed new life into that old building. It will be an asset to the city; but it could have been a much greater asset. It could have been a public place, rather than a quasi-private place; it could have been a place that invites people to come in. It could have been a historical centre; it could have been a tourist centre. Now it is going to be a glorified, but beautiful, office building.

We lost the opportunity. I'm sorry about that. I am only imploring the minister to reassure me on that one point and then I will comfortably vote for this bill in the circumstances.

Mr. Lawlor: I have, Mr. Speaker, confessedly never been so moved by a speech in this House. I will not unduly prolong the fandango of the debate. Nevertheless, I can well understand how the Liberal Party must have been torn to pieces in caucus on the issue.

I know nothing of the issue, nothing whatsoever. But, of course, that doesn't matter. I am standing here now to try to prevail upon the honourable member who spoke so glowingly, so bitterly and with such brilliance on this particular subject. I would ask him to be a Don Quixote, if he will. I will vote with him, I promise the House. I will do anything for art—I learned that a day or two ago.

Mr. Peterson: And I will buy your book, Patrick. That's fair enough.

Mr. Lawlor: With that in mind, I just simply want to say I join forces with the members on this particular issue. Let's give the House a real bad time.

[8:45]

Mr. Roy: The reason I am standing is the minute courthouses are mentioned in this Legislature anybody from Ottawa—and my colleagues know that and I think the minister is aware of that—get very hyper, get very enthusiastic, because, as you know, Mr. Speaker, I have raised on many occasions the deplorable court facilities in Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker: Is that in Middlesex county?

Mr. Roy: Well, I'm just coming there. I started in Ottawa. Just be patient with me. What I wanted to tell you, Mr. Speaker, is we always look on London, Ontario, with envy, because what my colleague from London Centre did not mention is the fantastic court facilities they now have in London, Ontario. I want to say this: We're so desperate for court facilities that if we in Ottawa can be of assistance in any way to solving this dilemma—especially a dilemma between some of my colleagues—we will.

As my colleague the member for Lakeshore said, it was a vicious debate in caucus today about the situation about this bill. If I can be of assistance to the minister and propose this to him about the county courthouse and the restoration, if he has problems and if there is some conflict within the community, we will take it in Ottawa. We will take it and move it down there. We are so short of facilities in the Ottawa area that we would accept anything, and especially something of historical value.

Mr. Sterling: You can't get the land from the feds.

Mr. Roy: My colleague from Carleton-Grenville is mentioning something.

Mr. Speaker: Now I see why you had so much trouble in caucus. Does anybody else want to speak to Bill 2?

Mr. Roy: I was just on my way to saying those are the only comments I have.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to be able to respond to the proposal that has been brought forth tonight. If I might answer in reverse, any problem I am having with the court facilities in Ottawa will be corrected May 22, so that is not a worry to me tonight. I was in Ottawa yesterday morning and I had the assurance the people there would correct the problem I am having with court facilities there.

Mr. Roy: You mean the Tories federally will give you the land the Liberals won't give you?

Mr. Sterling: That's right, Albert.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, while the member for London Centre was speaking, I have been looking over the notes. I wouldn't want to read everything I have in the notes, but I find myself tonight in the position of an arbitrator. All members here tonight remember a year ago when the member for London South (Mr. Walker) and the member for London Centre and the member for London North (Mr. Van Horne) appeared before some court down the street to oppose the clearing of this title. Two of those three people who appeared have been here tonight, the member for London South and the member for London Centre.

The member for London South has given in and I now find he supports the five years.

Mind you, we had to whip him pretty well to make him support it. We really had to go after him. I find the member for London Centre wants a further extension.

In the position of an arbitrator, let me say as chairman maybe for the moment, I would have to support the member for London South and the statements attributed to the Minister of Government Services, so that I will give the House the assurance that before an order in council is passed with respect to this bill making it effective, I will have an agreement with the city of London that this county jail will be kept for five years for any organization that wishes to assume the responsibility and preserve that jail for future generations.

There is just one further thing, Mr. Speaker. The previous speakers have not brought out what I felt they would—maybe the former speakers can help me, but I am not sure whether it was during the mid-1950s or the mid-1960s, and I've been rushing through my notes and I haven't found it—that the courthouse we are preserving was designated as a historic building. The jail we are referring to was not designated, so there is a distinction between the two buildings. Middlesex was caught in a very difficult position. They were caught with a building that they were not permitted to tear down.

I believe this bill is very acceptable to everybody.

Mr. Peterson: On a point of clarification, and I wanted to share something because I think it's important. I just wanted to make a point—

Mr. Speaker: It's not permitted on second reading, after the minister has wound up the debate.

Mr. Peterson: I know that, but I think the House would indulge me on this one particular point because I think it's important. My point was earlier that it just was inappropriate. It was sort of like taking Bob Nixon to Winston's for lunch. It just doesn't fit. He's not comfortable there. That was the point I wanted to make about the county having—

Mr. Nixon: Throw him out.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, could I ask if you plan on getting to the committee stage of this bill tonight?

Mr. Warner: Not this evening.

Mr. Eaton: Why do you want it to go to committee?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: If I might interject for a moment; honourable members over there and the member for Middlesex have mentioned the urgency of this. And it is urgent. The federal government has demanded this bill be through before we can go any further.

Mr. Peterson: On a point of order, the minister has no right to contest the decision.

Mr. Speaker: That's right.

MILK AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. McNeil, on behalf of Hon. W. Newman, moved second reading of Bill 7, An Act to amend the Milk Act.

Mr. McNeil: This bill is necessary to resolve problems in milk levies arising out of the Supreme Court decision in the egg reference case. It has been concluded that the remittance of levies to the Canadian Dairy Commission collected from producers by the Ontario Milk Marketing Board was no longer legally defensible. The Ontario Milk Marketing Board has therefore ceased remitting such levies.

It is considered that the soundest approach would be to delegate levy authority directly to the Canadian Dairy Commission under the Commodity Boards and Marketing Agencies Act of Ontario. The CDC does not have any powers of regulation over regulated products marketed locally within Ontario, and therefore does not qualify under that act as a marketing agency to receive a delegation of levy authority.

The purpose of this bill is to amend the Milk Act, to provide in a manner similar to that already found in the Farm Products Marketing Act for a delegation of marketing authority to the Canadian Dairy Commission. Implementation of this bill will qualify CDC as a marketing agency and allow it to receive subsequently a delegation of levy authority under the Commodity Boards and Marketing Agencies Act.

As a further explanation, section 1 of the bill enacts a new section 26 to the Milk Act which provides, first, for delegation to the Canadian Dairy Commission by the Lieutenant Governor in council of authority to regulate marketing of regulated products and milk products marketed locally within Ontario. Secondly, it provides for specific provisions aimed at ensuring that the Canadian Dairy Commission will come within the terms of the Commodity Boards and Marketing Agencies Act.

Honourable members will be interested in knowing that this bill will not affect provincial government expenditures or receipts.

Mr. Riddell: I'm certainly pleased to see that my good friend, the member for Elgin, is piloting this bill through the House. I've attended a number of agricultural functions where the member for Elgin has represented the Ministry of Agriculture and Food. I think he does an admirable job. But it makes my blood boil when I go to agricultural functions and I see that they have completely bypassed my good friend, the member for Elgin, and have sent the member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. Watson) to speak on behalf of the ministry at some of these functions.

I do not know who is responsible for this, whether it is the Minister of Agriculture and Food or the Premier. I have no idea whether it is an indication of some grooming they are doing for the next Minister of Agriculture and Food. But until my good friend the member for Elgin throws in the towel—prior to the next provincial election, I assume—I would hope they would get him to act on behalf of the ministry instead of the member for Chatham-Kent.

Mr. Hodgson: That's not your problem. Don't worry about it. You don't have to worry about those problems. Worry about the bill.

Mr. Riddell: It's nice to have the member for York North around.

I am pleased that we are dealing with a bill that does not make the collection of levies by a provincial marketing board retroactive. I well recall the lengthy debates and the concerns that were expressed in the committee after Bill 48 was introduced by the minister. Bill 48 was introduced as a result of a Supreme Court decision in the egg reference case, indicating that the collection of levies by the Ontario Egg Producers' Marketing Board under the authority of federal statutes was questionable.

The Ontario Egg Producers' Marketing Board was collecting levies under the authority granted to it by federal statutes, and the court decision indicated that for eggs marketed in Ontario the levies had to be collected under authority given to the board by provincial statutes. The question was whether the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency could collect levies for eggs marketed in Ontario.

This led to the introduction of Bill 48, which gave the Ontario Egg Producers' Marketing Board the authority to collect levies under provincial statutes. It did not give the board authority to turn the levies over to CEMA, which is a problem the board now faces. However, it is my understanding that the Lieutenant Governor can be asked to cancel the authority of the provincial board to collect levies and turn it over to CEMA, in which case CEMA would appoint the provincial board as a collection agency. In other words, the Lieutenant Governor by regulation could give CEMA the authority to collect levies.

We have the same situation in the dairy industry. The Ontario Milk Marketing Board has been collecting levies and turning them over to the Canadian Dairy Commission. If this practice were challenged in the courts by dissident milk producers—and thank goodness there are none, to my knowledge—similar to that in the egg industry, then it is likely the same decision would be arrived at as in the egg reference case. In other words, the remittance to the Canadian Dairy Commission of levies collected by the Ontario Milk Marketing Board would no longer be legally defensible.

With this in mind, the Ontario Milk Marketing Board has ceased remitting such levies. Thus, the Canadian Dairy Commission, in view of the reduction in its income, finds it difficult to continue payment of milk subsidies to Ontario milk producers.

Taking a leaf from the book in the egg case, the Minister of Agriculture and Food, after consultation with the Ontario Milk Marketing Board, the Canadian Dairy Commission and federal government officials, has considered that the soundest approach to resolving this problem would be to delegate levy authority directly to the Canadian Dairy Commission under the Commodity Boards and Marketing Agencies Act of Ontario. The Canadian Dairy Commission, as was the case with CEMA, does not have any powers of regulation over regulated products marketed locally within Ontario, and therefore it does not qualify under that act as a marketing agency to receive a delegation of levy authority.

The purpose of this bill, therefore, is to amend the Milk Act to provide in a manner similar to that already found in the Farm Products Marketing Act for delegation of marketing authority to the Canadian Dairy Commission. Implementation of this bill will qualify the Canadian Dairy Commission as a marketing agency and allow it to receive subsequently a delegation of levy authority under the Commodity Boards and Marketing Agencies Act which would allow the commission to collect levies directly.

The bill was inevitable, and I certainly intend to give it my full support on this side of the House.

[9:00]

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of our party, I rise to support the bill as well.

I recall the debate that the member who just spoke referred to on the egg case, and wonder what the position of the member for Lincoln will be in this particular situation, but considering the—

Mr. Roy: That was a much different situation.

Mr. Riddell: Nothing retroactive about it.

Mr. Wildman: I wasn't trying to be derisive about his position.

Mr. Roy: You should understand the legislation you are talking about.

Mr. Foulds: It never stopped you, Albert. It never stopped you.

Mr. Wildman: When you consider the effect of the court decision, which makes it very difficult for the Canadian Dairy Commission to exercise what was considered to be its authority previously, since the OMMB has stopped remitting to the commission, this would make it very difficult for the whole orderly marketing and control of that commodity, milk marketing in this country, and in this province, to continue. We certainly support it.

I wonder if the ministry's representative could relate this to the decision of the court, the Ontario Court of Appeal and the Agricultural Products Marketing Act reference, in which the court said it agreed the Legislature may delegate powers to an agency as much as it sees fit. If that is the case, then that is what we are doing here, if the two relate. I wonder if he could answer that for me, since in that particular case the court stated that undertakings where primary agricultural products are involved are within provincial jurisdiction.

I wonder if the member can clarify that for me. Certainly, we in this party have argued for years in favour of orderly marketing and will support any legislation which makes it possible for the marketing boards and the federal agency to carry out that objective. For that reason we support the legislation.

As I recall the debate on the egg situation and the fact that there were dissidents who were concerned about retroactive payment, I realize, since the board is collecting levies and is just holding them, it is a somewhat different situation, so in that case we again will support the bill.

Mr. McNeil: Mr. Speaker, first of all, on behalf of the minister I do want to thank the opposition party and the New Democratic Party for their support of this bill, which means so much to the milk producers of this province.

In answer to the member for Algoma, we are delegating in a manner approved by the court.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

TREES AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Auld moved second reading of Bill 8, An Act to amend the Trees Act.

Mr. Nixon: No opening statement from the minister is necessary.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I bow to the honourable member.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I know the hearts of many members leapt when we saw the Trees Amendment Act was being introduced. I recall at the time of the election recently that the Brampton charter dealt with trees extensively. The Premier (Mr. Davis) himself, after widely consulting with his colleagues and others, had come to the conclusion that it was time the government, after 35 years, should make the commitment that two trees would grow where one had grown before.

I can recall the embarrassment with which this cornerstone of the Brampton charter was greeted by the people knowledgeable in forest resource matters. Members of the public service were turning pale, white-lipped and trembling when they felt at one stage that this tremendous breakthrough was going to be ordered by the head of the government himself.

The bill before us, although of great importance and significance, hardly comes to grips with the matter that we had hoped for and truly expected. Like so many of the other concepts put forward in the Brampton charter, it has really turned to ashes in the hands of those who had expected something of worth. For this reason, we have a great deal of regret that the bill, while important in its own way, does not deal with the matter that we really had hoped would be brought to our attention at an early time. Nevertheless, after careful consultation with my colleagues, the many members of the Liberal Party from northern Ontario, we feel that the bill, disappointing though it is in that particular, should be supported.

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, like the previous speaker, we in our caucus first thought, when we saw the title of this bill on the Order Paper, that finally we were going to get in legislative terms a commitment to regeneration and reforestation in this province. We do not have that commitment in legislative terms and, in my view, that is unfortunate.

When we made the first dip into the background material and saw that it dealt with permissive legislation, which largely has to do with municipalities passing bylaws about whether a person can cut trees on his own property, we were somewhat disappointed. However, we will come to the debate on two for one, three for one, one for one, an acre for an acre, a kingdom for a horse, or what have you, at some later time during this session, I am sure, when the minister announces his definite contracts with the pulp and paper companies with whom he now is negotiating for private reforestation. I am sure we can have a special emergency debate in the Legislature, if legislation is not necessary, or it can be worked out amicably among all parties when we come to discuss that matter.

I must say that our caucus supports this bill in principle, although we have some questions having to do with the detail of the clauses, particularly the exemptions that it grants—from my reading of the bill—to certain crown agencies and certain ministries to cut trees.

It would appear to me that, if this bill does not cover it, we should have some kind of protection to meet the situation that we ran into along a heritage highway in southwestern Ontario a few months ago, when the Ministry of Transportation and Communications got itself embroiled in a controversy about cutting trees along the side of what was in fact a heritage highway. I do not believe that this act covers that situation, and we will have some questions at the clause-by-clause stage.

For that reason, while we approve of this bill in principle, we would like to see it go into committee—committee of the whole House is satisfactory to us—so that some of those questions can be answered during clause-by-clause consideration.

Mr. Hodgson: Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this bill. For those people living close to a metropolitan area, such as those I represent in the region of York, which is just half a roadway away from Metropolitan Toronto, it is very important that we have a bill of this kind.

A good many of the people I represent have asked me for this bill over the past two or three years. I am glad that this minister has had the fortitude to come forth with this particular piece of legislation at this time, which we hope will become law, particularly in areas in southern Ontario where our forests are getting scarcer and scarcer. They are being used up by land that is being developed for housing, industry, Hydro rights of way, highways and so forth. This will preserve some of our old forests.

An hon. member: You might not be able to get out of the forest.

Mr. Hodgson: Well, maybe not. But, however, we will go around the forest, we will go around the bush to get out of the trees and we will go into where there are no trees. I fully support this bill 100 per cent and I hope the members of this Legislature will see fit on third reading to pass this bill.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Very briefly, I was touched by the comments of the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk, although he wasn't talking about this bill really.

Mr. Nixon: I hoped you would be.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Honourable members will be delighted to know that I expect to bring in an amendment to the Crown Timber Act which will deal with the matter of reforestation and that sort of thing. I am happy that there is support for this bill in principle and I would suggest that it go to committee of the whole House.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

House in committee of the whole.

PROVINCIAL OFFENCES ACT

Resumption of the adjourned consideration of Bill 74, The Provincial Offences Act, 1978.

On section 94:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I understand that when the committee last considered this bill, we arrived at and passed up to section 93. Any questions on section 94?

Mrs. Campbell: Weren't we bogged down on the appeal provisions, paying fines pending the appeal?

Mr. Sterling: That was section 95.

Section 94 agreed to.

On section 95.

Mrs. Campbell: I regret that I don't recall the stage of our debate, but one of these matters which was raised during the course of the debate on section 95 was the question of the mandatory provision to pay the fine as a condition precedent to launching an appeal. I think we tried to point out at that time that one of the problems with this bill has been that most people tended to view it as a bill which related to somewhat minor offences, such as some of the minor offences under the Highway Traffic Act.

[9:15]

In view of the fact that we are dealing now with the major offences, it seems we need to have some clarification, because some of the fines and penalties could be very major and could preclude the appeals. I think that is the basic concern, although my colleague from Ottawa has a concern about the general principle of it. So I wouldn't like anyone to think that in dealing with the major problems we are precluding debate on the principle itself: that is, as to whether or not someone should be required to pay a penalty as a condition preceding the launching of an appeal.

We would like to hear from the ministry on that point.

Mr. Sterling: I think one of the things that was not pointed out in the previous debate was that, in fact, this section deals with part III offences only. It does not deal with part I or part II offences. There is no parallel section later on in the bill, when we deal with appeals on part I and part II sections—there is no parallel to this particular section in that part of the act.

You will notice from the section that there is, under subsection 2, a considerable power given the judge to aid compliance with subsection 1. If the fine should be of a higher amount, then it is our feeling that a recognizance could be put forward in order to alleviate a problem of the pecuniary penalty being too great for someone to launch an appeal.

As to the general principle we discussed: perhaps I could summarize the Attorney General's position on that particular matter. Basically, the position is that there have been too many frivolous appeals which either have been abandoned or the defendant didn't show up when they got to trial. This is both costly and time-consuming to the whole justice system.

It is our submission that by putting in this provision that the penalty must be paid prior to filing the notice of appeal, the appeals will be made more bona fide in their intention.

We mentioned that we suspect the majority of the offences deal with demerit points. I realize the problem relates to demerit points and the solution relates to money. It is hard to marry those two. So we feel at this time, after discussion with the many people involved in the practical experience of the criminal courts, that this will act as a deterrent by diminishing the number of frivolous appeals.

I know it is hard. I have spent some time grappling with the total situation. But I think, because of the problem we have encountered, that we should allow the section to stand; especially because subsection 2 is there and the judge has a wide discretion to allow recognizance in lieu of paying the penalty.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Chairman, I just have this to say. In so far as it relates to demerit points, I sometimes think we are in the position, on occasion, of some jurors who have general conversations with people out there. So far as the demerit points are concerned, I wonder if you have ever discussed with people how they can put off the inevitable until such time as they drop some of the demerit points they have picked up along the way.

I don't think, with the greatest respect, this is any kind of a deterrent, and I don't know how anybody dealing generally in the business of the courts in this respect could seriously think that is effective if that is what it is supposed to be doing. If people have gathered so many demerit points along the way and they see that by such and such a date some of them will be dropped off the record, there is nothing in the world that is going to prevent them from continuing their appeal and holding off the evil day as long as possible.

In any event, I have great sympathy with those of my colleagues who feel very strongly that if there is an appeal open one should not be faced with the payment of a penalty as a condition precedent to launching an appeal. I cannot withdraw from that position.

Mr. Lawlor: I disagree.

Mrs. Campbell: Pat, and I bought your book, too.

Mr. Lawlor: In this particular matter, again, this is not supposed to be criminal stuff. It has been too long an abuse and I have been a party to it on too many occasions—saying simply to appeal it and tie the whole thing up. I know the appeal courts are months and months in arrears of the cases and it has been a trick whereby you can retain the licence and you can keep the money in the bank in the meantime. I see no reason in these kinds of cases, since such a large number of the appeals are either fallacious or fictitious, that if they are in good faith they will pay that fine and give subsequent reimbursement.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Chairman, I want to make a comment I think I made two weeks ago when we first started discussing this section. I am a bit surprised by the comments of my colleague the member for Lakeshore, because I know he is a man who deals in principles. One of the principles of an appeal is that once you give the right to appeal and that principle is enacted in legislation, it presumes that you feel there was an error made, or for some other reason. If that right of appeal is given it should be an absolute right; it shouldn't be given partially or otherwise. If the right is given, then all the benefits that flow with the right should follow.

One of the rights is that people not serve any penalty, or suffer the consequences of the penalty, pending an appeal, because at that point there seems to be some impediment to that right of appeal. That right should be given unfettered. There should not be some attempt to discourage people from going on appeal if they feel they should be going on appeal. That is why I agree with my colleague the member for St. George.

If it wasn't for the fact that there is a subsection 2 where the judge may waive compliance with subsection 1, and I quote my colleagues in the House who are with me, we would take serious objection to agreeing to letting this part of section 95 go through. But the fact is the judge can waive compliance.

As my colleague from St. George said—and we have discussed this section together—we are not only talking about situations where there is a $25 traffic fine. It may well be that this law will apply in circumstances where the fines are very substantial indeed, and where it is harsh punishment for the defendant to pay the fine pending the appeal.

But hopefully the courts will have an out in subsection 2, and may look at the situation and may feel that in no circumstances are they justified in not enforcing compliance with section 1. I take it I am correct in saying the provisions of subsection 2 say that a judge—that is an appeal judge, I presume—may waive compliance with subsection 1, one of the compliances being that the fine be paid in full.

If it wasn't for that, I can say to the parliamentary assistant, I would take serious objection to section 95(1) in forcing an individual to pay the fine. Either we give him the right to appeal, or we don't. If there is an abuse of that right of appeal, there are other ways of curbing that abuse.

What I am trying to say, basically, is that I am still concerned that we give a right of appeal, and that in some ways we are imposing an impediment to that right by forcing him to pay the fine.

Section 95 agreed to.

Sections 96 to 100, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 101:

Mr. Lawlor: I just want to make a comment. There was an alteration made: "An appellant who is in custody as a result of the decision appealed from is entitled to be present at the hearing of the appeal." That was something that we argued and moved and fought for, and which is now embodied. I want to point out that it is an alteration and a beneficent one.

Mr. Sterling: I wanted to indicate that this has been dubbed by the committee "the Lawlor amendment."

Mr. Deputy Chairman: He has a number of those, Mr. Parliamentary Assistant.

Section 101 agreed to:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Are there any sections that members want to speak to up to the end of 122 before we get into rules of appeal?

Mr. Lawlor: Just 121(2).

Mr. Roy: I wanted to ask one question on section 110—on trial de novo.

Sections 101 to 109, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 110:

Mr. Roy: I take it that the gist of that section is that under the provisions of this statute the only way one will get a trial de novo is by way of an application. I want to get confirmation of this from the parliamentary assistant. It appears also that the only way the judge can grant it is if something has happened to the condition of the record of the trial, or for a similar reason.

The other thing, as I read that section, is that even though you don't have a trial de novo, in the appeal process the court nevertheless has the discretion to hear viva voce evidence. Is my understanding of section 110 correct? I will wait for a response from the parliamentary assistant.

Mr. Sterling: The member for Ottawa East is correct in noting you can only obtain an appeal and a trial de novo by an application. Secondly, the intent of the section is to limit the number of trials de novo that will come from an appeal. Basically, the section says the only time the appellate court should order a trial de novo is when there has been a problem with the record. In other words, the record has not been transcribed, perhaps, and the recorder is no longer available to transcribe the record or something similar of that nature, in terms of what has gone on during the trial. Something else has been wrong with the record of the trial; something is missing.

Mr. Roy: I understand that. The criminal code, in fact, a few years ago, amended the provision for trial de novo as well. Because, as my colleagues here were saying, in talking about abuses, there were clearly abuses in the trial de novo when the trial de novo statements were being used as extensively as they were. I understand the purpose of that.

Moving on to subsection 2: As I read that section it says that even though you have a trial de novo, you can put in evidence, I take it, with the consent of the appellant and respondent and if the court is satisfied that attendance of witness cannot reasonably be obtained. I take it that, even though it is a trial de novo, you could still read in evidence of the previous hearing; the evidence does not have to be all viva voce. Is that how I understand subsection 2?

Mr. Sterling: Yes, your understanding of subsection 2 is right.

Section 110 agreed to.

Sections 111 to 120, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 121:

Mr. Lawlor: Section 121(2). Just basically the same comment as before, for the purpose of the record, and in case anyone would be interested in this debate: I think it should be specifically pointed out that this section has been substantially changed—that is, where the court directs a new trial be held in the provincial court presided over by a justice other than the justice who tried the defendant in the first instance. But here is where the change came. With the consent of both parties to the appeal, the same judge who heard the case previously, and who is being appealed from, may rehear the case. That is a very interesting and, I think, worthwhile change.

Mr. Roy: As I read it—I think it's a good amendment by the way; the fact that it should not be directed before the same justice unless the parties consent—but, as I read that, even the judge granting the appeal can hear it. That's the way I read it: that the new trial can be held before the justice who tried the defendant in the first instance, or before the judge who directs the new trial. You can have your new trial right there, can you?

Mr. Sterling: I think the section is self-explanatory. The appellate judge can order that the new trial be held before the justice. But he has to do a positive act in order to direct the trial by that same judge. The reason is that perhaps there is an exhibit missing in terms of the original trial; or, perhaps in certain areas of the province there is a limitation on the number of judges; that is why this particular part of the section is put in.

Section 121 agreed to.

Sections 122 to 137, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 138:

Mr. Lawlor: Section 138, subsections 3 and 4, particularly subsection 3: The reason I am standing up is because I don't remember why we did this and I would like clarification of the purpose. Previously, at the end of subsection 4, the words "for non-appearance" were not present. What is this subsection 3 being directed at, particularly as subsection 4 covers the same ground but appears to be a little more restrictive? In other words, explain it all to me.

Mr. Sterling: I'm surprised the member for Lakeshore doesn't remember, because that was a direct result of the delegation we had from the Quakers. We wanted to clarify the fact that the surety would only be responsible for a non-appearance and not for another condition of the recognizance.

Mr. Lawlor: I see. In other words, you say the surety only for non-appearance; the principle for everything; okay.

Section 138 agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Where shall we go next? I'm looking at the member for Lakeshore, or St. George or Ottawa East. Can we go right to the end of the bill?

Mr. Roy: Maybe I can make a facetious comment. I notice that when we are dealing with search warrants in section 142 the bill seems to cover everything, you have really looked at every aspect of this. I take it one of the reasons you didn't talk about eavesdropping or wire tapping is because you have no jurisdiction on this. I see one of my good friends smiling to the parliamentary assistant. You seem to have covered everything else.

As I was following through this, I was anxious to reach the point where we start talking about eavesdropping and wire tapping. I take it the only reason you have not gone into it is because you do not have any jurisdiction, is that it?

Mrs. Campbell: That's a very good reason.

Sections 139 to 150, inclusive, agreed to.

Mrs. Campbell: I was going to have a comment at the conclusion before we finished with the bill, but do we have a section to go back to?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: It's my recollection we had to go back to the definition section.

Mrs. Campbell: That's correct. I would like to speak before we finalize the definition section.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: We're finished the bill except for the definition section.

On section 1:

Mr. Sterling: I think there was some question in relation to section 1(1)(f). The reason for defining a police officer as a chief of police or other police officer or constable is that under the Police Act a police officer doesn't include such people as a corporal, an inspector, a police chief, a deputy chief, and various other people whom the public recognize as police officers. So this is put in to define police officers as including everyone who in fact the public deem as being police officers. It's because there's a difference in the Police Act and this particular act in the definition of police officer.

Mrs. Campbell: As we're coming to the close of this bill. I must just once more indicate my very real concerns in some general terms, notwithstanding the point at which we've arrived with the bill. It seems to me there should be something on the record here from the ministry indicating its intent so far as the educational process is concerned, and so far as the tightening up, which is now apparently all too obviously needed in the system which is currently in place. It seemed to me that at some point before we disposed of this bill there should be some such statement for the benefit of those who still have deep concerns about what is going to happen once the bill is through.

Mr. Sterling: I know that during the committee sittings when the Attorney General appeared before the committee he made a commitment to the committee. It perhaps should be repeated here in the House so that it can be on record. There will be an extensive education process of the justices of the peace as to their function under this act and under Bill 75.

The act itself, in the way it's structured, will lead to a continuing education program of justices of the peace because of the appellate provisions, in that a decision of a justice of the peace will be directly appealed to his senior judge, so to speak, by the provincial court judge; so that not only will we have an education program but we will also have a continuing education of the justices of the peace through that force supervision.

I think the Attorney General and the ministry have also indicated to the committee and to this House that this bill will take approximately one year to come into full force. We also indicated to the committee that we will use this particular educational process to continue the education of the JPs with regard to problems in relation to other areas of jurisdiction that a JP has. I think that was mostly pointed out with regard to the surety problem the Quaker group brought to us. We have no hesitation in giving that commitment to this Legislature.

Section I agreed to.

Bill 74, as amended, reported.

PROVINCIAL COURTS AMENDMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 75, An Act to amend the Provincial Courts Act.

Mr. Sterling: This bill basically sets up the provincial court to implement the provisions of Bill 74 which we have just dealt with. It is really a bill which deals with the nuts and bolts of setting up the court for purposes of using Bill 74.

Mrs. Campbell: Speaking for our party, I accept the fact that this is indeed the implementation bill to be the companion piece for Bill 74. I would just like to say that it is interesting to me that we have made every effort to somewhat decriminalize the provincial offences, but I note that we keep the rules committee the same. I suppose one can have two different approaches even in that area.

I have nothing to say so far as the bill is concerned. It has to be passed.

Mr. Lawlor: I think the very least one can do is bow obeisance to the fact that we spent time on this bill.

I do always find section 1 not so much of a puzzlement as a bemusement, I suppose. It reads in the last lines: "In the absence of express provision for procedures . . . the judge, justice of the peace or provincial court judge shall exercise the jurisdiction in any manner consistent with the due administration of justice." I am sure the parliamentary assistant, his advisers before him and any members of this House haven't got the remotest notion of what that particular section means, but who would we be to question such omniscience? Therefore, I don't want to make any major issue, unless you are particularly anxious to reply.

[9:45]

As for the rest, with the rules committee, that is very much in order. By the way, I would like to see Williston's thing one of these days—it should be due about now—and then the contempt proceeding.

The bill is fruitful and worthwhile, but there is nothing contentious about it.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Any comment on that, Mr. Parliamentary Assistant?

Mr. Sterling: No, Mr. Chairman, I don't have any comment. The only point is I believe that there is a certain law in relation to the criminal procedure that if the code hasn't got a procedure for it, then in fact, the magistrate can't do it.

This particular section 1 of Bill 75 is put in there in order to allow the justice of the peace or the provincial court judge to fill in between the cracks where there doesn't appear to be a procedure for a small technical point.

Mrs. Campbell: Catchall.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Shall all sections of Bill 75 as it appears before us, carry?

Agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Shall Bill 75 be reported?

Agreed to.

Mrs. Campbell: If we didn't report it, we'd be in trouble.

On motion by Mr. Sterling, the committee of the whole House reported one bill with amendment and one bill without.

THIRD READINGS

The following bills were given third reading on motion:

Bill 74, An Act to establish a Code of Procedure for Provincial Offences.

Bill 75, An Act to amend the Provincial Courts Act.

Mrs. Campbell: Isn't Mr. McMurtry remotely interested in these bills?

Mr. Nixon: Quitting time.

Mrs. Campbell: Have you run out of business?

Mr. Bradley: Emergency.

Mrs. Campbell: You haven't got your people here. Who's your whip?

On motion by Hon. F. S. Miller, the House adjourned at 9:49 p.m.

APPENDIX

TUESDAY, MARCH 27, 1979

STANDING RESOURCES
DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE

The committee met at 8:10 p.m.

Clerk of the Committee: Ladies and gentlemen, I see a quorum. The first order of business is the election of a chairman, and I'd call for nominations.

Mr. Johnson: I propose Osie Villeneuve.

Mr. M. Davidson: I second the nomination.

Clerk of the Committee: Are there any other nominations? If not, I declare the nominations closed and Mr. Villeneuve as chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Members of the committee, I want to thank you for appointing me as chairman.

The position of vice-chairman is open if somebody will nominate someone for that.

Mr. Lane: I nominate Andy Watson.

Mr. M. Davidson: I second that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Are there any other nominations? If not, I declare Mr. Andy Watson as vice-chairman of this committee.

Mr. M. Davidson: Mr. Chairman, before we begin, there are a couple of procedural things I would like to raise with you, if I might.

First of all, is there any indication that the minister is going to be here during these hearings?

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Whip, I will have to ask you.

Mr. Haggerty: The chairman of the Workmen's Compensation Board is here.

Hon. Mr. Starr: Yes, Mr. Chairman, the minister will be here. He has been detained for a few minutes.

Mr. Chairman: Fine.

Ms. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order: Before we go on to the Workmen's Compensation Board report, which is the subject of consideration tonight, could we deal with a scheduling matter for the committee for future sittings so that we have a timetable?

Mr. Chairman: I thought that we should settle our itinerary for this week at least, because I hear through the grapevine that some are not too anxious to sit tomorrow evening and that some request we should use up this time if it is needed; so I am open for any suggestions that may come from the members of the committee.

Mr. Lane: I think we can find time while the House is in session. I am not prepared to sit tomorrow night.

Mr. M. Davidson: Mr. Chairman, will you accept a procedural motion for debate, if necessary?

I would move that this committee sit Thursday afternoon following routine proceedings to make up for the time that might be lost.

If I may speak to that, it is my understanding that there was an agreement among the House leaders that we would have 15 hours in which to deal with the Workmen's Compensation Board. If we follow the schedule that has been set out, we will have approximately 12½ hours; therefore, to make up the 15 hours, I would move that we sit Thursday afternoon following routine proceedings.

Mr. Lane: And not Wednesday evening.

Mr. M. Davidson: Not Wednesday evening; Thursday afternoon.

Mr. Chairman: Is that acceptable?

Mr. Van Horne: Mr. Chairman, in view of the motion, I would like to ask if there is any determination that we sit only this week, or if there is any preclusion of next week.

Mr. Chairman: I understand, according to what I have here, that we have until Friday. But on Wednesday, according to the schedule here, the times are 10 a.m. to 12:30 and 2 p.m. to 4 p.m. Personally, I have no objection to going until 5 if most members are agreeable to that.

Mr. Van Horne: If I may continue the question that I asked—in a sense you were not able to answer whether we could go into next week—my point is simply this: It is fine for House leaders to agree to whatever they feel might be right at the beginning of their determination of what the business will be for the following week or so, but it should be the prerogative of the committee members to determine what they feel they can justifiably and rightfully do in determining the business of the committee.

My point is that if we can't finish this week—and I am not prepared, either on my own behalf or on behalf of the other members of our caucus, to sit on Wednesday evening—if we can't finish this week, not sitting Wednesday evening, we should request permission to sit next week, if in fact we don't have permission by whatever agreement the House leaders may have made.

Mr. McClellan: What is wrong with Thursday afternoon?

Mr. Van Horne: I am not excluding or precluding Thursday afternoon. I am submitting that the hours that may be allotted for this week should not cut us out of next week.

Mr. McClellan: Let's agree to sit Thursday afternoon and then see where we are on Friday; and if we still have some work to do—

Mr. Van Horne: Was that part of the motion that was made?

Mr. M. Davidson: I can include that if you like. My concern, and the concern of the members of our caucus, is that we do get in the 15 hours.

[8:15]

Mr. Bounsall: The shift from Wednesday night to Thursday afternoon does get the possibility of 15 hours in all this week.

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Chairman, it was my understanding that we would finish Friday at one o'clock; if we have to schedule extra sittings for Thursday afternoon and Wednesday afternoon, so be it, but let's not go beyond one o'clock Friday. If this is the case, then Wednesday and Thursday afternoon are not acceptable.

Mr. Bounsall: Mr. Chairman, if we accept the motion for Thursday afternoon, that does get 15 hours in by one o'clock Friday, sitting the agreed-upon times on Wednesday morning and afternoon, Thursday evening and Friday morning; if we add the Thursday afternoon and not Wednesday night, we do get 15 hours in by one o'clock Friday.

Mr. Johnson: And we'd finish Friday at one.

Mr. Bounsall: That's right. Call the motion then.

Mr. Chairman: Are you in favour of sitting on Thursday afternoon after question period?

Mr. Johnson: Yes. Conditional upon finishing Friday at one o'clock.

Mr. Chairman: Okay.

Mr. Van Horne: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman: It can't be conditional on that; if there are 15 hours and they're not finished by Friday, then it should be the prerogative of the committee to ask that it extend into next week to give those 15 hours that we are supposed to have.

Mr. M. Davidson: I would suggest, if I might, that when we get to one o'clock

Friday afternoon, we take a look as to whether or not we have the 15 hours; if not, then we make a decision as to where we go from there. Is that okay?

Mr. Van Horne: I would agree with that, but I don't want to see one o'clock Friday as an absolute.

Mr. McClellan: But the absolute is 15 hours.

Mr. Van Horne: That's right.

Mr. Chairman: I think we have a very good chance of sitting 15 hours this week. If we sit on Wednesday till five o'clock, we would gain an additional hour. If we meet on Thursday after question period, we would gain two and a half hours or thereabouts; and if we meet in the evening and on Friday, that would give us approximately 15 hours. Is that satisfactory?

Ms. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, that's satisfactory to me too, but I want to go on to deal a little with the following week, because we do still have to deal with the report of the hearings in February on acid rain, control orders and so on. I understand the draft report will be ready by the end of this week; so we could deal with it at the first meeting next week, on the Tuesday evening. But I would like us to decide that now so that people can read the report and prepare themselves for dealing with that report; also, some people who dealt with those hearings in February may wish to substitute on the committee.

I would suggest that we earmark next Tuesday, a week tonight, for consideration of the draft report on the environmental hearings that were held in February.

Mr. Chairman: Any more discussion on this subject?

Mr. Johnson: Mr. Chairman, it has been brought to my attention that a motion was introduced in the House on March 15 that we finish consideration of the Workmen's Compensation Board report by March 30.

Mr. Chairman: Right.

Mr. Johnson: Which is Friday.

Mr. Chairman: Right.

Mr. Johnson: Is this correct?

Mr. McClellan: As long as we have the 15 hours.

Mr. Johnson: If it is, is that not an order to this committee to finish by March 30?

Mr. McClellan: I think we have our 15 hours.

Mr. Chairman: I think it's understood, Jack, that we will.

Mr. Johnson: All right.

Mr. Bounsall: Mr. Chairman, I think it is important that we get at and finish up the discussion of the report on the acid rain and the pulp and paper control orders. The staff we have hired to prepare an initial report for consideration by the committee is in a position now to circulate that to those members. I think we should get at it fairly shortly. If you need a motion I would make one that we consider that next Tuesday night. That is assuming that the Workmen's Compensation Board is finished by the 30th, as we have agreed.

Mr. Chairman: I see no reason why you shouldn't make the motion.

Mr. Bounsall: I so move.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. M. Davidson: Mr. Chairman, I have another procedural motion, if I may. I would like to move that the topics to be dealt with under the report of the Workmen's Compensation Board be carried out in the same manner that we would go through in dealing with normal estimates; and that we deal with them in the following order: main administration, claims, applications, review, appeals, rehabilitation, medical, vocational, benefits, payment levels, pensions, and investments.

I can give the clerk a copy of this.

My reason for that, Mr. Chairman, is that in past years in dealing with the report of the compensation board we have had a great deal of difficulty, both as committee members and other members of the Legislature, in finding out exactly what topics were coming up. We have had the problem whereby members who would like to speak to specific points within the report have been absent and have come in at a later time and raised similar subjects to those that have been raised previously and have already been discussed. I think by following this line of order—and it is an order that Dr. Bounsall referred to in the discussion of last year's report and seemed to have some sympathy from the board on—they, too, felt it could probably expedite matters. I think it would give us a more thorough review of the report, and I think it will allow members who wish to participate to know exactly when these topics will be coming up, and they will be able to participate if they are interested in that certain section.

Mr. Chairman: Is the committee in favour of following this schedule?

Mr. Van Horne: Mr. Chairman, I have discussed this with our committee members. A couple of them are not here at this moment, but the consensus was that this would be reasonable, understanding or assuming that in fact we would make every effort to get through from one through five, starting with administration ending with investment, and not get bogged down with the claims section.

Mr. M. Davidson: If I may speak to that: When we talk about the claims section we are not talking about bringing in a truck load of individual claims and dumping them on to the committee or on to the chairman of the board. We are talking about the general, overall claims section more than anything else.

Mr. Van Horne: In which case we concur, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Do you want me to read the items as they are listed?

Mr. Johnson: Yes.

Mr. Van Horne: Yes, please.

Mr. Chairman: 1. Main administration; 2. Claims; 2(i). Applications; 2(ii). Review; 2(iii). Appeals; 3. Rehabilitation; 3(i). Medical 3(ii). Vocational; 4. Benefits; 4(i). Payment levels; 4(ii). Pensions; 5. Investments.

I would ask the chairman of the compensation board to come forward.

Mr. M. Davidson: If I may, Mr. Chairman, I do have one more procedural motion. I would move, on behalf of the New Democratic Party, that Thursday evening be set aside, and that this committee be allowed to call witnesses other than people from the Workmen's Compensation Board, but witnesses who in fact worked with injured workers throughout the entire year.

Mr. Chairman: Is that agreeable to the committee?

Mr. Haggerty: Are you talking about the Injured Worker's Consultants?

Mr. M. Davidson: In this particular case I am talking about the Union of Injured Workers, the Injured Worker's Consultants, the legal consultants for injured workers; and the Ontario Federation of Labour if they so care to present themselves.

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Chairman, that's rather short notice, I believe. If I had known that this resolution was coming forward, I and I am sure almost every member would have been able to bring in representatives from within certain unions and industry in Ontario.

If we accept the motion as it is now, that means there is only a certain privileged few who have the opportunity to come forward. I suggest at this time I don't think that I could accept such a proposal.

Mr. M. Davidson: The motion simply says "witnesses"; it doesn't say who they should be. You asked me a question and I gave you an answer.

Mr. Haggerty: All I am suggesting is that I think it is a good idea, but I think on such short notice as this other members would have witnesses wanting to come in too. I don't think it would be quite fair. I don't have to tell you that from my dealings with workmen's compensation, particularly some of the union representatives who deal with compensation cases in the industry in the Erie riding would be only too happy to be here, but on such short notice I don't think it would be fair to them; and I don't think it would be fair to them to be left out of it.

Mr. Van Horne: Mr. Chairman, in fairness to the member who just made the proposal, he tested that on me earlier in the day and my reaction was not negative, and yet in fairness, I have not had the opportunity to canvass the people in our caucus.

As an afterthought to our conversation I had to wonder if that wasn't all bad. Perhaps it could be extended to such a thing as the committee visiting the Downsview Hospital and Rehabilitation Centre to have an informal meeting with some of the people who in fact are attendant there and get some input from them. Fair is fair on both sides of the fence, and with the little involvement that I have had—keep in mind that I have been in this position for only something less than two weeks in terms of being critic for our party; in that short span I have had a fair bit of representation from people who have been there in the last short while who have suggested that it may well be worth my while, or our party's while or every member's while, to go and be part of the Monday night input sessions they have.

Having said that, I can't suggest that we are against the motion, and yet on the other hand I am not sure it is either as broad as it should be or that we can go along with it. So I would submit that a motion to table would be in order so that we might come back and consider it at the beginning of the session tomorrow morning. I would therefore so move, that we table until tomorrow morning.

Mr. Chairman: Any other member wish to speak on this?

Mr. Bounsall: A motion to table is not debatable, I don't think, Mr. Chairman; is it? If it was a motion, is that a motion?

Mr. Van Horne: That's an old Windsor rule.

Mr. Bounsall: Can you imagine all the motions to table that are going to come up here; because that's okay by us, I think, if we wait until tomorrow to decide.

Mr. Chairman: I think in fairness, since it is such short notice, that perhaps everybody will be in a better position tomorrow to give a decisive answer as to what procedure we should follow, whether we should visit this institution; because after all I can understand that everybody wants to be fair. Do you have any objection to that?

[8:30]

Mr. M. Davidson: I think we can table it for the moment, Mr. Chairman.

ANNUAL REPORT, 1977, WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION BOARD

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Minister, we have you here; and the first item is the main administration. Would you care to open it and then ask for the chairman to carry on?

Mr. M. Davidson: If I may, I think the chairman and the two leadoff speakers should be allowed the prerogative of doing a general, overall view and then we start following the procedure.

Mr. Chairman: That is what I think, but I just thought as a gesture of politeness to ask the minister if he had any—

Mr. Haggerty: The 15 hours, then, start at 8:30.

Mr. Chairman: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, ladies and gentlemen, some months ago I submitted to Her Honour, the Lieutenant Governor, the 1977 annual report for the Workmen's Compensation Board of Ontario. I do not intend to go into the details of that report at this time, unless there are definite points you wish to discuss at the conclusion of my remarks.

During the next few minutes I will touch on the highlights in that report and try to bring you up to date on the current work of the WCB.

In 1977 we processed 423,767 claims. Our total for 1978 will be 424,609, an increase of less than 1,000. These are impressive figures but I must say our work cannot be evaluated on the basis of statistics alone. What is important is the manner in which we handle claims rather than the number that we process.

While it is true that we receive 1,700 claims each working day, we deal with them one at a time. While we have computers and other modern facilities and machines to assist with our paperwork, we cannot judge the merits of a claim on a mechanical basis. Each one of those claims must receive individual, personal attention. Our claims people are acutely aware that our claimants are individual men and women under stress, and because of this each claim deserves and demands prompt attention. To handle these calls for help in any other manner would be to fail in our mandate to assist the injured workers of this province.

We have been criticized for the length of time it takes to settle some claims. I would like to call your attention to the fact that 98 per cent of our uncomplicated claims are paid within five days of the receipt of the accident report in our mail room.

On claims where the doctor's report is the first notification of an accident, it is often necessary to request a report and, in some instances, further details from the employer; yet more than 93 per cent of these cases are paid within 30 working days.

Extended-disability claims may require a detailed investigation; yet more than 75 per cent of the claims of this nature are paid within 30 days.

Considering our workload, which increases by 1,700 claims a day, I do not consider criticism of our efficiency in this respect is justified. I will, however, be the first to admit that in handling 424,000 claims a year, there are bound to be some errors. I am very unhappy when this occurs, and we make every effort to make up for this unfortunate lost time.

Sometimes, however, delays are beyond our control. When an employer or a doctor delays in sending information to us, we must hold up the claim until we receive the details we need. Our guidelines for this are clearly laid down under the terms of the Workmen's Compensation Act. We must follow this act. Although we are allowed some discretion in applying its terms, it limits us in certain areas. For instance, we are very much the servants of the Legislature when it comes to minimum and maximum benefits.

I must mention at this time the dedication of the WCB staff which was very much in evidence during the latest mail delivery disruption. Anticipating a strike, our staff prepared more than 60,000 pension cheques in advance of the normal mailing date and forwarded them to the pensioners. They also set up and staffed 28 temporary depots throughout the province and at head office where claimants could pick up their compensation cheques during the mail stoppage. More than 25,000 cheques were distributed in this manner, preventing many cases of hardship on the part of the recipients.

The board's medical services division is continually conducting research in the field of industrial medicine. Based on preliminary reports of research the board had commissioned, it was possible last year to set up guidelines to allow claims for cancer of the larynx. To date, 10 claims have been allowed.

Early in 1978, criteria were established which allowed the board to evaluate permanent disability in white-finger disease, which occurs among workers using vibrating equipment. To date, more than 70 new cases have been accepted, while pensions are being paid in 81 cases, including some which were approved prior to 1977.

During the year the back education program was commenced, and more than 600 patients now have been given this training. While the program appears to be working very well, it is still too early for a full evaluation. However, because approximately 25 per cent of all claims involved back problems, this program is of great importance to the people we serve.

Over the past few years the board has sponsored, wholly or in part, 29 medical research projects; all of these have been directly related to the assessment and treatment of injured workers. The benefits of some of these projects will, I am sure, be shared with and welcomed by the general public in the not-too-distant future.

Last November, our hospital and rehabilitation centre at Downsview celebrated its 20th anniversary. More than 100,000 patients have been treated there since it was opened. It admits and discharges 7,500 patients a year and carries out 2,500 treatment sessions each and every day.

Hospital and rehabilitation centre staff continues to develop and test innovative diagnostic and treatment methods. It has formed special clinic teams to provide the special expertise which is required to assess and treat complex cases. This is a new concept in patient treatment, and we have been among the first hospitals in North America to adopt it.

The Downsview centre is the largest facility of its kind in North America and is recognized as one of the leading rehabilitation treatment centres for injured workers in the whole world. Each year, hundreds of visitors from other Canadian provinces and from many foreign countries visit this centre. They study the work we are doing there and have adopted many of the procedures and treatments developed by the centre.

The centre does not concentrate only on the patient's physical treatment. Rehabilitation encompasses psychological assistance, assessment for new skills and the use of specially trained social workers.

Everything possible is done to ensure that the patient's recovery is as rapid and complete as possible. But we cannot casually write off an injured worker as a statistic merely because he or she has been released from the hospital. In many cases they are not able to pursue their former occupation, so we feel it is the responsibility of the Workmen's Compensation Board to assist them in finding gainful employment. To accomplish this, we attempt to match job vacancies with an injured worker's capabilities. To locate these vacancies, we have undertaken a promotion campaign which points out the advantages of hiring these rehabilitated workers. As a result of our efforts, more than 1,400 job vacancies have been listed and more than 400 workers have been placed in jobs suited to their capabilities. The high standards set by the rehabilitation counsellors ensure that a particular job is in keeping with the injured employee's skills and interests.

We anticipate they will become even more selective in the future, resulting in a higher placement rate. Certainly, as more employers become aware of this program, our placement rate will increase accordingly.

Part of the program consists of on-the-job training where we pay a decreasing proportion of the employee's wages, with the employer gradually assuming the cost as the worker becomes fully trained.

Midway through 1978, we increased the staff of our vocational rehabilitation division. This gave the counsellors a reduced caseload, allowing them to spend more time on individual cases. Overall, the rehabilitation staff was instrumental in returning close to 5,000 injured workers to suitable occupations.

I have mentioned that we process more than 1,700 claims a day. In handling a volume of this nature, we recognize that the continuous upgrading of our claims personnel and procedures is a matter of major importance.

I want to assure you, lady and gentlemen, that we are not content merely to function in a holding pattern; we are seeking new and better methods by which claims can be even more efficiently processed. To help accomplish this, we have added a new information office in Kingston to the eight area offices and five information offices already in operation.

Additional staff has been added to the claims information and counselling services branch. This additional staff was found to be necessary as the number of claims in which local investigators were involved increased by 20 per cent in 1978 over the previous year.

The efforts of the claims services division are being aimed at obtaining information and medical evidence more quickly, especially in cases involving reopened claims and claims that are complex in nature.

[8:45]

At our head office we have installed more modern switchboard equipment and added more inquiry clerks to be able to handle inquiries more efficiently.

By the use of courier services we have greatly reduced the delay in transferring documents between the head office and field offices. We have added 10 initial adjudicators and four co-ordinators to our claims staff, and they have undergone intensive training. Our more senior investigators have also taken part in this training program.

As I mentioned previously, the whole thrust of our claims procedure is aimed towards a considered, efficient and prompt appraisal of the claims we receive. We are continuing with our study on decentralizing our claims offices and are evaluating the possible increase in efficiency and convenience to our clients such a program might produce.

Because the benefits of the Workmen's Compensation Act are conveyed by law as a right, we have a moral obligation to make everyone aware of them. Our communications division has maintained an active program designed to acquaint as many people as possible with the services available to injured workers. A province-wide survey indicates that almost all Ontario adults are aware of the Workmen's Compensation Board, and the vast majority of them have a clear understanding of its basic functions.

The survey also showed that the public tends to have favourable attitudes towards the board. The survey provided ample evidence that the Workmen's Compensation Board employees were regarded as courteous and helpful, and that the public felt the board was doing its best to settle claims as quickly as possible.

However, the survey also showed that many people were not aware of the full scale of benefits available, and we are taking steps to correct this deficiency. We have continued to maintain a strong liaison with the news media throughout the province and have found that this leads to greater accuracy in reporting.

We have added staff to set up direct lines of communication with Ontario's ethnic community. Immigrants to our province form a large proportion of the work force, and it is only fair not only that they be fully acquainted with their rights under the act, but also that we provide this information in their own language.

Our appeals division continues as a key factor in our procedural process, not only because of its function, but also because it is there and people know it is there. I believe that no other compensation board in the world has a system with so many built-in opportunities for the worker to be heard.

The board authorized an increase in staff for the appeals division, with the result that the backlog of appeal cases has been greatly reduced. The average waiting period for an appeals adjudicator hearing in Toronto has been reduced from 12 weeks to four weeks. This was achieved by increasing by 20 per cent the number of hearings heard by adjudicators in 1978.

In an effort to make the facilities of the appeal board available to as many people as possible with a minimum of inconvenience, the appeal board now travels to major Ontario centres outside Toronto for the purpose of holding hearings. The board has increased its out-of-town schedule so that two centres are visited each month. The appeal board continues, of course, to provide the service of interpreters, and workmen's advisers are available should an appellant require assistance.

As you know, the Workmen's Compensation Board funds the nine safety associations which work with various industries throughout the province, and we have a keen interest in the promotion of safe working conditions. I am certain that, were it not for the programs sponsored by the safety associations and their acceptance by both the workers and the employers of this province, our accident rate would be much higher than it actually is.

The accident rate is, of course, a prime factor in establishing the assessment cost factor. But the sound actuarial practices of the Workmen's Compensation Board, combined with our administrative procedures, enable us to levy an assessment rate which can be favourably compared with any other compensation board in Canada.

We try to give good value for that portion of the assessment dollar that pays for our administrative services. Our administrative costs are approximately six cents for each assessment dollar collected. Here again, this figure compares very favourably with other jurisdictions and most certainly is lower than that experienced by most Canadian provinces.

At the request of many employers, we changed our method of assessment payments to allow those firms whose annual assessment was $500 or over to pay their annual fee on a quarterly basis; this commenced at the beginning of this year and will greatly improve the cash flow situation with many of these firms.

In concluding, I would like to repeat my observation that we are constantly striving to upgrade our methods and our procedures. We are also very much aware of the fact that the reason for our existence is to provide assistance to the injured workers of Ontario, and that we must provide this assistance in a humane, efficient and equitable manner.

We have sometimes been pictured as a big, uncaring bureaucracy, whose primary purpose is to say "no" to those who ask for our help. I assure you this is not correct. Every day our attention is called to examples of our staff members walking that extra mile to render some special assistance to a claimant.

We may have our critics and our detractors, but we have our boosters too. I would like to quote to you excerpts from letters we received recently, and have been receiving throughout the years; quotations like these: "I would like to thank you for your speedy and helpful assistance"; "The hospital and rehabilitation centre is one of the cleanest, best-run institutions I have ever been in"; "I request that you convey our thanks to everyone at the WCB who always give a person in difficulty the benefit of their patience and understanding"; "I must say that everyone was more than willing to help me"; "Your staff showed me a personal sincerity and concern which was greatly appreciated."

Those are some of the quotations from the letters we received. They are just a few of the many letters and messages of appreciation.

The WCB, lady and gentlemen, has a difficult job to do, but I feel strongly that it is doing it well. For this we have to thank a great many dedicated employees at that board. As I have on previous appearances before your committee, I would like to express publicly the appreciation the board and I have for their loyal work. Thank you.

Mr. Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Starr. Do you want to go into claims as your first—

Mr. M. Davidson: I think Mr. Van Horne should do a general lead-off.

Mr. Van Horne: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the comment from Mr. Davidson; I do want to make a few general introductory comments, again keeping in mind that my role as critic in labour is a new role to me and that my knowledge is probably on the short side. It does not, however, reflect a lack of interest or lack of desire to pursue these 15 hours of debate, and then further to that our general concern about the labour ministry beyond the Workmen's Compensation Board of course.

First of all, our committee members who will be present over the next few days include myself; Mr. Bolan, who is sitting beside me, the member for Nipissing; Mr. Riddell from Huron-Middlesex, who will be along later this evening; and Mr. Julian Reed from Halton-Burlington; and of course Mr. Haggerty is with us too, in a sense almost ex officio and by the same token as a member of our caucus who is extremely concerned with the Workmen's Compensation Board and its operation, and whose experience in the labour field is considerably more than mine.

We don't have an elaborate statement to make, although we have a few points that we would like to touch on. I would observe, having listened to Mr. Starr and having read the report, that for the layman, for the person who is not either an employee or totally versed in the Workmen's Compensation Board, that one's first reaction to this report is that everything is A-okay; you know, there is really nothing all that wrong and thank God for WCB and let it carry on.

Having said that, I would have to ask the question of myself: why, then, is my log in my constituency office about two thirds full of calls and complaints about Workmen's Compensation Board? I want to make it abundantly clear that the local office in my riding, and the local office in London, Ontario, which helps not only my riding of London North but the other ridings in and around London, that local office bends over backwards to try to accommodate us; I have every admiration for the people there in terms of their willingness to communicate with us whatever information they can.

Yet at the same time as I say that, I have to point out to Mr. Starr, and to the minister if he was here, that there is still a tremendous gap between what goes on in the local community for those seven, eight, nine, 10 per cent that can't be dealt with expediently, quickly, satisfactorily, and what is going on apparently in the home office, the head office—Metro, the government, whatever you wish to call it. You have to keep in mind that the people out there working in my community, in the General Motors plant or in the Minnesota Mining plant or the Kellogg's plant or wherever, who have run into some kind of problem on the job and have had to go to workmen's compensation for assistance, they don't perceive the machinery as nicely as it is laid out in the annual reports.

The reports, again as you read them, are fine, but I would submit for my first round in this exercise that there should be a change made in the format. Let's tell the members of the Legislature, let's tell the people who take the time to read this report and the other reports that come along, that there indeed are some problems, and here is where they are and here is what they are.

As I read this report, I am sorry I don't find that. What is left to us as legislators, as people whom the first ombudsman has called the local ombudsman, we the members, the local ombudsperson or ombudsman, have got to try to explain to that injured worker or to that injured worker's wife, that in fact there are two or three levels of activity and we back in the boondocks in London are not able to resolve their problems, that we do in fact have to lean on what is happening here in Toronto.

But when we read these reports we don't find any of the problems listed; and in fairness, if you are presenting an annual report then you should devote some of your time and energy to pointing out areas where there are problems. And certainly, for whatever it's worth, if you do that, in my opinion, you would be helping the user whenever he or she comes along, and you would be helping the people who are trying to help the user—the members particularly—to identify some of the problems. You don't do that in this report. For openers, I would offer that as a criticism.

I would not like to get into too many specifics at this point, although I have 15 or 20 pages to read—not quite up to the 23 pages that the chairman, Mr. Starr, read. But mine are single-spaced and yours are double- or triple-spaced; so I suppose I could catch up and pass you. However, having gone through the exercise of spending some of the winter break trying to catch up with this, let me touch on a few points that concern me.

The first point, again, is: Let's have annual reports that point out some of the problems with workmen's compensation. That's point one. Point two: In reading through the Hansard reports from previous years, and for the last couple of years particularly, I find statements that concern me because I don't know that they've been followed up; if they have, please point out to me that I am wrong in drawing this to your attention.

From March 16, 1978, at page 773 of Hansard, I find a statement as follows: "The management committee's recommendation further said that the consultants should carry out detailed research and planning on methods of implementing a system of decentralized claims adjudication and provide us with an estimate of the associated costs." Maybe that has happened. I don't know. If it has, where are we going?

I have been in the Legislature just less than two years, but close to half, if not two thirds, of my time and my secretary's time in London is spent in trying to resolve problems centred on workmen's compensation. What we perceive as the major issue is that the local office really can't get into the decision-making process without some kind of contact or consultation with head office or with Toronto. Where have we gone with that statement I just read to you from Hansard? Is it happening? Will it be happening?

Again, I see the chairman, Mr. Starr, nodding his head in the affirmative. Perhaps when I've finished these statements he can come back and tell me more about this decentralization. I don't think decentralization is working as it should, no matter what I read here in Hansard. Perhaps you can prove to me where I'm wrong.

My other comments relate to political accountability and increased links with government. The task force of 1973—again, I'm digging into history—made a recommendation that there be a stronger and more formal link between the Workmen's Compensation Board and government. It was further suggested that the chairman and the Minister of Labour should meet regularly to discuss policy and administrative matters related to the act. It was also suggested that there be regular meetings between the minister and the Workmen's Compensation Board in general.

To my knowledge, the WCB has remained basically autonomous in spite of that recommendation, and whatever was suggested there isn't happening as it was intended to happen. Again, prove me wrong, please. Tell me if this is not happening as it was intended to happen.

Further, it was recommended that there be a direct relationship between WCB and Management Board through the Minister of Labour, thus providing Management Board with more information on WCB. Is that happening? I don't know. I've been reading and trying to find out. But it appears to me, albeit from casual discussions with some members of the cabinet, that they are not too knowledgeable about what is happening with WCB.

The 1973 task force also indicated that there was an absence of a complete set of regulations governing the benefit sections of Workmen's Compensation Act which has resulted in confusion and lack of awareness of WCB procedures and practices.

What about the guidelines? Are they different from or improved from that point up to now? Let me pick just an example or two to suggest that perhaps they are not. There are inconsistencies in the way the Canada Pension Plan benefits affected a claimant who was receiving total temporary disability benefits, and I can refer to Hansard for December 12, 1978, and a question asked by Mr. Laughren, the member for Nickel Belt. He said, at page 5943:

"Indeed, I have cases in my own constituency where workers receiving full benefits equivalent to total temporary disability benefits are receiving the Canada Pension Plan benefits as well as the total temporary disability benefits.

"How does the minister explain the inconsistency of one injured worker receiving CPP plus total temporary disability benefits on rehabilitation, and another injured worker who is willing to be rehabilitated, and indeed wants to be rehabilitated, having his benefits reduced or even terminated simply because he has applied for CPP?"

That question from Mr. Laughren in December of this past year—December 12, 1978—again reflects that there is still some inconsistency in the guidelines.

Further to that, I will get into specific cases later as we go through the procedure, as suggested by Monty. But let me add one or two final points.

There seems to be a degree of anxiety out there in the offices, and I have to go back to the question that I raised originally about decentralization. If you read the report, everything seems to be fine with WCB. But I put my secretary to the task of calling local offices in the last day or two to find out the number of investigators, how many people are on the waiting list and how long that waiting list is.

From the first couple of offices we called we got a very defensive answer and, in two instances, virtually no answer. My secretary identified herself as my secretary and assistant and gave my name. Within about three quarters of an hour, the London constituency office called here to Toronto, having been called by the London WCB office. The London WCB office said: "Hey, we are getting calls from Hamilton, from up north, wondering what in the hell this guy Van Horne is up to. What's wrong?"

That suggests to me that there is a kind of tension or anxiety out there in the boondocks that would reflect a degree of—

Mr. Bolan: Animus?

Mr. Van Horne: My colleague from Nipissing has another word here, but it tells me that they are concerned that perhaps they are not able to do the job as they perceive it should be done, or that there is some breakdown of communication between local office and central office.

If a member can't make an inquiry as to what is going on with a local office, I don't think just London has to answer me—and London helped me tremendously—as a member, I should be able to call wherever and get a reasonable response.

I submit to you that in the last two days we have had a very interesting exercise, with some of the folks saying, "Sorry, I can't answer." In a couple of instances we have been called back and told, "Now that we think of it, there aren't 22 on our waiting list; there are 35." Why didn't they give the story to us straight off the top? You don't know that, but it reflects a kind of attitude out there in the boondocks that maybe you should be taking a better look at it.

That's why I suggested, when the recommendation or the motion was made earlier, that perhaps witnesses be called in. Perhaps members are taking a very sincere and a very objective, hopefully very objective, look at WCB. I'm not here to grind an axe or try to crucify anyone. I'm here to try to speak for the people who have come to me in frustration, and they have come in large numbers. I'm trying to submit to you that we should perhaps, as members of this Legislature, and of this committee specifically, get out to take a look.

Let's go to Downsview. Let's get an insight into this and try to work toward providing better compensation for injured workers. That's my objective, that's the objective of our party; hopefully these comments will set us off on 14 or 13½ hours of meaningful discussion. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Starr.

Hon. Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I've made some notes and I will try to answer the questions you've posed to me, Mr. Van Horne. If I miss any please bring it to my attention.

The question of decentralization was brought up and discussed here at the last opportunity we had to appear before this committee. Since then we have asked for tenders from five firms and the successful bidder, the management consultant firm that we engaged, is now working on the possibilities of decentralization of adjudication in the province of Ontario by the Workmen's Compensation Board. They have not as yet made their report to us, Mr. Van Horne. We expect that report may be coming within the next two months, and of course the report itself will have to be dealt with by the corporate board of the Workmen's Compensation Board. That's where it stands now at the moment.

As to our connection with the government, and in particular with the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Labour which answers for us to the Legislature, we have established better communication. We are meeting now on a continuous basis, not only to discuss various other matters but any particular matter of importance that may come up which affects the Workmen's Compensation Board and injured workers. We are continually in meetings with the Minister of Labour to try to resolve them.

Mr. Van Horne: I would like to go back over that. How regular is regular and how often is the minister there?

Hon. Mr. Starr: The regular scheduled meetings are quarterly, and then there are meetings which are far more frequent on many other matters that may come up in between.

Mr. Van Horne: There are four quarters in the year so you'd meet four times a year. Is that what you're saying?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: If I may interject: This is not just on a personal basis but this is with other groups of my ministry; the occupational and safety division, along with other representatives of the board just to air any problems there may be between the ministry and the WCB, and to clarify issues. As well as that, Dr. McCracken and I meet on a monthly basis to review problems that there are; and the chairman and I have developed a pretty good rapport and meet on a frequent but unscheduled basis. We've tried to establish this quarterly meeting which allows members of the staff to discuss problems and to develop policies and so on.

Mr. Van Horne: If I may interject again, Mr. Chairman. The problem is still that Mr. Starr may be a great guy, and I've only met him a couple of times and I've no reason to think that he isn't; and you, Mr. Minister, may be a great guy and I've met you more often than I have met him; however, that still doesn't solve our problems as members trying to get a funnel into WCB other than through raising hell in question period or trying to embarrass, or perhaps going through the diplomatic channel of sending a note or a letter to the minister. I just have to wonder if there isn't some need that isn't being answered here; a need for members to have a more direct input. I don't know how we get that but I would submit that your meeting with the chairman isn't enough.

[9:15]

Hon. Mr. Starr: On this particular subject, Mr. Van Horne, prior to 1974 there wasn't the opportunity for this Legislature to have the Workmen's Compensation Board before it, as we are meeting now, to give an account of stewardship. It was in 1974 when I became chairman that I felt I should have that opportunity, and also the members of this Legislature should have the opportunity to meet with us so that we could give an account of our stewardship, so that you could give us some ideas as to what changes should be made, and would have the opportunity to be critical of the way we operate. This is how it came about, and it is an input that I welcome.

The other thing I was very much appreciative of in what you said was that the members of the Legislature should have the opportunity to visit Downsview hospital. I doubt whether many of them have had that opportunity; the opportunity is there, but they have not availed themselves of it.

Not only that, but I think every member of this Legislature should at one time or another visit our offices to see how we proceed with these claims, to see how our rehabilitation works, to see how our pensions operate, how our medical staff operates; to see eyeball to eyeball the situation as it exists, otherwise you are working in a vacuum. My door is always open; if there is any input that any member of the Legislature wishes to convey to me I am available, I am accessible for that purpose.

If there are any cases about which any members of the Legislature wish to enquire we have a special counsellor who will look after that particular member; he can contact that one person only, he doesn't have to phone all over the office.

So, many of these things are available, and if there are any suggestions where we can improve that liaison we are most acceptable to those suggestions.

You were talking about certain guidelines, sir. I am sorry I didn't understand exactly what you were driving at in those guidelines. Can you enlighten me on that, Mr. Van Horne?

Mr. Van Horne: Going back to the 1973 task force and quoting from it: "The absence of a complete set of regulations covering the benefit sections of the Workmen's Compensation Act has resulted in confusion and a lack of awareness of WCB procedures and practices."

Now I am going to notes, leaving the quote aside. It seems that those members of Workmen's Compensation Board who are clear on policy are few indeed. This has resulted in the shuffling of many claimant applications and inconsistencies in the settling of benefits. As an example, during the last session it was brought to the minister's attention—and this is the Hansard quote on page 5943, Mr. Laughren from Nickel Belt, whom I will be quoting in a moment—that there were inconsistencies in the way that the Canadian Pension Plan benefits affected a claimant who was receiving total temporary disability benefits. Apparently two other cases were recorded along the same lines.

In some cases those who were receiving CPP benefits were also receiving total temporary disability benefits; in other cases simply making an application to CPP resulted in an immediate reduction of total temporary disability benefits.

The minister's own feeling was that any changes in payment of benefits should take place only after the worker had received the benefits.

Mr. Laughren's question, in part, from December 12 reads: ". . . indeed, I have cases in my own constituency where workers receiving full benefits equivalent to total temporary disability benefits are receiving the Canada Pension Plan benefits as well as the total temporary disability benefits.

"How does the minister explain the inconsistency of one injured worker receiving CPP plus total temporary disability benefits on rehabilitation and another injured worker, who is also willing to be rehabilitated and indeed wants to be rehabilitated, having his benefits reduced or even terminated simply because he has applied for CPP?"

Hon. Mr. Starr: May I deal with the first part of your question about guidelines? I understand now what you mean by that.

We appeared before the select committee on the Ombudsman and they recommended to us that we make available publicly, or at least to them first of all, all of our policies, our manuals; and we also added directives and we made that available to them. We have made arrangements with the Government Services bookstore to make all of these available for sale to the general public. The libraries and universities throughout the province will have available all of our policies, manuals, and directives. They will be updated as new policies are made or as any changes occur in the manuals or directives. All of these things are available now to the general public or to anyone who wishes to have them.

When Mr. Laughren brought up this question as to the claimant or pensioner for example, who is applying for CPP, the minister made a statement in the House that it should be based on him actually receiving it. Since then, based on that suggestion, we have changed our policy so that no action is taken in respect to his supplementary payment on the application to the Canada Pension Plan until he does receive it, in actual fact.

Mr. Van Horne: I will read over that one and think about it.

Hon. Mr. Starr: Have I missed anything in answering?

Mr. Van Horne: I don't think so, but let me take that under advisement. Thank you.

Mr. M. Davidson: First of all, I would like to say that I welcome the opportunity to be the leadoff speaker for the New Democratic Party in speaking to the 1977 report of the Workmen's Compensation Board. I have with me on the committee Mr. Ross McClellan, Mr. Ted Bounsall and Mr. Bud Wildman, who will be the principal participants during this week with regard to the report, but as Mr. Van Horne pointed out, we too will have other members who will be coming in and taking up specific areas in which they have a personal interest.

I would like to say in starting that I have always found the board to be compassionate, understanding and fair to the injured workers in Ontario. I would like to say that but I can't, because if I did I would be misleading not only the members of this committee but I would be misleading the people in this room and the injured workers in this province.

I have sat and I have read the report for 1977. I have sat and I have listened to the opening remarks made by the chairman of the Workmen's Compensation Board. I can only suggest that it is probably the most glossed-over piece of trivia that I have ever had the opportunity to read.

Nowhere in the report—as Mr. Van Horne cannot find it, neither can I—did I find any of the faults that exist in the board. Nowhere in the opening statement by the chairman—and I can only assume that it is the chairman's report; I am quite sure he wouldn't have read it without approving it—can I find any faults that exist within the board. It is, in fact, an apologetic piece of literature for the actions that have not taken place and that have been brought to the attention of the board over a good number of years.

I was quite interested in some of the things that were contained in this report. I have to be honest, I was quite surprised at the number of claims that appear to be coming before the board, although I do notice there have been fewer in the past year. That kind of raises a question in my mind as to why that could possibly be, unless it is as a result of some of the information that we have received that employers are pressuring employees to go on sick benefit rather than lay a claim before the compensation board.

I would like to mention a couple of things in the report itself before I go into other detail. We talk about receiving 1,700 claims per day; we talk about receiving or processing 423,767 claims in 1977. We talk in percentages of cases, of 93 per cent being paid within 30 working days and 75 per cent of the claims which are on extended disability being paid within 30 days. We talk in general terms that somewhere along the line 95 per cent of claims in Ontario are processed without any great deal of difficulty.

I would like to point out that that may be true. I am not going to dispute that. If someone chops off a finger, the board knows he has a compensable accident. If he chops off his arm, it knows he has a compensable accident. If he is laid low by a blow on the head, it knows he has a compensable accident. But somewhere in this province, using this 1977 report, there are 21,000 injured workers for that year who have not had service that one could call complete and able or humane, as the chairman put it during his remarks.

They have had difficulties and they are the people who probably have compensable accidents that are not visible. They are the people who have occupational diseases that are not visible. They are the people who throughout the many, many years that the compensation board has been in existence have had to fight in order to get justice from the board.

I say that not loosely. Mr. Van Horne pointed out that since 1977 two thirds of his file probably relates to cases dealing with the Workmen's Compensation Board. I can say on my own behalf and on behalf of my colleagues here that mine is approximately 60 per cent of my caseload. There are probably others within our caucus who have a greater caseload in comparison to the number of cases that they handle.

In addition to members of this House having to deal with these problems, every major union in Ontario has an established workmen's compensation adviser within its plants. There are organizations, as I mentioned earlier, such as the Union of Injured Workers, the Injured Workers' Consultants, the legal consultants to injured workers, and various other groups throughout this province which exist simply because injured workers in this province are not getting justice through the compensation board.

There is something definitely wrong. My understanding of the reason that the board in fact exists is to work with and on behalf of injured workers in Ontario, to more or less take compensation to injured workers out of the political arena, to handle cases for these people, to advise these people and to treat them with dignity and respect. For some people in Ontario, that just isn't happening. It just isn't there.

Somehow or other we have to get it through to the people who are responsible for the administration of the board that this is the case, that there are workers in this province who are faced with very grave difficulties and that there are injured workers in the province who cannot get a cheque through when they are supposed to get a cheque.

I read with some interest in the report that people are no longer cut off benefits without being notified. I think it is in there in one of the things. I will tell you I don't know where that is occurring. Only last week in my riding office, in the case of one of the people who came to me for some advice and some assistance, that was the exact reason he was there. He had been cut off his benefits but he had never received a letter as to why and he had never been informed as to when.

This still goes on. It doesn't happen only in Cambridge. It doesn't happen only in the ridings of Mr. McClellan or Mr. Martel or Mr. Wildman or Mr. Haggerty. It is going on throughout the entire province. When I have someone suggest to me that it doesn't happen any more, I become a little dubious about that. It bothers me. It bothers me that any injured worker in Ontario, particularly if he has a family, has to sit around waiting for the Workmen's Compensation Board to send him a cheque in order that he could sustain his family, in order that he could put a roof over their heads, put bread on the table, whatever else is necessary.

Every time you call the compensation board they have a reason. They talk about, well, the file has been transferred from one department to another department, or they are doing this with it, or the file has been misplaced, or the information they are seeking has not been delivered to them. The compensation board told me that about this gentleman I have been talking to you about. They said they were waiting for the doctor's report. I called the doctor because I was a little angry with him and wondered why he was withholding the report. He said, "I mailed that in three weeks ago." Still this man hadn't had his claim processed, and still he hadn't received the moneys that were due him as an injured worker in the province of Ontario, and he had a family to look after. No income, and I would ask anyone on this committee or anyone at the head table or anyone in this room how long you could survive without any form of income whatsoever. It ain't easy. You can't do it.

Also in here we talk about the appeals and how the waiting time for appeals has been reduced from, I think, something like 12 weeks to four weeks. I question that statement. I have to question that statement because we have appeals before the compensation board and we are still waiting anywhere from six to eight weeks to get an appeal set up. I don't know where the four week figure was established. I don't know who wrote it into the chairman's remarks. I don't know whether someone said to the chairman that this is what's happening and the chairman thinks that that's the case or believes that that's the case. But those people who constantly work with and deal with injured workers week by week know that that figure is not factual. They are fully aware, as the injured worker is aware, that that figure is not factual when you are trying to get an appeal in the province of Ontario. As I say, I don't know where the figure comes from, but perhaps the chairman can explain that to us.

In his remarks the chairman pointed out some success in dealing with back injuries in the back educational program and he points out with pride—and I could very well see why he should—that the compensation board in Ontario has finally embarked on a back educational program, that they have in the past—in the report at any rate—dealt with over 600 patients. What the chairman failed to put into this report was that there are approximately 100,000 injured workers in Ontario who have back problems; 600 out of approximately 100,000 are being dealt with by the Workmen's Compensation Board or put on to a back educational program.

I don't think that's a very good record, and I don't think the fact that they have finally established that kind of a program in Ontario is much to brag about, given that this has been a problem before the compensation board for a good many years. It's not the first time that this kind of program has been raised with them.

I can remember when I first arrived here in 1975, Mr. Martel talked before the compensation board regarding people with back problems. He knows about back problems, he has one of his own—but he raised this program with the board. Mr. Laughren has discussed it. If I recall, Mr. Haggerty raised it during some of the hearings. It's not new to the board that these kinds of problems exist and that there are programs available, but only after having been told for many years have they established it.

I am grateful to see that they have established it. I am grateful to see that they are finally moving in that direction, but I don't think that it's—well, I don't want to use the word responsible because I don't want to say the chairman is irresponsible. I don't think it's wise of the chairman to try to fool the injured workers in the province of Ontario by making 600 out of an approximate 100,000 look like something worthwhile. It isn't. When he can show me that 60,000 out of 100,000 are on that program, when he can show us that they are in fact putting a program in effect that will be beneficial to the injured workers in Ontario who suffer from back injury, then it will be a worthwhile cause. Then he can come to us and brag about the progress that has been made.

Page 10 talks about rehabilitation encompassing psychological assistance assessment. I don't want you to answer me now, Mr. Starr, because maybe you don't know. I don't want to pose it as a question that you should answer now, but it's a question I would like to ask you.

Do you have any knowledge whatsoever of Sodium Pentothal being used at the Downsview rehabilitation centre? If you do, I would like to ask you why that drug is being used in the supposed treatment of injured workers.

For those of you who, like me, probably didn't know what Sodium Pentothal is, it's truth serum.

If that form of drug were being used in a rehabilitation hospital, my own mind would tell me that it was not used for the rehabilitation of the patient but to try to establish that the patient isn't quite as badly off as he's letting on. I'm not sure that's the role of the Downsview rehabilitation centre.

I'm only suggesting it's done, because it was brought to my attention by a constituent who happened to have been there and whose benefits were cut off. When we raised it with the people concerned it was never denied. It was never confirmed either; but it was never denied. I took the lack of denial to mean that what I was being told was accurate.

I, and members of our caucus, do not believe that the purpose of the Downsview rehabilitation centre is to prove someone may be acting out a part. I'm sure there are many other ways that can be proved without subjecting a person to Sodium Pentothal.

In his remarks, the chairman says that we cannot casually write off an injured worker. But there are literally thousands of injured workers in Ontario today who perhaps have not been written off by the board—I'm quite certain their files still remain with the board, and the board still has records pertaining to those individual cases; in actual terms the board hasn't written them off because it still knows they exist—but, for one reason or another, those injured workers are still not receiving justice through the board.

Many of them, for many reasons, have gone through the appeal process and have been denied their claim. Even though they were able to produce their own doctor's medical evidence, and even though their own doctor's evidence contradicted the evidence that the board's doctors were able to produce, they were denied their claim.

As a result, many of these people now can be classed as unemployable, I would imagine. There are large numbers of them throughout Ontario who are collecting welfare benefits and, if they're able, unemployment insurance benefits. I, for one, don't think that's what the Workmen's Compensation Board is, or should be, about.

I know there are people who will try to beat the system. That's true of any system. But no one can convince me, and no one ever will convince me, that the numbers of people in Ontario—including the 21,000 who are having difficulty getting justice and benefits from the board—are such that there are that many people trying to beat the system. That's like saying that everybody who collects unemployment insurance is trying to beat the system.

To my mind, anyone who takes the attitude that injured workers who try to get justice for themselves in Ontario are only doing it because they feel they're getting away with something, really has not thought through the situation that these people find themselves in.

There is no great payment from the Workmen's Compensation Board in terms of injured workers. In many cases, they are only getting a percentage of 75 per cent of their actual wages at the time of injury. If anybody thinks they can live on 20 per cent of 75 per cent of their wages, I would suggest that perhaps they try it. Take that amount of money out of the bank, say for a four-week period, and live on it—or try to live on it. You will find that you don't live very well. You will find that you don't do the things, or eat the things, or share with your family the things, that the average person in Ontario who is fully employed is capable of doing.

In Ontario we talk about vocational rehabilitation. We talk about putting these injured people back to work. Really, that is what should be happening. It is not an injured worker's fault in most cases that he is injured. In most cases—and I am talking now of the severely injured worker—you will find that the type of work he has been involved with does not lend itself to his rehiring in that particular job. I know there are those who say, "We will put you in a lower-paying job at light work." But you will find that the most severe injuries occur in industries where in most cases there is no light work available.

I had a visit from some people in the vocational rehabilitation department who are embarking on a new program of approaching industry and attempting to sell them on a new program that they have; that is, they are attempting to get these people to go back to work and to find suitable jobs for them. I think that's good. Actually I think it is something that is long overdue.

I was given to understand, by the gentleman to whom I spoke, that this program is only about two or three years old—two years old, I would think—in the manner that they are setting out to do it. If I understood him correctly, in the first year they had something like 40 employers who responded, in the next year it was something like 400, and they now are up to 600 employers, or somewhere in that neighbourhood, who have responded to this program. That's 600 employers in Ontario, or 600 jobs that have been made available to injured workers. I have to question whether that is good enough.

I understand that it's a new manner of approach. I understand that they have now added staff to that certain department. I understand that they have regional people out there working within the various regions of the province, trying to conduct this program and to sell it to the employers of Ontario. What I don't understand is, why has it taken so long?

For the thousands of injured workers in Ontario who need work, and who would prefer to work, we can only find at the moment 600 jobs. It's rather sad to think that here, in the most highly industrialized province in the whole of Canada, with a progressive Workmen's Compensation Board—I know it has to be; the chairman told me that, and I am not one to doubt the chairman's word.

Mr. Bounsall: Make sure you get the tongue in cheek there.

Mr. M. Davidson: I've got my tongue in my cheek. I'm not one to doubt the chairman's word.

We have a program, recently implemented, to try to convince employers that they should hire the injured workers of Ontario. It's far too late, I say. It's a program that should have been implemented 10, 15 or 20 years ago. When we talk about being progressive, we haven't even started. Again, that's not something new to the board.

[9:45]

Like Mr. Van Horne, I spent my winter break, if one cares to call it that, reading old Hansards back to when the compensation board first came before the committee. And, in reading, I found that most of what Mr. Van Horne and I are saying has been said, and said many times. Prior to the board coming before the committee, if one wants to go back far enough, these things were said in the Legislature in many speeches. Mr. Haggerty has been around far longer than I—or Mr. Van Horne. I'm quite sure that Mr. Haggerty has brought to the attention of this board many times many of the problems that we have spoken about here today.

There is another problem, Mr. Chairman, a problem that you may not be aware of. I've got quite a bit more but I'll go in my turn, as Mr. Van Horne will, when we get into the main thrust of the report, and take it topic by topic.

One of the problems, or one of the things that was recently raised with me—I have to be honest—made me damn mad.

I have always been of the opinion, as I mentioned earlier, that the Workmen's Compensation Board in Ontario was the injured workers' place, just like this place is supposed to be the place for the public of Ontario. I don't like the idea that injured workers in Ontario receive threatening letters from the compensation board. I don't like the idea that somebody is told, "If you set foot on this property again, you'll be charged with trespassing." I don't think that's right. I think it's a very poor exercise on the part of whoever made that decision. I don't know if it's a policy decision. I don't know if it's an administrative decision. I don't know who made that decision but I sure know that it's happening. I'll give you an example.

One gentleman in particular speaks very little English. He went to the board on two or three occasions, attempting to get some assistance. He had a great deal of difficulty in explaining to whoever it was he was talking to what it was he was there for. The person he was talking to got a little verbally abusive. He, in turn, got a little more verbally abusive, but nothing other than verbal abuse took place. He was finally convinced to leave and he did. He went back the next day and, again, attempted to see someone who could assist him with his problem. He was again ejected. He was finally sent a letter. That letter said, in effect, that if he came back without having an appointment there was a possibility of being charged with trespass.

All I can say to you, Mr. Starr, is that I don't know how you, as chairman of that board, can allow that kind of thing to go on in Ontario. No threats were made by anyone. No physical abuse was laid upon anyone and yet the board was threatening an injured worker in Ontario with trespass. I can only suggest to you that if you were not aware that this practice is taking place, you are now aware. That decision should be reversed as quickly as possible.

I have one final thing before I close off. Any organization—I don't care whether it's the compensation board, a company, a store, a Kiwanis club, or whatever—only functions properly if the morale of the employees or its members is such that there is a feeling of co-operation, a feeling of working together, a feeling of accomplishment.

I would suggest to you, Mr. Starr, that this is not the case in the total employment picture of the compensation board. I will raise some of the matters later on as we get into the topical discussions. I would suggest to you that you do have employment problems. I would suggest to you, as chairman, that you had better take a look at what some of these problems are. Perhaps as a result of that you may get better co-operation, better functioning of the operations of the board itself.

Hon. Mr. Starr: I don't think I have any answer to that. I've noted what Mr. Davidson said and I will take that into consideration.

Mr. McClellan: Does the minister have any response?

Mr. Haggerty: We're dealing with the first vote, main office administration, and that deals with policy that perhaps I could get into.

I was interested in the chairman's opening statement. He mentioned, on page nine: "Over the past few years the board has sponsored, wholly or in part, 29 medical research projects." Could the chairman give us a list of those research projects?

Hon. Mr. Starr: I think Dr. McCracken has that.

Mr. Haggerty: Can it be made available to the committee?

Hon. Mr. Starr: Yes.

Mr. Haggerty: It can be? Would this relate to anything on page seven, where it says that the board has allowed the board's medical services division to continually conduct research in the field of industrial medicine? Based on preliminary reports of research the board has commissioned, it was possible last year to set up guidelines to allow claims for cancer of the larynx. To date, 10 claims have been allowed. How many of those claims are related to the nickel industry in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Starr: We would have to get that information for you.

Mr. Haggerty: You have that available?

Hon. Mr. Starr: We can get that; yes.

Mr. Haggerty: I understand there have been some claims allowed for the former employees of Inco in Port Colborne.

Hon. Mr. Starr: I can't say off-hand but we will try to get you that list.

Mr. Haggerty: Is there a possibility that the claim numbers could be made available?

Hon. Mr. Starr: I see no reason why they couldn't be.

Mr. Haggerty: I would like to have that.

Hon. Mr. Starr: Okay.

Mr. Haggerty: The matter raised about the vocational rehabilitation—

Mr. Van Horne: May I interject, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Van Horne: I have a followup to Mr. Haggerty's question. In terms of the medical research question that was asked by Mr. Haggerty—and I ask this just for information—is there approval required, through any supervisory body, for the type of research? Secondly: is the medical research physical; or is it physical, psychological or psychiatric research?

Hon. Mr. Starr: I can't answer that question. I think that Dr. McCracken would be the proper person to give you the details that you require. Do you want it in writing or do you want it verbally now, Mr. Van Horne?

Mr. Van Horne: I would like some indication from either yourself or from the minister as to whether or not there is some kind of sanction or supervision. Secondly: I would like an elaboration on the specifics. Are we talking about a new form of artificial limb for the amputee or whatever? I'd like some specifics on the type of research you're doing and I would gladly accept that in writing at a later date. Right now, I would like an indication of what kind of supervision there is on this research.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Van Horne, I understand Dr. McCracken is in the audience here; if he would care to come up, perhaps he could answer you more directly.

Hon. Mr. Starr: Dr. McCracken, could you answer from there?

Dr. McCracken: The research projects that are carried out by the board are in the areas where it has been identified research was required. For instance, our consultants at the hospital and rehabilitation centre will make a recommendation they feel it is well worthwhile to carry out a research project, for instance, in the efficiency of the new myoelectric upper limb prosthesis. It is deemed that this is indeed a very worthwhile project to evaluate how well they are functioning, whether they are meeting the needs of persons who have upper limb amputations.

It is discussed with the appropriate senior consultants, most of whom are professors or associate professors at the university, and the protocol is developed, following which the research is then set up and commenced. For instance, on this very item currently research is under way and we have a full-time orthopaedic research fellow, who is a physician trained in orthopaedic surgery, who has his fellowship as an orthopaedic surgeon but who wishes to take this year's extra research and he is investigating this particular aspect.

Other areas of research are set up when a need is identified; for example when the need was identified to determine whether or not there was a link between certain types of intestinal cancers and exposure to asbestos fibre dust. Evaluation of the research which had been done at that time indicated that no one study was adequate to answer this question and therefore, on consultation once again with outside senior consultants, it was determined that the appropriate study should be set up and this was carried out with the study being conducted by the appropriate outside consultant.

This is how the research projects are identified and how they are set up. Essentially, it is to fill a gap in research that is not being done at that time, nor has been done in the past. By identifying this need we are then in effect utilizing the approach of applied research, rather than totally theoretical research, which of course is what we must do.

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if we could table the 29 different research projects because we could get into them and cut down the time here. I think if they were tabled here for the committee members then later on proper questions could follow that wouldn't take up the time. I am hoping the committee can have those perhaps by tomorrow.

I was concerned about the matter raised by both leadoff speakers, by Mr. Davidson and Mr. Van Horne, concerning vocational rehabilitation. I suppose that is an area I could spend some time on because in a sense I don't have the confidence that the chairman perhaps has in vocational rehabilitation.

I did have two gentlemen in to visit me not too long ago explaining the new program that is available there now in that they are going to industry and perhaps in a sense begging them to take injured workers back. Hopefully industry will take them back and their income will be subsidized.

I suggested at that time they should be moving directly into the city of Port Colborne. There are a number of problems there from the mass layoff of Inco employees in 1977. Almost every person who had an injury—and he could have from 20 years down to 10 years of service—was told his employment would be terminated; he would have to take an early pension from the company. I have written you a letter on that, Mr. Chairman.

[10:00]

Perhaps the best thing for me to do is to spend a couple of hours with you at the board and go through this in detail, but I bring to your attention that a number of employees of Inco have been let go on that basis. I say that is a good place to start the program, down there. Whether they are going to get down to that area, I don't know, but I can tell you this: Every weekend I spend almost all of my time dealing with those injured workers who have been laid off from Inco. Perhaps when the strike in Sudbury is settled they will take the same approach there and a number of injured workers will never be called back. I hope it doesn't happen, but it has happened in their operations in Port Colborne.

As I get into this matter of rehabilitation I find I just don't seem to be able to grasp it. I don't have the confidence in it the chairman has, as I have said. My experience with vocational rehabilitation—and I bring it to the attention of the employees in your St. Catharines regional offices—is that I find it is Canada Manpower that takes the initiative to get the injured workers enrolled into some upgrading and educational program, perhaps in Niagara College; that is where it usually takes place. Very little responsibility is taken by the Workmen's Compensation Board in this area.

Hon. Mr. Starr: I am surprised.

Mr. Haggerty: I am surprised too.

Hon. Mr. Starr: That should be our initiative, rather than Manpower, even though they require the men to register at Manpower.

Mr. Haggerty: I haven't seen it in my area.

Hon. Mr. Starr: But the actual training is provided by us in cost and compensation and we utilize all the facilities that are necessary to rehabilitate that person, both in the provincial and federal field of jurisdiction.

Mr. Haggerty: I have a claim here, and I will just give you the claim number, but it goes into detail here—I won't go into all the detail but here is a case where the person was injured in industry. He has asked vocational rehabilitation to finance part of his schooling.

Hon. Mr. Starr: I would have to know the claim number and have the file here in order to discuss it.

Interjections.

Mr. Haggerty: I will talk to you later on but the point I want to bring to you is that I feel you are not accepting your responsibility in this area.

Interjections.

Mr. Haggerty: I haven't mentioned the claim number but it has been the practice of other members to take time for claim after claim. Perhaps you'll see them roll in tomorrow.

The other matter I want to raise is the matter—

Mr. Yakabuski: We will cut them short.

Mr. Haggerty: No, I will be visiting the chairman myself with my complaints. I will go to the top. I won't haggle down at the bottom of the totem pole; I think the best place is to go right to the top.

Mr. Yakabuski: You're absolutely right.

Mr. Haggerty: I raised the other matter a couple of years ago in committee here. There was a resolution supported by committee members which related to—in fact I raised the question again to the minister in April 1977. I will bring this to the attention of the Minister of Labour and Manpower anyway.

I said: "I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. During the Ministry of Labour estimates the standing resources development committee on December 14, 1976, adopted a resolution that directed the government, through the Workmen's Compensation Board, to carry out a study of all the benefits available to injured persons for the goal of integrating all the present programs of assistance to provide the measures or means of economic security to the injured employee and survivors."

This was the matter where you get a combination of the Canada Pension Plan and other sick benefit plans and workmen's compensation so the person would at least have a decent income, he wouldn't have to be going back to the board every six months trying to establish a new claim or trying to get his benefits extended.

The minister was kind enough at that time to send me a summary of the review that was supposed to be taking place and the terms of reference dealt with financial review, benefits review and so forth.

I know there has been one report but I haven't seen anything else since that time. In the benefits review the third term of reference was "review the inequities, if any, resulting from the fact that workmen's compensation benefits are non-taxable."

I thought I might see some changes, perhaps some amendments to the Workmen's Compensation Act in this particular area. It is fine to say it is not taxable income. That may be well for just a married man and his wife, but if you take a person who has a family perhaps of six children, then I would say he is being short-changed. If you take 75 per cent of his income—with six children it wouldn't be taxable anyway. I suggest there should be some changes in this area—I think that where there is a large family, dependants and that, he should be given full compensation.

The other matter I have raised over the years is the one where an injured worker has been off work perhaps two years. He has lost about two years of contributions to the Canada Pension Plan. I think in this instance even unemployment insurance should be continued under the Workmen's Compensation Act. That was supposed to have been looked into by the previous minister. She was going to check with Ottawa to see if it wouldn't be allowed.

Hon. Mr. Starr: Mr. Haggerty, I may inform you that the Canadian Association of Compensation Boards made an overture to the government on that score because the Canada health legislation has to be amended to provide for that purpose.

Mr. Haggerty: According to the information that has been passed on to this committee and questions directed in the House, we expected—

Hon. Mr. Starr: There has been no action.

Mr. Haggerty: That's right, no action. I don't know what more the committee members can do in this matter. But I suggest there are two areas where I think changes need to be made to the act, that is, to include contributions to Canada Pension Plan. Normally the person who is injured, even with a back injury, ends up on Canada Pension and he maybe loses two or three years of contributions to it and that short-changes his pension benefits.

The chairman agrees with me. Perhaps the minister will take the lead in this then and see if he can't get some results done with the government in Ottawa, whomever that may be.

There are other areas that should be looked at, too. The fifth one is review of alternative approaches for establishing the level of benefit for permanently disabled workers. That covers a rather broad area. I have known cases in which I have appeared before the board where these persons never will get back to work. They are pensioned off at about $85 to $115 a month and they say, "Here, you are on your own from now on." I feel there have got to be some changes in the Workmen's Compensation Act where these persons shouldn't have to lose their homes over an injury.

I have an appeal before the board now based upon just what I have discussed now—where he will lose his home, at a pension of about $221 a month. I don't think that should be allowed in today's society in Canada—particularly in Ontario.

I will leave a copy of this for the minister. I don't think he is aware of those terms of reference. I suggest there is some good meat there that could bring about improvements in the workmen's compensation that would be of benefit to all the injured workers.

I think the chairman has seen a copy of that, have you not?

Mr. Chairman: No, I haven't.

Mr. Haggerty: You haven't? It must be top secret. That's all I have right for the present.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Chairman, I want to raise a point of order if I might.

When the leadoffs were made, the chairman of the board answered all of the things raised by Mr. Van Horne and my colleague raised what he thought were some of the deficiencies in the board. In fact he didn't accept the statement made by the chairman of the board. The chairman of the board refused to respond to any of those problem areas that we see in the board.

If this is going to be the chairman's attitude throughout these hearings, that every time he is criticized or the board is criticized he is going to pout and not answer, as he did to my colleague, first I think that is an insult to my colleague that he chose not to answer those serious charges, and if this is going to be the conduct of the chairman throughout these hearings, then they are a waste of time.

Those are the problem areas that my colleagues and I are having to work in on behalf of thousands of people in this province. It seems to me he can't simply say, "I have no comment." He might as well not be here. He might as well go home now, because his failure to respond is not only an insult to my colleague but it fails to deal with the problems we see with the Workmen's Compensation Board in their delivery of services to the people of this province. You simply can't say, "I'm not going to answer."

Hon. Mr. Starr: Well, that's fine, you have had your opportunity to attack me now.

Mr. Martel: Nobody is attacking you. I wish you would stop pouting like a little boy.

Hon. Mr. Starr: I'm not pouting.

Mr. Martel: Nobody is attacking you. We're saying there's a weakness in the board.

Hon. Mr. Starr: I'm not going to try to out-shout you, Mr. Martel. I did say to Mr. Davidson when he got through that he brought to our attention a number of things and we said we would consider them. We will look at those suggestions that he has made and the observations. Obviously, you weren't listening.

Mr. Martel: I was listening. I didn't get your grunt.

Hon. Mr. Starr: You had better open up your ears a little better.

Mr. Martel: They are open. I want to tell you they are open. You didn't answer to one of those problems. You tell me what your solution is to the problems we raised.

Hon. Mr. Starr: Mr. Davidson nodded agreement he was quite satisfied with the fact—

Mr. M. Davidson: Mr. Chairman, I have not said I was satisfied.

Hon. Mr. Starr: You nodded your head when I said I would consider the suggestions you made and brought them to our attention.

Mr. Martel: You had better explain some of the things that are wrong, that he sees that are wrong, so we'll know what you're doing to attempt to overcome them, because that's what we're here for.

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order: the chairman of the Workmen's Compensation Board said in his comments that he welcomed the opportunity to be here before the committee and to discuss with the members of the Legislature their problems and concerns regarding the board, and then he welcomed the opportunity for the members of the Legislature to be critical of the board. If his response is simply, "We'll consider what you had to say," it doesn't answer major questions that have been raised by our colleague.

For instance, I can just think of one at this particular time: Why is an injured worker receiving a letter saying he may be charged with trespass if he returns to the board? That's a specific question for which we would like a specific reply, and to have said, "We'll consider your comments," doesn't tell us whether it is the policy of the board to send out such letters or it isn't. I would like to know whether it is and who made the decision. It just doesn't tell us that, and what does it tell us?

Hon. Mr. Starr: Our employees have been threatened time and time again by various people that they would be killed and that they had better watch their backs. Our security people at the Workmen's Compensation Board feel it's too much of a risk as far as our employees are concerned to have anybody in attendance who has made such threats, who has raised a ruckus, has been shouting continuously time and time again and not listening to a reasonable explanation. Consequently, they receive these letters that they cannot come back unless they have an appointment to do so but they can come back if they have an appointment. I agree entirely that our employees should not be subjected to abuse to foul language, and to the threatening of their lives, and I will stand behind our employees in that respect.

Mr. M. Davidson: Nor should the injured workers.

Hon. Mr. Starr: No injured worker has been threatened with his life.

Mr. Wildman: He's been threatened with non-payment. I would certainly agree, Mr. Chairman, that the employees of the Workmen's Compensation Board should not have to face threats and abusive profane language. However, it's interesting that the chairman of the Workmen's Compensation Board would admit that does occur on a fairly regular basis. If it does, that indicates there are some major problems at the board that leads people to be so desperate to react in such a manner.

Mr. Bounsall: I just might say I don't want to get into individual cases, but is that the case with Mr. Domenico Galea who received one of these letters and who is here in the audience tonight?

Mr. Martel: That answers the point I raised with the chairman of the board. My colleague raised some very serious points and the chairman was able, when we started to push him a little bit, to tell us what led to that problem and what led to that sort of letter. My point of order is, Mr. Chairman, he should have answered in a similar fashion to my colleague as he did to Mr. Van Horne, point by point which he wrote down when Mr. Van Horne was raising them. He should have done exactly the same with my colleague. Because my colleague disagreed, the chairman felt we were personally attacking him.

Let me tell you, Mr. Starr, we might be critical of the board, but we're not taking on personalities, we're taking on policies which we think might be deficient. Our aim is not to go after individual board people but we would like answers to serious problems that we see with the board. If you think it's a personal attack, that's long past, Mr. Starr; we're not attacking personalities, but policy, yes, that's what we're all about.

[10:15]

Mr. Bounsall: Further to the point of order, Mr. Chairman: If we continue to receive non-answers to the points we raise, then, as the spokesman for the board in the Legislature, the minister should be prepared to answer those questions in the absence of answers from board officials.

Mr. McClellan: And the minister was invited to reply.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Do you wish me to respond?

Mr. Bounsall: Somebody should.

Mr. Warner: Will the chairman be responding, too?

Interjections.

Mr. McClellan: The chairman of the board doesn't seem to understand that at all.

Mr. Chairman: Are you finished, Mr. Martel?

Hon. Mr. Starr: No, he's not finished yet.

Mr. Martel: I'm just looking for some answers.

Hon. Mr. Starr: There was a question you asked about the use of a particular drug—

Mr. Wildman: Sodium Pentothal.

Hon. Mr. Starr: —I'm going to ask Dr. McCracken to answer the question for you.

Dr. McCracken: I believe the drug you mentioned was sodium Pentothal? Is that correct?

Mr. Martel: That's right.

Dr. McCracken: Sodium Pentothal is an anaesthetic drug. It is not a truth serum and it has never been used at the hospital and rehabilitation centre. Sodium Amytal is not a truth drug but it has been used, not by any of the physicians at the hospital on full-time staff but by our consulting psychiatrist staff. It is an approved, recognized, medical form of psychiatric therapy.

Having said that, I should add that it is not used to any great extent anywhere and in the past four years it has been used six times. It was used on one occasion in 1978.

Mr. McClellan: For what purpose?

Dr. McCracken: As part of the treatment recommended by the consultant psychiatrist.

Mr. McClellan: What was that treatment?

Dr. McCracken: The treatment was to evaluate whether or not the patient had a psychiatric disease.

Mr. M. Davidson: Could I pose a question, Dr. McCracken? Was that treatment with or without the consent of the patient?

Dr. McCracken: There is no treatment carried out at the hospital without the consent of a patient.

Mr. M. Davidson: If I were to bring a gentleman before you who would disprove the statement you have just made, would you accept his word?

Dr. McCracken: No, I would not. I know the ethical standards of the consultant staff at the hospital.

Mr. McClellan: Are consent forms signed?

Dr. McCracken: Consent forms are not required for that type of treatment. Consent forms are required for surgical operative procedures.

Mr. M. Davidson: In fact, we have your word and the other doctor's word against the word of an injured worker?

Dr. McCracken: Yes, that is correct. I think that it is pretty sufficient word. After all, we are ethically bound to make certain that patients receiving treatment understand exactly what the treatment is for and why it is being administered.

Mr. McClellan: Do I understand that you administer sodium Amytal in order to determine whether an injured worker had an organic disability or a psychiatric disability?

Dr. McCracken: No, not at all. It's part of the investigation to arrive at whether or not the individual has a psychiatric diagnosis. It is not to separate the two out.

Mr. M. Davidson: Perhaps you can explain how it works.

Dr. McCracken: I'm not a psychiatrist so I can't go into the minute details. But in essence according to the information I have received from psychiatrists, including our consultant psychiatrists on staff, the use of sodium Amytal where indicated will be of assistance in certain instances. It will allow a determination to be made as to whether or not an individual is able to carry through a certain range of movement of a limb or his back or whatever.

Mr. McClellan: In other words, to determine whether it's an organic disability or a functional disability?

Dr. McCracken: No, not at all. That's not the key to it at all. The key to it is that it allows the patient to develop sufficient relaxation and insight so that he will be able to carry this out, whereas prior to that he has been unable to do so because he was fearful it would give rise to considerable pain.

Mr. McClellan: May I ask that you keep the report anonymous on that particular case and provide it to the committee?

Dr. McCracken: We can obtain the case and get the details. I don't know how long it will take.

Mr. Bounsall: Are you saying it's only a relaxation drug?

Dr. McCracken: It's only a relaxation drug at the doses at which it is used.

Mr. M. Davidson: Is the patient subject to questioning following administration of the drug?

Dr. McCracken: The only questions the patient is subject to that I am aware of are questions as to whether or not his pain has increased or decreased and what he feels in the way of movement of his extremities—the injured joint or limb or whatever it might be.

Mr. McClellan: We look forward to receiving an anonymous set of reports on that particular case.

Hon. Mr. Starr: Are there any other questions, Mr. Davidson, you would like to pose at this time?

Mr. M. Davidson: Most of what I said came off the top of my head so, like you, I probably can't remember.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I think the chairman was apprehensive because during your remarks, Monty, you will recall you did say, "I'm not putting this as a question." The chairman took that to mean—

Mr. M. Davidson: I said that when I asked about the administration of what I felt was sodium Pentothal.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I think there was an honest misapprehension. I think the chairman is quite prepared to review the minutes point by point.

Mr. M. Davidson: I think that was the only question I put a restriction on. I didn't want him to answer that at the moment because I didn't feel he was aware of what I was referring to and I was going to allow him time.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I think the chairman is willing to review the minutes and answer you point by point then, Mr. Davidson. It's been a misunderstanding.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Bounsall.

Mr. Bounsall: Was I next on the list? I think Elie Martel was first. He was speaking on a point of order.

Mr. Martel: I have one minor point on the administration. I would like the board to consider implementing a new policy to assist people who are advocates on behalf of workers. Too frequently, many of us have to go to the board with medical information which we really don't understand. Unless we have an adviser who can tell us what all of the medical jargon is about, then we are really at a disadvantage when we appear on behalf of that worker.

I think it is time the board put two or three medical people, or one or two very competent medical people who are working for the board per se, but in fact are put in that office at the disposal of those of us here who get these cases and don't understand what it is all about. Then we can go to this person or persons working for the board and they will sit down with people like ourselves who are into this all the time and explain to us just what this is all about.

I think there is a terrible disadvantage for members of the Legislature or advocates out there who are trying to assist the worker and who go against a battery of doctors who understand the field and who can draw on other medical expertise to formulate the board's position. Those of us who are representing workers don't have the same advantage in understanding fully how something might occur. It might be the back, of which none of us in the Legislature except the minister, I guess, is aware.

I think the advocates on behalf of workers are at a tremendous disadvantage and don't do a service they should be doing. The same can apply to serious knee injuries because we don't understand them. Somewhere along the line it has to balance a little bit in favour as one tries to prepare a case to take to the board. Frequently, you simply don't have the background necessary to explain your position well on behalf of the worker you are representing.

I think the board and the minister should consider appointing or hiring several specialists to assist us in certain fields; maybe a neurosurgeon, an orthopaedic surgeon and someone specialized in the field of occupational health. In that way, there is going to be a kind of assurance that when we represent workers or advocates represent workers we and they are getting the best representation possible.

We then stay away, I think, to some degree, from always bringing lawyers in and making this more of an adversary system than it already is. I think the government and the board should consider that, so as to balance up the thing a little bit on behalf of the workers who have serious injuries.

Mr. Haggerty: That's a good suggestion by the member. I think, Elie, if you put a motion tonight we'd probably carry it. It does put equity into the system.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: It's not a suggestion that you and I haven't talked about before.

Mr. Martel: Not at all.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I think it has some merit and we'll give it some consideration.

Mr. Bounsall: Just as a supplementary to the matter raised, which is an excellent one, you do have an advocate group within the board already to help workers prepare their cases if that's their need, and those persons could just be added by the board to that group of employees.

The supplementary question I wanted to ask is: Would that decision, to do that or not to do that, be a decision that would be made by the corporate board? Would that be a policy decision that would be made by the corporate board? What is the relationship between a government decision here or a corporate board decision? Where would that decision be made?

Hon. Mr. Starr: It would be a decision made by the board.

Mr. Bounsall: It would be a decision made by the corporate board?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: This is my understanding.

Hon. Mr. Starr: Mr. Martel made the suggestion that they should not be paid by the board; they should not be employees of the board.

Mr. Martel: We have a feeling that he is going to be working on behalf of us as opposed to working on behalf of the board. He's not only got to be neutral, but appear to be neutral. You've got to have a sense of trust. If you're going to have a couple of doctors there to do this there's got to be a sense of trust that he isn't part of the ongoing medical staff of the compensation board.

Mr. Haggerty: A medical ombudsman.

Hon. Mr. Starr: In other words, in your opinion, could he be paid by the board and have that status?

Mr. Martel: I think he could. It depends on the quality of the doctor you hire.

Hon. Mr. Starr: Then it would be a decision of the board.

Mr. Bounsall: In that situation, will that decision be placed before the corporate board, and when might we expect to have—and I assume the decision would be told to all of us—that decision made by the corporate board?

Hon. Mr. Starr: Just as soon as we can get through here and get a meeting of the corporate board and take that into consideration.

Mr. Johnson: May I say something? I think Elie has a valid point. Is there any merit in trying something like this on a trial basis? You mentioned several doctors, but even if we tried it with a couple of doctors in a certain area for a period of six months to a year to see whether it does work out; if there are some savings in lawyers' fees and maybe some expertise given to the members that could help us out?

Hon. Mr. Starr: I think the people who would be the best judges as to whether this would work or not would be the legislative members who might be using this service.

Mr. Johnson: Let's try it in a pilot project and see if there is any merit in it, if it can work.

Mr. Chairman: Any more questions?

Mr. Bounsall: I have some on the main office administration but looking at the time it would be more appropriate to start tomorrow morning.

Mr. Chairman: The meeting is adjourned until 10 o'clock—and I mean 10 o'clock sharp if we want to get in the hours necessary. You will be first in the morning, Mr. Bounsall.

The committee adjourned at 10:30 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, MARCH 29, 1979

The House met at 2:03 p.m.

Prayers.

ESTIMATES

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, I have a message from the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor signed by her own hand.

Mr. Speaker: Pauline M. McGibbon, the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, transmits estimates of certain sums required for the services of the province for the year ending March 31, 1980, and recommends them to the Legislative Assembly, Toronto, March 29, 1979.

PHYSICIANS OPTING OUT OF OHIP

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of privilege: Last Tuesday in the Legislature, on asking a question of the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell), I stated that three paediatricians at the Northwestern General Hospital and all of the anaesthetists at St. Joseph's Hospital had opted out of OHIP.

I want to set the record straight because, in fact, all of those particular physicians are in the plan. Our information arose from a misunderstanding in the telephone conversation between our researcher and the head of department, in one case, and one of the other anaesthetists in the other. Perhaps this illustrates the difficulties the general public is having in determining whether or not doctors are in or out of the plan.

Mr. Conway: The researcher is now the NDP candidate in Mount-Royal.

Mr. Speaker: To set the record straight is not a point of privilege. That is a point of clarification or to set the record straight.

HOTEL DIEU HOSPITAL

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, I think I have a point of privilege. On March 13, I asked a question of the Minister of Health regarding a situation that arose at Hotel Dieu hospital in Windsor involving overcrowding on one evening when 14 patients had to stay in the emergency room. The minister's answer was misleading, I believe, in that he said the overcrowding was a result of a particular peak in one instance.

I would like to point out to the Legislature that in talking to the hospitals in Windsor I have found that since January of this year Hotel Dieu has averaged three nights per week on which it has had to use its emergency rooms because of lack of beds. Grace Hospital has also averaged three nights per week, and Metropolitan has averaged three nights per week. This clearly indicates there is a lack of active treatment beds in Windsor and that the information the Minister of Health presented to this Legislature was wrong.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to consider the comments of the honourable member and to talk with some of my staff who are regularly in discussions with the individual hospitals or the local health council. I do not have in front of me my exact response on that day, but I believe I pointed out that at this particular time of the year it is a period of peak utilization as a result of injuries and illnesses associated with winter and that it is not uncommon for there to be a peak utilization. But I will look at the member's concerns and see if they have any substance which requires followup on our part.

LAKESHORE PSYCHIATRIC HOSPITAL

Mr. Lawlor: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker: On March 15, 1979, the Minister of Health made a statement to the House that the average inpatient population at Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital over the past six months has been about 280. He has been misinformed, I put it to you, and has misinformed this House on this particular matter. It has been 337.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Again, Mr. Speaker, I am very concerned about the information which certain individuals in this House and abroad, as it were, purport to distribute as being authoritative. Any information that I would give to this House would be based on a report from my staff. I am giving some thought to how we might effectively put to an end this growing spreading of incorrect information abroad.

Mr. Lawlor: By your being more accurate.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, any time any figure I use is wrong, I have said so. I can assure you that particular figure was one based on a question that was put repeatedly to staff, but I am always willing to ask the question again to make sure.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

BUSINESS CORPORATIONS LEGISLATION

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, later this afternoon my colleague the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Drea) will be here to introduce a bill to amend the Business Corporations Act, and he has asked that I read this statement at this particular time in connection with that legislation.

This legislation means the company that is incorporating—not the government—will have to make sure the proposed corporate name and articles of incorporation are not in conflict with the law.

The new Business Corporations Act will provide substantial benefit to business. In recent years the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations has received numerous requests from business and from the legal community to speed up the process of incorporation. Unfortunately, the escalating volume of requests for corporate name searches and business incorporations received each year has made it increasingly difficult to handle them as quickly as business requires. Fortunately, within the past two years, facilities and technology have become available which will permit the government to hand over to the private sector the responsibility for corporate name acquisition. In practical terms this will mean the role of government in the process of incorporation can be reduced from 12 days to less than an hour.

On the subject of corporate name search, the Business Corporations Act states that a proposed corporate name should not be the same as or similar to the name of another corporation, association, partnership or individual if its use will be likely to deceive. Under the legislation as it now stands the minister must decide whether the proposed corporate name should be prohibited. The onus, of course, lies with the incorporator to select a proposed corporate name that will not conflict with the prohibition under the act.

Over the 1977-78 year, the ministry conducted almost 62,000 name searches. This represents a 70 per cent increase over the number of searches conducted in 1974. So, Mr. Speaker, you can appreciate the burden which this workload has placed on that ministry's companies division. It now requires an average of five working days to clear a corporate name. In individual cases, the time to obtain a decision varies anywhere from three to 12 or more working days. This occurs before the incorporator even files the articles of incorporation.

Fortunately, within the past year and a half, three private search firms have begun operating a name search service directly to the public. These companies have on-line data terminals with access to the automated name search system operated by the federal Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. This system contains the trademarks and the names of all corporations from every jurisdiction in Canada, including foreign corporations carrying on business in Canada.

These search houses obtain for clients computer printout search reports from that system within 24 hours or less. The service means that this ministry can safely withdraw from the corporate names business.

The new act will privatize the name search and decision. To assist the business community in making appropriate name selections, the legislation will provide for expanded regulations and guidelines. These will require an ANS name search report to be delivered with articles of incorporation as evidence that a name search has in fact been made.

On the subject of articles of incorporation, the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations has experienced similar problems with the process of proposed incorporation. Under the present legislation, incorporators submit to the ministry articles of incorporation together with a cleared name search report and the prescribed fee. The staff in the companies division examines the articles to ensure they comply with the act. If the articles of incorporation conform to the law, and all prescribed fees have been paid, the division then issues a certificate of incorporation.

Once again we have been unable to handle requests for business incorporations as quickly as the business community requires. The average service time has increased to 8.6 working days from 5.3 days in 1974. Those delays have understandably generated a number of criticisms from the business community.

To alleviate this problem, the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations last year introduced procedures permitting lawyers to file legal opinions to the effect that the articles conform to law. Under this procedure, the articles are examined only for proper execution and to ensure they are accompanied by the prescribed fee and cleared name search report. This has, of course, worked to the benefit of both business and government.

Under the new legislation, the incorporator would deliver to the minister articles of incorporation accompanied by an ANS name search report and prescribed fee. The staff will examine articles to determine that they are properly executed, that the accompanying name search report is for the name set out in the articles, and that the prescribed fee is paid. If these conditions are fully satisfied, the certificate will then be issued.

In conclusion, the amendment poses numerous benefits to both public and government. The service time will be reduced from the present average of 12 working days to, first, 30 minutes where articles are filed and the certificate of incorporation is issued, or, second, one working day where articles are delivered by mail.

Administrative expenditures will be substantially reduced, and the amendment is consistent with the 1967 recommendation of the select committee on company law that corporation law should impose minimum restrictions and afford maximum convenience and simplicity to incorporation and organization of companies.

The new Business Corporations Act will benefit everyone—business, the public and government—and it reflects this government's policy of simplifying the procedure for dealing with government agencies and for privatizing functions which the private sector can perform more efficiently.

HEALTH SERVICES

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, first of all, if I may, in connection with the statement I am about to make, I would like to draw to your attention that in your galleries—

Mr. Speaker: Will honourable members keep down their private conversations, please? [2:15]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —among your guests today are Dr. William Vail, president of the Ontario Medical Association; Dr. Edward Moran, general secretary of the Ontario Medical Association; Dr. R. M. MacMillan, Dr. D. Y. Caldwell and other gentlemen from the executive of the Ontario Medical Association, as well as the members of the staff, and the president and the executive director of the Ontario Hospital Association, Professor John Wevers and Mr. R. Alan Hay respectively.

A solid, high-quality and universally accessible health system is, and can only be, the result of a partnership between health-care professionals, the medical community, the public and the government. This partnership, despite some difficulties, has worked well in Ontario.

As the members are aware, in recent months we have been meeting frequently with representatives of the Ontario Medical Association to discuss areas of mutual concern. We have also had discussions with the Ontario Hospital Association.

Today I will outline a series of actions for the House, based on the following mutually held principles: that accessibility and universality of health care services must be maintained; that patients have the option to go to the doctor of choice and doctors have the option to practise within the plan or bill patients directly; that the patient should know in advance if an additional charge is to be made by a physician; that if a patient is not so informed, the patient should not be obliged to pay that charge; that the principle of self-regulation by the medical profession must be maintained, and that physicians should receive fair remuneration for their services.

Flowing from these principles, I would like to announce the following:

First, both the Ontario Medical Association and the Ontario Hospital Association have agreed to begin joint discussions immediately to devise a mechanism to ensure that in every public hospital in Ontario the patient will have a choice of access to physicians' services at OHIP rates. All parties have agreed this will be given the highest priority.

Secondly, the OMA, again recognizing the principle of accessibility to health services, will undertake to help citizens in obtaining the services of an opt-in physician. The OMA will immediately begin to assist the public in this way from its main office in Toronto and will be announcing further details of this service which will take into account those living outside the Toronto area. It is envisaged that the local academies of medicine across the province may be of assistance in this service.

The third action relates to the process through which the government and the OMA conduct fee negotiations. The OMA and the government have agreed on the key principles of a new procedure, which recognizes the OMA as the sole negotiating agency for physicians in Ontario for the OHIP schedule of benefits and provides for the chairman of the negotiating committee to have the role of an independent fact-finder.

I am confident the new agreement will produce a level of remuneration for the services rendered by Ontario physicians that will be accepted as fair by both the people of Ontario and the medical profession.

As I have indicated, the OMA supports the principle that the physician should inform the patient in advance of any charges above those provided for in the OHIP schedule of benefits. Further, the OMA endorses the principle that the patient should not have to pay rates above the OHIP schedule of benefits if the doctor has not given the patient prior notification.

The OMA executive feels strongly this is a matter for which it must assume full responsibility, as a self-regulating profession. Since they view it as a matter concerning the integrity of their profession, they have undertaken to communicate this information to their members and, through existing mechanisms such as tariff committees, to help in the resolution of any difficulties that may arise between doctor and patient.

The OMA also recognizes that should difficulties persist with this issue, the government will have little choice but to consider some form of consumer protection legislation to address the problem.

It is worth reiterating that our health-care system in Ontario remains one of the finest in the world. It is based on co-operative, rather than master-servant, relationships. Reasonable people can always resolve their difficulties amicably, given a rational environment in which to consider them.

The actions I have outlined today, I believe, will help maintain that spirit of co-operation and the high standard of health care which we enjoy in Ontario today.

OMERS LEGISLATION

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, today I intend to introduce three acts for amendment. The first is the Ontario Municipal Employees Retirement Systems Act. I have two amendments to introduce in connection with the OMERS act. One is intended to give the OMERS board more leeway in investing surplus pension funds. According to the present act, OMERS may invest only a portion of its surplus moneys in the private sector; the remainder is to be paid over to the Treasurer of Ontario in return for a province of Ontario debenture. The new provisions will permit the board to invest all its surplus funds in the private sector.

The second amendment is to do away with an inconsistency between the OMERS act and the year-old Family Law Reform Act. The OMERS act now prohibits any attachment of pension funds, but the Family Law Reform Act permits such attachment in the case of support orders. The new provision will allow exception to the general rule, making attachment of OMERS' pension funds possible in the case of support orders.

BUDGET DATE

Hon. F. S. Miller: The second statement I would like to make is that on April 10 at 8 p.m. I will be presenting my budget to this Legislature.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON CONFEDERATION

Hon. Mr. Wells: In the absence of the Premier (Mr. Davis), I would like to make a statement today and table in the Legislature the second report of the Advisory Committee on Confederation. This report deals with the subject of the federal-provincial distribution of powers. It is available in the two official languages of Canada.

Members will recall that this advisory committee was appointed in April 1977 under the chairmanship of Mr. Ian Macdonald. Its mandate has been to advise this government on questions pertaining to the future of our country.

The recommendations in the committee's second report cover the major issues pertaining to the distribution of powers, including many of the areas currently being discussed among the federal and provincial governments. The report is the culmination of a year of hard work and consultation by the committee.

Last April the Premier had the honour of tabling the first report of the committee. In that report, the committee made suggestions for constitutional changes in such areas as a new second chamber, the Supreme Court, fundamental and language rights, and an amending formula.

At that time the chairman of the advisory committee was asked to convene a small conference of Ontarians, both experts and non-experts, to analyse and evaluate the report. The result was Confederation '78, a most constructive conference held last June at Glendon College. This was organized with the co-operation of the Ontario section of the Council for Canadian Unity. The committee supplemented the consultative process by meeting privately with several people well versed in the field of constitutional reform to elicit their reactions to the proposals in the first report.

Following this consultation the committee prepared a followup to its first report, which clarified some of the proposals and modified others. The first report and its followup provided the basis for a presentation that the advisory committee made before the special joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the Constitution. This presentation was made last August.

Through the fall and winter, the committee has undertaken a heavy schedule of meetings, not only to provide counsel to the government on the ongoing constitutional discussions which have been carried on, but also in order to refine its recommendations on the distribution of powers.

I think this second report comes at a particularly important time. I hope its release and wide distribution will provide a valuable contribution to the debate on the future of our country. The recommendations, like those of the recently released report of the Task Force on Canadian Unity, are thoughtful and very worthy of careful consideration.

As was indicated in the Speech from the Throne, this government is strongly committed to contributing actively and constructively to the urgent business of renewing the Canadian constitution. We maintain the positive conviction that with the co-operation of all the provinces and the federal government a new constitutional agreement can be achieved. Such an agreement would recognize the importance of a strong role for the central government in maintaining an effective national economy for the benefit of all Canadians. It would also recognize the necessity for the provincial governments to retain the tools necessary to reflect their regional interests.

I would repeat what has been said often before, Mr. Speaker, that it is possible for changes to be made in the Canadian federal system that we think will meet the basic concerns of the people of Quebec as well as those of Canadians in all provinces.

I am also sending copies of the advisory committee's second report to the Prime Minister and to the Premiers of the other provinces as we table them here today. I am also tabling copies of the letters that the Premier is sending to these other people accompanying the copies of the report.

On behalf of the Premier and the government, I would like to thank the chairman of our advisory committee, Mr. Ian Macdonald, the very busy President of York University, and the other members of the committee, past and present, for the time and energy they have given in order to provide guidance to this government and to produce this second report.

I look forward to being able to continue to call upon them, as this government does, for counsel on all matters concerning Confederation over these next very crucial months ahead.

KENORA PLANE CRASH

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I take great pride in this statement and I am confident that all members of this House will share this feeling with me.

Mr. McClellan: The Thursday filibuster.

Mr. Peterson: If the minister would speak up maybe we could hear it.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I will send it over to the member.

Mr. Conway: What's that?

Mr. Peterson: Don't give away your hearing aid, Jimmy.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I asked for that.

Yesterday in the Kenora area, acts of bravery and determination were performed by two men, one of whom is a member of the staff of the Ministry of Natural Resources. The two men, one a pilot on our staff, the other a young helicopter pilot from a commercial company, rescued three people whose airplane had crashed in the Lake of the Woods. Unfortunately, a fourth person, a woman who was strapped in a stretcher and being flown to Winnipeg for medical attention, could not be rescued.

I would like to recount this incident in detail, from reports we have received during the last few hours from our ministry office in the northwestern region.

Yesterday afternoon, a twin-engine Piper Aztec with three women and the pilot aboard crashed near Kenora in the Lake of the Woods. Just before it went down, the pilot was in touch with Ministry of Transport officials who called our small airfield in Kenora to alert us that an emergency was in progress. One of our ministry pilots by the name of Bob Grant was on hand at the time. Outside the office was a helicopter belonging to Heli-Voyageur. Its pilot apparently was heading home from Edmonton to Quebec for a break.

Ministry of Transport informed Mr. Grant that a plane with both engines gone had crashed and appealed for help. Bob Grant immediately enlisted the aid of the helicopter pilot, a young 23-year-old gentleman named Brian Clegg. They took off from the ministry airstrip and began searching the area where MOT last had radar contact with the troubled plane.

To give the House an idea of the flying conditions, earlier that day Mr. Grant had cancelled a flight because the weather was too bad. It was snowing and gusty.

According to Mr. Grant, they searched the area for about 10 minutes until one of them noticed skid marks on the ice below leading into the water. The helicopter was flying at treetop level at this point.

Pilot Clegg dropped down and they immediately saw a man and woman on shore waving. It was the pilot and a woman on board who had managed to swim to shore through the icy water. The downed plane was nowhere to be seen. As they were turning toward shore, Mr. Grant noticed what looked like a coat floating in the water. He took a closer look and realized it was a woman just barely afloat. At this point she had apparently been in the water almost 10 minutes. Both men decided to try to rescue from the air rather than wait any longer.

[2:30]

Mr. Clegg brought the helicopter to within a few inches of the surface of the open water and held it steady in the gusts of wind. Mr. Grant then unbuckled himself and climbed out of the cockpit on to the skid, which he straddled. At this point he was in icy water up to his mid-section. Bob Grant grabbed the floating woman and yelled to the pilot to lift off slowly. About 10 feet in the air, he was apparently unable to hold on because of the cold, his precarious position and the weight of the woman whose winter clothes were soaked with water. She fell back into the water.

Mr. Grant and the pilot decided to try again. At this point the unfortunate woman was stiff but still conscious. Mr. Grant grabbed her again and ordered the pilot of the small helicopter up again. Once again, he couldn't maintain his grip.

Mrs. Campbell: This is unreal.

Hon. Mr. Auld: It seems almost unbelievable that they could continue to do this, given the weather conditions and the skill that it takes to control a helicopter under these circumstances, but they tried twice more and the results were the same.

Then Mr. Grant asked the pilot to fly sideways across the water and backward to the sheet of ice approximately 100 feet away. Mr. Grant all the while clung to the helicopter skid and dragged the woman through the water. He pulled the survivor onto the ice and the helicopter backed up again.

Mr. Grant, on surer footing now, climbed out and pushed the woman into the passenger seat of the helicopter. She was barely conscious, but apparently—and these are Mr. Grant's words—"as stiff as a board" from the cold. Then, with Mr. Grant standing on the skid, half in and half out of the helicopter and with a grip on the woman survivor and the machine, they took off for Kenora.

Within a few minutes they were setting down in the main drive of the Kenora hospital. They delivered the woman survivor and then returned to pick up the others.

Mr. Riddell: It's a good thing there were hospital beds.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It's an excellent hospital.

Hon. Mr. Auld: These are the details of the rescue yesterday that were relayed to me by staff in Kenora. This report was done in a rush, but we believe the facts are accurate.

I'm sad to report the other passenger aboard the aircraft, who was being flown to Winnipeg, did not survive. I'm glad, however, to say the pilot and the two other women passengers, including the woman rescued from the water by Mr. Clegg and Mr. Grant, were released from the Kenora hospital this morning after being treated for exposure. All of them were understandably glad to be alive and anxious to get home.

I will be personally commending the actions of our staff pilot, Mr. Grant, and the pilot of the helicopter, Mr. Clegg, but I'm particularly proud to report that Mr. Grant, although he has only been flying with my ministry for two years, has demonstrated how he fits into the tradition of the Ontario air service that was begun in the early 1920s.

Once again, I am sure all members will join me in thanking those two gentlemen for doing a remarkable job under almost impossible circumstances.

Mr. Peterson: Even you made that sound exciting.

ORAL QUESTIONS

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question for the Premier (Mr. Davis), who I thought was going to be here today. The House leader believes he will be here? Perhaps I will save that question.

HEALTH SERVICES

Mr. S. Smith: I will ask my first question of the Minister of Health. I note in the minister's statement, Mr. Speaker, that the Ontario Medical Association, the Ontario Hospital Association, and the ministry I presume, will be meeting to discuss how to guarantee that in every public hospital patients will have a choice of access to physicians' services at OHIP rates. In the meantime, however, can the minister clarify what the situation is in those hospitals where all the members of one speciality, such as anaesthetists, have opted out? Is it within the ability of the patient now simply to choose whether or not the patient is to pay the OHIP rate or to pay the additional rate? Would the minister be very clear? I'm speaking, of course, of the conscious patient.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I'd be glad to give a conscious answer.

Mr. Makarchuk: That's a change.

Mr. Ashe: Too bad we don't have a conscious opposition leader.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: In individual instances that come to our attention, either through our own surveys or through the efforts of members opposite or through the media, we will contact individual hospitals in the interim period between now and the finalization of the mechanism which the hospital association and the medical association are working on to assure that. Obviously, I don't want to prejudge what the ultimate mechanism they recommend will be, but we will deal with it hospital by hospital to give effect to that principle of the right to access to services on an opted-in basis.

Mr. S. Smith: I think I understood the minister's answer to be that in fact the patients can refuse to pay the opted-out rate. If I'm wrong in that understanding, I hope the minister will correct me.

I would like to ask by way of supplementary, stemming also from the statement the minister made earlier, how the minister proposes in those communities where the number of opted-out physicians is rather great to make sure that opted-in physicians are available. Is he now prepared to place health service organizations, or some other form of alternative inside-the-plan services, in those communities to make sure that access exists?

It is all very well for the OMA to say they are going to help people find these doctors, but what about communities where they are not in existence or are insufficient in numbers?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: On several previous occasions I have indicated that we are indeed prepared to meet with and discuss with any potential sponsoring group in any community the possibility of the establishment of a financially viable health service organization. One community which has been very much in our minds recently is Peterborough.

Mr. Cassidy: You are starving the health service organizations. It is a hollow promise.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: We have been approached by two organizations there indicating an interest. One is a group of physicians, the other a group representing one of the major unions in the community. We are quite prepared to sit down with either or both of them to transmit the information about the basis on which such an HSO would be formed, and take them through the various stages associated with that.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Since the statement by the minister in conjunction with the OMA states only that the patient will have a choice of access to physician services at OHIP rates in hospitals, can the minister tell the House and the public of Ontario what proportion of services by doctors or what proportion of doctors within a hospital must be making their services available at OHIP rates in order to be acceptable to this new standard? Is it the 95 per cent which is comparable to the standard laid down by Ottawa for the number of people enrolled in the plan provincially? Is it 75 per cent, is it 55 per cent, is it 25 per cent; or is the minister simply saying that as long as there is one doctor in a particular specialty who is prepared to work under OHIP he will be satisfied? If that is his view, how does he then say there is universal access to hospital medical care at insured rates in the province?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I would invite the honourable member to reread that portion of my statement, because what I talked about was access to services at opted-in rates. He will know that in every clinical department of every hospital in the province the regulations provide for the right to form a billing group within a specialty, and for each one to have a separate billing group so that accounts can be billed directly to the plan, that is on an opted-in basis.

The principle here is the right of access to services to be provided on an opted-in basis. So really, I don't envisage and I can't foresee as part of the development of this mechanism that the hospital association and the medical association have undertaken that it would be a particular percentage of doctors. The principle accepted by everyone is that you or I or anyone, if we insist, will have access to the service to be provided on an opted-in basis.

Mr. Cassidy: If we insist?

Mr. Swart: How can you ensure that?

Mr. Warner: That's your responsibility.

Mr. Conway: I have a supplementary with respect to the third action spoken of on the bottom of the third page of the minister's statement. Can the minister clarify for me and members of this House what exactly is this new procedure involving the OMA in its negotiation of the OHIP schedule of benefits; how it is their input is going to be new and perhaps different from what has existed in previous years; and how it is he expects the chairman of this negotiating committee ultimately to act in some capacity as an independent fact finder?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: We have not dotted all the i's and crossed all the t's of that agreement.

Mrs. Campbell: You sure haven't.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, don't be so cynical. You want to bludgeon the doctors into submission.

Mr. Van Horne: Your ministry should plan a little ahead.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Smile.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The two key principles, as I indicated in the statement, are that we accept the Ontario Medical Association will be the sole bargaining agent with the government of Ontario for physicians' benefits under OHIP, that is the OHIP schedule of benefits. The second thing is perhaps even more important, because as we strive to ensure a system that will achieve fair results—

Mrs. Campbell: I can't believe it.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —the chairman of this agency, as it were, will have the authority, on the motion of one of the parties, to examine the arguments and seek out information independently and make a recommendation. It is not unlike, I would suggest, what we have in the role of the chairman of the educational relations commission.

Mr. Breugh: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: In choosing this route, is the minister now saying that in the next set of negotiations he will move to one approved rate of services for doctors? Will the same rules apply in that instance—since we're using trade union and normal negotiating terminology here—will the same rules apply to the medical association as apply to other people who bargain and negotiate a salary rate, like teachers, like trade unionists; that is if you move to negotiate one approved rate for your services, then you must abide by that and you cannot opt out?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, we will maintain the health insurance plan in Ontario as presently structured, which gives options to the patients and to the doctors. I'm still trying to figure out what the policy of that group over there is. Last week their leader said he would opt all the doctors in; yesterday their leader said that he would avoid draconian measures. Last night he was speaking in Hamilton and was going to tell the world the solutions of the New Democratic Party for health care. Apparently he said nothing.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I understand—

Mr. Swart: You don't even understand your problems.

Interjections.

An hon. member: I think you struck a nerve there.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I quite understand the policies of that party. I quite understand the policies—

Mr. Cassidy: If you don't understand the principles of health insurance in Ontario, then you shouldn't be the Minister of Health.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —because I've seen the national health service, I've seen the disaster which their philosophy has wreaked on the United Kingdom; and they are not going to do it here.

An hon. member: Is the campaign still on, Dennis?

Mr. Makarchuk: Have you checked out the health services in Ethiopia?

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

FORMER MINISTER'S SPEECH

Mr. S. Smith: A question of the Premier: Now that the honourable member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. J. A. Taylor) is no longer bound by cabinet solidarity and appears prepared to speak out on his experience as a minister in the Premier's government, has the Premier, as a matter of priority, today discussed with him the important and relevant remarks which he made last night to the North York Progressive Conservative Association? I might quote from his remarks: "Legislative overload and abdication of authority has contributed to the transfer of political power to the bureaucracy. Ministries are manipulated by deputies and clever marionette-like manoeuvres. They, in turn, are managed by the Premier's mandarins, with only the semblance of power at the elected level."

Mr. Speaker: Is there a question in all of this?

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, since deputy ministers are appointed essentially by the Premier, and in view of this reference to mandarins in the Premier's office who allegedly manage the deputy ministers, has the Premier asked his former Minister of Energy to provide him with information to substantiate these very serious charges being made about the conflict of democratic government in Ontario?

[2:45]

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, in reply to that very serious question, one of urgent public importance raised by the Leader of the Opposition, which has about as much relevancy as a number of questions he is prone to ask in the House—

Mr. Bolan: A heck of a lot more than the answers you are giving too.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have never raised the question of the relevancy of my answers. They usually reflect the tenor of the questions that are asked, and this particular answer will be no different.

Mr. Bolan: Facetious.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Yes, it will be a little bit facetious because the question was more than slightly facetious.

I would say to the Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Speaker—and I am sure you will allow me the same latitude in reply as you allowed him in reading from the news report—that quite honestly I have not discussed the particular matter with the former Minister of Energy. He is a very able member of our caucus, one who represents, as we do in the whole caucus, a Conservative approach, unlike the caucus opposite which is ultimately divided into Liberal and Conservative philosophy.

He is one who has never been reluctant to campaign as a Conservative either federally or provincially and not as a representative of a party who, if he goes into Scarborough West, will be faced with election signs saying "Ontario Liberal, Canadian Liberal," or any other variety of Liberal you may wish to choose in this particular period.

The Leader of the Opposition is quite correct. We do have the responsibility of the appointment of our deputy ministers within this government. I am not one to become too expansive on any of these things. I am always very modest in my praise of individuals, except I would say that I think we have an excellent—

Mr. McEwen: Your halo is slipping.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Yes, there's a halo. To the hon. member opposite who is gesturing with his hand around his head, indicating some difficulty which we would understand on this side of the House, I would only say to him a halo he does not have.

I would also say I have great confidence in and great respect for the deputy ministers in the government of this province. Not only do I say that, but I am sure in a personal way I really reflect the views of the reasonable members opposite who on occasion do communicate with these deputies in order to get problems solved within their constituencies.

I am told they are always treated politely, cooperatively and in a way that does resolve problems for individual members opposite.

Mr. Makarchuk: You mean he is all wrong, in other words.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I happen to know that this takes place. While the hon. member in the speech apparently indicated some concern that all of us have expressed on occasion as to the role of the "bureaucracy" and that of the elected people, I can say, unlike the Liberal caucus, certainly we are a very independent group on this side of the House. I would say that I have the advice of some of the most able men and women in political life in this country who have never been reluctant either to differ with the deputy ministers or on occasion even to differ with the Premier in their approach to certain issues.

While I know the Leader of the Opposition had hoped in some small way, because of the by-elections, facetiously to embarrass this party, I can only say to him, unlike his party we do not discourage independent thinking. We do not discourage our private members from making observations, and at the same time, unlike his caucus, the ministers of the crown in this government do express their points of view. Their points of view are understood by the senior level of administration—

Mr. Sargent: You have made a hell of a mess of it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —in this province and they do accept the ultimate political decision that is made. If the Leader of the Opposition wants me to expand upon this further, I am quite prepared, hopefully, to answer a supplementary question, or perhaps he now feels he has had enough.

Mr. Makarchuk: Any more?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I can go on. I can even be provoked into commenting on Hamilton-Wentworth.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, I won't, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I really think the Premier's answer has been expansive enough.

Mr. S. Smith: Since the Premier seems determined to take the question less seriously than it was intended—

Hon. Mr. Norton: You mean it didn't achieve the result you hoped it would achieve.

Mr. S. Smith: I would like, by way of a supplementary, to ask whether the Premier is aware that because cabinet solidarity no longer binds the member for Prince Edward-Lennox the member is making some very serious charges about the conduct of government in the province of Ontario under the stewardship of the Premier. I want to know, therefore, whether the Premier intends, since he has obviously not already done so, to find out the specifics of the accusations being made by the member for Prince Edward-Lennox, whether he intends to share with the House any of the specifics that are involved, and exactly what the Premier's opinion is of a situation where a former minister, finally free to speak of his experience, tell us the elements of democracy have been undermined by the way in which the bureaucracy acts towards its ministers and the way in which the Premier's own appointees control the very top echelon of that bureaucracy. Does he intend to take this seriously and find out what it is the former Minister of Energy is complaining about and what it is in the system of government in Ontario that may require change?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I take all serious matters seriously and I have every respect for the views of the very distinguished member of this caucus and former minister of the crown. I am delighted the Leader of the Opposition, for the first time since I have been here, is now himself paying some attention to the former Minister of Energy. If memory serves me correctly, he was less than complimentary, less than supportive, and hypercritical of that same individual not too many months ago. It is interesting to see the change that has taken place.

I would further say to the Leader of the Opposition, who has yet to gain some measure of experience in these matters I guess—and I will just restate it, Mr. Speaker, because the supplementary really was the same as the original question—that while all of us from time to time are concerned about the balances between the administrative people and the people who labour so conscientiously for the public of this province and that of the elected person, I can only repeat what I say: that I have confidence in the deputy ministers in this government. They are extremely—

Mr. di Santo: Time, time, time.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Listen. My answer hasn't taken as long as that rather rambling question.

Mr. Swart: Oh yes, it has.

Mr. McClellan: Spare us.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Are you having trouble with your fingers this afternoon? I don't doubt it; you got burned earlier this afternoon. I would only repeat to the Leader of the Opposition that in no way am I upset or concerned—

Mr. McClellan: We got burned? Your minister was on fire.

Mr. Wildman: He went up in smoke.

Hon. Mr. Davis:—by what the honourable member has said. I would only remind him if he has something of a specific nature, if he has some criticism to make of the senior deputies in this government, then he should do so. He should not do as he did in Hamilton, criticizing and in many respects going pretty far with respect to the employees of the Ministry of the Environment who can't defend themselves; and in this he has not yet been big enough to apologize or take back what he said.

If he is saying to me as head of government that the "senior public service" are incompetent and that they don't take political direction, then he should just say so and we can debate it here in the House. I would be delighted to do so. I have never been reluctant to defend the public service of this province and that includes the deputy ministers.

I don't want to go on too long on the subject. They are very able people, they take political direction, they take it from a very able group of ministers. I know that is frustrating the Leader of the Opposition; he only wishes he had in his caucus such ability to demonstrate to the people of this province.

Mr. MacDonald: Supplementary to the Premier: Since the usurpation of the legitimate rights and powers of the elected representatives by the growing bureaucracy in modern government is a well-known phenomenon that has been discussed ad nauseam in hundreds of political science classrooms, could the Premier inform us from which one of the thousands of texts his minister may have plagiarized those comments?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Knowing the honourable member who just asked the question is himself either an author or an editor, who in this House is a practising political scientist and in the academic community is a theoretical political scientist, who is one of those who does carry into theory some of the practicalities, as I read some of his material and as I have talked to some students to whom he has lectured, I might observe that perhaps the member for Prince Edward-Lennox borrowed some of his phraseology; I don't know.

I hope he too is expressing at long last some confidence in, and appreciation for, the efforts given to the public of this province by the former Minister of Energy. He didn't show such great interest not too many months ago.

Mr. Swart: That is a perfect non-answer.

An hon. member: Find out what books he has read.

Mr. Nixon: I would like to ask the Premier something arising from the original question and his answer. Does it not concern him that the honourable member who made the speech was Minister of Energy at just the time when Ontario Hydro was making the decisions which are at this time costing the consumers so much money and are above and beyond what is required?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Not really.

Mr. McClellan: You should have asked that a half hour ago.

Mr. Nixon: Is he not concerned that the democratic control of Hydro, which was supposed to have been operating through the former Minister of Energy, was in fact usurped by the bureaucracy and directly by the mandarins, whoever those are, in the Premier's office?

Mr. Wildman: He certainly showed Smith how to ask a question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the baseball season is upon us and when the leader strikes out the pinch-hitters come up to bat; I understand that. Only I have to tell the honourable member that really, historically he is not correct.

Mr. Nixon: The Premier is making an absolute fool of himself.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would say to the member I want to recall for him some of the observations he has made recently when we get into more general debate after the fifth.

Mr. Speaker: The supplementary question was quite specific.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It was quite specific. Well then, trying to deal with it specifically, Mr. Speaker, my recollection, and of course the memory of the honourable member who asked the question is far better than mine, is that the majority of decisions were made prior to this time.

Mr. Peterson: He is better looking too.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Certainly he is better looking. He is better looking than you are, in spite of your wardrobe, in spite of your in-laws.

Mr. Sargent: That is pretty shaggy.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Are they going to be on the campaign trail for Joe? Sure they are.

I would remind the member who asked the question, Mr. Speaker, that the majority of the basic decisions which are now being debated, and the member for York South can correct me if I am wrong, really in essence were made by Ontario prior to the very former, at least the very distinguished former Minister of Energy having responsibility.

Mr. McClellan: He is very former.

Mr. Breaugh: He is very former.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No; the former, very distinguished, Minister of Energy. I think that is, from the standpoint of chronology, correct; so please don't try to bail your leader out by asking a question that really is not totally based on the history of the situation.

HEALTH SERVICES

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Minister of Health; but first to remind him of what he said on Tuesday: "There is no evidence whatsoever, none whatsoever, that people have in fact been deterred from necessary medical care by our system." He also said: "There is no evidence, there is no reason of any kind to believe that our health plan is any way at all being dismantled." Obviously, Mr. Speaker, we welcome the conversion the minister has reflected in a statement he gave in the House today.

I would like to ask the minister a very specific question which relates to this question and relates to the comments made on Tuesday. Since the minister was insisting on Tuesday that it would be a violation of the Health Insurance Act to publish names of physicians who were in or who were out of OHIP, can he explain why and how it was a violation of that act on Tuesday to publish the names, but yet on Thursday it is possible to announce an agreement with the Ontario Medical Association where they will publish the names in some way yet to be determined in order to let people know how to get access to an OHIP physician?

Mr. Breaugh: That is the difference between Tuesday and Thursday.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, it will be done in exactly the same way that the medical association has for years provided that service to the public when they are new in an area looking for a doctor of any kind. What I said was—and again I cannot remember my exact words—I said that I believed that under the provisions of the Health Insurance Act, specifically section 44, that could, in fact, be a violation. That is the section that deals with confidentiality. That is being checked out.

Mr. Conway: I wonder what Bert Lawrence would say if he were here today.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: But that is my understanding of it.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, supplementary: Will the minister not agree that if section 44 was in fact intended to protect confidentiality it would apply as much to the local medical associations or academies of medicine as it would apply to the Ministry of Health in publishing the kinds of lists that we wanted, for each community in the province, of doctors who are opted in and opted out?

[3:00]

Will he also not agree that section 44 of the act is intended to protect the patients, but that it is not intended to be a legal smoke-screen to allow the Ministry of Health to fail to inform the people of Ontario whether and how they can get service at insured rates?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, the relationship between the government, the Ontario Health Insurance Plan and the profession is dictated by the Health Insurance Act. We are all bound by that. The confidentiality of information, whether it is about physicians or patients, must be applied equally.

The relationship between the Ontario Medical Association and the doctors is bound by the constitution of the medical association. Under the terms of that document, they have in the past answered inquiries looking for new doctors. They can and will give some names to individuals who call asking for help in finding an opted-in physician in their area.

The member is talking about a complete list, and they are talking about giving some names to assist individuals in finding a doctor. They are really two quite different things; they are two different relationships: one to the association under the constitution of that association, and the other to the health insurance plan under the terms of the Health Insurance Act, which is binding on all of us.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Can the minister please explain what kind of choice—since this is what he keeps insisting on—an individual patient is going to have if he first has to phone up the Academy of Medicine, which is not listed in the phone books of the various cities and towns of the province and, in the second place, if all the individual gets from the academy is a list of two or three opted-in physicians who may or may not be convenient for the neighbourhood the person is phoning from?

Does it really constitute choice if there are other doctors in the area whom the person who is calling may know personally and whom he may wish to go to but he is not able to find out whether they are opted in or opted out?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: First of all, I understand the medical association will indicate in their announcement today the phone number for a Zenith line at their headquarters on St. George Street; so that information will be accessible throughout Ontario, through the Zenith line. That would in fact, ensure choice.

If the individual feels that on principle he wants to deal with an opted-in physician only, then he will be able to get this assistance, in addition to other normal inquiries one would make of fellow citizens in a particular community.

Mr. Conway: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: On the question of opting out, since the percentage of opted-out physicians has clearly increased, could the minister indicate to this House either now or at an early opportunity what increased burdens this has placed on the OHIP administration? Obviously, a substantially increased number of cheques must be sent out to a much greater number of patients. Can he indicate of what order is that increase and what the additional costs of that are?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I can tell the House that I did put that question myself over the phone to the general manager of OHIP about three or four weeks ago. He indicated at that time that, as one would expect, there has been an increased volume of claims associated with patients being billed direct. He assured me that at that point they are able to look after that volume within the existing staff arrangements and that any additional cost would be associated with postage, in the main, and with paper-work, supplies and so forth.

Mr. Cassidy: I have another question, which I would direct to the Minister of Health, arising out of the statement he made in the Legislature today.

The minister states: "I am confident that the new agreement will produce a level of remuneration for the services rendered by Ontario physicians that will be accepted as fair by both the people of Ontario and the medical profession."

Can the minister explain why the government intends to continue to allow a substantial number of doctors in the province to opt out and to charge fees that are very much in excess of the OHIP rates, if, as the minister says, the rates negotiated with the Ontario Medical Association for OHIP will be fair both to patients and to the medical profession?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: It bears repeating, I guess, time and time again. I really do not think, Mr. Speaker, that member is going to believe it or understand it, let alone accept it. We believe in freedom of choice for the patients, for the doctors. In fact, in any jurisdiction in this country, all of them having health plans, there are choices that have to be made. Even in provinces run by socialist governments, even in that place called the UK, your Valhalla, your Nirvana, there are choices that are made.

In Ontario we have been extremely well served by our system, which is based on these options of the patients and of the doctors and will be maintained in that fashion.

Mr. Cassidy: The minister is saying, in effect, that the rate negotiated with OHIP will in fact be a fair rate both to the patients and the doctors, but then he is also saying that it will be open to doctors to charge a rate which by definition will, therefore, be unfair. Can the minister then say, as far as the so-called freedom of choice of patients is concerned, why he will not insist that patients have access to care at the insured rate, why he insists on trying to have this House believe that it's a quirk of a few people in the province who insist on the principle of having services at the insured rate? Why will he not understand that for most of the people in the province of Ontario getting service at the insured rate is not a quirk, not some kind of eccentricity, but in fact it is a matter of dire necessity? Why, therefore, will not the ministry, having accepted the principle that some doctors' names in OHIP can be published, publish all of the names for each community across the province of those doctors who are in the plan and those doctors who are out of the plan, so if the ministry insists on people having a choice there is a fair choice both for patients as well as for doctors?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, if there are any quirks around here, if there are any eccentricities around here, they all come from Ottawa Centre.

The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, if you will look at the track record of this health plan, if you will look at the reality rather than the distorted perception the member is trying to sell, the people have the right of access, the people have the option. They have been well served by this plan.

It amazes me that for all his talk of this the people still support the plan; the people know that they have a health plan that does look after them.

HYDRO URANIUM CONTRACTS

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, I had thought the Premier would have had a statement to the House today regarding the nuclear spill in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, and that his power officials would be down there finding out what is going on. I have been in touch with that office now—

Mr. Speaker: Do you have a question?

Mr. Sargent: I am leading into what I am talking about; and don't start giving me the gears about a question after what has been going on here the last few months.

Mr. Speaker: Do you have a question?

Mr. Sargent: You will hear my question now.

Mr. Speaker: Please put it immediately. Please put it right now, immediately.

Mr. Makarchuk: Tout de suite. That's in the other official language.

Mr. Sargent: To the Premier, with regard to the $7 billion uranium contract, about which a lot of people are considering a class action verging on public fraud, and wherein he has given them a $2 billion profit before they have even started on the $40 to $60 a pound price, in view of the fact that the Wall Street Journal has said it can be bought at the mine for $1 a pound—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the hon. member take his seat? Will the hon. member please take his seat?

Mr. Sargent: I will stand here all day to get this question.

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member please take his seat?

Mr. Sargent: I will not. I want to get this question in.

Mr. Speaker: I have no alternative but to name the honourable member and ask him to withdraw from the balance of this sitting.

Mr. Sargent: You are impossible.

Mr. Makarchuk: Do you want me to show him out?

Mr. Sargent: We are talking about a $7 billion deal and we can't get a question across. Who do you think you are?

Mr. Sargent was escorted from the chamber by the Sergeant at Arms.

PROPERTY TAXATION

Mr. Cunningham: I have a question of the Minister of Revenue. I would like to ask the minister if he is aware that the proposed equalization of assessment in the city of Hamilton has caused increases in both commercial and residential property, anywhere from 42 per cent to over 500 per cent. I would like to ask the minister if he is prepared to take any action, as provided in the Municipal Act, to provide some relief for those people who will be facing very severe and radical tax increases?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I am aware that there are some increases in taxes and also some decreases. There is a balance there: those whose taxes will go up and those whose taxes have gone down. One has, really, to consider both sides of that coin.

Section 505 of the Municipal Act comes under the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs; however the municipality has the right, at any time, to make the request of the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs if they want to use section 505 to phase in any part of the tax hike that might result from the reassessment.

Mr. Cunningham: The increases on some of these businesses will be upwards of 400 per cent and 500 per cent, especially on some small businesses. A similar effect may be imposed somewhat radically on individual home owners who are already facing the burdens of regional government in that particular area. I'm wondering if the minister would take it upon himself to meet, as soon as possible, with officials from the city of Hamilton to see that if any increases are going to be imposed on these people, that in fact the provisions of section 505 might apply and that those increases be very marginal at best and phased in over a period of time.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I might advise the honourable member that we did meet with the mayor of Hamilton yesterday in this regard. He has been advised of section 505. There is also another section of the Municipal Act, section 636, that could be applied as well. That action has already taken place.

Mr. Charlton: Would the minister inform us of what, specifically, he is prepared to do in terms of phasing in the increases in Hamilton? What form will the financial assistance take, and how much?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I have not made any commitment that there will be any financial assistance from the province whatsoever. Section 505 deals with allowing the municipality to make adjustments. Section 636 does the same thing in a different way, as I'm sure the member is aware. There have been no commitments from this government, at this point in time, for any financial assistance to Hamilton or any other municipality.

Mr. Cassidy: Oh, that's not what the Premier was reported as saying today.

PHYSICIANS' SALARIES

Mr. Breugh: I have a question of the Minister of Health: Will he explain to the House why his ministry decided to freeze the salaries of those general practitioners who are generally considered to be the lowest paid practitioners in general medicine in Ontario, those working in community health service organizations?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: My understanding is that in each case the salaries are negotiated with the individual boards. If the member has a particular case in mind of a doctor's income being frozen in the health service organization in which he works, let me know and we'll look into it.

Mr. Breugh: If I could clarify it: We have some indication here that the ministry staff has indicated that because the ministry doesn't have a contractual agreement to provide the increase approved in the OMA schedule, it is not, therefore, going to increase the doctors' salaries in the community health service organizations. Is that the policy of the ministry's program development branch? [3:15]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: No, I think that of the 28 or 29 individual contracts that we have, a number do have escalation clauses that relate to the changes in the OHIP schedule. A number do not. I believe, in fact, there was a presentation made to the select committee on that by Mr. Ray Berry, the branch director, around the first week of August, at which time the whole system of the HSOs was explained to the committee. If the member has a particular one in mind I'd be glad to look into it for him.

RAPE CASE

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, on March 9, the member for York Centre, in a question addressed to the Provincial Secretary for Justice (Mr. Welch), asked whether or not my ministry would review the possibility of appealing the acquittal of an accused on a recent rape charge.

The member for York Centre referred to a story in a Toronto newspaper which purported to quote the assistant crown attorney as referring to a prostitute as an unrapable woman.

Senior officials of my ministry have reviewed this matter with the crown counsel in charge of the case and, as a result, is of the opinion that there are no legal grounds upon which any appeal may be based.

I wish to make it abundantly clear that at no time did the crown counsel who prosecuted the case use the term, "a prostitute becomes an unrapable person." I'm sure that the member for York Centre was quoting from a March 8 edition of a newspaper which apparently used this phrase. The reporter responsible for this article subsequently apologized to crown counsel for the fact that someone had rewritten his original story.

In the view of crown counsel, the jury in question was properly charged by the trial judge, and it is apparent that this case is one where the jury felt that the case simply had not been proven beyond a reasonable doubt.

TOURISM

Mr. Eakins: I have a question of the Ministry of Industry and Tourism, Mr. Speaker. In line with his efforts to reduce the province's $660 million travel deficit, will his new director of tourism be investigating such practices as a tour operated by Gray Coach Lines, one of our publicly-controlled companies, to transport residents to Niagara Falls every day of the year and which offers accommodation on the American side of the falls only?

Mr. Kerrio: Shame.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes, of course we will. I think we have some great facilities on our side of the border and we'll speak to Gray Coach about that—

Mr. Kerrio: The best, the very best.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —and see why it's doing it and if it can't do it on our side.

Mr. Eakins: A supplementary: While the minister is looking into this, will his director of tourism look into why they rejected a submission from the Canadian operators in Niagara Falls? I believe the operators were asked for a submission, they prepared it and they were turned down. At least, we ask for the opportunity for tourists to stay on the Canadian side if they wish. At the present time, they have no alternative.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes, I would. I would be very interested to learn the circumstances surrounding that since it would seem to me, in view of the dollar exchange, it would more than likely be cheaper to stay in any of the fine facilities in the great city of Niagara Falls on our side of the border than in the United States. I would be very interested to find out what happened in that situation and I'll report to the House.

Mr. J. Reed: The minister doesn't know anything about it?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I may go out there myself.

DRIVER EDUCATION

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Transportation and Communications, of which he's had notice, I believe, for some time.

In view of the increasing surplus of teachers in Ontario and in view of the discussions now under way in the ministry toward upgrading of driving education and the professionalization of driver instruction in the province, what progress has now been made in utilizing the skill of our surplus teachers to improve driving education in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, the member did advise me some time before the recess that he was going to ask that question, but I must admit that I had almost forgotten.

I can't tell the honourable member what specific action is being taken, if any, for the use of surplus teachers in the role of driver education. Certainly no action is being taken at this moment by my ministry in that area. It may be that through the boards of education and the secondary school system some role is being played in this area for more intensive utilization of secondary school teachers in driver education.

As I'm sure the honourable member is aware, last fall we published a discussion paper on driver education which was distributed rather widely. I believe 3,000 to 4,000 copies were distributed throughout the province. We have had a fairly good response, but not as great a response as I would like to have had. We have had response from education officials, boards of education, driving instructors, commercial driving school operators and safety associations. These replies to our discussion paper are being tabulated right now, or have been.

I don't intend to proceed with legislation on anything this spring session but, perhaps before the summer recess I hope to be able to either distribute draft legislation or table for first reading legislation for discussion purposes outlining what I will be proposing for dealing with the whole matter of driver education in Ontario. Then, during the summer months, I hope to have meetings and discuss this and perhaps proceed with something further in the fall to bring a more formal solution to the whole driver education system of the province.

Mr. Young: Supplementary: I would like to thank the minister very much for his reply. Certainly the urgency of this situation is underlined by the dilemma in which the Minister of Health now finds himself.

I wonder whether or not the minister is planning anything in the way of stepped-up driving instruction over this summer, or whether his program—and I understand the difficulties here—has advanced far enough that driving instruction can be stepped up during the summer months instead of being cut back as it was last year.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I don't expect that I will be able, in any way, directly through the ministry, to step up driver education. I certainly recognize the need. One of the things I have been very interested in over the past couple of years—three years, as a matter of fact—is bringing a more formal curriculum type of program to the whole driver education system. As the honourable member well knows through his committee on safety there were some valuable comments and recommendations made.

I am not completely happy with the driver education system we have in the province today. It's fragmented; it's not a uniform system. But the ministry directly is not in the business of supplying driver education; the boards of education are and the commercial driving schools are and a great many private individuals are. I will tell the honourable member right now it is not my intention to make a course of driver education, whether it be by a board of education or by a private driving school, mandatory to obtaining a licence, advisable as it may be. Ontario is a very large and diverse area of land with a lot of people—

Mr. Kerrio: We give up, we give up.

Mr. Speaker: Will the honourable minister be a little bit more crisp in his answer?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, the area of the province to which I am referring now happens to be that great area which you represent a major part of.

Mr. Speaker: It has been crisp up there.

Mr. Breaugh: You're right, Mr. Speaker; I was just there.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I recognize the honourable member's keen interest in this; he has been very helpful. I look forward to being crisp and, by June, having draft legislation for us to consider.

MEMBERSHIP OF POLICE COMMISSIONS

Mr. McGuigan: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the member for Eglinton—and I address him that way because I think the question concerns both of his portfolios.

In view of Kent county Judge G. Brian Clement's refusal, because he finds he does not have the time, to act on the police commissions in four municipalities, would the minister either direct the judge to act in this capacity or, probably more preferable, appoint someone else to act in that capacity?

At the present time there are only two members acting on these police commissions; negotiations currently are under way regarding salaries and so on, and they feel a great deficiency in having only two people.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Of course, Mr. Speaker, I cannot direct any judge to sit on any board or commission, and I was not aware of the particular problem involving this judge.

Part of the problem in some areas is caused by legislation which requires that the commission include a judge as a member. In my view, this should be changed, not to exclude judges as members, but to leave it up to the individual municipality to determine whether a judge is the appropriate member. I hope an amendment to the Police Act in this respect will be brought forward, certainly before the end of spring. In the meantime I will look into that particular situation.

Mr. Worton: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: The Attorney General has had correspondence from myself and from the mayor of Guelph in regard to additional members other than the three members in the municipalities, such as the regional governments have. Is the minister going to give consideration to that when he brings in this amendment to the Police Act.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Yes, we are, Mr. Speaker.

LAKESHORE PSYCHIATRIC HOSPITAL

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, my perennial question is for the Minister of Health. While the minister was away—it is perfectly all right to go away; I am not saying much about that—a goofy decision was made by some member of the ministry staff to close the special observation unit at Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital.

Is the minister aware of the case of a young woman, Theresa Bonnici—we have permission to use her name—22 years of age, who had been in the hospital, involuntarily, whose condition was such that she had to be taken to the special observation ward? She was forced out last week because of the closing of the ward and is not locatable at the present time, and her parents are profoundly worried about her. Is the minister aware of this case?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Not that particular case, Mr. Speaker. My understanding—I am looking for the note I had on that; I had asked a question about the special observation unit—is that all the patients in the special observation unit are in secure wards at this time. I will check that out and confirm that.

Mr. Lawlor: Supplementary: Since there are many patients in these conditions, dangerous to themselves and even possibly to others, and many court referrals—the ministry will be getting a lot of complaints from the courts, judges and police very shortly if it has not got numerous complaints already—would the minister consider reconstituting the special observation ward at least until his further plans are developed?

[3:30]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I'll be glad to talk with the staff in the psychiatric hospitals branch to assure myself the decision that's been taken is not causing any harm to the patients, because obviously the welfare of the patients is first and foremost.

The member's comment about the requirements of the courts and so forth relates more to Queen Street, inasmuch as that's where the METFORS forensic unit is located. Of course that is carrying on as presently constituted.

COMMUNITY SERVICE BOARDS

Mr. Bolan: I have a question of the Minister of Northern Affairs with respect to the community service boards which his ministry is proposing to establish in unorganized townships in northern Ontario. Is the minister aware his ministry officials who have been holding meetings in northern Ontario communities to explain to the people the proposed legislation of community service boards are very uninformed when it comes to answering questions, particularly in the area of funding? Could the minister also tell us what would happen to existing contractual arrangements which some of the unorganized townships already have with respect to providing services to these unorganized townships?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: As the honourable member is well aware, we're moving around northern Ontario with the Northern Affairs staff to discuss a position paper—a white paper if you want to call it that—to get northern input, because something northerners really want is input into legislation before the legislation is written. There's nothing in that position paper that says that what is there will be in the legislation. That is our purpose in going around.

I regret the member wasn't at that meeting in his riding. He was invited; he did not see fit to attend.

I have to say to him I've had some discussions with my staff and I am confident they are fully aware, very much aware of the proposals we have brought forward. They discuss it in a very open manner, and they get input from the people in the unorganized areas. I must say both the UCANO groups in the east and in the west have been very much involved in the preparation of this white paper that seems to be acceptable to most of the people in the unorganized areas.

There are certain areas we haven't really clarified. One of them is bequests to a municipality and another is the volunteer labour aspect which we're working on. We're getting their advice, and prior to any legislation being drafted of course, we will be back to those unorganized areas again to get their advice and their input to make sure that when the bill is introduced it will be acceptable to all parties on all sides of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Time for oral questions has expired.

PETITION

MENTAL HEALTH LEGISLATION

Mr. Lawlor: Pursuant to standing order 33 of the Legislative Assembly, we the undersigned members of the assembly hereby petition that sessional paper 19, compendium of background material on the Mental Health Act, Bill 19, tabled on March 2, 1978, be referred to the standing committee on social development for such consideration and report as the committee may determine.

There are in excess of 20 signatures from members.

REPORT

STANDING PROCEDURAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

Mr. Breagh from the standing procedural affairs committee presented the following report and moved its adoption.

Your committee has considered its order of reference dated October 24, 1978, and recommends as follows:

Once the order in which estimates are to be considered is determined under the provisions of standing order 47, that order may be changed either by substantive motion upon notice or by unanimous consent.

Mr. Breagh: This recommendation from the committee deals with the matter that was referred to the procedural affairs committee by the House. You may recall, Mr. Speaker, the unfortunate circumstances in our last session when we ran into an occasion when the estimates had to be reordered due to the untimely death of one of the ministers.

It provides a suggestion by the committee of a way to handle it which offers the House two options. One is, if there is some emergency, to do so by unanimous consent. The other option, if that unanimous consent cannot be received, is by simple notice to put a motion before the House.

On motion by Mr. Braugh, the debate was adjourned.

MOTIONS

DISCHARGE OF BILLS

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that Bill 2, An Act respecting the County of Middlesex, and Bill 7, An Act to amend the Milk Act, be discharged from the committee of the whole House and ordered for third reading.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that on Thursday, April 5, private members' public business be set aside in order to resume the debate on the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech from the throne.

Motion agreed to.

COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that this House endorses the following schedule for committee meetings during this session: The social development committee may meet on the afternoons of Mondays, Tuesdays and Wednesdays. The resources development committee may meet on the evenings of Tuesday and Thursday. The general government committee may meet Tuesday afternoons and evenings, for the sole purpose of completing Bill 163, and regularly on Wednesday afternoons. The administration of justice committee may meet Thursday afternoons and Friday mornings. On Wednesday mornings no more than two of the following committees may meet unless authorized by the House: general government, resources development or administration of justice. The following committees may meet on Thursday mornings: public accounts, members' services, procedural affairs and statutory instruments.

Motion agreed to.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

MUNICIPAL NIAGARA HYDRO-ELECTRIC SERVICE ACT

Hon. Mr. Auld moved first reading of Bill 29, An Act to provide for Municipal Hydro-Electric Service in the Regional Municipality of Niagara.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, this bill received first reading last fall as Bill 180. It establishes a new municipal hydro-electric commission for 10 of the area municipalities in the regional municipality of Niagara. The principal difference between this bill and Bill 180 is that the service area boundaries of the Grimsby Hydro-Electric Commission will remain unchanged until the Grimsby council directs its expansion to the municipal boundaries. In Bill 180, the Grimsby Hydro-Electric Commission was required to serve the entire municipality of Grimsby by January 1, 1980.

In addition, there have been some minor changes. First, the implementation date on which the new commissions must commence operations have been deferred to January 1, 1980, and other dates have been adjusted accordingly. There is provision, however, for earlier implementation as a result of agreement between a new commission and Ontario Hydro.

Second, under this bill, each municipal council will decide whether the transitional commission in that municipality will have three or five members. However, where there are two or more existing commissions in a municipality, the transitional commission must have five members, including one from each of the former commissions.

Third, the bill has a new provision retroactively deeming the trustees of the former police village of Queenston to have been created as a hydro-electric commission when the Regional Municipality of Niagara Act came into force in 1970.

All other provisions of the bill are the same as those in Bill 180.

YORK MUNICIPAL HYDRO-ELECTRIC SERVICE AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Auld moved first reading of Bill 30, An Act to amend the York Municipal Hydro-Electric Service Act, 1978.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Auld: This is a minor housekeeping amendment to clarify that municipal councillors can sit on the hydro-electric commission.

ONTARIO MUNICIPAL EMPLOYEES RETIREMENT SYSTEM AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. F. S. Miller moved first reading of Bill 31, An Act to amend the Ontario Municipal Employees Retirement System Act.

Motion agreed to.

AUDIT AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. F. S. Miller moved first reading of Bill 32, An Act to amend the Audit Act, 1977.

Motion agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL DEVELOPMENT
REPEAL AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. F. S. Miller moved first reading of Bill 33, An Act to amend the Agricultural Development Repeal Act, 1973.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS CORPORATIONS AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Drea moved first reading of Bill 34, An Act to amend the Business Corporations Act.

Motion agreed to.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS
ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Welch: Before the orders of the day I wish to table the answers to questions 93 and 94 standing on the Notice Paper; and, Mr. Speaker, may I have the unanimous consent of the House to call Bills 2 and 7 for third reading at this time? (See appendix A, page 406.)

ORDERS OF THE DAY

THIRD READINGS

The following bills were given third reading on motion:

Bill 2, An Act respecting the County of Middlesex;

Bill 7, An Act to amend the Milk Act.

KINDERGARTEN PROGRAMS

Mr. Grande moved resolution 2:

That in the opinion of this House the government should: (a) provide financial assistance to every school board that establishes or operates a full-day senior kindergarten program on the basis that each pupil enrolled in the full-day senior kindergarten program is a full-time pupil for the purpose of determining the amount of legislative grant; (b) establish prior to September 1, 1981, a maximum enrolment of 20 pupils for each class in grades one, two and three of the elementary school program.

Mr. Grande: Mr. Speaker, I will reserve any portion of my 20 minutes that is left for the end. Before I begin I would like to express regret that the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson) is not in the House to debate this very important issue. It is an issue with which the Minister of Education has certainly concerned herself, but going in the opposite direction. It is an issue on which the Minister of Education has said that what we need to do in this province is to increase the class size, instead of reducing the class size.

The Ministry of Education as a whole is making a mockery of the International Year of the Child. Their suggestions are laudable but their actions are at best superficial. The resolution I am presenting to the Legislature today speaks to a fundamental aspect of the education of young children in Ontario. The first four years of education from kindergarten to grade three are the foundation upon which a child's educational future is built. All of us in this House must ensure that the foundations are built on solid rock and not on shifting sand. The future of our children depends upon the decision we make today. We must not let them down.

The NDP for a very long time has been committed to improving the quality of services in the primary years of the elementary school program. This resolution is important, particularly for those children whom the school system so frustrates that the only solution open to them is to drop out before graduation. We know that over 50 per cent of Ontario students never complete their course of studies. The government should be ashamed to allow this state of affairs to happen. Even although the resolution today is directed at improving the learning conditions in the first four years, it is also aimed at providing opportunities for those 50 per cent of the students who drop out, by providing them with the necessary skills and attitudes to succeed.

The resolution does two things. It allows local boards to receive funding for all-day senior kindergartens and it establishes a maximum class size of 20 children to one teacher in grades one to three. This resolution will give substance to the minister's recent letter to the chairman of school boards encouraging them to honour the International Year of the Child.

In that letter the minister wrote: "Here in Ontario children have always been regarded as our most precious resource. Consequently, their growth, physical, emotional and intellectual, is uppermost in any objectives set forth by the Ministry of Education."

Section (a) of the two-part resolution calls upon the government to provide, as I say, the financial assistance. I will not read that part of the resolution again; it is already in the record. This part of the resolution does not force school boards—and this is important to point out at the very beginning—to institute full-day kindergartens. It does not force the parents to enrol their children in full-day kindergartens. It simply allows the boards to establish such classes if they perceive the need in their communities. However, it does force the ministry to provide funding where the programs are established by local boards.

The standing social development committee last year found out during the estimates of the Ministry of Education that 7,500 five-year-old children across this province did attend full-day kindergarten classes, and legislative grants were given to the boards concerned to set up the programs. The resolution today calls upon the government to encourage all boards of education in that direction.

The previous Minister of Education, the member for Scarborough North (Mr. Wells), made a commitment in committee last year. He stated he would be willing to consider seriously proposals that boards might bring to him outlining special needs of five-year-olds. I think the previous minister said, "In some cases, that could be a viable program. If the city of Toronto were to come in with some proposals in that regard we could take a look at them and do it."

To my astonishment and disbelief, the ministry made a retrograde decision in this year's announcement of the general legislative grants in February which wiped out the 7,500 places for full-day kindergarten classes in the province. The decision flies in the face of the massive, incontrovertible evidence that reveals the extreme importance of the early childhood years in determining a child's linguistic and cognitive growth.

The decision to wipe out the 7,500 full-day kindergarten spaces by September 1980 flies in the face of the findings of the Windsor early identification project funded by this ministry. The project report produced in 1976 states: "When children identified as high risk or high performers were isolated statistically from the full sample, prediction to criterion reached very close to 100 per cent accuracy." What that means is that the Windsor early identification project was very successful.

Identifying children who are at risk in the system is not enough. As a matter of fact, some people believe it can be harmful and detrimental, because it might lead to labelling children as slow learners, brain-damaged, disadvantaged and a myriad of other terms that have pejorative meaning to the layman.

The Federation of Women Teachers' Associations of Ontario in its brief to the commission of inquiry into the education of a young child put it in this way: "There is no point in early identification that merely identifies; such identification can be used to predict future levels of achievement or to label children. These uses, because they are not in the best interests of a child, are totally unacceptable. The only purpose for early identification is to uncover the child's needs and to structure the learning system to meet those needs."

In other words, providing the funding necessary to establish full-day kindergartens allows parents and teachers the means to develop programs that will meet the physical, emotional and intellectual needs of five-year-olds. This is the way of realizing the commitment the minister demonstrated in her letter to the chairmen of boards of education.

I mentioned a few moments ago the mass of incontrovertible evidence that exists to support the value of full-day kindergartens. Let me point to some of it.

Dr. Burton Wright, of Harvard University, who is recognized all over the world for the work he has done with young children, said in a paper entitled Reassessing our Educational Priorities, "Failures in the fundamental learnings of language development, curiosity, social development and intelligence in the first years lead directly to underachievement in the elementary grades and beyond."

Recent findings of Project Head Start programs in the United States point to gains in areas such as reading and the development of language. Those children in Head Start proved less likely in the long term to be held back in school and less likely to be assigned to special education programs than comparable groups that have not experienced such intervention.

Ken Fogelman and Peter Gorbach of the National Children's Bureau in London, England, in a paper entitled The Relationship between Age of Starting School and Attainment at Age 11 conclude, "Our results provide as strong evidence as could be obtained that at the age of 11 children who started school before their fifth birthday are ahead on average of those who started school after their fifth birthday in terms of general ability, reading comprehension and mathematics attainment."

The Minister of Education commissioned Dr. Bienmiller of the Institute of Child Study to find out the effects of half-day, alternate full-day and full-day junior and senior kindergarten programs on children's constitutional skill, emotional and behavioural development. The study included 340 children from urban and rural schools in Ontario. The children were selected on the basis of "thriving" "not thriving" or being "average." The study suggests some tentative conclusions.

Conclusion one: "Thrivers tend to benefit more from school than non-thrivers." I wonder if we needed this study to point out the obvious.

Conclusion two: "The lengthened school day provides no discernible short-term"—and I underline the words short-term—"benefits; neither does it prove harmful to students." Of course we already knew prior to the study that the short-term effects cannot be readily measured. Studies that were done to find out whether Head Start programs were successful in the United States only began to report positive results after approximately 10 years of the program.

To be fair to Dr. Bienmiller, another of the tentative conclusions was, "The long-term effects of the program must be examined." Precisely. Given the last conclusion one may be tempted to demand from the minister why no study was commissioned to find out the long-term effects of the full-day kindergarten since these classes have been in operation for at least the last five years in this province. One may be further tempted to suspect that the ministry did not want to find out the long-term positive effects that a full-day kindergarten experience would have on the five-year-olds of this province because, once the results were in, pressure will mount upon the ministry from every nook and corner of this province to establish full-day kindergarten programs.

In conclusion, the research is positive. It shows beyond a doubt that it is beneficial to five-year-olds in this province to have a full-day kindergarten experience. The research evidence reveals the extreme importance of the early childhood years in determining a child's linguistic and cognitive growth. It shows that the Ministry of Education itself had thought that five-year-olds benefit from a full-day kindergarten experience because the ministry allowed boards of education and gave funds to those boards across Ontario to set up full-day kindergarten programs.

The former Minister of Education made a commitment to this Legislature that he would be willing seriously to consider proposals for full-day kindergartens on a special needs basis. The Windsor early identification project developed by the ministry would be useless if the only thing we do with the children that are identified is to label them. What we need to do is permit local school boards to lengthen the school day for kindergarten children so that programs can be developed early on in the child's educational experience to short-circuit, so to speak, definite stumbling blocks in the learning process..

This is what prevention is all about. If the Minister of Education and her ministry want to pay the costs for the pound of cure tomorrow instead of paying the cost for the ounce of prevention today, then let the party opposite vote against this resolution. If they want to do something worthwhile in the education of our children and our future working force, as I hope they would, then let's get the teachers, parents and ministry together and develop viable and vibrant programs for our five-year-olds in this province.

I have talked so far about the kindergarten year and the life of the young children. The three years following—grades one, two and three—are every bit as important, every bit as critical as the first full year of schooling. The second part of this resolution requires some planning. That is why I did not call for immediate implementation but rather am prepared to give the ministry close to three years to see that a smooth transition occurs.

In the past there was no consensus in the research literature as to which is the most suitable class size for optimum learning to occur. However, all the literature I have read to date has never researched the primary grades—grades one, two and three—and come up with even a modicum of proof to suggest that a small class size is not beneficial to the children.

The class-size report produced in 1977 and commissioned by this ministry, by Wright, Shapson, Eason and Fitzgerald, only refers to the effects of class size in junior grades—grades four and up—and makes no mention of primary grades. As a matter of fact, the researchers were careful to point out, "Caution must be exercised in generalizing the results of the study. They cannot be safely generalized to primary grades."

Recent research done by the Educational Research Service in the United States, and reported in May 1978 by Education USA, a weekly education newspaper, showed, "Where smaller classes do have an impact is in reading and math achievement in the early primary grades, when primary-grade pupils stay in small classes for two or more consecutive years." Further, the research showed: "Where smaller classes do have an impact is with students of lower academic ability or socio-economically disadvantaged pupils."

Another important finding of the Educational Research Service is, "Smaller classes have a positive effect on pupil behaviour in elementary grades."

The study done by Gene V. Glass, co-director of the University of Colorado Laboratory of Educational Research, whose evidence is based on nearly 900,000 students, concludes that, "A clear and strong relationship between class size and achievement has emerged. The relationship seems slightly stronger at the secondary grades than elementary, but it does not differ appreciably across different school subjects, levels of pupils' IQ's, or across several other obvious demographic features of classrooms."

Here is the startling, sobering fact: "A pupil who would score about the 83rd percentile on a national test, when taught individually, would score at about the 50th percentile when taught in a classroom of 40 pupils." To appreciate the significance of this quote, this Legislature should realize school boards in Ontario in 1977 that had 30,000 pupils or more enrolled in elementary schools have, in 30 per cent of the classes, 31 to 41 children to one teacher. In 10.4 per cent of those classes we find more than 41 pupils to one teacher.

I ask you this, how on earth can a child of six or seven years of age learn how to read in a class of more than 41 students? Where would a teacher find the time with a class of 41 children to assess a child's needs and develop a strategy to look after those needs? The Minister of Education, who is a medical doctor, should appreciate this, should appreciate these facts. Would she not provide a better service to her patients if she diagnosed 20 patients in a day as opposed to 41 patients in a day?

These recent research findings I have quoted do not surprise the public at large, nor the parents of the children in the schools and, least of all, the teachers.

In February 1972, a report entitled Quality of Education in Ontario—Survey of the Parents' Perspective, conducted by Adams, Buckland and Tribbling for the Ontario Department of Education as it was known at that time, was published. This study asked two very important questions. The first was: What do you consider to be the most important thing that should take place in the schools? A tremendous percentage of those people insisted the most important thing for the children—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I'm sorry, the honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Grande: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I hope the ministry, or whoever will talk on behalf of the ministry, will respond to this crucial question in kind.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Speaker, I wish to debate the resolution introduced by the member for Oakwood. Before doing so, I would just like to clarify a point for him. He referred to the absence of the Minister of Education and I would note that she is out of province today on government business. Indeed, she is very much aware of the resolution, so it is not a lack of interest on her part but of necessity. She is not able to be in the Legislature today.

Mr. Warner: That's probably why she left.

Ms. Gigantes: It's a habit of hers to miss important things.

Mr. Jones: This is a private members' hour, I believe, and while he was directing some of his comments to the ministry, no doubt they are being recorded as we submit them to Hansard today. I can reassure him that the minister has very much awareness of the debate taking place and the subject.

Mr. Warner: She is big on red schoolhouses.

Mr. Jones: As a member of the Legislature, I, as the mover of the resolution readily acknowledged, find the resolution is almost two in one. I could find myself being sympathetic with one side of it—and I'll touch on that in a moment—but at the outset I have some very real curiosity because I find parts of the resolution to be ambiguous in many respects.

I'd like to just read it quickly again: "In the opinion of this House the government should provide financial assistance to every school board that establishes or operates a full-day senior kindergarten program on the basis that each pupil enrolled in the full-day senior kindergarten program is a full-time pupil for the purpose of determining the amount of legislative grant."

It seems to me it behooves us to look at what this means in practical terms. I suggest it means that all school boards in Ontario are being enticed with the taxpayers' money to establish full-day kindergarten programs whether or not there is a community demand for these services.

Mr. Grande: How do you translate that?

Mr. Jones: I know the mover of this resolution went to considerable pains to say it does not force the school board, it does not force parents. But it does force the ministry.

Mr. Warner: Here it comes.

Mr. Jones: To do that—I'm coming back to practical terms—human nature being what it is, dollars and cents and constraints as they relate to the different levels of the ministry and school boards, being what they are, I do say it is an enticement that is being suggested to those school boards.

Mr. Grande: It is providing programs for kids.

Ms. Gigantes: Are you offering 100 per cent funding?

Mr. Jones: We'd be pretty naive if we didn't recognize that, under this resolution, school boards would be encouraged to canvass the neighbourhood for students, to fill their classrooms with pre-schoolers, as a fund-raising venture. There's no other description for it.

Ms. Gigantes: Oh, come on. Are you offering 100 per cent funding? Is that what you're talking about?

Mr. Warner: Is that the way you run things over there?

Mr. Jones: The honourable member proposes that the number of enrolled, full-time pupils would be the basis for determining grants. In other words, the more tiny tots the board can gather up and bring into the regular school system for a full day, the more tax money it would receive from provincial revenues.

Ms. Gigantes: And the more they have to raise locally too.

Mr. Grande: That's the way it works.

Ms. Gigantes: Oh, boy. You need some elementary math.

Mr. Jones: If the members would just let me proceed, I would suggest one has to take into account that we already have—and I believe it was acknowledged a moment ago—I guess two points that we should touch on here. The way I see this is that I would question whether this is a responsible way of dealing with school boards. I'm uncomfortable with a proposal that dangles money before the eyes of trustees. Again, the fact is, it's human nature. I don't think trustees would want to be part of any such scheme.

Ms. Gigantes: What nonsense.

Mr. Makarchuk: As a matter of fact, all you can see is money. You can't see the kids at the bottom of the thing.

Mr. Jones: They are urged to use those little toddlers as pawns, I suppose, in a fight for a bigger share of limited taxpayers' dollars.

Ms. Gigantes: Oh, my heavens, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Warner: What a view of education. A warped view.

Mr. Jones: Just be quiet. The member, as he moved the resolution, talked about this government making a mockery of the International Year of the Child and all that nonsense.

Mr. Warner: No wonder you were good at selling insurance. Spoken like a true insurance salesman.

Mr. Jones: I'd just like to explain this as it reads, not as pie-in-the-sky philosophy but the way it would actually be applied.

Mr. Warner: You don't care a whit about the system.

Mr. Jones: In my mind, this resolution fails to deal with many basic questions. Let's look at one: What would be the cost of full-day kindergarten programs created by school boards?

Mr. Makarchuk: What is the cost of the reform schools you have to build afterwards?

Mr. Jones: The honourable member didn't mention it. He didn't allude to any of those estimates of cost. We're responsible legislators. We have to deal with dollars and cents.

Mr. Makarchuk: Of course you're responsible.

Ms. Gigantes: Just say your piece and sit down.

Mr. Jones: The members opposite raise it in question period. We can't ignore it; it won't go away. It's a practical world. The member doesn't know how many school boards might participate—I didn't hear any reference to that—so I'm working from this financial void, as it were, because I didn't hear the figures mentioned.

Mr. Grande: This is discussing principle.

Mr. Jones: The member is suggesting, I would have to think, that we should offer the school boards an open-ended funding scheme without any thought as to whether the taxpayer can afford it, and this hardly sounds responsible to me.

Ms. Gigantes: You are so mean you squeak.

Mr. Jones: Secondly, what effect would this scheme have on the existing day-care services that are already offered to pre-schoolers?

Ms. Gigantes: The what? The what?

Mr. Jones: The answer would have to be that it would drive a lot of them, if not all of them, out of business.

Ms. Gigantes: Oh, now we get it.

Mr. Jones: At the present time there are 618—

Ms. Gigantes: Now we get the real story: competition of the private day-care services.

Mr. Jones: Just a moment. There are various kinds of those services. There are 618 licensed day-care centres in Ontario right now offering full-day programs to some 50,000 children, and more than half of these licensed centres, some 321, are operated by volunteer parent co-operative boards. I have a youngster, three years old, who is in one of those very same programs.

Mr. Warner: Why don't you sell them a policy against the threat?

Mr. Jones: The family involvement is very real, very vital, contributing to the proper upbringing of tiny children.

Mr. Makarchuk: Have you ever looked at the records of the kids in the reform schools?

Mr. Jones: I was polite to the member for Oakwood as he put his case—

Mr. Makarchuk: Have you ever looked at their backgrounds?

Mr. Jones: —so could the member for Brantford just contain himself for a moment and listen to a couple of facts—

Mr. Makarchuk: You stand up and come across with absolute baloney about conditions that are totally different from conditions in our society.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Jones: —that were not contained in the member for Oakwood's proposal.

Mr. Warner: He made more sense.

[4:15]

Mr. Jones: Most of these licensed centres do not receive direct funding at present. In fact, only 212 centres operated by municipalities, Indian bands and charitable organizations receive subsidies totalling close to some $35 million a year. These are funds provided on an equal basis by the Ontario and federal governments. In addition, the Ontario government provides a further $5.5 million a year program for mentally retarded children.

Mr. Makarchuk: And when you don't do it, you give it to the minister sitting next to you.

Mr. Jones: Clearly, we already have an existing, extensive, excellently run network of licensed centres with strong parental and community involvement.

Ms. Gigantes: You guys are not for real.

Mr. Jones: Significantly, the people who work with these little children have taken special training under the early childhood education courses offered at most community colleges in Ontario.

Ms. Gigantes: Reuben, isn't this making you nauseous?

Mr. Jones: If the school boards were to opt for the tax-paid, state-run scheme the honourable member proposes, then the competition between these qualified, experienced, community-rooted centres would be intense.

Mr. Grande: Talk about education, you don't know anything about it.

Mr. Jones: In the end they would be driven out of business as tiny tots are transferred to what appears to be a free service in the school system, and we all know that isn't true. A third question that I suggest this resolution has failed to face focuses on demand. Who is demanding this elaborate state scheme? The school boards?

Ms. Gigantes: All the people who don't have day care.

Mr. Jones: I am not aware of one singular proposal by school boards or petitions to extend the school system back towards the cradle, as the member talked about the studies that dealt with the first four years of a young person's total age.

What about the parents? Are they clamouring for a province-wide program to sweep their children into the system before they are hardly out of diapers?

Ms. Gigantes: They want it in their own area.

Mr. Jones: I haven't heard that either. Perhaps the honourable member believes that this plan would benefit single parents. If so, I would like to examine that. We all agree that single-parent children face a special plight these days. That is why we can now utilize subsidized day-care facilities that we have and that is why we have an Income Tax Act that permits them to deduct up to $500 per child from their taxable income for child care expenses, and that is why we have family financial assistance programs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Jones: I cannot support this resolution that attempts to place little children in auction in a battle between different levels of government.

Mr. Sweeney: I would like to begin by complimenting the member for Oakwood for introducing this resolution. I have already spoken to him about it. He knows, and I would so advise this House, that I concur completely with the spirit and the thrust of this resolution.

I have some concerns with some of the specifics but the general thrust of the resolution is one which I support wholeheartedly. That thrust, as I understand it, both from reading the resolution and from speaking to the member, is that it is far better for us to assure ourselves that the young children in their early days in school get the best possible education.

We have learned, not only from research but also from practical experience, and I can say this personally, that allowing our primary grade children to be in smaller classes does pay off in the long run and it pays off in two ways. It pays off in terms of the ability of the student himself or herself to be able to benefit from the subsequent range of education. It also pays off, I suggest, in terms of the later costs if we don't do it at the early age.

I know from experience, and the research once again has shown clearly, that those children in the primary grades who do not get the individual attention they require, and this is only possible in smaller classrooms—now whether or not the figure of 20 is the magic figure I am not prepared to argue; it is as good a figure as any to start with—if they don't get that kind of individual attention in the primary grade, then we know—there is no dispute about this, it is a confirmed fact—that those youngsters are going to have serious learning problems in the junior grades, in the intermediate grades and in the senior grades.

One of two things happens: Either we spend a great deal of money and time, in terms of both human and financial resources, to try to remediate the problem we should have caught earlier, or we allow those young people to fall by the wayside. I would point out to the government members that the number of students falling by the wayside is becoming scandalous in this province.

A very recent study, of which I am sure the member for Mississauga North is aware, has just been finished by the director of the school board in the Mississauga-Peel area. The study clearly identifies that even in that area—it is not what I would call a down-trodden area of the province; it is a very affluent area of the province—52 per cent of the young people who start in grade nine do not successfully complete grade 12. The director, as part of his open, public discussion with his school board, clearly identified as one of the reasons—not the only one, but one of the reasons—inadequate educational attention in the younger grades.

One of the things that I have seen happen myself is that those children who do not in their primary grades get a sense of success of accomplishment, a sense of being able to deal with school work or educational matters, continue to have problems in subsequent grades.

If for no other reason, we would support this kind of resolution to be sure that the young people, particularly in the primary grades—I know there is some dispute about class size once you get beyond the primary grades but I do not think there is any dispute with respect to the primary grades—are given that sense of accomplishment or success at school work, at school types of things, because it is going to pay off in the long run. It is going to pay off in human terms and it is going to pay off in financial terms.

It is strange that one of the reasons—as a matter of fact, from my talking to people, one of the main reasons—that many parents pull their children out of the publicly supported school system and put them in the private school system, where in many cases they have to pay very high tuition fees, is the smaller classes. There are other reasons too, but for this reason as well they prove there that it does pay off.

What we have in this province, then, is that double standard: Those people who can afford it are able to get their young children in privately funded schools, in smaller classes, and to get them a better education. I do not think that was ever the intent of education in this province.

With respect to kindergarten, the evidence coming out of the Ottawa-Carleton area is pretty clear now that if you want to get children in French immersion programs—this is referring mainly to English-speaking children now—they do better starting at the kindergarten level. There doesn't seem to be too much dispute about that for most children.

We know, as has already been suggested, that the former Minister of Education accepted the premise that even in an area like Metro Toronto there are children from immigrant families, where for all practical purposes there is no English spoken in the home, who could benefit from that same kind of English-language immersion program, if you want to call it that. That is a second place where there would seem to be that kind of need.

If I can go back to the comments made by the mover of this resolution, that he was primarily concerned with defining a need, I do not really believe that the member was advocating, as the member for Mississauga North suggested, that it be spread throughout all the province, whether there was a need or not.

Where there can be a clearly identified need and where we can find some mechanism—and here I pause, because I know it's difficult; we have had problems with this before—where we can find some mechanism to limit it to those areas and boards—and those parts of boards, if necessary—where there is a defined need, then I could support that part of this resolution. I cannot support it if it means we are going to go out on a selling job and encourage school boards all across the province to start full-day kindergartens where there really is not a serious need.

As a matter of fact, speaking very personally, I have some reservations as to whether it is desirable in all cases. I know the research is divided on this. My own personal opinion is that I am not sure it is desirable in all cases for five-year-olds to be in school all day long. I think there is some question about that. If we can't define a clear need that, hopefully, can be met in this way, then I don't think we should encourage it, but where we can define the need, then I think we should encourage it.

I would point out to the member for Mississauga North who spoke on behalf of the government that one of the observations the Minister of Education made about a year ago was that any of those boards that wanted to do it on their own could do it from the local tax base. There is one little catch in that and that is it is probably possible for public school boards to do this, but it is not possible for separate school boards to do it, as I am sure the member quite well appreciates. The separate school board simply doesn't have the local property tax base from which to draw sufficient funds to support these kinds of programs.

I would hope if there's any way the government can see its way clear to do it in those places where the need exists, they would continue to recognize that differentiation that is necessary between public school boards and separate school boards. I will recognize they have done that in all other areas of public versus separate school education in this province.

The question of costs came up. I don't want to get involved in a discussion of costs because I don't think that is the central issue but nevertheless, it is part of the question. The difficulty, and what we would like government members to come back with, is what cost are we talking about? We heard figures last year from the former Minister of Education that it would cost $65 million, ranging all the way to a figure that in Metro Toronto alone, it would only cost $2 million. That's a very significant difference. I think if the government members are going to speak about the cost factor here, and I recognize it is a legitimate aspect of this question—it can't be ignored—it is incumbent upon them to bring forward some realistic cost figures so we can end up with something other than a potential spread from $2 million to $65 million. We just can't handle those kind of figures.

Mr. Bounsall: I have many comments I would like to make on this excellent resolution presented by my colleague from Oakwood. I will try and limit myself to five minutes however, so as many speakers as wish to do so can get in on this debate. I support fully this resolution, which is a very simple one and whose intent should not have been muddled by the member for Mississauga North in his comments.

Hon. Mr. Walker: It was clarified by the member for Mississauga North. You should compliment him for keeping the record straight.

Mr. Bounsall: This does relate to the kindergarten grade only, when children are five years old. It was sort of interesting, however. I always wondered what the problem was but the member for Mississauga North indicated to the House this afternoon that he didn't get out of his diapers until close to age five.

Mr. Jones: I don't remember.

Mr. Makarchuk: After that speech, we even questioned that.

Mr. Grande: You still are in diapers, as a matter of fact.

Mr. Bounsall: This would establish a full-time pupil funding for those boards which in their wisdom decided there should be full-day kindergartens in their jurisdiction in whatever board area they are in the province.

Secondly, it has been very well studied and very obvious and clear conclusions have come from those studies, of which there have been more than one, in North America and in other jurisdictions. They show the smaller the class size one can get in grades one, two and three, the more efficient is the learning and a greater degree of learning can occur. We are talking in that case about the normal child who would have learning increased tremendously, not just that problem child who has a problem in learning, who, if you don't have numbers of fewer than 20, does not have that much of a chance to have their particular learning difficulty identified—nor, even if it is identified, is time spent on that child to alleviate that learning difficulty.

The closer we get to 1984, dismayingly, the more Orwellian become this government's behaviour and attitude towards education in this province. On the one hand, you have the Ministry of Education sending out a letter to the school boards across the province reminding them, as if they weren't aware, that this was the International Year of the Child, and urging them to do something about it. Yet, on the other hand, through the completely regressive ideas contained in her trial balloons, in her policies, and in her lack of provision of sufficient funds for education—

Ms. Gigantes: Come on in, Tom, we need you.

Mr. Bounsall:—this minister is engaged in nothing short of child-bashing in this International Year of the Child.

We have in this government a minister for social development who doesn't, in principle, believe in child care. We have, in the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton), a minister who believes in the daycare system, but he does not believe that there should be education in that daycare system. He has consistently refused to deal in any positive manner with any briefs presented by the early childhood education specialists around this province; briefs asking that a decent education program be made available in those daycare centres for the pre-five-year-olds in Ontario.

The Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson) is engaged in dismantling, through financial starvation, the education system in Ontario, just as surely as the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) is dismantling the health system in Ontario.

I have been Education critic now for only some five weeks, but I am dismayed at what I see happening to the education system in Ontario and the exceedingly short-sighted view of this government; a government which used to—I think with some validity—be able to say that the education system in Ontario was second to none. It was not perhaps the best, but it was hard to find one that you could clearly identify as being better.

Ms. Gigantes: That was with Robarts.

Mr. Bounsall: In the last year, with their funding the way it has been—and it was interesting to note that the member for Mississauga North dwells almost solely on the funding aspect—

Mr. Jones: He didn't deal with it at all.

Mr. Bounsall:—in its funding they are ensuring that our system will be second and third and fourth and if this continues any longer than a year or two, probably tenth in Canada in terms of education available to the children of Ontario.

This resolution from my colleague from Oakwood would try and reverse some of that trend. It would require some additional expenditures, without doubt, by this government in the area of child education; an area in which it should be placed and in which it could be most beneficial.

This government—which had a reputation and an interest in education in Ontario; which had programs and studies indicating that it did take a long-term view in education; and which may be looking for solutions for the best education of this province's children—is now turning its back thoroughly and completely upon that whole concept. Its financial restraints starve and restrict virtually every school board and every activity in which the boards can engage in Ontario. That must and should be reversed. This is the prime area in which a reversal of that attitude should take place.

Mr. Speaker, I will end by saying this. In addition, I just wish to point out that this ministry and this government is engaged in bashing all property taxpayers in this province. It is doing this through a steady and progressive shift to the property tax base from the provincial tax base for education costs. Now the province picks up only 53 per cent—

Ms. Gigantes: It is 51.5.

Mr. Bounsall: It is 51.5 per cent, I am corrected—of the costs to local school boards in the area, as opposed to 61 per cent just a few short two years ago.

Mr. Watson: Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a few remarks to this debate.

The decision of the Ministry of Education to limit the funding of kindergarten to one half day per pupil enrolled is predicated on the fact that there are limited financial resources available to support elementary and secondary education.

At the present time there are approximately 165,000 pupils attending junior and senior kindergarten of which approximately 8,000 pupils attend school on a full-time basis. If a significant number of these students were encouraged by school boards seeking grants to attend school on a full-time basis the additional cost would be tremendous.

Mr. Grande: What are they?

Ms. Gigantes: What are the alternative costs?

Mr. Watson: The provincial government does not have the revenue to increase its grants to school boards. An increase in local property taxes for this purpose I think would be asking just too much of the Ontario taxpayers at this time.

If there is no restriction placed on enrolment of kindergarten pupils eligible for grant and if all the senior kindergarten pupils were to enrol in classes on a full-time basis, the additional total operating costs have been estimated at $85 million per year.

Mr. Grande: You know that is mythical.

Ms. Gigantes: Wow, a new figure.

Mr. Watson: This is based on additional full-time equivalent enrolment of 56,000 pupils multiplied by an average of $1,500 per pupil. It is estimated that the increased enrolments would create the need for approximately 2,000 additional classrooms. This could be achieved in part through the use of existing surplus rooms, but in many cases it would require the building of additional facilities or the conversion of existing facilities. Regular classrooms are generally not well suited for kindergarten classes with washrooms, coatrooms, smaller desks and that type of thing.

Assuming that existing surplus rooms could accommodate 50 per cent of the increased enrolment, the additional capital cost would be approximately $50 million. That comes from 1,000 classrooms at about $50,000 per classroom at today's cost.

Ms. Gigantes: Did you write this speech yourself?

Mr. Watson: Money is not the only question although I think it is the most important one to be addressed here today.

Ms. Gigantes: Who wrote this speech?

Mr. Watson: To be fair however, there are social combined with educational reasons for involving some of the four- or five-year-olds on a full-day every-day educational program.

Ms. Gigantes: This is the front line of educational thinking.

Mr. Watson: Any assessment of the advantages and disadvantages of the full-day versus the half-day programs for senior kindergarten children must take into account the variables arising from the fact that the quality of the experiences available in the home environment varies more widely than the quality of opportunities provided for young children in school.

No doubt there are some five-year-olds who will profit from an extension of the time spent at home; others would gain significantly from an earlier and continuous exposure to the rich variety of opportunities and care provided by a good primary teacher.

Mr. Grande: You don't think the boards can make those decisions?

Mr. Watson: Generalizations based on evidence taken from either extreme would be faulty and consequently dangerous. The fact that parents may choose not to enrol their four- and five-year-olds in school is a safeguard that should be maintained. It is also one which I fear may be endangered by legislation being proposed here today.

Ms. Gigantes: What?

Mr. Watson: I would like to discuss the second half of the resolution in a little more detail than did my colleague on this side of the House.

Questions relating to the size of the class have been thoroughly researched both in Canada and internationally. However, there are no defensible data to support the belief that the simple lowering of numbers of children in a classroom would improve the quality of learning or life in the school.

Ms. Gigantes: Nobody has asked.

Mr. Watson: I think it is obvious that there are many variables which may be taken into account. They are important contributing factors to the quality of a child's learning experiences and they are just as important as the class size. The perception by a teacher of what is a small or what is a large class; the teaching style of the teacher; the methods used in being taught; the student learning styles preferred; the subject matter to be presented; and so on.

I question also whether the Legislature should consider the determination of class size when this has been traditionally a local school board prerogative. The government may be seen as interfering with local autonomy by legislating the class size without providing appropriate funding. The resolution does not mention—

Ms. Gigantes: Well, provide the appropriate funding.

Mr. Watson:—financial assistance in lowering the class size of grades one, two and three. It also makes no mention of the kindergarten class size.

I understand too that in some jurisdictions where primary division class numbers have been kept low, financial constraints have made it necessary to inflate the junior division class numbers, adding pressures there. There would be some basis therefore for school boards to argue that since primary division class size is subject to legislation, so should junior division class size be predetermined, and the questions of funding are consequently of the utmost importance.

The enrolment in grades one, two and three as of September 30, 1978 is approximately 400,000 pupils at an average class size of 28.5. The number of classroom teachers in grades one, two and three is approximately 14,000. If the enrolment for each class in grades one, two and three was limited to a maximum of 20 pupils, the number of classroom teachers required would be 22,222, an increase of 8,222 teachers over the current levels. The direct instructional cost of that additional 8,222 teachers, including salaries and fringe benefits, would be approximately $180 million.

Ms. Gigantes: Oh, no. Another figure.

Mr. Watson: That is 8,222 times about $22,000. Is that arithmetic wrong?

Ms. Gigantes: I just love your math.

Mr. Watson: Of course, there would be additional operating costs, administration and that sort of thing.

Mr. Grande: So why spend $2 billion in education if you are worried about it?

Mr. Watson: The capital cost for the additional 8,222 classrooms is difficult to estimate. These classrooms represent more than 10 per cent of the existing number of classrooms and represent approximately two classrooms in each school offering grades one, two and three.

In many cases, surplus space as a result of declining enrolments could be used. But these spaces are already being used by smaller class sizes, additional special education rooms, French rooms and things like that.

Ms. Gigantes: Are they really?

Mr. Watson: For example, it is estimated that the decline in elementary school enrolment has resulted in approximately 4,000 surplus classrooms; however, approximately 3,000 of these have been equipped as French-language teaching centres.

I think a lot of us have come up through schools that had no kindergarten pupils, where we were in classrooms with 30 and 40 students. Maybe we haven't succeeded very well in life, but there are a lot of advantages in having been in a school where you had to learn to work on your own.

I have a certain amount of sympathy for the resolution as proposed by the member this afternoon. It would be nice if we could afford to have a tutor for every single pupil in the province, but we have to saw off some place. What we are discussing here this afternoon is something which involves an enormous amount of expenditure and which, considering our restraint policies, would be impossible to justify. Philosophical questions aside, I think the financial burdens attendant on these two proposals make both limiting of class size and extending the kindergarten programs quite impractical at the present time.

Ms. Gigantes: It is your government that makes it impractical.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk until 4:47 p.m.

Mr. Nixon: I have no hesitation in supporting the resolution with the greatest enthusiasm. I trust it will be allowed to go to a vote later this afternoon. I intend to stand in its support.

Coming from a rural area, I can recall the times when kindergarten was not available, for the same reason that the member for Chatham-Kent has just explained; that is, there did not seem to be much money available for it. When money was made available, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that it has been to the advantage of the young people and the whole of the community concerned. I would very much like to see full-day kindergarten made available right across the province with the appropriate grants.

I can think of no more effective way for us to spend the money than to see that the young people in the province have an opportunity to begin the more formal aspects of their education even sooner. I would add as a rider which is not found in this resolution, that I would trust such education would mean the children would begin second-language education at those early ages before they become self-conscious about practising a language and when their brains are of a receptivity which is not equalled at any other time in their whole lives.

I am very much concerned also at the honourable member's comments about class size. Many years ago I used to teach and I may have that opportunity again. It is true that in the senior grades a good teacher can, I suppose, stand a class of 40 or maybe even 50. I am modest enough to say I was able to teach some of the laws of thermodynamics under those circumstances. But when you are dealing with young kids aged five, six and seven, that is where there is without doubt value in reducing class size.

I reject out of hand honourable members saying that this is outside our jurisdiction. We have the total responsibility for the quality and the costs of education right in this House, nowhere else. It is given to us by the constitution of the country and when we fob it off elsewhere then we are shirking those responsibilities.

[4:45]

Since time is limited I want to say something about these very costs. The member in his comments indicated that if we were to establish this the administrative costs themselves would be great, and this is probably one of the greatest detriments in our education system. These very administrative costs have simply become so top heavy that we can't even contemplate improving the situation because of the inertia and the costs of the administration that has been set up by our very statutes and regulations and under the leadership of the various Ministers of Education over the last 15 years.

There is no doubt in my view that if we were to rationalize—a word that the Ministry of Health uses frequently—the costs of administration in education in this province we would be able to have all-day kindergarten without any problem at all. The positions of the directors of education and the very salaries they were paid were dictated by the government, led through the Minister of Education at that time, who is now the Premier (Mr. Davis). We were the authors of this top heavy administration which has seen the multiplication, the addition, the duplication with no subtraction, of all of these administrative personnel.

For one thing, they have been good teachers taken out of the classroom to the detriment of the value of the system as a whole. We have turned them into small-p politicians, all of them vying for advantage in crawling up the administrative ladder or more of this funny ersatz authority that seems to be so important to them, and appointing those people under them as special subject consultants and assistants to special subject consultants, and seeing that people in the classrooms themselves are given every advantage, surely for more pay—and I'm not prepared to object to that at this time—heads of departments who teach half days, assistant heads of departments who will teach two or three periods a day, people getting lots of money having less responsibility and, in fact, a very, very soft approach to the job of education which should be one of the toughest ones anywhere in the province.

I think the resolution is a good one and it contains within it the requirement for a total reorganization of the administration, which I think is about to sink the ship of education in this province. I have asked the Premier, and he made a good response just a few months ago, if the Minister of Education was going to reduce the costs of administration at the same time that the student enrolment was going down, and he said he felt that was reasonable. The Minister of Education got up the next day and said: "Well, we must realize that the threshold for reduction is very difficult to achieve."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Nixon: I was particularly offended when I got a letter from one of the administrators indicating that he had selected my words and the words of the Minister of Education to send out to his colleagues, this little cabal around the province, whereas they didn't send out the words of the Premier indicating that there should have been a reduction. Anyway, I am going to support the resolution.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That completes the allotted time for discussion of this resolution and it will be dealt with further at 5:50.

REGISTRATION OF LOBBYISTS

Mr. Rotenberg moved resolution 4:

That in the opinion of this House, the government should give immediate consideration to legislation which would require the registration of lobbyists and a declaration by them stating in whose interests they are working.

Mr. Rotenberg: Before getting into the discussion of this resolution I would like to thank Mr. Dave Stewart of our caucus office, who has prepared the research for me on this and has been of great assistance by getting the details for me.

I want to make it very clear at the outset that what this resolution is asking for is registration of lobbyists, not regulation of lobbyists. I want to make it very clear that there is no thought in my resolution of limiting the access of anyone to government, or its committees, or its boards. There is no thought of restricting lobbyists. We just want to know who they are. If someone has a hired gun we want to know who he is and for whom he is working.

Sometimes the terms pressure groups, interest groups and special interest groups are considered to be somewhat sinister. Sometimes members of the media and the general public seem to think there is something wrong. They conjure up views of self-seeking, vested interest and manipulation. Sometimes there's even a charge of robbing politicians and public officials. But I think this stereotype is quite false. It fails to recognize the realities of today's political process; that is that in our increasingly complex society for groups with limited financial resources governments have become legitimate arbiters between competing interest groups and the general public.

Lobbying is really simply the presentation of an interest group's views to the government, to politicians, to civil servants, and indeed to other members of the general public in the hope of making some change which this group feels is beneficial—a change in legislation, a change in government policy or a change in programs administered by the civil service. I feel that lobbying is necessary, and that lobbying operating in full public view is a natural and important part of this legislative process. As I say, my resolution would not regulate lobbying, but simply bring the practice out into the open.

Interest groups, in my opinion, are necessary for good government, and society must occasionally admit that government can act against the best interests of society. But the problem is: is public opinion being properly gauged? An organized interest group represents a concentration of power and a means by which certain individuals, or individuals combined as groups—whether it be business groups, agricultural groups, labour groups, ratepayer groups, consumer advocates or on and on and on—a means by which these groups are seeking to have and to gain a greater impact upon the public and public affairs; and these groups have a tremendous advantage over the individual private citizen.

A well-organized lobby may solicit great numbers of people and do so in a short time, but that does not necessarily reflect a true opinion of the general public. Some of these groups are often large. They give free membership and from time to time they beef up their membership through promotional organizations. They add members to their membership lists of, say magazine subscribers, and in this way they say they represent a great number of people.

Probably the best, or the worst example I've come across of this kind of well-organized, one-issue lobby, is the gun lobby in the United States. They are so well organized that as soon as some congressman proposes any form of gun control, someone in Washington or Denver—I'm not sure where—pushes a button on the computer and some several million people get a letter or phone call from the local gun lobby representative.

Mr. Nixon: That's the way your fund-raisers work.

Mr. Ruston: Yeah, we are getting them every day.

Mr. Worton: They don't miss anybody.

Mr. Rotenberg: Within several days a member of the US congress will receive hundreds and thousands of letters from his community against this legislation.

Mr. Nixon: They push a button and it goes to all the Conservatives. I got one.

Mr. Rotenberg: This is all being done by one lobby and one organization.

Mr. Ruston: The trouble is I didn't send them a cheque.

Mr. Rotenberg: The impression is given that a whole bunch of people out there, all by themselves, suddenly wrote letters to their congressmen; when really there's one, very well-organized and very well-financed lobby.

I'm not saying this lobby shouldn't happen. What I'm saying is that the legislators should know how this was organized and what happens so that they can properly assess public opinion. What is really happening is what I think is very necessary gun-control legislation in the States is being blocked by this very well-heeled, well-organized, well-financed and well-staffed lobby.

I think paid staff of any of these interest groups should be registered as lobbyists, just like private interest lobbies or business lobbies should be registered. Just because a group says it is a non-profit group acting in the public interest—

Mr. Ruston: Colin Brown.

Mr. Rotenberg: —if it has paid staff, I think we should know who those people are and what they are doing. Registration of this kind won't hinder their activities. It will allow our legislators to better assess who they are, and whether they are properly representing public opinion or whether it's simply a well-organized group putting pressure on the legislators.

The same should apply when we have so-called expert witnesses coming before various committees or commissions or agencies in this House. We should know who the expert witnesses are, whether they are paid or are they simply part of a voluntary group. Again, I wouldn't want to restrict expert witnesses from coming before us. I simply want to know who they are and where they come from.

I would say registration of lobbyists, far from being undemocratic, would help enhance our democratic procedures, although it has sometimes been charged that pressure exerted by interest groups on policy may make legislators take illegitimate or even illegal stands and may have some unfortunate consequences. There are charges from time to time that there is a possibility of bribery, blackmail, questionable practices and so on being carried on by lobbyists. But I feel that if the lobbyists are out in the open and we know who they are, if they are registered, it is far less possible—although maybe it is still somewhat possible—for these people to carry on any questionable practices. In my opinion, there is far greater danger of questionable practices being carried on if the lobbyists operate in secret and we do not know who they are.

In short, the purpose of my resolution today on lobbying is to ensure that all this activity is conducted in the open so that people know who is trying to influence whom, and knowing this can respond properly. Lobbying done in the open, and without improper practices, will help everyone concerned, and I think the decisions made by committees will become more acceptable.

There is one other important aspect to this registration. Lobbyists deal, as I said, with the legislators; but they often deal with our civil servants, who also have a responsibility to the public. A civil servant has equal responsibility, I think, in knowing with whom he is dealing. A civil servant does not have the same free-wheeling ability as we as politicians do. In assessing who comes at them and who makes the presentations to them, I think they would appreciate knowing if a person is acting for himself, for a group of which he is a legitimate member, if he is a paid advocate of this group, if he is a hired gun for this group, or if he is a professional lobbyist who simply has been hired to bring this before the civil servant.

There is a positive aspect to the activities of professional lobbyists. Sometimes there are citizens' groups—legitimate citizens' groups, interest groups and so on—who want to come to this Legislature, or a body of it, to make a presentation, but they do not know how to go about it; they do not know where to start, where to go and so on. They are not as sophisticated as some of the others. They do not know the rules of the game.

If there were registered professional lobbyists, if people knew who they were and what their area of expertise was, an interest group could go to such a person and hire him for a fee—

Mr. Nixon: That could be a nice, new legal specialty.

Mr. Rotenberg: It already is a legal specialty. But, if they were registered, people could go to them. It does not necessarily have to be a lawyer. People can hire someone to come and make their case for them and to help them through the system. If it were the choice of a citizens' group, in my opinion, it would be an advantage of a citizens' group to do this sort of thing.

In summary, this kind of legislation does not originate from any distrust on my part of interest groups. The registration, in my opinion, does not cast a slur on the term "lobbyists" or impede any free expression. Registration, in my opinion, does not translate into regulation. The intention is to not put obstacles in the way of any volunteer group.

The matter of registering lobbyists alone will let us know what a lobbyist can or can't do.

Who are lobbyists? We know that a person who comes on his own as a citizen is certainly not a lobbyist. A professional who is hired is a lobbyist. There are some in-betweens. If we proceed with this and try to draft legislation which will require the registration of lobbyists, there will be some gray areas between who is a total volunteer and who is a totally paid lobbyist. There may be some difficult questions in drawing some legislation.

I am not asking today to get into the nitty-gritty details. I am simply asking this Legislature to adopt a principle which states that we feel—as I feel and I hope as the members will feel—that those who are paid to appear before our committees, those who are hired to appear before our committees, those who are paid to make representations on behalf of someone else, should be registered so that everyone knows who they are and what they are about. With that, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the support of the members of this Legislature for my resolution.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member for Brant-Oxford-Nixon.

[5:00]

Mr. Nixon: I'll second the motion, Mr. Speaker.

I used to read Time magazine every week, as a lot of precocious teenagers used to, and perhaps still do, and I was very much interested in the work of the lobbyists in Washington. I remember reading about the debates back in the 1940s, when the statute went through to register them; there was a feeling that, once everything was out in the open, then the approach of lobbyists to government would be in no way injurious, or against the public interest.

I understand the bill is not up for review in Congress. The view expressed there is that, if anything, the bill has been misleading and gives a false sense of security. The public lobbyists and those guys who are sort of guns for hire, in case you have a special lobby you want to put forward, are well known and some of them may or may not be affected.

I suppose it is the same thing as happens here in Ontario. The real lobbies will in no way be revealed by the bill the honourable member is suggesting, or in any of its ramifications. He says, "We don't want to deal in detail." But I can think of no bill that would reveal the functions, such as they are, of people like Bill Kelly, Colin Brown, Gerry Moog, Eddie Goodman—just to start a short list that may be lengthened by others who search their memories. The real lobbyists are the ones who go to breakfast on Tuesday morning with the Premier and a select handful of favoured, upwardly-mobile ministers, like the Minister of Revenue, who is slated for great things, he tells me.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I was there once.

Mr. Nixon: Yes. They are the people, really who decide how the public moneys are going to be spent; surely, number one, for the public good, and secondly, to reap the largest harvest of votes and influence.

Hon. Mr. Walker: They just want a good breakfast.

Mr. Nixon: But the soon-to-be minister, as I said, the honourable parliamentary assistant, has suggested that such a bill would enable a person who may in fact be a lobbyist to have a card printed. He can hand it out to anybody who might want to approach the Legislature or its various emanations, such as the public accounts committee, or the government, and he would be able to indicate his track record. Imagine the elaborate résumé Bill Kelly himself could put on his card: "Satisfaction guaranteed. Rates negotiable," for example. That's the sort of thing I think really leads us to regard the resolution as something that is, well, unsupportable.

I really can recall, over the years, very strong approaches from the community on a number of subjects; for example, the famous "cats and dogs" bill. A number of members here recall when the poor, innocent, then Minister of Agriculture, who is now a senior member of the board of Ontario Hydro, was going to make it easier for dogs to be utilized for research. The spontaneous outpouring from around the world that came in here in letters and petitions and lobbies has been unequalled, I think. It took almost all our time. The thought that anybody there, such as the person hired by the humane society, should be registered—it just sets up another needless bureaucracy.

It may be that the honourable member who is proposing this is thinking that if his career does not mature the way he hopes he could be chairman of the registration board and I could be chairman of the registration appeal board.

Mr. Rotenberg: You've got a deal.

Mr. Nixon: Under those circumstances, and if we could work out an agreement, the bill might have some residual usefulness. Otherwise, I really think such a bill might tend, in fact, to chill the approach. A citizen might feel that he and his group—whether it's the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, the Federation of Labour, or the Community Homo-phile Association of Toronto, or any of those groups—are somewhat restrained from approaching the individual member of the Legislature. "My God, I'm not registered and somebody might hear that I approached a member, therefore I hesitate to do so."

We should encourage in every way possible approaches from the community on matters which concern individuals or groups. As a matter of fact, I'm sure we all belong to pressure groups of one sort or another. I pay my dues to the Ontario Federation of Agriculture. I also pay a nominal fee to the Liberal Party of Ontario for which I get tremendous returns.

Mr. Breagh: Which Liberal Party is that?

Mr. Rotenberg: What about the federal Liberal Party?

Mr. Nixon: Whether a person is a teacher or a lawyer or a doctor or even unemployed—otherwise unemployed—the person belongs to some sort of pressure group. The value of our system is that members of the Legislature are wide open to receive information, prejudiced or otherwise, from individuals and groups. It is up to us to make our decision. A person may be advised by the Ontario Federation of Agriculture or the Ontario Federation of Labour or even by his wife around the kitchen table as to how to vote, but we can only thank God that when the electoral decision is made, when he/she goes into the ballot place, the magic of democracy works and an individual decision and a judgement is made, a decision which we say holds great expectations for the Liberal Party of both Canada and Ontario.

I would say that the same approach applies to us. It is up to us as individual members to listen to our friends who are objecting to or are in favour of the wolf bounty, who are concerned about the control of denturists, or the control and the payments of chiropractors and other cervical manipulators. It is up to us to make those decisions.

I personally think if we went forward with this resolution we would be simply setting up another bureaucratic hodge-podge of meaningless registration and I simply find, with the information available to me, that it would be impossible for me to support the resolution.

Mr. Samis: I rise in support of the resolution. I can't quite agree with my good friend from Brant-Oxford-Norfolk—not Nixon—although I do share some of his sentiments.

I congratulate the member for introducing the bill. Considering his right-wing views, I am a little surprised that he has come forward with such a constructive piece of legislation. I don't think it goes far enough, though, and I will outline the reasons I don't think it does.

Lobbyists are not necessarily a necessary evil, but a fact of life in Canada, the United States and probably in most western democracies. Most of us in the House don't like lobbyists, don't want lobbyists, but we accept their existence.

Mr. Nixon: Not even Cliff Pilkey?

Mr. Samis: We have to accept all sorts of things in this life, don't we, Bob?

In the United States I think the lobbying industry is probably in the most developed, most intense, most powerful, most well-financed condition of any society in the world. I read an article recently which said it is estimated there are upwards of 15,000 active, paid lobbyists in the city of Washington, which is an army unto itself when you consider the number of legislators and you work out the ratio of lobbyists per legislator.

Mr. Nixon: A lot of free lunches there.

Mr. Samis: I noticed Senator Abraham Ribicoff, the Democratic senator from Connecticut, said, and I quote: "Lobbying has reached a new dimension and is more effective today than ever before in history. It has become a big, computerized operation in which the Congress and the public are being bombarded by single-issue groups. The Congress and the people should be aware of who is trying to influence them, why and for what."

Obviously in the States it is an extremely difficult situation that they have to contend with in view of the numbers, the power, the size and the financing of the lobbyists. In fact, they are so powerful that I understand when the bill alluded to by my friend from Brant-Oxford-Norfolk was introduced in 1976 in the American Congress, a small group of lobbyists lobbied very intensely against that very bill, which is similar to the resolution introduced and facing us today. They were able to scuttle that one.

That one did go further, though, than the resolution introduced today. That bill not only wanted some form of registration; it is my understanding they wanted to know who paid the lobbyists, whom were they being financed by, who did the lobbyists represent in the various activities, and they had in some way to delineate what issues they were seeking to lobby and so shape government policy or congressional policy. That bill was successfully scuttled by the efforts of the lobbyists.

Then I understand there was a weakened or watered-down bill after that one. That one has now been scuttled and put into limbo. It did go to some committee in Congress and I gather it is now dead as a doornail, especially in view of the upcoming election. Despite the active intervention of President Carter, that weakened bill is now in limbo, which shows the power of the lobbyists in the American congressional system.

If anyone thinks it is just an American intervention or an American problem he is kidding himself, because as we all know, in Ottawa, in every provincial province—

Mr. Nixon: You are certainly downgrading the intelligence of the elected member.

Mr. Samis: —in every provincial capital we know lobbyists are a fact of life. The headline on an article in the Toronto Star is kind of interesting: "Hard Sell on the Hill is $100-Million Business." If we are talking $100 million in Ottawa, I think that gives us some idea of the scope and the presence of the lobbyists.

In 1976, the same year as the bill was presented in the States, I believe Walter Baker, the member for Grenville-Carleton, introduced a bill very similar to this one which would provide for registration. Like many private bills, that bill right now is in limbo, although Baker somehow clings to the hope that, if the Tories were to get into power, Joe Clark would give it some credence and pay some attention to legislating it. I think Walter Baker is living in a fairy world if he believes that; he doesn't even believe it himself, I'm sure.

There is one trend I notice in our society that is even more disturbing than the mere presence and power of lobbyists; it is who the lobbyists are. If you look in Ottawa, for example, the trend there seems to be that some of the most powerful and influential lobbyists are former mandarins, bureaucrats or members of the government. Some of the people who are on the list of lobbyists make you wonder about the excessively close connection between the bureaucracy and the lobbyists.

David Mundy, former Assistant Deputy Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, now is head of the Air Industries Association. Henry de Puyjalon, formerly of the Treasury Board, represents the Canadian Construction Association. Ernie Steele, a former Treasury Board official, heads the Canadian Association of Broadcasters. We all know about Bill Lee and David Morley, another former bureaucrat. We all know about Simon Reisman from Finance, and Jim Grandy, from Industry, Trade and Commerce in the famous Lockheed affair. What Mr. Trudeau had to do was come out with guidelines for ex-mandarins within a space of two years. So it is a serious problem in that sense, the excessively close relationship between some of the lobbyists from government and the private sector.

My colleague from Brant-Oxford-Norfolk has outlined some of the more famous lobbyists in this particular city: the Goodmans and company people like that.

I would point out again that I am of the opinion that this bill does not go far enough. I think we have to know more than just who are the lobbyists. I think we must have some idea of what the lobbyists are doing.

I noticed that, in a speech in the American Senate, Senator Chuck Percy outlined some of the criteria he would set down for a bill. Obviously this was not accepted. He said, first of all, he would want to require every lobbyist to be registered; which is in keeping with this bill.

Their committee adopted provisions which dealt with certain concerns beyond just registration, and they delineated who would not have to come under the scope of the bill—even the registration aspect—and who would.

For example, they said individuals and volunteer organizations do not have to register; nor do organizations with paid employees unless they are paid staff and engage in a threshold amount of lobbying, as they call it. Organizations located out of Washington and with a total budget of less than $75,000 do not have to register. Organizations which make a single lobbying effort of six days or less during a year do not have to register—which is a pretty exotic category, I must say.

Then they delineate who they want to register. They say organizations with a paid staff which spend at least $1,750 in a quarter to hire professional lobbyists would be covered. Then they say organizations whose own paid staff communicate in person or by phone at least 20 times in a quarter with members outside their home state delegation or with congressional committees would be covered. They also talk about an organization with a lobbyist spending more than $5,000 in a quarter on a single grassroots solicitation. Then they talk about information as to disclosure as well—who is putting up the money—and they go to even further delineation.

But I think you have to say registration does not solve the problem. We all want to know who these backroom boys are, true enough. But I think we want to know also, who do they represent? I think we as legislators have a right to ask, in an annual report, for some brief delineation of their activities. Obviously we are not going to ask how many times they went out with a Premier, or a cabinet minister or one of the big mandarins. But I think we could define it in terms of what causes or activities they were representing on behalf of a particular group, and how much money was spent on that particular lobbying effort.

If this bill would go beyond the simple question of registration to deal with who contributes the money and who they represent, and have some form of delineation or explanation of the activities or issues upon which they lobby, I could support that with far more enthusiasm than this particular bill. But I do recognize this bill as a first effort towards bringing the lobbyists out into the open, to making the public aware of who they are, and in that sense I am prepared to support it.

Mr. Williams: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to participate in the debate today with regard to the resolution that is before the House—not a bill, but a resolution—presented by the member for Wilson Heights. I do so because I feel that this is an important matter that has too long not had the appropriate attention of this Legislature. [5:15]

There are really two elements that make up the life-blood of governments in the free democratic societies that we have today and two of those elements happen to be the right of lobby and, also, the right of financial contribution to ensure that the political party or party process can continue to function.

The very essence of the democratic process is to have people, such as you and I, as elected public figures serving as the vehicle by which an individual, or group of individuals, or some other vested group or groups can approach that person and make known their views with regard to certain interests that may be of a broad public nature, or may be of a specific nature that pertains only to their specific problem or area of endeavour. Nevertheless, were it not for the right of those people to be able to come freely and without fear to their elected representative and clearly make known their views, their concerns, perhaps their objections, then the democratic process surely would not function properly.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, lobbying is an integral part of the democratic process and, as has been noted by a number of members, it is unfortunate, notwithstanding that fact, that there is an unsavoury connotation applied to the term "lobby" or one who is involved in the lobbying process. It's unfortunate and regrettable that this unsavoury or sinister connotation is applied, because it is as legitimate and appropriate a form of political activity as you can find. It's the heart of the democratic process in that sense.

The other aspect of it, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that political parties, political representatives, you and I as candidates during elections or serving as members in a Legislature, cannot continue to function without financial support and contributions from people or organizations or unions or companies or whatever who have confidence in that individual or the political party that that person represents. Yet as soon as the matter of political contributions is raised in certain situations, an ugly or sinister connotation is applied inappropriately to the involvement of the passing of money to a political organization or into the campaign coffers of a political candidate. It is regrettable that not a few people in the public sector have this view, this cynical view of politics and the involvement of lobby and of financial contributions.

Today the resolution before us addresses itself specifically to lobbying, but the reason I make reference to financial contribution is because all the members, I think, have referred to the American experience as one that we should be looking towards when we consider having this matter referred to committee for further assessment and consideration as is suggested in the resolution. In the American setting there is a substantially different arrangement from that in this jurisdiction, because in the United States, while they do have professional lobbyists, an integral part of lobbying is the provision of financial contributions up on the table and through the professional lobbyists to elected representatives, through the organizations that the lobbyists represent. An essential and important difference I think, Mr. Speaker, is that what is being proposed as I understand from the resolution is that we would remain separate and apart from the type of lobbyists who are designated in the States as financial interest lobbyists. They represent large corporations, large unions, other large vested interests. They are designated specifically to arrange for financial support or assistance, or if they wish to assist they must at least record what financial support is being put forward.

In this jurisdiction the matter of financial contributions to parties and to candidates is kept separate from the lobbying concept. We have some of the most enlightened legislation to be found anywhere in our election finances reform legislation, which separates the lobbying element from that of legitimate financial contribution to parties and to candidates during and between election periods.

In the United States, as has been pointed out, it has been a way of life for some period of time. I believe the federal legislation in the United States was enacted in 1949 and virtually all of the states of the union followed suit. I believe that without exception every state of the union also has its own legislation that regulates and controls the professional lobbyist.

The member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk had suggested that it just would serve as another opportunity for the legal profession to broaden its horizons. I am well aware of his biases with regard to the legal profession, but I think, as the sponsor of this resolution pointed out, government today is so complex that in order to deal with it in a meaningful and knowledgeable way the people have to be educated as to what is going on, what legislation has been passed, what the procedures are in dealing with ministries and government people and elected people.

It is only appropriate there should be people who are trained professionally to deal in this fashion so that if some group—say from Kenora or from Winchester, Ontario—had a problem and might not have the resources to go to Toronto and know the ropes as to who they should see and what their background should be in preparing a brief to submit to the politicians, if there were professionally recognized and registered lobbyists, they could engage their services and have these people who would be trained in this area, such as lawyers and engineers and doctors are in their particular professions, to deal with people whom they are well acquainted with and whose workings they understand as far as the process of government is concerned.

So in my mind it is an entirely legitimate and wholesome type of undertaking that should be recognized in a more professional manner by permitting the registration of the professional lobbyist. But I would make two observations here. I would make one exception to the observation made by the sponsor suggesting they should not in any way be regulated. I would disagree with that. I may have misunderstood his point, but I feel that in registering professional lobbyists they should indeed be regulated.

The other important consideration is that they should not have the right to engage in any way in lobbying that involves financial aid or contributions to parties or candidates, and that this should be kept separate and apart in the way in which it is in our jurisdiction today.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member's time has expired.

Mr. Williams: I think there is sufficient merit in the resolution to warrant it being referred to committee, as asked for by the sponsor of the resolution, and I would certainly encourage the House to support this resolution.

Mr. Blundy: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak in the debate on the resolution of the member for Wilson Heights. I personally do not favour the registration of interest groups and I really haven't seen any need for it in the time I have been here.

The member for Wilson Heights has stated the tactics of some pressure groups could be responsible for pressuring the government into ill-conceived legislation and so forth. Personally, I haven't seen the response to representations to this government acted on so well as to make that a worry for any of us.

The matter I would really like to question is what is a lobbyist? Who is termed a lobbyist? We have many groups come in from time to time. Every day members are approached by a sporting body, a group of labour representatives, or various groups, all of whom are trying to point out to the members of the Legislature the benefits of such and such an action towards that particular group.

Personally, I have found I benefit very much from meeting with people who are really knowledgeable in their field of activity. It is quite readily understood that all of us are not familiar with the needs of all the groups of people within Ontario. We don't understand what happens. A bill can be introduced in the House and I might very well say it is a bill worthy of support. In approaching the matter, I can see it is perhaps going to handle a situation that may cause problems. However, if the group that is going to be affected most by that bill can come in and in a professional way and in a technical way point out what really are the ramifications of this matter, I am the one who benefits. The people who really benefit from it are the people of Ontario. Then we are going to get better legislation.

I don't believe that everybody who comes to speak to a member of the House, a committee of the House, or a group of people, or a caucus, are people who are coming here to try to do something that is not in the best interests of the people of Ontario as a whole. Most of the people come to show how legislation can be formed to benefit specific needs in the province.

For instance, I can see we can benefit very much from a lobby group of farm people. Many of us have never lived on a farm a day in our lives and know nothing about it. We can benefit by that. This resolution, while not saying so, seems to imply something sinister. I don't believe there is necessarily anything sinister in the whole situation. It is really just the thoughtful actions of a group of people who feel something can be bettered. If there is anything sinister about lobbying groups it really isn't the group, it is the member of the Legislature who could do the sinister things because of a lobbyist activity.

Since I have been here, we have had lobbying groups, if that is what you want to call them, from everything ranging from labour organizations to farm groups, senior citizens, Catholic Women's League and Gay Alliance of Canada; all of these things. I have listened to them all. I could buy the views some of them were placing before me. In some of their cases, I benefited very much by certain information of which I was not aware before. I think, to a certain extent, it probably has been responsible for certain responses I have made to that group.

I want to repeat that there is nothing sinister in a group of people coming and trying to influence our decisions. There is nothing sinister in the lobbying of a group of people who see something that could be bettered in the way of legislation. The only thing that could be sinister, as I said before, is the fact that certain people in the Legislature may act in a sinister manner after having seen that.

There has been talk this afternoon, in debate on this resolution, about what is happening in Washington, for example. That is really a different field from what I consider to be the lobbying going on in Ontario and here at Queen's Park. If there are any lobbyists here at Queen's Park that we ought to watch and maybe register, it might be a few people with names like Bill Kelly and Eddie Goodman—people like that. They are the ones who seem to be successful in their lobbying of this government.

Mr. Conway: Shame. Fifth column.

Mr. Blundy: I would like to mention also that I was told recently by a journalist that a year or two ago the Toronto Star was planning to do a feature story on lobbyists at Queen's Park and in Ontario. As they usually do, they did some initial spadework, some investigation, and they contacted a number of people with a view to lining up the material that would go into that feature story. What did they do? They dropped it. Why did they drop it? They didn't drop it because they were afraid of uncovering something; they dropped it because they knew it wasn't newsworthy, there was nothing in it. There was nothing bad, there was nothing sinister that they felt they had to expose. So I don't really feel registration is necessary.

I would like to touch on one other matter in this resolution. We talk about the registration of lobbyists. The member for Oriole said yes, indeed, there was a need for regulation of lobbyists. Other speakers have mentioned looking at the financial background of lobbyists, people who come to us and so forth. Here we are, on the threshold of building another bureaucratic setup that is going to cost the people of Ontario more money, or we are building up a committee or commission which will be a haven for Tory party hacks and former members to serve on.

Mr. Kerrio: Right on. We don't need any more of that.

Mr. Blundy: If there is anything that this province doesn't need it is more regulation, more registration, more bureaucrats to look after it and more havens for retired and tired-out party hacks in Ontario.

Mr. Kerrio: There will be more all the time as we defeat them.

Mr. Blundy: Anyway, I have not been convinced in the debate this afternoon of the need for such registration of lobbyists. I don't think we can register a group of labour representatives or a group of professional people on the one hand, or, on the other hand, a small group of people coming here about some athletic endeavour and so forth. Who are these people? They are the people we govern. They are the people who ought to be able to help us to decide what the government of Ontario should do.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Blundy: The members of this Legislature are not the only people in Ontario who know what is best for Ontario. We can profit by hearing from those people out there whom we serve.

Mr. Mackenzie: Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the resolution that is before us. My comments will be brief, but it is something that does concern me. I have to ask the question myself as to why we are dealing with a resolution only and not a bill. I presume it's probably some more of the government's kite-flying to try to find out just exactly what people think. It is certainly not very clear in the resolution which just asks the government to give immediate consideration to such legislation.

I support the resolution with some serious reservations, but I want to indicate why I support it and what the reservations are. I don't think we can hide our heads in the sand in this province. The practice exists; lobbying is going on. It's going on by a variety of groups, some of which are a little easier to take than others, and I suppose one's biases enter into that as well. If it does exist, then I think it should be out in the open.

Certainly if we are going to register lobbyists, we want to be sure to get not only the labour people, which I am sure would be a target for some of my colleagues across the floor of the House, but, as has been mentioned here, the Goodmans and some of the lobbyists that were much in evidence, such as the HUDAC people, when we were going through some of the first rent control bills. I expect that it might have been useful if we had had a registration of lobbyists federally when we were into the famous Sky Shops affair involving the senator, with the pressure in Ottawa at the time.

Like my colleague from Cornwall, I don't think this resolution goes far enough. If the government is going to consider it, there are a few other minimum steps that have to be taken, not only the registration as a lobbyist, but a clear indication of whom the lobbyist is acting for, what the limitations are in terms of what a lobbyist can do, can there be money passed out, how many meals and gratuities is he allowed to give in terms of the attempt to influence people on an issue and, above all, if we're going to bring in this kind of legislation, what kinds of standards or what kind of a code of conduct is expected of a lobbyist and what can he do or not do in terms of influencing the members of a House.

I say that from some personal experience with lobbying in the United States. I had the privilege of working for a little better than a year on Roy Reuther's staff with the UAW out of Windsor. That meant I was across to Detroit to Solidarity House a number of times. While I wasn't personally directly involved, I can remember a number of the lobbying efforts.

The offshore oil deals of a good many years ago in the States was one of them, where I was absolutely appalled at the kind of information, the kind of tactics and the kind of pressure that was exerted. We were obviously on one side of that particular issue. I forget the exact numbers, but there were something like four or five registered lobbyists in Washington for the union I worked for, the UAW, at the time.

What we were up against, I can recall at that particular time, was some 90-odd lobbyists registered by Imperial or Exxon dealing with that particular oil issue. As we attempted to line up some of the members in the US Senate and in the House of Representatives, we found that the professional lobbyists, by the very fact that they were registered as professional lobbyists, had an awful lot of influence and also had access to the members on the US side. We're naive if we think we are that far removed from this kind of situation.

One thing that they listed was a total voting record on any issue of every member. There's nothing wrong with that at all as I see it, but they also listed their preferences, whether it was in booze or in entertainment or in women. They listed their hobbies. For example, could you get to them because the guy was a gardener or a stamp collector or a coin collector? They listed the things that they liked and they didn't like, such as the kind of movies they would like to attend if they did get out. They listed the kinds of trips and the places they went on their vacations.

It was an eye-opener to me, a good many years ago, to see the kind of information, the kind of book that was made on every single one of the members across the line. There is no question whatsoever that the pressures were exerted in terms of a specific bill or a specific piece of legislation, how you could influence, how you could badger or cajole, or how you could actually pressure and threaten a member into voting your way on a particular issue. That made an impression on me, and it bothered me at the time.

What I wonder is do we take one small step along that road here by the registration of lobbyists? Do we give them, as individuals, a lot more power than they now have in talking to us as the president or as an executive member or as a committee member or an organization, whatever that organization is? That's a much looser and a much more informal way of lobbying that we have in Ontario and in Canada at the moment.

By registration, do we set up some kind of status for these people? I tell you right now, Mr. Speaker, that you're going to find these people developing their skills, importing some of the techniques they can get away with that you'll find across the line, in an effort to do their job. If you have registered lobbyists and if they're paid to do a job, their effort is going to be to produce. That's how they'll pick up the contracts they'll have in future, that's how they'll make a name for themselves. There's a danger that could lead to the kind of personal pressures, the kind of personal, bookmaking if you like, on each one of the members in an effort to be able to influence them on individual issues.

That bothers me; and that's why I say if we're going to go this route in the province we have to take it a step further than just the registration. There has certainly got to be some standards, some code of conduct, some things that are do's and don'ts, and they've got to be very clear; and we have to at all times know whom a lobbyist is working on behalf of.

Those are my reservations. I think those things have to be done if we're going to support this bill. I think because lobbying does exist and because we seem to be more and more moving into that kind of an American sphere, we'd better take the precautions now and make sure that if a bill like this comes in it does have some of the safeguards.

My belief and my trust, and my real love of our own party system in this country as against the American system, is simply that I thought you couldn't get away with that kind of lobbying here, that you were going to have to lobby an entire party. I know that's done, and I know you have your various interest groups you listen to more quickly than others; but that at least was a protection against the kind of lobbying of individual members that could be done that we found across the border.

The point I'm making is that once we start registering them—and it now exists so maybe the time has come to do it—they are going to start developing their skills and trying to find ways and means to be able to deliver when they decide they're going to sign on with somebody to try and get a particular point of view put across in this House. If that is going to be the case—we have them now, they will certainly develop their skills a step further—let's make sure that in the legislation, if such legislation comes into this House, we very clearly set the kind of standard we'll accept, the kind of conduct that's acceptable and what can or what can't be done in the job of a lobbyist.

Voicing those reservations, Mr. Speaker, I will support this initial resolution.

Mr. Rotenberg: I wasn't planning to use the whole seven minutes left, if another speaker wanted two or three minutes I'd like the last two or three minutes.

Mr. McCaffrey: Let me first congratulate my colleague, the member for Wilson Heights. I think this is an important resolution. By the way, I'm not at all sure I'm going to support it, and I'll make some of my reservations clear.

I think raising an issue that deals with this sometimes sinister word "lobbyist" is important in itself. I share with the member for Sarnia his concerns about what registration might mean, if there would be additional costs, because my basic concern is that this exercise of lobbying legislators—or educating, I prefer to think of it that way—of educating legislators, is an important exercise, and I for one would like more people to do it and to do it openly and to do it enthusiastically. I am just a little bit afraid that any kind of registration or disclosure of information might preclude the very thing we all, I believe, want to accomplish.

[5:45]

I was surprised and frankly never thought I'd live to see the day that I would be supportive of a couple of points the member for Hamilton East made.

Mr. Warner: You've come a long way.

Mr. Samis: He may reconsider his position now.

Mr. Warner: He is going to rewrite his speech now.

Mr. McCaffrey: He suggested that lobbying, or educating if you want to call it that, is going on—that it is happening and it is happening regularly—and, in that case, why don't we open it up and recognize it. I support that sentiment. I think that's an important part of the exercise. At the same time, he suggested there should be guidelines made clear and I think very public for all these people who would opt to be classified as educators or lobbyists. I think that is an important part of the thrust of this resolution.

I can't help but go back to some of my own experiences as an MPP in the last year or so.

The member for Hamilton East did mention HUDAC in the context of the committee looking at rent review in Ontario. That committee is still meeting. I think the member was talking about the earlier phase of that committee. I think he's quite right that HUDAC was one group that did come before us to represent the concerns of the landlord part of that exercise.

I think it's only fair and important to point out that during the whole life of that committee, and it's still operating, we have been blessed with some excellent lobbying, educating or monitoring—all of those things—by extremely active and articulate tenant associations. The Metro Tenants' Federation is one. There were people from the Tenant Hotline there assisting many of the committee members throughout the months of our exercise. I don't think their presence there should be in any way seen as sinister and I, for one, don't see it as sinister. I think they should be complimented publicly by other tenants in Ontario. All of the members who have been aware of this new legislation should be complimented for the work they've done. But I think it would be a little unfair—

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member has about a half a minute.

Mr. McCaffrey: Thanks very much.

It would be unfair to single out HUDAC, simply because they represent the other part of that argument, as somehow being sinister.

I think one of the key observations was made earlier by the member for Sarnia when he said that we as legislators have a great deal to learn. We know society is becoming more complicated. Legislation is obviously reflecting that—becoming more complicated too—and our real need for expert advice, be it from tenants' or from the landlords' side, to use that committee again, is pressing.

Thank you very much.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Speaker, I have several comments on the speeches this afternoon.

I'd like to point out to the members of the Liberal Party, who do not seem inclined to support this resolution, that at no time did I indicate we would try to inhibit, in any way, individuals or groups of individuals from coming before us and presenting information. As a matter of fact, I think I tried to make it clear that these types of groups, the voluntary groups, would not have to register. My feeling about legislation that may come from this resolution would be that they would be exempt from registration. And as my colleague from Armourdale said, I did not imply in any way anything sinister about lobbyists or that type of lobbying.

I'm not suggesting setting up bureaucracies and all types of new civil servants for simple registration. Simple registration of lobbyists could probably be handled by one clerk in the Ministry of, say, Consumer and Commercial Relations. I'm not talking about setting up bureaucracies and so on.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Can we have some order, please, out of deference to the person who legitimately has the floor?

Mr. Rotenberg: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My own colleagues were interrupting me so I didn't want to say too much.

I want to thank the members of the New Democratic Party for indicating support for the resolution.

Mr. Nixon: The same old gang.

Mr. Rotenberg: I've been asked by the member for Hamilton East why it is a resolution and not a bill. Frankly, I feel that in this as in many things in private members' hours, a resolution is more appropriate to get a general sense of the feeling of the principle, to get some of the details, to find out what details we agree and disagree on, before being bound by the explicit details of a particular bill. But I would say to the member for Cornwall, and I thought I indicated it in my presentation, that I certainly agree registration of a lobbyist has to include who pays him, whom he is representing, in any particular instance or in a general way.

Mr. Bolan: That would be very embarrassing for your party.

An hon. member: You'll find some way to exempt all the Tories.

Mr. Rotenberg: Without this kind of information as to whom he's representing, the whole point of registration just doesn't make any sense.

Mr. Bolan: That would amount to disclosure. You wouldn't want that, would you?

Mr. Warner: Eddie Goodman will be on his way out. He's packing his bags now.

Mr. Rotenberg: The member for Hamilton East raised the problem of a code of conduct for lobbyists. The code of conduct is for the members of this Legislature, not for the lobbyists. I have no qualms whatsoever about the conduct or the honesty of any member of this Legislature. If a lobbyist is trying to do something improper, trying to bribe, trying to give whatever benefits to a member of this Legislature, that, in my opinion, is contrary to the criminal code of this province. If any person does come to any member of this Legislature with improper overtures, I would hope that member would report it either to the Speaker or to the Ontario Provincial Police. I don't think that kind of conduct is necessary.

Mr. Mackenzie: There are things other than money, and you'd better realize it.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Speaker, in asking for support for this resolution from my colleagues on all sides of the House, I am simply saying that we do not want to inhibit anybody from coming before us; we just want to know who they are, those who are paid to come before us. We want to know who they are, who pays them and what they are doing. That is the simple point of the resolution.

Mr. Wildman: In other words, the rich lobbyists don't register.

Mr. Bolan: What about those who don't pay?

KINDERGARTEN PROGRAMS

Sufficient members having objected by rising, a vote was not taken on resolution.

REGISTRATION OF LOBBYISTS

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Rotenberg has moved resolution 4.

Those in favour will please say "aye."

Those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the ayes have it.

Resolution concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, prior to rising for the supper hour, may I indicate, pursuant to standing order 13, the order of business for tonight, tomorrow and next week?

This evening, we will debate the motion standing in the name of the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) with respect to interim supply, following which we will take into consideration the supplementary estimates which were tabled earlier this week by the Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet (Mr. McCague), in this order: Ministry of Community and Social Services, Ministry of Treasury and Economics, Ministry of Northern Affairs, Ministry of Correctional Services, Ministry of Natural Resources and then the Ministry of Health.

Tomorrow morning, we will continue with, and hopefully, finish, the supplementary estimates.

Next week, on Monday, we will have the reply to the throne speech; Tuesday afternoon and evening, reply to the throne speech; Wednesday, April 4, the general government committee, resources development committee and administration of justice committee may sit in the morning; Thursday, both afternoon and evening, reply to the throne speech; and next Friday morning, reply to the throne speech.

ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I beg to inform the House that in the name of Her Majesty the Queen, the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor has been pleased to assent to certain bills in her chambers.

Clerk Assistant: The following are the titles of the bills to which Her Honour has assented:

Bill 2, An Act respecting the County of Middlesex;

Bill 7, An Act to amend the Milk Act;

Bill 20, An Act to amend the Residential Premises Rent Review Act, 1975 (second session);

Bill 74, An Act to establish a Code of Procedure for Provincial Offences;

Bill 75, An Act to amend the Provincial Courts Act.

The House recessed at 5:58 p.m.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPERS

INDUSTRIAL INCENTIVES

93. Mr. Laughren: Will the Ministry of Industry and Tourism provide a list of the applications received for incentive grants, excluding those applications to ODC, since the announcement of the Ford grant for the city of Windsor. Will the ministry detail those applications by company and by industry grouping. Will the ministry further indicate the approximate dollar value requested. (Tabled March 15, 1979).

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The province of Ontario's assistance to the Ford Motor Company of Canada Limited's $577 million Essex engine plant was announced in July 1978. Since that time, the Ontario Development Corporations have continued to evaluate and process applications under their Ontario Business Incentive Program (OBIP). As there are no other incentive programs in place at the present time, there have not been formal applications made to the Ministry of Industry and Tourism. In light of the announcements made in the Legislature concerning the formation of the Ontario Employment Development Fund and board, the Ministry of Industry and Tourism has received approximately 25 enquiries ranging from letters outlining companies' future plans to general telephone enquiries.

The approximate dollar value of the above inquiries is in the order of $20 million.

EMPLOYER-SPONSORED TRAINING

94. Mr. Cooke: 1. Will the Ministry of Colleges and Universities indicate: (i) The number of firms which have been informed of the employer-sponsored training scheme announced in June, 1978; (ii) the number which have expressed positive interest in participating in the scheme; (iii) the number which have reached an agreement to train workers under the scheme; and (iv) the number which are now training workers under the scheme? 2. Will the minister indicate, giving a breakdown by occupational group, the number of workers who are now being trained under the employer-sponsored training scheme, by occupational group? 3. Will the minister indicate the number, and composition, of Community Industrial Training Committees which have been established? In which communities are these agencies now established? In which other communities has the ministry discussed the establishment of such agencies? 4. How much of the $8 million federal funding for employer-sponsored training referred to in the minister's June 6 statement has been disbursed so far in the 1978-79 fiscal year? What provincial funds have been disbursed, in addition to the contracted federal funding, during this fiscal year? (Tabled March 15, 1979)

Hon. Miss Stephenson: 1. (i) It is impossible to estimate the number of firms which have been informed of EST in the course of the promotion campaign launched after the June announcement. It can be said with great certainty, however, that information on the creation of EST has reached a large number of the manufacturing firms in this province. In addition to the literature widely distributed by government officials, EST was the subject of extensive coverage in the media. For example, the new program received very positive comments from the press in most Ontario industrial centres. Trade publications and television have also been used to explain the program. (ii) In excess of 500 firms have expressed an interest based on contracts through local meetings, workshops and inquiries. (iii) Approximately 225 firms have reached agreements to train workers. (iv) Approximately 220 firms actually have programs in place.

2. Precision metal cutting (includes machinists, tool and die makers and mold makers)—approximately 450 workers; industrial maintenance mechanic—approximately 80 workers.

3. (a) Twenty-three committees are now in operation. While the key members of these committees are representatives from industry and labour, the committees also include representatives from school boards, colleges, and local, provincial and federal governments.

(b) These committees are established in centres in all regions of the province: Communities include Atikokan, Belleville, Brampton/Mississauga, Brantford, Brockville, Cornwall, Etobicoke, Hamilton, Hearst, Kitchener, London, Niagara area, Orillia, Oshawa, Peterborough, Sarnia, Sault Ste. Marie, Smiths Falls, Thunder Bay, Wallaceburg, Windsor, Woodstock.

The Canadian Tooling Manufacturers' Association (CTMA) also has an active committee.

(c) Six additional communities and four associations have received presentations from employer-sponsored training staff but have not as yet developed functioning committees: Communities include Chatham, Cobourg, Ottawa, St. Thomas, Simcoe, Sudbury.

Associations include Canadian Diamond Drilling Association, Canadian Machine Builders' Association, Magna International Limited, United Cooperatives of Ontario.

4. (a) It must be emphasized that when EST was announced the federal government expressed its support for this pilot program by earmarking $5 million from CMITP (Canada Manpower Industrial Training Plan) and $3 million from CMTP (Canada Manpower Training Plan). The clear understanding between the two governments was that the money was to be diverted from these earmarked funds to the EST pilot projects when they met the criteria and when required in 1978-79. It was further understood that the first year of EST was to be devoted to a series of pilot projects in Ontario designed to test various innovative concepts in industrial training. To date just under $1 million has been allocated to these pilot projects.

(b) In order to satisfy training needs which could not be met because of the regulatory restrictions on the use of the federal funds, Ontario has allocated a total of $585,000 to EST.

APPENDIX B

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 28, 1979

STANDING RESOURCES
DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE

The committee met at 10:07 a.m.

ANNUAL REPORT, 1977,
WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION BOARD

Mr. Chairman: I will call the meeting to order. Mr. Bounsall has just stepped outside; there is a quorum.

First of all, Mr. Starr would like to make a reply to some of the questions raised by Mr. Davidson last night.

Hon. Mr. Starr: Before I do that, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen I want to advise you that on the request of Mr. Horne yesterday we have filed sufficient copies of the 29 research projects that we spoke about. They are being distributed now.

Mr. Van Horne: The name, for the record, is Van Horne, a small point.

Hon. Mr. Starr: Mr. Davidson spoke yesterday off the cuff and I did not make notes of all he said but our secretary did, so in addition to the answers I gave yesterday, this morning I would like to deal with some of the matters that he brought up in his presentation yesterday so the record will be complete.

First of all he mentioned the fact that the vocational rehabilitation activity in the Workmen's Compensation Board should have been started 10 or 15 years ago.

I think it would be only fair to the committee if Mr. Wisocky, who is executive director of vocational rehabilitation, could give you a brief outline as to—

Mr. McClellan: I don't want to cut off your answers, but I think it would be more helpful in terms of a detailed presentation about rehab service and Mr. Wisocky's own operation which is of major interest to us, if we dealt with that in detail when we get to the section.

Hon. Mr. Starr: All I am doing is carrying out the wish that was expressed yesterday, answering some of the questions that were brought up.

Mr. McClellan: Rather than have Mr. Wisocky make a presentation about his service, maybe you could just deal with some of the criticism that Mr. Davidson raised in terms of the limited number of people that are being served.

Hon. Mr. Starr: All right. If that is agreeable I would ask Mr. Wisocky to deal with that aspect.

Mr. Wisocky: Thank you. I think the figure mentioned yesterday was the 600 jobs that employment specialists and rehabilitation counsellors found in the year, either 1977 or 1978. For the record we should say that 1,425 jobs were found by the employment specialists during the year 1978; of the 1,425, 418 were utilized by a counselling staff in the placement of injured employees. In other words, we don't simply want to place an injured employee in any job; it has to be a job that is within his capabilities, his skills and interests, and that is our prime objective.

I think that with the passage of time we will become a bit more expert in this field where our utilization rate will increase. A prime example of this, or a good indication, is the first two months in 1979 when we have already found 308 job opportunities and have utilized 153. So I think it is a good trend and that we are going in the right direction.

This is one of our prime thrusts for 1979 in the sense that we want to get as many job opportunities as possible for utilization by the counselling staff in the placement of some of the difficult cases that have been mentioned in these committee meetings.

Hon. Mr. Starr: In your remarks yesterday, Mr. Davidson, you mentioned back problems of some 100,000 people and you referred to the back education program which has now encompassed some 600. If it is agreeable Dr. McCracken will explain to you when this program started, how it has proceeded and why it is only dealing with 600 so far.

Dr. McCracken: Mr. Chairman, I am not certain where the figure of 100,000 came from as I am not privy to that figure. We do have a computer program which I implemented four years ago so that we could identify the total number of back injuries being reported to the board year by year with the appropriate breakdown. It is remaining quite constant despite the fact the labour force is slowly increasing, so I think the incidence of back injuries is slowly declining.

The numbers, however, are 33,000 in round figures per year of lost time back injuries. Of this group no more than 3,000 are identified as being the type of back injuries which tend to become complicated, long-term, difficult back injuries to deal with from a medical standpoint. Of that group, in turn, it is now currently estimated that in all probability, no more than one half that number, or about 1,500, might be suitable for the back education program.

Currently I don't have the last figures as to the total number of people who have gone through our back education program, but at year end it was nearing 600 and at the time the information was given to the chairman of the board for his report to this committee it had exceeded 600. This represents a fairly sizable percentage of those cases which will be identified to go into the program.

Having said that, it is my plan to expand the capabilities of the back education program at the hospital and rehabilitation centre and this will, of course, have to be done by additional staff, both medical and paramedical, and we hope and expect this will be accomplished in the coming year so we can increase the number of cases.

Over and above this we are looking at the feasibility of taking the appropriate portions of our back education program outside of the hospital and into industry to see if, indeed, we can present the appropriate prophylactic parts of the program to the workers, hopefully to the majority of workers who have not sustained back injuries, so this might well be a preventive tool which will pay real dividends as far as future back injuries are concerned.

The back education program itself was started on an experimental basis slightly over one year ago. We developed the experience with it last year at the hospital. With the exception of, possibly, Rancho Los Amigos Hospital in Los Angeles, it has the largest number of patients who have gone through the program of any unit I am aware of. The back education program is an extremely new concept. Rancho Los Amigos was one of the pioneers in developing this and I visited with them to get information several years ago.

One of the senior orthopaedic surgeons in Metro Toronto has also developed a back education program, but I do not have figures as to the total number of patients put through his program and on speaking to him some time ago, he didn't have those figures available either. However, I would be of the opinion that ours still represents the largest number of cases that have gone through a back education program in Canada.

Mr. M. Davidson: You mentioned, Dr. McCracken, that there are some 33,000 back injuries per year registered with the board, is that correct?

Dr. McCracken: Thirty-three thousand lost time back injuries.

Mr. M. Davidson: Lost-time accidents relating to back injuries.

Dr. McCracken: That is right.

Mr. M. Davidson: And there are approximately 3,000 per year, if I understand you correctly, which are extended, long-range injury type?

[10:15]

Dr. McCracken: Of that group, year in and year out there are approximately 3,000 which will be complicated problem back injuries, that is right.

Mr. M. Davidson: Out of that group there are approximately 1,500 which would fit into the back educational program?

Dr. McCracken: This is our estimate at the present time, yes.

Mr. M. Davidson: When I was making my remarks yesterday—and I don't have Instant Hansard here in front of me—I was talking about overall back problems. When I mentioned approximately 100,000 I was talking about the number of injured workers in Ontario today, not for one year, but there are approximately 100,000 injured workers in Ontario who suffer from major back problems.

Dr. McCracken: I don't have that data. I don't know where—

Mr. M. Davidson: Yesterday you mentioned yourself you went down to Los Angeles, I think you said a couple of years ago, to take a look at that type of program which they have there. Could you tell us how long that program has been in effect down there?

Dr. McCracken: Rancho Los Amigos started their pilot project, as I recollect, several years before I visited with them. It usually takes about 24 to 36 months to really get such a program operational.

Mr. McClellan: When you say you don't have the data, Dr. McCracken, how many injured workers are there as of this month who are in receipt of permanent partial disability pensions from the board for back injuries?

Dr. McCracken: I don't have that data. I don't know whether Mr. Kerr would have that information.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: No, I don't have that with me.

Dr. McCracken: I have no occasion to break out our statistics in that fashion, because we are not utilizing our statistics in that way.

Mr. McClellan: You have a back program for injured workers and you don't know how many injured workers there are in the province who are receiving pensions for back problems, is that what you are saying?

Dr. McCracken: That is correct, because the back education program is not primarily directed to those persons who are receiving pension.

Mr. McClellan: Who is it directed to?

Dr. McCracken: It is directed to persons who at the present time are identified as not going to recover within the initial three or four months. These are the cases we are attempting to address because these are the cases where we feel something can be done to help them. They are taking top priority at the present time.

Mr. Bounsall: How many of those do you have at any given time, any given day or any given week?

Dr. McCracken: As a matter of fact we don't know, but I have requested our statistics people to see if they can identify the number of back cases we have in active files less than 13 weeks and then in multiples of 13 weeks up to two years. They are working on developing that program now for me.

Mr. McClellan: So you don't even know what the current demand would be in terms of people who are in receipt of service now, in terms of the criteria you just laid down? You don't even know how many people are potentially eligible for the program?

Dr. McCracken: In actual hard figures, no. It is very difficult to come by those figures, and this is why I was so interested in the 100,000 that was mentioned, because it is difficult to even take the 33,000 cases that are reported each year and add them, because it is not simple arithmetic. There is a certain number of those cases which have had previous back injuries and you are going to be double counting them, for instance.

Mr. M. Davidson: I would suggest maybe our research is a little better than the board's.

Mr. McClellan: It illustrates a major dilemma at the compensation board, that you don't have an adequate information retrieval system. You still don't have an adequate information retrieval system in 1978. We keep raising this year after year and you keep coming back in front of us with shrugs or guesswork, so that leaves us in the position of having to guess.

How can we assess your programs if you don't even provide us with basic statistical material? How can you assess your programs yourselves if you don't know what the demand is for particular kinds of services from people who are currently coming to you for help?

Dr. McCracken: If I might, the problem has to be identified, of course, before the statistical program can be put in place. This is a pretty basic premise.

Mr. McClellan: It is also a fairly basic administrative procedure.

Dr. McCracken: Not at all, not at all.

Mr. McClellan: Maybe not in the board it isn't, but in most organizations it is.

Dr. McCracken: Most organizations don't have this type of statistic at all.

Mr. M. Davidson: Who decides whether a patient qualifies for the back education program?

Dr. McCracken: We developed criteria in developing the back education program as to the types of patients that would be suitable for admission, just the same as we developed other clinical criteria for patients to be admitted to any of the other special clinics.

This is decided by the medical staff at the hospital in conjunction and in consultation with the director of the hospital, myself, and the consultants sitting on the medical advisory committee of the hospital. It's the same way as it's done at any other general hospital.

Mr. Vice-Chairman: Is there anything else?

Hon. Mr. Starr: In my remarks yesterday, Mr. Chairman, I mentioned in the appeal section that, as far as the appeal adjudicators were concerned, the waiting time for a hearing with the adjudicators had been cut back to four weeks. I guess it was misleading in that I did not mention in my statement what the waiting period was for hearings before the appeal board itself. There is some difference there.

In order to clarify the whole situation I thought that Doug Hamilton, who is our commissioner of appeals and a corporate board member who is active in that field in the organization could now try to clarify the whole situation for you.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, as I understand the wish of the committee, as expressed by Ross McClellan this morning, you would like to deal with the appeals in detail when we come to the matter of appeals. At that time, I would like the opportunity to give some background material about the appeals system, how it has progressed, where we're at now and so on. But, at this point in time, all I will endeavour to do is to answer Mr. Davidson's question, which he posed last night.

The chairman, in his speech, said that the waiting period was four weeks at the appeals adjudicator level, but at the present time it's closer to three weeks at the appeals adjudicator level and seven weeks at the board level. When I go into the matter of appeals and make my explanation as to how we got there, I think you will see that we've done exceedingly well this past year and we're now seeing daylight in the whole appeals procedure and structure, which I'll talk about later. Specifically, we're in good shape, I think, except in one area, and that is this whole postponement, which I want to deal with when we deal with the appeals.

But, in reply to your question, the waiting period at the appeals adjudicator level is three weeks and at the appeal board level it is four weeks at present; six months from now, they'll both be down to three weeks—

Mr. McClellan: The appeal board is seven weeks.

Mr. Hamilton: Pardon?

Mr. McClellan: It's seven weeks.

Mr. Hamilton: It's seven weeks; and in six months or so we'll have them both down to three weeks at both levels. I think that's as low as we're going to be able to go with the large volume and the staff.

Mr. McClellan: We'll want to pursue that in detail when we get to the section. You might keep in mind that, if my memory serves me, you've slipped back a week or two from the last time we had an update from Mr. Farquharson at the Ombudsman committee on the number of weeks it took to schedule an appeal; so we'll want to go into that.

Mr. Hamilton: I'll explain that later, Mr. McClellan, but we had a large backlog at the appeals adjudicator level when we switched from one system to the other system. We dug into that backlog, which now is being reflected in a larger volume at the board level; and we're digging ourselves out of that one also. I'll explain that later on. Does that satisfy you, Monty?

Mr. M. Davidson: For the time being.

Hon. Mr. Starr: In addition to yesterday's answers and today's answers, we will still peruse the Hansard reports, once we get them, to see if there is any other aspect that we should make a comment on. That completes my comments.

Mr. McClellan: There is just one other supplementary. I wonder if I could have an update from Dr. McCracken on when we'll be able to receive an anonymized set of medical reports from the hospital and rehabilitation centre on the use of sodium Amytal.

Dr. McCracken: The request, as I recollect from last night, was that you wondered if I would be able to produce a copy of a hospital file on one specific case, the case that received sodium Amytal treatment in 1978.

I have given this matter some thought overnight. In view of the fact that it is only one case and, therefore, in my opinion very readily identifiable, even if I were to strike the name of the patient from the record, I am of the opinion that I well might be in violation of the Health Disciplines Act about divulging medical diagnosis, medical treatment and medical information to third parties. I will have to consult with the registrar of the Ontario College of Physicians and Surgeons before I can take any action.

Mr. M. Davidson: If I am able to get a consent release form signed by the person involved, will you then release it?

Dr. McCracken: If I have a signed waiver from the patient then I will be in a position where I can supply a copy of the hospital record.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Brounsall.

Mr. Brounsall: I've been trying to drop the last "I" all my life, being a believer in the George Bernard Shaw alphabet, but I never thought of adding an "r."

Mr. McClellan: If you drop one you've got to add one.

Mr. Brounsall: If I drop one I've got to add one.

Mr. McClellan: You've got to add two "r"'s.

Mr. Brounsall: I have two or three areas under the main administration vote that I'd like to bring up, but before I get into it, just let me make an aside comment. What a pleasure it is finally, through the work of the Ombudsman committee, to have before us readily available, four copies in our caucus only, copies of your book, Rehab Branch Manual, and Claims Adjudication Branch Manual, and your Claims Adjudication Branch Manual. It is a pleasure to have those readily, legally available to us. Having been critic for four years, and critic for another year after a tremendous holiday from this, one does have one's means of getting hold of these things when they weren't available to us. One had to go through, from time to time, the game of casual conversation with board workers over the phone saying, "Oh, what does that policy actually read?" in order to get over the phone bits and pieces of what we now can read at our leisure. So it is a pleasure to have it without having to go through the kinds of charades we had to go through before, to try and help ourselves, as members, to understand the workings of the Workmen's Compensation Board.

On that point, I gather from what was said last night, I may be corrected on that, that any MPP or any, I think the phrase in your statement was any appropriate inquirer, would be eligible to receive this documentation and the updates on that documentation. Up to this point, we only have four copies of it. Do I understand that to be maybe not the appropriate inquirer?

Hon. Mr. Starr: We have made arrangements, and I think I said this yesterday, with the provincial bookstore which would have all of these copies available to anyone and copies will be distributed throughout all the universities in Ontario and all the libraries.

Mr. Bounsall: All right. That would be all the full depository universities and libraries and the full depository MPPs who would not have to buy it through the bookstore, I would assume.

Hon. Mr. Starr: No sir.

Mr. Bounsall: May I suggest there be another corporate board policy decision that perhaps the MPPs be looked at as a full depository library in terms of receiving this material rather than having to pay for it. I'm sorry the minister is not here because he would know, as perhaps you don't, that MPPs now have a maximum of $100 per year of documentation they can get free of charge and they have to pay themselves for any documentation above and beyond $100 a year that comes in. If you don't classify us as a full depository library and we have to go through the bookstore for this, we are paying out of our own pockets in order to get these policy manuals.

[10:30]

I suggest the corporate board, in its next deliberations, makes a decision that those MPPs who request them, receive them free of charge. Maybe all of us don't want them. Maybe you could send a note around—I know it's costly—for those who fill out the form saying they would like to have these manuals and any updates of the manuals, that they be supplied free of charge without going through the government bookstore.

Hon. Mr. Starr: I shall bring your request before the board.

Mr. Laughren: There probably wouldn't be that many requested.

Mr. Bounsall: Yes, but for those that would it would be—

Hon. Mr. Starr: So far as I know there's been one request from one member and that was Mr. Mackenzie, I think, from your party. I know of no other. Some of the members have copies of it through the special committee. Ross McClellan, I am sure, has one on the Ombudsman.

Mr. Bounsall: The only way our caucus has access to it easily is one of those committee members supplied our research library with his set of copies. That's how we got it. I have them here with me this morning and had them overnight last night so if any other member wanted our research copy, it wasn't there.

Hon. Mr. Starr: We shall bring it before the board.

Mr. Bounsall: This leads into one of the major areas I wanted to discuss, and that is the whole area of corporate board decision-making, and what it is they deal with. It's very difficult, or has been, to determine and establish, if you're working on behalf of an injured worker who brings his whole case to you, the policies of the board, particularly with respect to decisions in the past on individual areas.

If we can get into it generally, then we will certainly derive specific questions from the general description. Just what is the pattern of decision-making in the Workmen's Compensation Board? Just what decisions are made by the corporate board and just what is made by administrative officers, top administrative officers, without going to the corporate board? Just where do you draw the line between what would be a top administrative decision with no necessity of going to the corporate board and just what goes to the corporate board?

Hon. Mr. Starr: I think in order to give a detailed answer complete in every form, it might be advisable, if it's agreeable to you, to give you a written statement on this matter, because you're asking about not only the corporate board but also about the executive director for the management board decisions, and which goes where and what comes forward to the board itself. I think it might be useful if we gave it to you in writing so there would be no slip-up of anything.

Mr. Bounsall: Would you have to write that up or is that written down already?

Hon. Mr. Starr: It's written down already so that's readily available.

Mr. Bounsall: That would be helpful; I would have thought you would have had that written down so someone wouldn't have to make an ad hoc decision daily as to what should go before the corporate board and what can be handled administratively. It will help us in determining to whom we should direct our question with respect to policy and to whom we should direct our request for decisions to be made.

Let me ask a couple of specific questions then: Who made the decision, if in fact it was a decision, to prosecute certain troublesome claims for trespass? There was one before the courts which was then dropped, and so on. Where was that decision made?

Hon. Mr. Starr: A decision of that nature, particularly that decision, was made by our section of the resources division which also has the responsibility of making certain of security.

Mr. Bounsall: So the decision to prosecute for trespass was made solely by your security area. Did the corporate board show any interest in the fact, or even hear of it then, that there were going to be some prosecutions for trespass at the board?

Hon. Mr. Starr: No, the corporate board does not make that decision. In certain instances it may be brought to my attention, for example, and in one particular instance it was. I felt at that time the prosecution should not proceed, however we could not stop it from going before the court. But our representative was there to ask for the withdrawal, and that was done.

Mr. Bounsall: It was no doubt a positive decision in every respect to go in and ask for the withdrawal. I wonder though if, as you have illustrated it, that doesn't illustrate one of the points I was getting at. You took up some time of the public system in scheduling a court hearing and what have you—

Hon. Mr. Starr: We didn't schedule that. We tried to get it withdrawn before, but we were advised that it could not be done.

Mr. Bounsall: All right. But because of a decision made at some administrative level and by one administrative section, without having to have a major step of that kind—I haven't heard of many prosecutions for trespass over the years made by the board. That was made by a particular administrative grouping in the board which then took up some time of senior board people and some time of court scheduling in order for that decision to be reversed. I guess the question is when that division decided to take the most unusual step of going into prosecutions for trespass, why did it not check with the senior administrative officers or the corporate board as to whether or not it should go ahead with that?

Hon. Mr. Starr: I think I know the case you are talking about and it was checked with me within two days.

Mr. Bounsall: But it had already been started.

Hon. Mr. Starr: Even then it was too late because we checked out with the arresting officer and we were advised that we couldn't stop it until it appeared before the court.

Mr. Bounsall: Was there then a policy statement or a guideline issued from your office or subsequently from the corporate board about procedures like that in the future? In other words, that same section can go ahead and make arrests and start prosecutions for trespass, and you would again hear about it two days later, and you would then make the appropriate decision to stop it? That could be a normal happenstance at the board?

Hon. Mr. Starr: Mr. Bounsall, I don't think that in cases of this type you can have a clear-cut policy. Each case would have to be judged on its own situation and merits.

Mr. Bounsall: Have you said though, "Before you actually enter that, before you make that arrest and before the procedure to prosecute"—

Hon. Mr. Starr: We didn't make the arrest.

Mr. Bounsall: All right, "Before the decision to prosecute was made in each of those individual cases, perhaps you should check with the senior administrative officer"? Has that gone out? Because there could be similar things occurring right down the line now.

Hon. Mr. Starr: No, nothing further has been done in respect of this matter at all. I think we can only deal with each matter as it comes up and be guided by the circumstances. I still maintain that we can't just have a clear-cut policy.

Mr. Bounsall: I am a little disappointed that the chairman of the corporate board has not said, "Hey, before anybody in the board enters a prosecution in the courts, it might be good to check with one of us." Am I being unreasonable?

You are an organization that tries to maintain a positive public image and you spend some money on public relations; but on the other hand there is one section of the board going out entering prosecutions in the courts. This perhaps could have some positive public relations spinoffs but it would stretch your mind a bit to arrive at that being a positive public relations gambit, wouldn't it? I would think that is something you might want to consider. Some portion of the board runs off and enters prosecutions—

Hon. Mr. Starr: In this case it was brought to my attention and I did give it consideration. It was too late but we did withdraw the charge.

Mr. Bounsall: So the board is saying now though that it sees no need to issue a directive to any section of the board saying, "Before you prosecute, maybe you should check with us"?

Hon. Mr. Starr: That hasn't arisen, no. That aspect hasn't arisen.

Mr. Bounsall: But in the lack of taking any positive action to see that occurs, that is really what the position of the board currently is?

Hon. Mr. Starr: I think it has to be judged by those people responsible for this area, where a serious threat is made against the life of any one of our employees, or the disruption and the usage of foul language et cetera has to be dealt with at the time and with each particular case. I have no other answer for you, Mr. Bounsall.

Mr. Bounsall: As my colleague, Monty Davidson, stated before, I am not wanting to see any person at the board harassed. My point was simply the board is currently stating, by the lack of taking any action, that it is okay for any section of the board to enter a prosecution without checking with anybody in the administrative or board section to see that that prosecution would be appropriate.

Hon. Mr. Starr: Only the security people.

Mr. Bounsall: Narrowing it down, the board is saying it is okay for the security section to enter a prosecution without checking that decision as a whether or not to prosecute with anyone else on the board? That is the decision?

Hon. Mr. Starr: Yes, if in their discretion they feel it is not necessary and that action of that nature should be taken, it is at their discretion.

Mr. Bounsall: Okay. It is an interesting way to operate. I would think one would want to check—have a little conversation with those in the board whose job it is to publicize the good efforts of the board as to whether or not that is a good public relations situation to be allowed to continue to exist. I don't want to dwell any more on it.

I can assure you this is in no way a personal comment on the chairman of the board, but when the chairman was reappointed I felt I had to make some sort of public comment, and—

Mr. McClellan: The temporary partial appointment.

Mr. Bounsall: —in that I laid down what could be construed I suppose as the current deficiency of the present chairman in my way of outlining the type of person that should be filling the position in terms of what they should be doing. One of my points was that the chairman of the board should be willing to make public, on a continuing basis, the legislative changes that the chairman would wish to see made, to make further operations of the board either more efficient, effective, or fairer to the injured workers.

My question, therefore, as it relates to the chairman and to the corporate board, is as far as changes to the Workmen's Compensation Board Act are concerned, how active are you in proposing those changes and who proposes those changes? It is a change that would be initially proposed to the Minister of Labour and Manpower. I understand that; but who does it and how active are you either at the corporate board level or at the chairman's level in proposing those changes?

Let me put it in a slightly different context. The former chairman of the Workmen's Compensation Board would come before us briefly and we would always get to some point in each and every discussion where he would say, "Gentlemen, that is not my responsibility; it is the way the legislation reads. If you want to change it, if you want me to be able to operate differently, you have got to change the legislation in that area."

I would think the chairman of the corporate board should be exceedingly active then in proposing—he was implying that he actually supported the views that were being presented in terms of the problems that were resulting. He was implying that when he said, "It is not my fault." You must run into this at the corporate board level and at the chairman's level. Just what has either of those two entities been doing in terms of proposing legislative changes?

Hon. Mr. Starr: In 1974 amendments the Workmen's Compensation Board itself made quite a number of recommendations to the minister of the changes that should take place in the Workmen's Compensation Act.

Also, based on the task force report of 1973, these were all incorporated into the amendments—not all of them, some were not—based on the judgement of the government at the time.

In 1975 again we played a part in proposing some changes that were accepted and amendments were also made.

[10:45]

By 1978 we had organized a joint consultative committee, as provided for under the act, and composed of management, labour and other interested citizens. I think there are 12 on that board. They sat down and made certain recommendations that came through the board. We approved those recommendations and passed them on. At least, we passed them on to the minister and the government for their consideration at that time. Consequently, the result was that you were dealing with these amendments in July 1978.

Mr. Bounsall: That's very interesting. Are you saying, then, that the actual changes and increases to the pension levels—those amounts which found their way into legislation—in fact emanated from the Workmen's Compensation Board?

Hon. Mr. Starr: The joint consultative committee.

Mr. Bounsall: The joint consultative committee. Was the actual level of change, as indicated by the joint consultative committee, approved by the corporate board before it went to the minister?

Hon. Mr. Starr: We noted them and passed them on to the minister.

Mr. Bounsall: There was no approval or disapproval? You just noted them?

Hon. Mr. Starr: That's right.

Mr. Bounsall: It was left to the joint consultative committee to make that decision. You just passed that decision on. No input was made by you, as the chairman, or by the corporate board, as to that level of benefit change?

Hon. Mr. Starr: That's right.

Mr. Bounsall: That shows what happened in 1978. There was no input by the corporate board or the chairman on that suggested benefit change; just a pass-through of the joint consultative committee's decision.

Hon. Mr. Starr: Yes.

Mr. Bounsall: What happened in 1975?

Hon. Mr. Starr: There were recommendations. I outlined—

Mr. Bounsall: Okay. But who made that one?

Hon. Mr. Starr: The corporate board.

Mr. Bounsall: The corporate board made that one. In choosing between the corporate board and its recommendations, and the joint consultative committee and its recommendations, I would suggest that the corporate board be the one that makes those recommendations in the future. The 1978 change was very niggardly; and the then Minister of Labour could not understand why the numbers were what they were. When asked three times in the Legislature, she could not explain those numbers.

Does the corporate board, or the chairman, understand why those numbers from the joint consultative committee were what they were?

Hon. Mr. Starr: It was after careful survey by management and labour representatives and others in that group—who make up a good cross-section of the various people—that they arrived at these recommendations. They thought they were appropriate.

Mr. Bounsall: Did you ask why they were recommending those numbers?

Hon. Mr. Starr: We were also interested. But they did take into consideration the total of the cost-of-living from 1975. That amounted to something like 26 per cent or 27 per cent.

Mr. Bounsall: Not quite. They tried to look at the pattern.

Mr. Watson: On a point of information: would somebody tell us who comprise the joint consultative committee?

Hon. Mr. Starr: This is a joint consultative committee, provided for in the Workmen's Compensation Act, and composed of 12 people. They are an advisory committee to the Workmen's Compensation Board. The personnel of that committee is composed of labour, management, and other interested people among our population.

Mr. Laughren: Injured workers?

Mr. Riddell: And some non-government people.

Hon. Mr. Starr: Yes. We have an injured worker on it.

Mr. Riddell: Non-government?

Hon. Mr. Starr: That's right. They're all non-government.

Mr. Wildman: Out of the 12, could you tell us what the division is in terms of management and labour: how many management people, how many labour people, how many injured workers; the interested groups, and who they are?

Mr. A. G. MacDonald: We would be happy to give you the detail of the actual membership, which we would give you in writing, but would say that the representation is roughly equal between management and labour, with an equal representation from the general public as well.

Mr. McClellan: Did the joint consultative committee make a recommendation for an amendment to increase benefits in 1977? Did they make a recommendation to the corporate board in 1977?

Mr. A. G. MacDonald: The joint consultative committee's recommendations were made to the board and to the minister in 1977.

Mr. McClellan: What action did the corporate board take on the recommendation in 1977?

Mr. A. G. MacDonald: We passed it on to the minister at that time.

Mr. M. Davidson: The same figures that were implemented in 1978?

Mr. McClellan: Were they the same figures?

Hon. Mr. Starr: Practically the same figures.

Mr. A. G. MacDonald: I think I should make it clear that there is one figure that was not part of the joint consultative committee's recommendations and that is the adjustment for 1977. They dealt only with the year 1976.

Mr. McClellan: Did the corporate board make the recommendation to the minister in 1977 with respect to an amendment increasing the benefits?

Hon. Mr. Starr: That's the one we're talking about.

Mr. McClellan: There was a formal recommendation in 1977 from the corporate board to the Minister of Labour to raise the rates in 1977?

Hon. Mr. Starr: But the 1977 cost of living was not included. That was added on.

Mr. McClellan: Yes, I understand, but the answer to my question is yes?

Hon. Mr. Starr: Yes.

Mr. McClellan: Was there a recommendation in 1976 from the joint consultative committee, or had it been set up then?

Hon. Mr. Starr: No, there was no recommendation in 1976.

Mr. Bounsall: I don't want to embarrass the corporate board or the chairman over this point, but I want to pursue it one step further. Did you ask them why they had picked the particular figures they picked? They almost defied analysis as to why they picked those particular percentages. Did you ask them how they got those percentages that they recommended?

Mr. A. G. MacDonald: Insofar as indexing is concerned they recommended the cost of living index adjustments for those two years, 11 and eight per cent.

Mr. Bounsall: In point of fact, they didn't. Let me explain that. We have argued for some years here as far back as I can remember, as far back as January 1972, that pensions should be adjusted, and they finally were, that those adjustments should be based on the per cent increase in salaries and wages, industrial composite that occurred in Ontario. If there's anything that should be tied to the salaries and wages in Ontario in terms of percentage increase, it's pensions or compensation rates for those who are withdrawn from their workplace because of an industrial accident. Maybe anything else would be inappropriate to tie to that. Not the cost of living, even in those years.

The adjustment made for 1975, looking at those numbers, was a very interesting number. It was exactly half-way between the per cent increase in salaries and wages that occurred and the cost of living that occurred. It was neither, but exactly midway in between; the number was exactly half-way in between. So, of course, my heart flutters with great ecstasy; the board has partially recognized that pensions should be adjusted on the basis of percentage increase in salaries and wages.

Then look at the adjustment that was to be made on pensions for 1976. Here my heart flutters with great joy again. It's exactly midway in between what the percentage increase in salaries and wages were and what the consumer price index was.

Then you get to the 1977 one and there was quite a disparity between the cost of living index, 12 per cent in 1977, and the percentage increase in salaries and wages, six per cent. Instead of following the pattern, if there was one, set for the 1975 changes and the 1976 changes, of splitting the difference and coming out with nine per cent, you chose—guess what number? My heart really fluttered, because there was the establishment of what should have been established, the six per cent figure, which was the per cent increase in salaries and wages as opposed to the cost of living figure at 12.

That was the question I posed three times to the then Minister of Labour, and she couldn't answer as to where the numbers came from. If you look at the numbers for 1975, you took the average between the two indexes in 1976. In 1977, for those 1978 amendments, you took the lower of the two, but the appropriate one, the percentage increase in salaries and wages. That was an indication of the effect of AIB in holding wages down as inflation was going out the window at the other end because prices were not restricted.

That being the analysis, could I ask the corporate board, since obviously 1975 amendments were based at least on the true cost of living increases and, hopefully, that board rather than the consultative committee will be making suggestions in the future, or at least questioning the numbers being brought forward by a joint consultative committee, what index are you going to base it on in the future? Are you going to do what you did for 1975 and 1976 and split the difference? Are you happy with that situation, a difference split between the cost of living and salaries and wages or are you going to do what you did in 1977 and take the salaries and wages increase, the industrial composite of Ontario?

Mr. A. G. MacDonald: It was the intention of the joint consultative committee to recommend for the two years in which they made the recommendations an adjustment based on the cost of living index period.

Mr. Bounsall: They missed by one per cent in each year.

Mr. A. G. MacDonald: I would suggest, Mr. Bounsall, that you sit down with the statisticians concerned and see just how they did it and what the comparison was. I repeat it was their intention to adjust by the full cost of living index. I know because I was there for the discussions. It was on the same basis and on the same statistical analysis used by the board in the previous amendment which you suggest the board recommended.

As for the 1977 decision to have an ad hoc adjustment of six per cent, that was made in concert with the government as it relates to having something less than full indexing. The board is not entirely privy to all of the matters relating to that. Certainly one of the matters that is going to have to be considered in the future as a matter of policy is the extent to which one can have full indexing in this kind of economy.

Mr. Bounsall: For the year 1977 that did not come from the joint consultative committee. Was there a figure from either the chairman or the corporate board as to what figure should be the adjustment for the year 1977? Did you actually put a number on it, or did you leave that entirely up to the Minister of Labour and the cabinet?

Mr. A. G. MacDonald: I would say that after discussion that was a joint recommendation. The board produced information for the government as to the cost of adjusting at that particular level. To say that that was a recommendation of the board would not be entirely correct.

Mr. Bounsall: The joint consultative committee didn't do it.

Mr. A. G. MacDonald: No, they did not.

Mr. Bounsall: You said there was consultation between the board and the minister, or words to that effect. Who in the board consulted with whom on arriving at that figure?

Mr. A. G. MacDonald: Those of us who are involved in these calculations. It was discussed with us.

Mr. Bounsall: It was not a corporate board decision.

Mr. A. G. MacDonald: The corporate board, after the calculations had been developed, did discuss it as a board. I would say that it could be said that eventually the board did recommend a six per cent figure.

Mr. Bounsall: The corporate board was therefore happy to recommend a figure which did not reflect the full cost of living index for the year 1977. It was a corporate board decision to be happy with the recommendation which turns out to be half of what the cost of living index was in 1977.

Mr. A. G. MacDonald: I think it is fair to say that the board was aware of the implications of making that recommendation by having regard for the overall requirement to look at indexing as a concept at this particular point in time.

Mr. Bounsall: I withdraw any of my previous remarks about leaving decisions of this nature in the hands of the corporate board.

How could the corporate board be happy with the decision and recommendations of the minister that in the year 1977 pension increases were to be only half the cost of living increase? Don't you gentlemen have consciences at all—or any hearts, if that is the kind of recommendation you are happy to make?

Look, if your recommendation gets turned down on a political basis, that's another thing. That's not your responsibility. But, as a corporate board, you were happy to sit and make a recommendation on pension increases that were exactly half the cost of living increase—if what you have said to me this morning is correct.

Well, that's what the corporate board did to the injured workers of Ontario. I will leave it now. I think the situation is clear enough. I think that if the Workmen's Compensation Board is going to adequately serve the injured workers of Ontario, it had better have another review—a thorough review—of itself with a view to submitting a report as large as the 1973 report we got. And one of its sections should speak to the persons who will sit on that corporate board.

Getting back to my major general question in this area—the proposal of legislative changes—we have seen how it has come out in pensions. You mentioned the 1975 changes. That was a corporate board decision. We have gone through what happened in the 1978 changes and where they were derived from. The only other one you mentioned was the 1973 report, which the board dealt with, and then came out with the 1974 changes in the legislation; the reorganization changes.

I suppose I don't need to pose the question because I know the answer. But, do you really think the chairman and the corporate board should be satisfied with that degree of legislative proposals to the minister? I mean, it sounds as though from 1973 or 1974 until now—one was major in 1973-74, I will admit—there have been three times when the corporate board or the chairman sat down and made some recommendations to the Minister of Labour re legislative changes. Do you really think that is enough? I mean, are you that happy as a corporate board, and that happy as the chairman, Mr. Chairman, with the Workmen's Compensation Board Act in the province of Ontario that over a period from 1973 or 1974 until now, you have proposed three—one was major, I will admit—legislative changes?

Hon. Mr. Starr: It is not within our power to make legislative changes.

Mr. Bounsall: No. I said proposed legislative changes. I think that has to be one of the major requirements of the chairman of the Workmen's Compensation Board, one of that person's main functions. Are you happy with three times since you became chairman?

Hon. Mr. Starr: I would like to see the act amended to give the compensation board itself power to adjust automatically for the cost of living increase every year.

Mr. McClellan: Have you made that recommendation to the minister?

Hon. Mr. Starr: We have talked about it and, of course, you are in the Legislature—

Mr. Bounsall: You can't hide behind that because we don't —

Hon. Mr. Starr: —you discuss the act and you discuss the clauses of the act and I haven't heard any suggestions from anyone.

Mr. Bounsall: Oh, come on.

Mr. Wildman: We make a lot of suggestions about amendments.

Mr. Bounsall: There are private members' bills that have been placed before the Legislature by members.

Hon. Mr. Starr: I withdraw that, but this is what I would like to see. I don't know whether that answers your question.

Mr. Bounsall: Would the corporate board and the chairman find it inappropriate to once a year publish proposed list of changes to the Workmen's Compensation Board Act and make it public as one of your normal at least yearly functions? Do you not see that as a role which the board should be playing, proposal for legislative changes? Do you not see that as a function of the corporate board or the chairman? The previous chairman used to imply that he would like to make some changes but, after all, he was hindered by the act; he couldn't do certain things because the act prevented him. Neither did he make public legislative changes that he had in mind.

The corporate board and the chairman have to work under the restrictions of an act. Would it not be appropriate for this arm's-length board to make public its annual look at how it thinks the legislative changes should be made?

Hon. Mr. Starr: Mr. Bounsall, it has been requested by this committee at the last hearing and now that they should not be at arm's length, that there should be close co-operation with the government and the Minister of Labour, which we are trying to do as much as possible. Consequently, it would be impossible for us to say publicly we propose these changes if they were not acceptable to the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Laughren: You are a political tool.

Hon. Mr. Starr: Yes, everybody is, like you are and I am.

Mr. Laughren: I advertise the fact that I am—

Hon. Mr. Starr: So do I.

Mr. Laughren: —a partisan politician and you hide behind it.

Hon. Mr. Starr: I am too.

Mr. Laughren: Are you? That's the role of the board, is it?

Hon. Mr. Starr: I conduct the role of the board in an impartial way, my friend.

Mr. Laughren: But you're a partial politician, a partial administrator. You get caught up in your own contradictions.

Hon. Mr. Starr: Everybody's entitled to their rights.

Mr. Laughren: Except the injured workers.

Mr. Bounsall: We need a chairman of the Workmen's Compensation Board appointed who sees as one of his or her roles public proposals as to the way the act should be changed and doesn't fear a consequence of being let go should he or she make those proposals. The corporate board is playing just as political a role in propping up any Conservative Minister of Labour and his policies if it as a corporation doesn't see that as one of its roles.

Mr. Van Horne: Can I interject and seek a point of information or clarification? The member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. Watson) a while ago asked for some information on this joint consultative committee and the response came from the chairman that it's covered in the act. I'm assuming this is section 70 of the act that you are referring to.

Hon. Mr. Starr: Section 70.

Mr. Van Horne: Okay. As I read this, the wording is such that it is very permissive and suggests committees or councils. There is another section, 120, which also allows for the establishment of committees of employers. Following the theme that Mr. Bounsall has been hammering away at, could you indicate to us are there many committees of employers, what is the liaison between them and such a committee as the joint consultative committee, if any?

Hon. Mr. Starr: Mr. MacDonald can answer that.

Mr. A. G. MacDonald: There are no formal committees that operate under the other section.

Mr. Van Horne: Have there ever been?

Mr. A. G. MacDonald: Not to my knowledge. There are a number of trade associations which may come to the board from time to time and make representations on something that they're concerned with.

Mr. Van Horne: In the instance of Bill 126 and the criticism offered by Mr. Bounsall about the percentage increases, did you, in fact, get representation from the union representatives or from any source outside of your board?

Mr. A. G. MacDonald: The recommendations made by the joint consultative committee were a consensus decision of a group of people, including both unionists and management people, including in one case the division manager of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association.

Mr. Van Horne: Are you suggesting that he supported the recommended increase?

Mr. A. G. MacDonald: Yes, I am.

Mr. Van Horne: He wasn't pushing for anything more than the recommended increase. In other words, he wasn't insisting on the cost-of-living percentage as opposed to what was recommended.

Mr. A. G. MacDonald: My point was that the cost-of-living index adjustment was recommended. Mr. Bounsall and I are debating whether or not that figure is correct. Certainly it was the intention and the statistics which were produced for them were cost-of-living index changes over a 12-month period on the same basis used by the board in the previous amendment.

Mr. Van Horne: Let me go back to the first question. Section 70(3) (g) and (h) allows for the establishing of this committee. Are there other committees? Again the wording is broad enough to allow for advisory councils in the plural or committees in the plural. Is there any other council or committee, other than this joint advisory or consultative committee that you have referred to?

Mr. A. G. MacDonald: No.

Mr. Bounsall: Just to carry on with my two other major points, although I have one additional point on this, the numbers that I used were not one that I looked up in terms of the cost of living but were fed to us by our very excellent research team from our NDP research caucus, which hasn't been known to make many errors in calculation over the past. Maybe they did but maybe they didn't.

Let me ask you if the intention was to adjust for 1975 and 1976 by exactly the cost of living, and if the board is out by what I claim to be one per cent in each year, can I assume there will be a recommendation coming from the chairman and the corporate board to make that appropriate one per cent adjustment in each of those years?

Maybe I shouldn't prejudge your decision. Could I ask that that decision be looked at by the corporate board with a view to actually adjusting it to the cost-of-living index if they are one per cent low, as my information is, in each of those years? I won't even ask them to review their policy of settling for half of the cost-of-living index for the year 1977. I won't embarrass the corporate board by asking them to do that. But if the intent was that they adjust it by the exact cost of living for those two years and if that turns out to be low, I am asking the corporate board to look at that and recommend immediately that the act be amended to make up for that little error.

Hon. Mr. Starr: I have noted your request.

Mr. Bounsall: I am sure the injured workers in Ontario will have noted the answer as well.

I want to get back to the 1973 report which the chairman was intimately involved in and as a result of that became chairman. I am trying to get myself on some committee that writes a report in some area so that I can receive an offer of chairman, but no one has appointed me to anything yet. There is one thing in that report which again really warmed the cockles of my heart at the time.

Mr. Laughren: We are not here to discuss patronage.

Mr. Bounsall: We have just heard that this is the way it all operates anyway. I may be misquoting and it may just be the way I interpret it—and I am sorry I don't have that green report here with me—but one of the criticisms that was made in the 1973 report of the board was that there were too many chiefs and not enough Indians.

In the reorganization bill that took place and in sitting down and discussing it with you at that point in the committee stage hearings that took place outside the House, going through that reorganization that was about to take place, we were assured that the situation would be reversed, and it was. There was some nice stuff happening for a while as a result of that 1973 report. We need a 1979 report because of the positive things that flowed for a while from that.

[11:15]

Why have you completely reversed yourselves at the Workmen's Compensation Board and become almost incredibly top-heavy with chiefs again? More than 40 per cent of the employees of the Workmen's Compensation Board now are chiefs. You have done a complete reversal.

Mr. Riddell: What is a chief and what is an Indian? What do you classify as being a chief?

Mr. Bounsall: Just wait, Jack; it will come.

Why have you reversed yourself? It was a positive policy. Are you aware that around 40 per cent of the employees of the Workmen's Compensation Board now are chiefs?

Hon. Mr. Starr: I am not aware of that.

Mr. Bounsall: You are not aware of that? One of the criticisms in discussions at the time was that there were too many chiefs. Since about two years ago, you now have a return to the chief situation in virtually each section. In virtually each section you have a director, an assistant director, a supervisor, an assistant supervisor, a manager and an assistant manager. As a result of that reclassification into chiefs, they found that only slightly less than 60 per cent of the employees of the Workmen's Compensation Board were eligible to be included in the bargaining unit.

Hon. Mr. Starr: Oh.

Mr. Bounsall: It is a classification into chiefs.

Hon. Mr. Starr: What you are saying is that the claims adjudicators are chiefs, are they? Because they are not included in the bargaining unit, they are chiefs?

Mr. Bounsall: Let me pick up on that point. Would the corporate board again consider making a recommendation to the minister that the Crown Employees Collective Bargaining Act be amended to remove the phrase "adjudicators or anyone who determines a claim pursuant to any statute" so that the people in claims adjudication—and let me tell you, they are not all chiefs; they are good, hard-working, honest people—can be included as part of the bargaining unit and can have some collective strength in determining their own salaries, which they are prevented from doing by the Crown Employees Collective Bargaining Act?

Since I assume you wouldn't want to disadvantage your own employees to that extent, the corporate board might well say to the minister: "Look, this is not political. It doesn't affect the board at all. It is not the Workmen's Compensation Board Act we are speaking about; we are speaking about another act, the Crown Employees Collective Bargaining Act, which prevents all our honest, hard-working people in adjudication, or those determining a claim, from having collective representation."

Hon. Mr. Starr: That is a situation where those people themselves will have to make that determination; not I.

Mr. Bounsall: That is interesting. Are you willing to have all your employees in adjudication or those who determine a claim have a non-interfered-with vote as to whether they would like to see the Crown Employees

Collective Bargaining Act amended so they could be included in the bargaining unit; and, if they so did, would you as a corporate board make that strong recommendation to the Minister of Labour?

Hon. Mr. Starr: No.

Mr. Bounsall: There you go. Back to the old chief situation. You are very happy with that situation.

Hon. Mr. Starr: You counted all the claims adjudicators as chiefs; that is where you are wrong in your percentages.

Mr. Bounsall: More than 40 per cent are excluded. They include all the claims adjudicators. I have had representation—and I'm certainly not going to mention names—from people within claims adjudication saying: "What the hell can you do for us on our salaries, if anything? Because no one speaks for us, no one takes care of us. We can't be part of the bargaining unit. We're getting, in our opinion, shafted on salaries and working conditions."

Perhaps one of the interesting examples of this that was given to me by employees of the Workmen's Compensation Board—by employees of the Workmen's Compensation Board—was what took place in the counselling area. Jack, as well as having directors, assistant directors, supervisors, assistant supervisors, managers and assistant managers, you also have senior specialists. It just so happens that in some areas, and this occurred in the counselling area, none of the senior people in the counselling area wanted to be classified as a senior counselling specialist, because that would have made them management and put them out of the bargaining unit. So in that area what happened, as it's related to me, was that junior people in the counselling area got designated as senior counselling specialists and, in fact, are making less money than those who aren't counselling specialists who are part of the bargaining unit.

Mr. McClellan: It's another triumph of administration.

Mr. Bounsall: I don't know. You talk about this close liaison which you had with the Minister of Labour, yet the Minister of Labour upholds a Labour Relations Act statute which encourages the formation of organizing of employees into unions in this province. If you have that close liaison which you have—and if you have, and you might in this one, a Minister of Labour who believes that preamble to the Labour Relations Act—it must be in quite a bit of conflict with the minister over the way in which you have designated people outside of the adjudication branch for the purposes of excluding them from the bargaining unit.

Hon. Mr. Starr: The matter has never been brought for discussion between myself and the minister.

Mr. Bounsall: We'll ask the minister in writing. We'll ask you to discuss it with the minister and we'll ask the minister in writing to discuss it.

Hon. Mr. Starr: I think you've made some statements in respect to certain of our employees, particularly as they are in the claims section. I think Mr. Kerr should be given the opportunity to clarify some of these statements that have been made by Mr. Bounsall.

Mr. Bounsall: Let me be very clear to Mr. Kerr, I haven't had the time. It would be interesting. I'd be welcome at the board, I always am, to go over and talk to all of the claims adjudicators and so on and ask them individually what they think about their situation. I can only tell you what I'm relating is what some of the claims adjudicators have come to me about. I know who put them up to it, but—

Mr. W. R. Kerr: In the claims services division, it's quite right that some of the employees are in the bargaining unit and the employees who are adjudicating claims, the claims adjudicators, the pension adjudicators, are not in the bargaining unit. So we do have this situation where some of the employees are in the unit in the division and some are not.

In so far as how the people feel, the claims adjudicators, I quite honestly can't tell you how they feel because in my position I don't, frankly, go around asking them: "How do you feel about that?"

Mr. Bounsall: Maybe you and I could make a joint trip.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: That would be very interesting, I'm sure, Dr. Bounsall. But if I may continue for a moment, it could be misconstrued. Personally, as a manager of the board it would not inhibit me in any way if they were all in the union or if they weren't all in the union, which they weren't for a number of years until CUPE was certified.

As a manager of this rather large division, I have no feelings one way or the other. If they were all unionized, it would not inhibit me as the executive director in operating that division. I can't contribute very much, Dr. Bounsall, except to say that I have no feelings one way or the other. With respect to whatever decision is made, it is very difficult when you get into this kind of situation. It has been said that whatever the employees want is perhaps what should be done. That seems to be the democratic way of doing it.

I was very pleased, Dr. Bounsall, to hear you say that these adjudicators are good hard-working employees.

Mr. Bounsall: Most of them.

An hon. member: You sound surprised.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: We are not surprised; we are very pleased.

Mr. Bounsall: How many are we talking about?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: We have 756 employees in the claims services division.

Mr. Bounsall: Could I sum up your comments by saying that we can count on you not to fight any proposal made by the corporate board that that section of the Crown Employees Collective Bargaining Act be amended?

Mr. Van Horne: So help you God.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: My answer to your question is yes, you can count on me.

Mr. Bounsall: Fine.

Mr. Riddell: To substantiate what Dr. Bounsall said, of those 756, how many are so-called Indians and how many are so-called chiefs? We have been led to believe that we are top-heavy with chiefs.

Hon. Mr. Starr: No, not at all.

Mr. Bounsall: In that section, how many of the 756 would come under the Crown Employees Collective Bargaining Act?

Mr. A. G. MacDonald: Those who adjudicate will determine the question.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: If I may add something to that, I think I can. I don't have all the figures at my fingertips. We have three branches in the claims services division. One is the claims information counselling services branch which also operates the area offices. Of the 284 employees in that branch only about 60 are non-bargaining-unit employees. Of that 284, roughly 220 are in the bargaining unit. In that one branch of my division, the vast majority of the people are in the bargaining unit.

Mr. Bounsall: Those aren't adjudicators.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: No. In the claims adjudication branch in that category of adjudicators, including the management people whom you call chiefs, who would be the real chiefs and not just the claims adjudicators, we have about 285 to 300. We have a vast majority of that branch not in the bargaining unit. Then we have a claims review branch, which is very important but small in numbers. None of those people is in the bargaining unit because they are all adjudicators or management people.

Mr. McClellan: That is 300 out of how many?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Out of 447.

Mr. McClellan: Then 300 out of 447 are not in the bargaining unit in that section?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: That's right. That is the branch where the vast majority are not in the bargaining unit, the claims adjudicators to whom Dr. Bounsall has referred.

Mr. Riddell: I find it rather peculiar that they would come to Dr. Bounsall to complain rather than go to the person who might be able to do something about it, such as yourself. Am I correct in assuming that if they went to you they would be jeopardizing their position? Why are they going to Dr. Bounsall? Is it the fact that they don't particularly want to be included in the bargaining unit?

Mr. Bounsall: He doesn't know that and neither do I.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: If I may respond to that question, the director of the claims adjudication branch, Mr. Darnbrough, who is with me today, and I have received no comments, presentations or complaints of any kind from the claims adjudicators on that particular subject.

Mr. Bounsall: As I said, I didn't make a survey and neither has Mr. Kerr.

Mr. Martel: That's like going to Dracula when you have the blood bank with you.

Mr. Riddell: Neither can you look at it from one point of view.

Mr. Martel: We look at the difficulty of organizing in this province.

Mr. Bounsall: Let's not kid ourselves. The point is well made. You are putting it much more forcefully than I would ever think of putting it when you make the analogy to Dracula.

Mr. Riddell: I maintain, and I have more faith in labour, that they have got more—

Mr. Martel: You have no faith at all in labour.

Mr. Riddell: —intestinal fortitude than you indicate. If they can't go to management and talk over some of their problems, then I find that a ridiculous accusation.

Mr. Martel: Of organizing? Let me tell you, it is management you had better look at.

Mr. M. Davidson: I have been organizing the trade union movement for 10½ years, I have yet to see a worker who went to management and said he would like to get a union.

[11:30]

Mr. Bounsall: That would, in fact, jeopardize its formation because management can't get involved in any discussions about the formation of a union. So they can't do that, Jack.

Mr. Martel: God help me. That's his knowledge of the whole matter.

Mr. Riddell: The fact of the matter is that management is tied down so damned tightly.

Mr. Martel: Here it comes now. Give us the whole spiel.

Mr. Riddell: If unions want to get into a bank and they come up to a bank manager and talk to him, the bank manager has to be very damn careful of what he says.

Mr. Bounsall: That's exactly why they don't go to —

Mr. Martel: That's why they didn't go to Bill Kerr because Bill would have let them organize.

Mr. Riddell: You have to look at it from two sides.

Mr. Martel: Not when you are organizing.

Mr. Bounsall: To focus this: may I ask the corporate board again to consider another policy decision, but not just as to whether or not they would ask the Minister of Labour to amend the Crown Employees Collective Bargaining Act. Would the corporate board consider making a decision to allow myself or Mr. Kerr to anonymously survey the employees who are prevented from unionizing by the crown employees act—the adjudicators and all those who determine a claim—as to whether or not they have some interest in being able to be part of the bargaining unit? Could I ask the corporate board to make a decision as to whether or not—

Hon. Mr. Starr: I'd want to be certain that Mr. Kerr concurs with you in this request.

Mr. Bounsall: He has already said he is not going to fight it.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: May I comment on that, sir? I believe, Dr. Bounsall, a member of your party said that management can't be involved in such a matter. I think that's true. Would that not be viewed as suspicious by the union, if a senior member of management became involved in such an exercise?

Mr. Bounsall: I said—

Mr. W. R. Kerr: I think I would have to be excluded, sir, with respect.

Hon. Mr. Starr: Then I can only ask, Mr. Bounsall, that you put your request in writing to the corporate board and we will consider it.

Mr. Bounsall: Can I send you a copy of Hansard?

Hon. Mr. Starr: Send along with your letter anything you like.

Mr. Bounsall: Would Hansard please carefully note: I am now requesting the corporate board somehow to take, without management involvement, a confidential survey of the employees in adjudication, as well as all those who determine claims, and who are restricted by the Crown Employees Collective Bargaining Act clauses from organizing; that a survey be taken of those employees to determine whether or not they would like to see that act amended so that they can be represented by a bargaining unit. I will send you that copy of Hansard.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman: Mr. Bounsall knows it is quite an illegal proposition he is making. I sit here very patiently and quietly and listen to these innuendoes and snide remarks but he knows this proposition is quite illegal. There is a bargaining unit established at the board. There has been no interference at any level of management that I am aware of. If there is, I want to hear about it.

It is incumbent upon the collective bargaining unit in the board to expand that unit to the best of its ability. It is the unit's job to get whoever they think is out of the confines of the bargaining unit into the bargaining unit. If they are not doing that, they are not doing their job. They shouldn't have to rely on the corporate board to organize their bargaining unit. Mr. Bounsall, that's not a fair proposition and is quite illegal, as you know.

Mr. Bounsall: Doug, I was not being at all snide. Because the only way they can get in is through a change in legislation, I was asking the corporate board to consider making a recommendation to the minister that the section which prevents them from becoming organized be removed. Whether or not—

Mr. Hamilton: There are other ramifications involved.

Mr. Bounsall: —whether or not, if it is removed, the majority would vote to get in is up to the trade union or the collective bargaining situation. I am not asking you to help organize. What I am asking the corporate board is to consider whether or not they would say those employees should be eligible to have a collective bargaining agent, something they are prevented from doing now. There is nothing snide in that.

Mr. Hamilton: There are other ramifications, as you know, Mr. Bounsall, and that is that they are not in the appropriate bargaining unit that now exists. There are avenues open to have a collective bargaining unit that is suitable to their job.

Mr. Bounsall: They're excluded from organizing.

Mr. Hamilton: That may very well be the avenue they should pursue; I don't know.

Mr. Bounsall: Like in the category of the security guard where they can't have any contact with any other union member whatsoever.

Mr. Hamilton: Well, office units are the same; they're apart from the main unit. I don't know whether this is feasible, possible or what, but it seems to me that if that's an avenue they want to pursue they should pursue it. But there has been no—

Mr. Bounsall: You've raised a possibility. I think there are legislative problems with it, but you have raised a possibility.

The final area, and hopefully I won't dwell too long on the details, is the Wyatt report. I assume the Wyatt report recommendations as they affect benefits—and the policies they are recommending, would be a decision at some point of the chairman or the corporate board. Is this correct?

Mr. A. G. MacDonald: Mr. Bounsall, the Wyatt report is not a report to the Workmen's Compensation Board, as you know. It is a report commissioned by the minister and a report to government which has been tabled with the government. We understand the minister has formed his own task force committee to study that report and to give him recommendations concerning it. The board itself has not been asked to make any recommendations concerning it, although our joint consultative committee has just recently been asked to formally study the report and make recommendations concerning it.

Mr. Bounsall: So the corporate board has been asked to study it and make recommendations?

Mr. A. G. MacDonald: Through its joint consultative committee, yes, but formally the board itself hasn't been asked.

Mr. Bounsall: We will get into a discussion of the Wyatt report in detail and its stance. It's tremendously against liberalization of benefits. It warns throughout about over-insurance; let's not stack benefits; and they characterize certain levels as being excessive. It's a really reactionary report. I would hope the board—one always hopes, doesn't one—in its most positive way will look at each of those recommendations of the Wyatt report and be seriously prepared to accept or reject—and hopefully reject—most of them; because it's a strong stand.

Mr. Hamilton: Has your caucus studied carefully the whole proposition, whether it's retrogressive or not, of consolidating the benefits that are outlined in the Wyatt report?

Mr. Bounsall: I will let my colleague from Nickel Belt who is going to speak later—

Mr. Hamilton: Because it is a proposition that somebody is really going to have to come to grips with in the not-too-distant future. Whether you liberalize them and consolidate them or niggardly consolidate them, the question about consolidation will have to be faced.

Mr. Bounsall: Doug, I won't pre-empt the member for Nickel Belt who will be speaking on consolidations.

Mr. Laughren: For the seventh or eighth year in a row we will go at it again. The board continues to have the problems it has had in the past.

I had a conversation with Mr. Kerr a few minutes ago in which I was saying that in the Sudbury area we understand some of the special problems caused by the six-and-a-half-month strike—so far. That does pose certain problems both in terms of special supplements to injured workers and the whole rehabilitation program for workers who are on strike. We know that poses problems for the workers and for the board in decisions they make. But, at the same time, even given that, the problems we're facing in our constituency offices are more numerous than they have been in the past.

The woman who works in my constituency office, an extremely capable young woman, must spend I'd say, without a word of exaggeration, 75 per cent of her time on compensation problems. I'm sure that's true of Mr. Germa and Mr. Martel and I know Local 6500 has one man working full-time and occasionally two people working strictly on compensation problems. So we're a long way from being out of the woods with the administration of the board. I know the board likes to give the impression that it solves 90 per cent of the problems quickly and efficiently—"but there is that 10 per cent we have problems with." That's what the board likes to say. But surely that's how you measure the efficiency of any organization: how it deals with the difficult problems and not how it deals with the ones that just go through a computer without any question.

That's where the board has fallen down—coping with cases where there is something different about them. That's where the board is failing and it's failing very seriously, and it's not getting better. That's what is really disturbing me. As a matter of fact, I think it's safe to say it's worse because you now have more people out there in the field than you used to have and they can't cope with it. The unions hire extra people. There used to be no one in our constituency offices when I was elected back in 1971 and now it simply would not be possible to handle the workload of compensation cases without a full-time person in a constituency office. So there is no question that it's not getting better; it's getting worse.

I think you would have to admit, in the Sudbury area certainly, we have never attached a great deal of blame to the local Sudbury office for the problems. We understand where the problem lies. We understand they get as frustrated as we do. We get angry at some of the attitudes that some of the people will display from time to time in the local offices but basically it's an administration problem that cannot be solved out there the way the board is set up now.

I understand that in your opening remarks you commented on a decentralization study that should be finalized this spring. I hope very much that study will recommend that you do decentralize the board because places like Sudbury understand the problems of miners better than they do down here on Bloor Street. I would hope you would be able to resolve some of the administrative foul-ups in this way.

The other thing still hanging out there is the whole question of back injuries. The board does not know how to deal with back injuries. It's as plain and simple as that. You don't know how to deal with back injuries and I've never, and this party has never, pretended that was an easy problem or that there is a simple formula with which you can resolve a low back injury problem.

I guess the real dispute centres on whether or not a degenerating disc or degenerative disc disease, call it what you will, can be caused by being worn out with manual labour. I think that's where the board is wrong and that medical evidence is inadequate. For example, I have a bad back but I can probably go on in my present job as long as the people want me to without my back causing problems. But if I were to go and work in a mine my back would be gone probably within six months or a year, I don't know for sure. Then the board says that's a degenerative disc condition and employment doesn't cause that. I think employment can cause the disc to wear out. That is obviously a layman's view, but I think you would have to start with that premise if there is going to be justice for workers with back injuries.

[11:45]

Back injuries and industrial diseases are the areas where I see the board as being most inadequate in its policies, aside from the level of benefits and pensions and that kind of thing. So those are areas where I think the board should move very aggressively to try to resolve problems. I don't think they are insoluble.

Basically what I would like to say this morning is to encourage the corporate part of the board to abolish itself. The board should be abolished and in its place established a comprehensive social insurance scheme. Strangely enough, I am not alone in these feelings. I believe the chairman of the board, Mr. Starr, has himself indicated he wants to see the board abolished.

I believe you were talking to the Hamilton Law Association a year or so ago when you indicated you thought the board should be abolished and there should be a universal scheme in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Starr: If I may, our task force report visualized the possibility, as you know, that this may come about. In the interview after my speech to the lawyers in Hamilton, I was asked about this aspect and I just repeated what we said in the task force.

Mr. Laughren: Yes, which was a very commendable thing to say.

Hon. Mr. Starr: I visualize something even more comprehensive in the future, sure.

Mr. Laughren: That is certainly what we feel, that it must be abolished. You will never resolve the problems that are there now with the existing system. You simply can't. I don't believe it is humanly possible. I don't care who the chairman of the board is or who the Minister of Labour is, you are not going to resolve the problems at the board as long as you have this adversarial system that is down there now. It is not possible.

Decentralizing it will make it better and there are ways to make it more humane, but you will never resolve the problem with an adversary system. That simply is not possible. There are people who argue for the—

Hon. Mr. Starr: Excuse me. I wonder if I could ask you to define to me what an adversary system in your opinion is?

Mr. Laughren: An adversary system in my opinion is when the onus is on the worker to prove that he or she is entitled to compensation. That is, plain and simple, the way it is now. There is no question in anybody's mind. If you will be impartial for a moment, and I know that is hard for an old political warrior like yourself, but be impartial for a moment and you will admit that the board is seen as an adversary by people who have problems with compensation. When they come down to an appeal, it is against the board's decision they are appealing, so the worker unquestionably sees the board as the adversary rather than as an organization set up to dispense justice for injured workers. That is how I see it as an adversary system.

Hon. Mr. Starr: I see what you mean.

Mr. Laughren: It is not logical in my mind either to have a system of social insurance that would just insure workers from the time they left their door to the time they got back home again the next day, because it is very difficult to separate injuries and where they happen. That is one of the problems. That is what turns it into an adversary system, the fact that the worker has to prove the condition was caused by an incident on the job. It is as simple as that. That is what they have to prove.

I have always felt there are three basic principles to any system of compensation: one is prevention, the other is income maintenance and the third is rehabilitation. Those are the three. The adversary system doesn't allow for that.

There was a fellow from the Ontario Workmen's Compensation Board who made a statement to the Woodhouse commission in New Zealand when they were recommending the establishment of a social insurance system there. I would like to quote what he said in the 1969 report:

"Financial rehabilitation is provided by adequate compensation as a stimulus, rather than a deterrent, to speedy recovery. Prompt and regular payment of compensation during the period of incapacity is important in the rehabilitation process.

"Doubts and fears unconsciously fostered by an adversary system should be prevented if at all possible. The patient should not be allowed to be unduly disturbed about financial hardship during the course of his total disability, or to have fears and forebodings about the future. Such fears accentuate the stress reaction so ably described by Dr. Selye, prolonging disability and driving reputable citizens to the only refuge they know: litigation.

"Knowledgeable rehabilitation officers attached to the staff of the administrative authority can dispel the doubts and fears of the injured workman at an early stage of treatment. They can point out to him his rights and responsibilities under the act and influence positive thinking about rehabilitation and employment possibilities."

That was a statement made by Dr. Steele, who was a commissioner at the Workmen's Compensation Board at the time. That's how I feel too about the problems of the adversary system which we have in Ontario.

If we had a comprehensive social insurance system—I know this is a political act; the government of the day would have to be committed to it, but I really believe that the Workmen's Compensation Board has a role to play, as my colleague Dr. Bounsall was saying, in urging change upon the government of the day, regardless of what that government be. I think that's where the board has not done its job, in ensuring that there are changes made. This would be one of them.

The chairman has no problem with this. I don't think this chairman would see it, but others perhaps would, as a form of creeping socialism that was going to destroy the free enterprise system. There may be some of your colleagues who would. But what it really is, is a way to dispense justice to injured workers, no matter where they are hurt.

The main purpose of a comprehensive compensation system is the following—and I'd like to put it in almost a formal way: to promote the rehabilitation of earners who suffer personal injury by accident, wherever the accident might occur; to promote the rehabilitation of anyone who suffers personal injury by a motor vehicle accident so as to seek to restore all such earners and persons to the fullest physical, mental, social, vocational and economic usefulness of which they are capable; and, further, to make provision for the compensation of earners who suffer personal injury by accident and of every person who suffers personal injury by a motor vehicle accident and certain dependants of those earners and persons whose death results from the injury.

That would be the purpose of a compensation system, to compensate people irrespective of fault or where the accident occurred. That's the basic, fundamental purpose of a comprehensive social insurance scheme.

What I'm saying to you is that, by taking the adversarial aspect out of the system, we would remove punishment from the system. That's a tough word, but at the present time we really do punish people who get injured —people who are contributing to our society in a way that most of us agree they should.

In our system it's good to work; that's the work ethic we live with. It's insane, then, that we punish people who are injured as a result of working. It doesn't make any sense at all. I don't know how anyone can live with this kind of compensation system in good conscience when we know it's wrong to punish people who get injured because of working. That's simply not fair.

Another quote from the Woodhouse commission in New Zealand:

"Just as a modern society benefits from the productive work of its citizens, so should society accept responsibility for those willing to work but prevented from doing so by physical incapacity. Since we all persist in following community activities which year by year exact a predictable price in bodily injury, so should we all share in sustaining those who become the random, but statistically necessary, victims. The inherent cost of these community purposes should be borne as a basis of equity by the community."

What they're saying is that people live their lives and take part in community activities; they drive to and from work and to and from functions in their community. By being part of the community, they expose themselves to injury and become the inevitable random statistic that gets hurt.

That says there should be a community responsibility for people who are part of our community who get injured. I think that's a very important principle from which to begin. If you begin from that principle, you say it doesn't make sense to cover people who get injured on the job but not people who are in the community doing normal things. They are not covered. That is why the comprehensive system is so important.

Another reason it makes so much sense is the whole question of accident prevention. If you had a central body called a comprehensive social insurance system, you would have a central body that could assemble statistics on who got injured. I think it would help tremendously in something like back problems where you could take a very close look and compensate people for back problems. There may be a relationship between people's jobs and the activities they carry on in their everyday life. How do you separate that out? If a person is a miner and does prospecting part-time because of his interest in mining, why should it be separated if he gets hurt when he is prospecting?

I will get to the question of who pays in a moment, but in principle it doesn't make sense. All sorts of people pursue hobbies based on the kind of job they have. That is another reason. There could be a central data gathering body through this comprehensive social insurance system that would analyse all accidents and see the relationship between injuries and back problems and so forth.

I know there is always that question in people's minds out there—and this is where the board gets itself in trouble too—and that is, how many people would beat the system. A certain number of people will beat any system, but you don't design the system based on that fact, you design it based on the fact that most people don't. Surely you don't cater to that kind of lowest common denominator theory of social policy.

An orthopaedic surgeon from the States was talking about this problem of who beats the system and he said, "Most of the patients whom we used to call malingerers are not that at all, they are frightened individuals. They are afraid they are never going to be able to hold down a good job again, and hence are worrying about how they are going to support their families. To overcome this is a challenge to every doctor who has to deal with compensation injuries. Even our private patients experience a good deal of that same worry."

There is a real problem with an attitude at the board that people are trying to beat it. That is a lot of the reason why we get hang-ups on claims, particularly recurrence of claims. I think most of us know that if someone gets injured there is a greater risk of a delay in the settlement of a claim if it is a recurrence than if it is an original injury. That inevitably happens.

Then of course there is the question of efficiency. What makes a system efficient? In terms of cost, I believe the Workmen's Compensation Board in Ontario is efficient. I believe its administrative costs are only about six per cent or seven per cent, as you said in your opening remarks. I believe that to be an efficient operation in terms of costs. It is certainly much better than the private automobile insurance industry has ever been able to do where the cost of administration is up around 20 or 25 per cent. The balance is paid out in claims. Here you are paying out 94 per cent of your costs to injured workers.

I see no problem with this comprehensive system being any different in terms of efficiency because that is basically what you have got. There is no competition to pay injured workers. Right? You have a monopoly on the compensation of injured workers in Ontario. That means you have been able to realize a lot of the efficiencies of a monopoly. Although people tend to be nervous about monopolies, in certain social areas like this, they are better. I see the same thing applying if you broaden it to include accident insurance in the home and automobile insurance. You would have one large policy. [12:00]

Saskatchewan had a task force a year or so ago. They already have public auto insurance so it's a little different, but they said what they should do is establish, first of all, a sickness and accident program to go alongside the public auto insurance which sits beside the compensation system in Saskatchewan. You've got three of them operating independently. They don't now, but they're recommending there be a sickness and accident one. So you'd have three systems set up: compensation, automobile, and sickness and accident for injuries not covered under the other two. When they all get operating and the sickness and accident one gets going smoothly, at the opportune time you put them together and therefore have a comprehensive social insurance system. That's the way it should be done.

A person would get injured, would file for compensation and would be paid. It would be decided internally which piece of the pie it came from, because when it comes to funding the system, the automobile drivers would still pay their levy, the employers would still pay their levy and the sickness and accident part would be paid for either by premiums or by a general tax levy. I could see the dispute would be adversarial internally among the three groups, but not with the worker being the adversary. The one who can least afford to be in an adversarial position would be spared that. That's what is so good about a comprehensive system.

I feel very strongly that's the direction in which we have to move. It would certainly help if the compensation board would start pushing in that direction too because I believe there's a natural reluctance on the part of a conservative private enterprise kind of government, which we have in Ontario, to implement something like that because they would see it as expansion of the public sector. They'd see it as a socialistic kind of measure that they wouldn't be comfortable with, when in fact that's the wrong basis for deciding whether or not you're going to have this kind of system in the province. I would encourage the board to do something on that.

I'd like to close this part of my remarks by outlining the kind of system we'd like to have. It has seven points:

1. Immediate compensation to every injured person irrespective of fault or whether the accident occurred on the highway, at work, on public or private property;

2. The scheme to be financed by the whole community from a levy on employers, on salaries and wages paid, from a levy on operators of motor vehicles and as appropriate from universal premiums and/or general revenues;

3. Injured persons to receive compensation both for permanent physical disability and for income losses on an income-related basis with regular adjustments to the level of payments to allow for inflation;

4. Similar compensation to be paid to those who are incapacitated by illness;

5. The right of court action based on fault to be abolished;

6. The Workmen's Compensation Act to be repealed and private carriers to be excluded in the field of accident and sickness coverage except for supplementary coverage;

7. Death benefits so as to ensure continuing and adequate income for surviving dependants.

That's one of our policies of which I am the most proud as a New Democrat. That's the system I would encourage the chairman to pursue, to lean on the Minister of Labour (Mr. Elgie). I know he doesn't have problems with it personally because of comments he has made both publicly at meetings and also when he was on the commission that looked into the system before he became chairman. I know that's not what's holding him back.

The only other two comments I wanted to make, stepping back from the comprehensive system for a moment, are about this question of increases in the level of benefits. I think Saskatchewan has a good arrangement, and I introduced a private member's bill and we debated it last year in the Legislature. This was last June. What I suggested—and I took it right from the Saskatchewan one, I didn't dream it up myself—was that in any given year, of the number of people who make claims to the board, any time 10 per cent of them exceed the maximum that's allowable now, it be bumped up $1,000 so as to take the number down below 10 per cent. What's the maximum now in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Starr: It's $16,200.

Mr. Laughren: If 10 per cent of them had earnings of more than $16,200, you would bump up the maximum to $17,200. Then, when 10 per cent exceeded $17,200, you'd bump it up to $18,200—or whatever the level was at that time. I think that would be a good, automatic way to do it. It would take it out of the political arena as well, so you wouldn't have to get it before the Legislature every year. It is difficult getting legislation before the House sometimes. So, in other words, it would take it away from the whim of any particular Labour minister who, at any given time, might not be so disposed to give increases to injured workers.

The other thing is this. A couple of years ago we had an NDP task force on the compensation board. That was in 1977; two years ago. We went across the province and listened to injured workers in a number of communities. We presented a report and even the chairman at the time commented that it was a very reasonable report. I think he expressed surprise because there was very little rhetoric in it—very little hostility. It was a very reasoned report. There were a number of recommendations in that report. None was outrageous. None would have bankrupted the employers in Ontario. But you haven't implemented them. I wonder if I could, just very quickly, highlight the main ones. I won't go over them all.

1. That the Workmen's Compensation Board be decentralized. That's being looked at, anyway.

2. No benefits or pensions should be reduced without at least two weeks' notice in writing to the compensation recipient and the reasons for the reduction or termination must be fully explained.

3. Vocational rehabilitation must be related to what the injured worker needs to establish an alternative vocational career. It must no longer be related to the degree of disability. That's a major problem.

Others:

Every injured worker must be informed of his right to vocational rehabilitation when it becomes apparent that a degree of permanent disability is the result of an industrial accident or disease. In some cases, we found people didn't even know they had a right. It's a right under the act to have rehabilitation. It's not a privilege.

Also, a committee of the Workmen's Compensation Board, trade unions, employers and injured workers' organizations, should establish a committee to investigate the entire problem of back injuries. I know there was a committee on back injuries. If it has reported, or if it has made recommendations and the board has adopted them, it is not solving the problem. That's a really tough one.

A committee should be set up to investigate ways and means to require employers to hire injured workers. I don't know whether there's a quota system or not but something has to be done to help.

Medical rehabilitation centres should be established in several locations other than Toronto. The board should consider such centres as Thunder Bay, Sudbury, Windsor and Ottawa in order to have a decentralized system of medical rehabilitation. You had such a beautiful opportunity in Sudbury to do it with the former Burwash prison there—the big gym and housing facilities and everything. It's still sitting there empty. You could do that there. We're not talking about the highly specialized aspect of rehabilitation. We're talking about the more general ones—back problems and that sort of thing. You really did have an opportunity. I've been through the Laurentian Hospital. There's a section there but that's not the kind of thing we're talking about. A large number of people still come down to Toronto.

Also, in addition to providing regular medical rehabilitation, each of the centres should be encouraged to develop expertise, through research projects, in the medical problems related to employment in the area. For example: in Thunder Bay, it would be problems related to working in the woods industries—forestry, pulp and paper. In the Sudbury area, it would be to work on problems related to the mining industry—in particular, low back problems and that kind of thing, and perhaps some of the respiratory problems as well.

Finally, and the most important one of all, the board must operate under its motto, "Justice humanely and speedily rendered." Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would appreciate a response.

Hon. Mr. Starr: May I make a comment, Mr. Laughren, about your presentation? I would like to say that, regarding all those points you read out to us just now—the recommendation of your task force in 1977—with the exception of the second to the last one, we have moved on all of them. We have moved and made some progress, actually on every one of those suggestions.

Mr. McClellan: Maybe you could give some elaboration on that.

Mr. Laughren: I'm a little confused. By moving on it, do you mean that you have a committee looking at these things?

Hon. Mr. Starr: On decentralization, we're moving on that. On trying to get jobs for workers, it's a year now since we established a special division to move in that direction, with quite good success. I've just quoted from memory. Those are some of them.

Mr. Laughren: There are still people having their benefits reduced, and so forth, without notice. Don't even put up your hand, Mr. Kerr; don't even put up your hand. I can remember the pious promises to ensure that no workers would be reduced without prior notice. Don't do it to us again.

On the whole question of the right to vocational rehabilitation, has there been a change of policy on informing—

Hon. Mr. Starr: Yes, we've been doing that in all aspects of the rights of the Workmen's Compensation Act. Through our communications department, we've launched upon a program to advise people. We're printing pamphlets based on the recommendation of the ombudsman—I think Mr. McClellan can vouch for that—in all the languages et cetera.

Mr. Laughren: It's not happening, though; that's what we're saying.

Hon. Mr. Starr: It's being prepared now.

Mr. McClellan: It's notification we are talking about.

Hon. Mr. Starr: Let's get the facts straight. Ask Mr. Kerr—

Mr. Laughren: You listen to Mr. Kerr, then; it's going to be painful.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Mr. Chairman, as a result of a suggestion that was made in this committee a couple of years ago, we did put out a directive concerning the termination of compensation retroactively; it is in the book there, the book that has the claims administrative directives on page 60-A.

In most instances compensation is terminated on the basis of medical information contained in the doctor's progress report, which is the form 26 that you're all familiar with, or on oral reports received from the employer or the employee indicating that the man has returned to work.

But there are other cases where compensation is discontinued or reduced even though the employee has not yet returned to work. Such action could result from an asbestos report, where the man has been sent to a specialist to determine his present condition and whether he's fit for work, and it may take some time for that report to be typed up and sent to us.

What happened and brought this to our attention a number of years ago was—I forget which one of you gentlemen brought it to our attention, but I know it was one of you—we were receiving the report and then reducing or cutting off the man's com-ensation retroactive to the date he was seen by the doctor. That wasn't fair, because in that instance the doctor had not told the man to return to work. We introduced the policy and practice that in that instance we continue full compensation.

When the report comes in, it's evaluated by the claims adjudicator or the medical adviser at the board. If it's determined that the man is fit for work, he is sent a letter telling him that compensation will be reduced or terminated, whichever it is, and the reasons are given in that letter; his compensation isn't affected retroactively.

If this has happened in a recent case, it has been an error, and I would appreciate hearing about it. We agreed 100 per cent, and we put across to our staff, that this is not a fair thing to do.

Mr. Laughren: Perhaps we could pursue this further under claims, because I've cut into Mr. Wildman's time.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Yes, I would be delighted to.

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Chairman, under the main administration I would like to ask a couple of questions first about the board's—I was going to say propaganda, but I won't; I'll say its advertising program.

What bothers me specifically is a television ad I've seen which shows what looks to be a farm kitchen. There's a gentleman in his bib overalls sitting in a chair, and there's a lady preparing dinner or something; they're concerned about the fact that he hasn't received his compensation cheque. The wife says to the husband, "Why don't you give them a call?" So he gets up, makes a phone call, sits down and has some coffee; then the phone rings, he gets up and says "The cheque's in the mail?" and hangs up. facetiously, I wonder how long it is between those two calls. At any rate, I would like to know, first, the purpose of that ad as far as the board is concerned and, two, how much did it cost to produce and to air?

[12:15]

Hon. Mr. Starr: Well, I should give the opportunity of answering to Mr. Errol Weaver, our director of communications.

Interjections.

Mr. Van Horne: How many of these people are on your staff?

Hon. Mr. Starr: All but a few at the back there.

Mr. Van Horne: So, it is either the staff or the NDP research staff?

Mr. Wildman: No, there is no NDP research here.

Mr. Riddell: Certainly if the advertisement is no good, why use farmers?

Mr. Wildman: Well, I don't know whether he is a farmer or he just looks like a farmer.

Mr. Weaver: Mr. Chairman, the advertising campaign the member refers to began as a result of a survey we took in 1978. It indicated to us there was a considerable lack of information in the public sector on some of the details of the board's programs and its procedures, so we did develop an ad campaign. The one you refer to says in the voice-over, if you consider just the audio portion, "If you have a question about workmen's compensation or pension the answer is not far away. We have 14 offices in Ontario ready to help you and they are equipped to find out the facts fast."

Mr. Wildman: There is one thing I wanted to know. Could you tell me just before I go on, because we don't have much time here, how much that cost to produce and how much it is costing to air?

Mr. Weaver: The entire ad campaign, which involves television throughout the province, radio throughout the province and print in all areas where we have area offices—because the print campaign involves contact with the local offices—cost $600,000. It ran from September 1978 until last weekend; the campaign ended on March 24.

Mr. Wildman: Okay.

Mr. Laughren: In Sudbury 600 miners threw their crutches through the sets when that ad came on.

Mr. Martel: How long is it between the phone calls? I'm interested because—

Mr. Wildman: In relation to that ad and the explanation we have had about the voice-over—and it really was to explain that there are local offices and that you can get information quickly and so on—I would just like to point out it is my experience that since the local office opened in Sault Ste. Marie—and I supported the opening of that office, and I think the people there work hard—but all they do is they check with the computer. They can check with Toronto and they get the computer and the computer says something. They were lucky on that one because the computer came back and said his cheque was in the mail. What happened, though, is sort of like a Wintario thing—

Mr. Weaver: The ad is not intended to display a specific case. It's intended to get the impression across to the public they can get the answers by contacting the local office. In order to put that concept across the ad was created in that way, and I think it is very effective.

Mr. Wildman: Oh, I think it is quite effective. I just wanted to say it is my experience that in many cases when they contact a local office the poor guy there is tearing his hair out because he doesn't know what the hell is happening in Toronto with that particular case. As a matter of fact, I have had individuals come to me and I have said, "Well, have you contacted the local office?", and they have said, "Yes, and they said to come to you because they can't get anything out of Toronto."

Interjection.

Mr. Wildman: I didn't mention anyone's name. That is hearsay, anyway, because I didn't get it from the person at the board.

The other thing I would like to refer to is this WCB report, which I think comes out quarterly.

Mr. Weaver: Yes.

Mr. Wildman: The one I am thinking of is the autumn 1978 issue which dealt with rehab. It is very ironic because just as this came out there was an individual named in it, a Mr. La Fleur—he had a job in Sault Ste. Marie but he lives in my riding—and a nice picture at the bottom with the two rehab people and he is smiling and he has got a job in the parks department and everything is wonderful. What was ironic about this was that this individual, just prior to the publication of this piece of material, was out of a job. He didn't have a job in that parks department any more. As a matter of fact, he had received a letter from the Workmen's Compensation Board stating they didn't think he was entitled to rehab.

Mr. McClellan: Take that to Frank Drea for false advertising.

Mr. Weaver: When the story was prepared the facts were correct. I am sorry, I don't know the case so I don't think I—

Mr. Wildman: We went to the board afterwards—I don't want to deal with the particular case—and we spent a whole afternoon there, my assistant and the individual. We went to a lot of different offices, talked to a lot of different people. Each time we raised the matter they looked over the case, if they could get hold of it, or we waited until they could, and then we looked over it and they said, "Well, it says he doesn't have a great enough disability for this." Then I would show them this. They would then back up and say, "Maybe we had better look at it again."

Anyway, they say they have reopened his case and are reviewing it. There is no decision on it as yet.

Just in relation to rehab in general, I would like to make a couple of comments. One of the problems we have in northern Ontario is that when a person has been injured and he is told by his physician or by the board that he can do light duty, there isn't very much light duty. It is a problem we have right across northern Ontario.

I have a situation in Hornepayne where an individual was hit in the face with a sledgehammer. He isn't getting disfigurement for some reason so we are going to appeal on that; neither do I think he has been assessed for psychological disability, but he does have some difficulty working now because it seems every time someone raises his arm he ducks. He is quite reticent about getting involved.

Anyway, he has been told he can do light duty. But there is very little light duty in Hornepayne. It is a railway community. There is a lumbering company where he used to work. There is just not much there, so there is nothing there for him.

The question is, if he so-called "refuses" to do light duty, is he going to be cut off or is he going to have to keep up the charade of going around looking for jobs in Hornepayne that are light duty? It is something that has to be dealt with in small communities in northern Ontario. Even in larger communities there is not very much light duty. I would really like the board to do something about that.

I have another case. We had the chairman telling us how they are trying to speed up claims so that we don't have long periods when people are waiting, so that they can call and get information, as it says in the ad, and so on, and they will have their claims resolved.

I have a case here—and I am just using these as examples—where we went to a hearing in June. Subsequent to that hearing it was decided by the people hearing the appeal that they needed further information. So the board wrote a letter in July to—I think a chiropractor was involved in this case—requesting further information.

I didn't hear anything from the worker. He had gotten used to waiting a long time and anyway he was back to work so that it wasn't as if he was out of money completely—he just was claiming for previous back time. I didn't hear anything further, but I met him in December and I asked him, "What happened? It must have worked out because I didn't hear from you." He said,

"No, I never heard anything again from them." So we got in touch with the board. They couldn't find his file at first. Then they said, "We didn't get that information yet from the letter we wrote in July." Why on earth didn't you write the guy back between July and December to ask him for information?

They did write a letter on January 2, after we talked to them, and asked for the information. There is still no decision on that case. That is from June to January—to March now. These are individual cases, but I wonder.

One other area I want to talk about is the board's process in terms of perusing files. I really don't understand why you have to file for an appeal before you can go and look at the file. It seems to me kind of ridiculous. I know we don't like to talk about an adversary system, but if you use the analogy of law it would seem inconceivable to me that a lawyer would file for an appeal before seeing the evidence. It seems to me he would have to look at the evidence before deciding whether or not he is going to file for an appeal, but we have to write a letter saying we intend to appeal before we can go and look at the file.

Interjection.

Mr. Wildman: It doesn't make sense. I would like the board to consider changing that policy to a far more sensible and logical one so an advocate for an injured worker—if he be a member of Parliament or whatever—will have the right to peruse the file. I know there is concern about protecting medical information, protecting the patient and so on but if the person is actively working on behalf of that worker and has a consent form from that worker—that patient—then he or she should be allowed to peruse the file before deciding whether or not to appeal. It is ridiculous that you can file for appeal and go and look at the file and say, "Gee, we don't have any evidence here." It is just ridiculous, so I would like the board to change that.

In terms of appeals themselves, I would like to know something about this board's policy with regard to surgical consultants. It seems to me sometimes when there is medical controversy at an appeal, the board will consider it and they will refer medical evidence to a surgical consultant for scrutiny, analysis and opinion. It seems questionable to me how a medical practitioner of any type can make a decision simply on written evidence without even having seen the patient. That is something I would like to have answered.

Secondly, I would like to know why the worker or the patient, or his physician, who has given the other information that this person is looking at, does not have the time or the opportunity for due process, that is for arguments against the position taken by the surgical consultant or for submissions on the surgical consultant's position. In other words, why doesn't the worker and his advocate and/or physician have access to the advice given to the board by the surgical consultant, and why isn't the appeal reopened when a decision is going to be made on that kind of evidence so someone has the right to make submissions on it?

I have a lot of other stuff, Mr. Chairman, but I will have to bring it up, I suppose, when we get to the particular issues here. These are policy questions. I wanted to raise questions regarding the amount of compensation benefits and how they are determined, and also on the whole question of scarfers, but I notice the minister isn't here and I was hoping he would be. At any rate, I will leave those until later. I would like, if we can, to get some response to the matters I have raised.

[12:30]

Hon. Mr. Starr: I'd like to leave the first one, the file availability prior to the filing of an appeal, for an answer, maybe this afternoon. I wonder if Dr. McCracken could talk about the surgical consultant.

Dr. McCracken: I'm rather limited in what I can say about this because you are obviously speaking about a case that is in the appeal system.

Mr. Wildman: No, I'm talking about any case, generally.

Dr. McCracken: No, I mean a case. In other words, an appeal system situation. Under those circumstances, the role of my medical staff is extremely limited, if indeed they participate at all.

What happens, however, is that if the commissioners hearing the appeal are of the opinion that a further medical opinion is required and that the file should be reviewed, then from time to time they will indeed ask the appropriate consultant at the board to identify a person whom they consider to be an extremely senior, knowledgeable expert in that particular field, for instance, orthopaedics. Having made that identification, then the arrangements are made to have that particular outside specialist examine the file and the materials in it.

People of that calibre with their experience, I would submit, are in a position to take the medical reports from the family physician, from the other specialists who have seen the person during the course of the injury and treatment and come up with a very valid evaluation. By and large, it is not necessary to carry out yet another examination. From time to time, after they have reviewed the file, they will come to the conclusion that there is something obscure and they do want to see the patient. Under those circumstances, arrangements are so made that they will be able to carry out consultation.

Mr. Wildman: Frankly, I find it very hard to understand, when someone has been referred to a well known specialist in a particular field who has examined the person and has made a recommendation to the board and that evidence is used in an appeal, why you would go to another specialist who may also be well known, and I am sure is, and have him evaluate the evidence. Perhaps he may give advice to the board in opposition to what the other specialist has said without even seeing the patient. I mean one has seen the patient, the other hasn't.

Dr. McCracken: That really, as I say, has no bearing on the final decision because these people are of such stature they really don't have to go through all the routine of carrying out an examination on the patient except under circumstances where they so indicate. The fact is that the board is attempting to gather a preponderance of expert medical opinion. Incidentally, the opinion expressed by the treating family physician is indeed taken into consideration and his reports are examined by the consultant who is brought into the case.

Mr. Wildman: I know that. I'm talking about the fact that when he considers that but he also considers another specialist.

Dr. McCracken: That's quite correct.

Mr. Van Horne: To the injured worker, it looks as though the board is looking around to find somebody who will disagree.

Mr. Wildman: That's exactly right. I don't want to get into the medical argument about that except to ask about one case. Is it always the case, let's say in a back injury, that if it is referred to a surgical consultant the person who makes a decision is an orthopaedist or is it ever the case that a specialist in some other field makes a decision on a back problem?

Dr. McCracken: Certainly, we receive many opinions and very valuable opinions, not only from family physicians but in more particular from people trained in general surgery rather than being trained specifically—

Mr. Wildman: No, I'm talking about the people you use as your surgical consultants.

Dr. McCracken: The people who are used now in the type of case that you are talking about, it is the appeal system that is using this specialist not the medical branch. Having said that, it would be totally illogical for them to refer a complex orthopaedic problem to an internist specializing in chest or heart disease or it would be totally irrational to say under the same set of circumstances, "We will refer this case to a general surgeon," because if the specific problem is orthopaedics, the people who are considered to be the most expert in orthopaedic matters are indeed orthopaedic surgeons. If the matter appears to be a problem in neurology, then it should be a neurologist. If a matter appears to be psychiatry, it should be a psychiatrist.

Mr. Wildman: I would certainly agree it would be irrational to do that. What I'm asking is, does the board do it?

Dr. McCracken: Not that I'm aware of.

Mr. Wildman: There is no case where a gynaecologist, say, might make a decision on an orthopaedic problem?

Dr. McCracken: That would be most interesting. I would think that he would be stepping so far out of his field that—

Mr. Wildman: If we can supply that kind of information to you I'm sure you'll give us some kind of an opinion on that.

The other matters I suppose I'll have to leave until we get to the particular area.

Hon. Mr. Starr: If you wish, we can deal with them. With your first suggestion, Mr. Wildman, that in your opinion a file should be made available to a designated representative of a claimant prior to filing an appeal, it may be that after perusing the file that person may say there's no point in appealing the thing.

Mr. Wildman: That's right.

Hon. Mr. Starr: It may save time for both them and us. I think that's a very good suggestion. You can rest assured that we'll give that consideration.

Mr. Hamilton would like to answer the question of surgical consultants as they apply in the appeal area.

Mr. Hamilton: With reference to the real point you made about the surgical consultants, where we get a bundle of evidence at appeals from various sources, the family doctor, a hospital, and so on, when we get all the evidence on the table we refer that to the surgical consultants for an analysis of all the medical opinion and ask them to pull it together for us in a medical way. But, if it is going to significantly affect the decision it's been my practice, at least—and I think that of most of my colleagues—that whoever the rep is he would be made aware of the opinion of the surgical consultant before the decision was made, and we would ask him to comment on it. Maybe not in all cases, but in significant cases where we think it is going to have an impact we would ask for the comments of the advocate in that particular case.

Hon. Mr. Starr: I think that answers your questions, Mr. Wildman.

Mr. Chairman: We will now adjourn until 2 o'clock.

The committee recessed at 12.36 p.m.

On resumption:

Mr. Chairman: I will call the meeting to order.

I think Mr. Van Horne wanted to ask a few questions about what had been presented just before we adjourned at noon.

Mr. Van Horne: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

We are dealing with section I, as I understand it, main administration. I have a couple of observations that perhaps should have been made in my introductory comments last night but were not made at that time; because I think they do come under the general heading of administration, I would like to take this opportunity to make these points.

The first point is that in a fair number of the difficult cases you deal with, the eight to 10 per cent that causes concern for members of the Legislature, for constituency offices and certainly for your staff, I gather that a fair bit of correspondence takes place. Aside from visits to constituency offices, or from us to the regional office, and aside from the telephone calls, you do write a lot of letters; I would have to assume that.

My point in raising the issue of correspondence is that when a recipient of funds or cheques from the Workmen's Compensation Board, or a person who is in receipt of some correspondence from WCB, is directed to come from his home to Toronto, or is dealt with in any way in which he is given some direction, I would submit that out of courtesy you should give an indication of the reason to that person.

I have in front of me a letter directed to a Mr. LaBlanc, one of my constituents. It says in the first two lines, "You are requested to report to the reception desk, 14th floor, 2 Bloor Street East, Toronto, for examination."

To my knowledge, the examination has already taken place. The rest of the letter is form, as far as I can determine: "An appointment has been made for you at 10 a.m. Transportation warrant is attached," and so on; that is straightforward stuff. But, aside from those two words in the opening lines, "for examination," there is no other explanation as to why this person is being recalled.

[2:15]

He was concerned enough to come to me on Monday of this week to seek some information because he wasn't able to get it in calling the office in London. My point is if you are corresponding with a person, out of courtesy can you give enough detail in the letter so that he or she would understand what he or she is being called to Toronto for? I think that's a reasonable request.

Hon. Mr. Starr: I think that's a very legitimate suggestion. Thank you very much for bringing it to our attention. We'll try to correct that.

Mr. Van Horne: Thank you. The other general administrative complaints that we have come from the inconsistency in information that seems to happen on occasion between a regional office and central office. I have an example that happened fairly recently. My secretary neglected to put the name in here, so I'll have to give you the specific detail afterwards, but I think the complaint has come to us often enough to draw it to your attention.

The claimant was unable to find why a decision was not given or why a decision was delayed on calling the local office. Not being satisfied with that, on calling Toronto, he immediately got an answer. The credibility then of the local office in London was left up in the air. In fact, the point put to me was, "Don't they know what's going on?" I would have to submit that there may be some case made for the file being lost or difficult to find. I understand that 48 hours is not an uncommon period of time for a file to have to be located. It may be that the London office couldn't locate it. Again, we have good cooperation from the people in the London office, but in this type of complaint there is a breakdown in the information available for the claimant in London versus what he or she gets when they call Toronto.

Hon. Mr. Starr: I think that Mr. Kerr has made a note of this and he will try to bring about a better liaison. If there's any breakdown in liaison between the London office and the Toronto office, we want to know. We'll certainly try to rectify that.

Mr. Van Horne: Again, I haven't the names in the specific cases that we have, but there have been enough of these to bring it to your attention. I'll try to get the specifics later.

Hon. Mr. Starr: You might help us out if you would be kind enough to give us at least the claim numbers so that Mr. Kerr can investigate.

Mr. Van Horne: We don't do anything without the number.

Hon. Mr. Starr: We can see whether any special circumstances were involved or whatever and give you an explanation.

Mr. Van Horne: All right. On the final point—and I made a reference in general terms to this kind of thing in my comments last evening, I would go back to last July when the former ombudsman, Arthur Maloney, requested that Workmen's Compensation Board publish and make available to the public its adjudicative policies in manuals and start publishing an index of appeal decisions. In this way, injured workers—and I am almost quoting verbatim from Mr. Maloney—who are most affected by board policies would not be kept in the dark, and awareness of board policies would help them in preparing a relevant case when they must appeal their claim. I'm wondering from that point to now what consideration the board has given to that.

Hon. Mr. Starr: This matter was discussed by the select committee on the ombudsman of which Mr. McClellan—and I'm referring again to him—is a member. In that particular case, if my memory serves me right, even though I was not in attendance at all the hearings, though our Mr. Reed was, the select committee itself did not recommend to the Workmen's Compensation Board that this be carried out.

Mr. Van Horne: I'm aware of that. My concern is whether you saw any merit in it and what action has your board taken, if any, in this instance?

Hon. Mr. Starr: We've seen what British Columbia has been doing in that respect and it's been very small. It has just been in select cases. The fact is that you may not pick the type of case that the person might want for comparison purposes with his own. It seems to me, at the moment at least, that it would be a sort of futile effort.

Mr. Van Horne: Those are the only other points I wanted to make.

Mr. McClellan: I'm in the awkward position of having a couple of concerns that I wanted to raise under administration, but I wanted to raise them with the minister rather than with the Workmen's Compensation Board. I want to say at least for the record, since I believe I'm accurate in saying this, there isn't a single, solitary soul in this room from the Ministry of Labour apart from the Workmen's Compensation Board. Correct me if I'm wrong, Mr. Chairman. There is not a single, solitary soul from the Ministry of Labour office in this room. This is the first time in my experience in the Legislature, and I've been at every Workmen's Compensation Board estimate since I was elected, that we have not had the full-time attendance of the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Chairman: The Minister of Labour (Mr. Elgie) informed me last night that this being cabinet meeting today he would not perhaps be here for most of the hearings. That's all I can tell you.

Mr. McClellan: I'll say again for the record, since there isn't anybody for me to say it to other than Hansard, that I think it's contemptible of the Minister of Labour to absent himself from the estimates of the Workmen's Compensation Board. Our political problems, to the extent that we have political problems with the Workmen's Compensation Board, are addressed to the Minister of Labour. I hope he will read Hansard, but he should at least have the courtesy to this Legislature of attending these estimates.

I will not present my remarks in the absence of the Minister of Labour because they fall within his area of responsibility and I'll hold most of them until he graces us with his presence if he so deigns. Maybe I could just ask a couple of questions of the chairman for purposes of information for my own understanding.

On the temporary supplement provisions out of the Workmen's Compensation Act section 42(5), I have some extended remarks that I want to make about that section but I don't want to make them in the absence of the minister. That is utterly futile since only he can bring in amendments to change inadequacies in the section.

But I want to ask the chairman, do the minimum compensation provisions of section 43 of the act apply to a benefit under section 42(5)? That is to say, if an injured worker is receiving pension plus temporary permanent/partial disability plus a supplement under 42(5) would the minimum amount of compensation provisions of section 43 apply?

Mr. J. F. McDonald: I don't quite understand your question, I'm sorry.

Mr. McClellan: For example—let me put it this way—take a man who was injured in the 1960s and was receiving the minimum wage: would he qualify, so that 75 per cent of his pre-accident earnings would be below the minimum provisions under section 43 for purposes of computing his entitlement?

Mr. J. F. McDonald: His earnings have already been upgraded. If he's receiving a pension his earnings have been upgraded by the provisions of the escalation clauses—having regard for those minimums established under section 43.

Mr. McClellan: That's all I'm trying to understand. Is it impossible for somebody who is receiving the equivalent of full benefits through a combination of pension and section 42(5) supplement to receive less than the minimum as set out in section 43?

Mr. J. F. McDonald: Yes, I would believe so.

Mr. McClellan: I need a little more certainty than that.

Mr. A. G. MacDonald: Is it a hypothetical situation you're asking about, or does it exist.

Mr. McClellan: I don't have any cases—actually, I do have a case; I'm sorry, I do have a case of a recipient who receives a pension plus a wage-loss supplement and who works at the March of Dimes and has a total income that is below the minimum wage.

My question is, does the minimum amount of compensation, as set out in section 43, apply automatically to somebody who is on a pension plus a supplement?

Mr. J. F. McDonald: Not necessarily, because the pension is established on his original earnings rate and may have been escalated. The supplement may or may not bring him up to the equivalent of total disability. The degree of supplement isn't necessarily to total compensation.

Mr. McClellan: I may not understand the section then.

Mr. J. F. McDonald: If the man is being supplemented to the equivalent of full compensation—

Mr. McClellan: That's what I'm asking.

Mr. J. F. McDonald: —then he would receive—

Mr. McClellan: Automatically?

Mr. J. F. McDonald: If that proviso is there, that he is being supplemented to the full amount.

Mr. McClellan: Yes, I'm sorry if I didn't make that clear.

Mr. J. F. McDonald: He may have a 10 per cent pension and a ten per cent supplement; then he's not going to get the full amount.

Mr. McClellan: I'm sorry if I didn't make that clear: a permanent partial disability plus a supplement to make up the equivalent of total disability benefits; so that he would be covered under section 43.

Mr. Hamilton: You can't go below the minimum.

Mr. McClellan: As I said, Mr. Chairman, I have issues to pursue that require the presence of the Minister of Labour, and I'll have to wait until he is kind enough to make himself available to the committee.

Mr. Chairman: Does any other member have any questions to ask or do you want to go down your program here and follow it without general remarks? Mr. Bounsall?

Mr. Bounsall: Are we now on claims, the subsection on applications?

Mr. Chairman: Right.

Mr. Bounsall: Two points come to mind here. I know the provisions in the act with respect to the filing of claims—when they should be entered and so on. You have that provision where, when you have an injury, you have to fill in the report form, a claim must be filed within a certain number of days, and so on. But if the worker is sent to the company first-aid station and it looks to be a little more serious than the company nurse can deal with but it is not all that serious, she does something, he works till the end of the shift, and she says, "Maybe you should see your doctor." He goes to see his doctor and he doesn't do too much more, but he wants to keep in touch; the chap keeps coming back to work when he can over the next month.

Then, all of a sudden, he finds himself in some difficulty; there is a more serious situation than prevailed at the time—certainly more serious than would cause either the nurse or he, not knowing anything much about what happens, if it's his first injury at work and he has no contact with the board to file an application. He then wakes up to the fact that they should file an application, which they do.

In those cases, even though it's a month after the accident and after the nurse has recorded his visit and he can show that he visited his doctor the next day or that evening and so on, why does it seem to take so much longer—statistically, you might prove otherwise; I would be interested if you could—why does it seem to take so much longer to establish whether or not that person is eligible, when clearly he has got a problem as a result of it, just because he filed a month after the injury occurred, the nurse was bright enough to say, "We had better fill out that form and get it in today just in case it happens to develop into something?"

[2:30]

When you run into that delay, that later recognition that the initial injury was one that is going to cause lost time but which isn't clear until a month later, why does it seem to take so much longer to establish the eligibility for that person than if he filed it on day one?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: In the example you have given, it looks as though the nurse sent him to the doctor for a check. He continued to work and was in touch with the doctor and then had to lay off. Then the employer submitted the report. That is the way I interpret the case you are putting forth.

Actually, in that case what should have happened was, as soon as the nurse sent him to the doctor, even though there was no lost time, it should have been reported to us.

Mr. Bounsall: But it didn't happen.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: That is right. I am just making that point.

Mr. Bounsall: A month later they then said they should file a form 7 or whatever it is.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Although this doesn't help the injured man, I would like to put this in before I forget it. That employer would be subject to a charge under section 117(3) of the act for failure to report the accident. We would do that. That is automatic.

To answer your question, I can't really give a definite answer without knowing the circumstances, but there are two types of cases. Some are rather obvious. If it is a laceration and infection sets in, it is rather obvious that something has happened. Fortunately and usually in those cases, we have some medical evidence on file, whether it is a report or an account form or something, that gives us something from the doctor saying he was treating an infection as a result of a laceration. That is not too difficult to adjudicate.

But if it happens to be sprains or strains, which are not quite as easy, I can see cases where we might have to inquire as to the man's condition. We may have to wait until we get something from the doctor to confirm that what he is treating him for now was a result of an accident that happened a month ago.

I don't think this is a very good answer to your question, Dr. Bounsall, because I can only give a general answer. There are some that are easy to adjudicate and others where we have to get information to tie together the present disability as being a result of an accident that happened a month ago.

Mr. Bounsall: I understand your problem. You have to determine that it was done at work and what he is being treated for is a result. It has been my understanding that eventually, two or three months down the line from the time of reporting, it is all accepted. He is paid the days he has lost and he is being looked at regularly by a doctor and so on. But almost invariably, from the time of that late reporting it does take a couple of months for it to get established, whereas if he had filed on day one, as should have been done without question, then a couple of weeks after the first half day he has to take off, he gets his cheque for the half day. There seems to be an inordinate delay when there is a late filing of an accident as opposed to when it is supposed to be filed.

I know the union people who have full-time staff members in the Windsor area who run into that situation—certainly I do in my constituency office—absolutely cringe when a guy walks through either of our doors or into our offices to say, "I think I've got a compensable accident. The company nurse filed form 7 yesterday." You say, "That's good. Everything is going along fine. When did it occur?" Then he says, "Six weeks ago."

You say to the chap, "Are you having to be off work now?" He says, "Yes, exceedingly so. I was able to work yesterday but I'm not able to work today. The doctor has now said, 'Don't go back into work until Monday or Tuesday.' He is going to give me more tests on Monday." Then you know it is going to be a couple of months before he gets that first cheque for any of those days off, but you don't like to tell the worker so as not to discourage him.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: What I would like to suggest is if you have a company or a number of companies in your area which are guilty of failure to report, if we could know about it, we would be happy to send somebody in and try to rectify the situation at the beginning.

Mr. Bounsall: There is no particular pattern to a company nurse or a particular company doctor or what have you in my area who is negligent in this regard. There are a couple of employers who hate to recognize that it might be, but they still file form 7.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Sometimes on the form 7 they cast a little doubt on the claim too, which necessitates an inquiry on our behalf.

Mr. Bounsall: IODE Windsor Western Hospital is a perfect example of that. If they can cast any doubt upon any form 7 that is filed they will, because they hate to pay it out.

This leads me to my next question along the whole claims applications area. I know you file them by claim number, but would it not be useful in terms of—you say to me that if I have a feeling about a particular employer or a particular area in which there are problems to let you know.

Shouldn't the board now be making some cross-reference by employer as to the type of problem that is involved? Let me give you two specific examples. If you were able to look at the claims coming from IODE Windsor Western Hospital, I am sure on many of them you would find exactly what you have mentioned on that form—doubts expressed, almost invariably. That should tip off someone on the board that somebody better go down and talk to IODE Windsor Western Hospital and say, "Why is it only you of all the hospitals across Ontario are casting doubt upon every form 7 that you file?" That is one example.

Number two—it would pick up, I think, what is happening almost invariably with Chrysler. They are well set up to file the accident reports and so on, but their major management employee dealing with WCB claims has no hesitation telling—he doesn't hand out a press release but he has been heard to say many times: "My job is not to deny workmen's compensation or decide whether or not it is giveable; my job is just to question every one of them and try to delay benefits as long as possible."

If you looked at those things and determined by employer which ones were always, or very often, questioning whether or not the accident did occur, you would find some employers were always questioning, and some weren't always questioning, or were only occasionally questioning. You could have whatever sort of talk you would need to have; you could say to that employee who is doing that in Chrysler at Windsor: "Hey, we have now gotten to the point where we are ignoring those requests from you because you cry wolf on 80 per cent of the cases." If you are really doing a job and interested in decreasing delays that occur, you should be doing that cross-referencing by employer to pick up which employers are doing what to the detriment of the worker.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Although we do not have a system of cross-referencing at the present time, we do identify that kind of employer; an employer who constantly, for example, says: "This claim shouldn't be allowed; request an investigation." If we get to know—and adjudicators do because it gets around—that this employer asks for an investigation and questions every claim, we are not going to investigate every one of those claims because we know it is the cry-wolf syndrome. So we deal with the information we have on file; and usually the claims adjudicator calls the company and says: "Look, there is no need for us to investigate this claim. From the information we have on file it is allowable, therefore we don't see any need to investigate it."

We also have a system whereby we identify employers who are constantly late in submitting their form 7, because just collecting a penalty of a few dollars doesn't really do the job. What we want to do is get the employer to report the accident promptly. So we send out staff members, either from head office or the area office, to visit that employer and review with them their reporting mechanism, to encourage and assist them in devising a system to get the reports in to us more promptly.

So although we do not have a system at this point in time of cross-referencing them in the records so to speak, we do identify that kind of employer and we do send staff out to visit them and work with them, as you suggest.

Mr. Bounsall: Therefore, what you are saying is you do have some way, informal or not?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Yes. It is an informal way.

Mr. Bounsall: It is the feeling of the adjudicator in the adjudication branch as to whether, from experience, they are running into this?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: That's right, yes. If it is an employer who only sends in a claim once in a while, but questions every claim once in a while, we probably wouldn't identify that one, but if it is an employer who has a lot of accidents and they are questioning them all the time, and I can think of a few, we know right off the bat, okay, that's another one of the "cry wolf" reports. So we handle it in the way I have described. We just don't automatically send a claims investigator in there to investigate the claim. It depends upon the circumstances.

Mr. Bounsall: As a matter of interest, is Chrysler Windsor in that situation?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: I don't know about that, sir.

Mr. Bounsall: Because this certainly is a chap—he has never said it to me, but all of the people that work in the compensation area, from the union's side and all the chief stewards and what have you, know that virtually every case—I have heard him say it—"My job is not to deny it, that's the board's decision, but I will delay it if I can."

Mr. W. R. Kerr: That's the Chrysler plant in Windsor?

Mr. Bounsall: The big Chrysler Windsor plant, and he does it by questioning whether or not it occurs. He queries the accident. I suppose some accidents are so very clear-cut within the Chrysler plant that it would be unreasonable to query them—

Mr. W. R. Kerr: I would think so.

Mr. Bounsall:—so he doesn't get an opportunity to query everything, but if it isn't exactly clear cut the story within the plant is, he queries it, and maybe your adjudication branch does have that on—

Mr. W. R. Kerr: I thank you for bringing that up and I will check with the adjudication branch on that particular item. I thank you.

Mr. Bounsall: One other point: How many prosecutions were there last year for late filing or non-filing?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: I have a few figures here. For last year, for no-lost-time claims there were 5,937 charges, and for lost-time claims 6,948.

Mr. Bounsall: Did these all result in successful collections?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Some of them are subject to appeal and I don't know how many were relieved of the charge on appeal. I would guess, and this is only a guess, maybe 10 per cent, something of that nature.

Mr. Bounsall: Would be relieved on appeal?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Probably about 10 per cent, but I am not sure of that figure. That figure is better than it was say three, four, five years ago. Under the present administration a great deal of emphasis has been placed with the employers on the importance of filing your accident report with us, and I think generally the picture is better now, despite those figures that I read to you, than it was several years ago.

When we find an employer in this position, there is no doubt about it, we work with him and some of the charges get pretty heavy. They are not just adding up to a couple hundred dollars. In one company it was a very heavy charge and it was appealed through the appeal system itself, going beyond my purview, and the appeal panel upheld the decision that was made and that company paid a hefty charge. So it is something that we take pretty seriously.

Mr. Bounsall: Is that company then watched thereafter?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Oh, yes, sir. We list that company for review by our claims people, our claims services division people, periodically, to see how they are doing.

Mr. Bounsall: So in the claims section you do have sort of a list of companies posted or a memo that they check from time to time?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: I don't know if we would call it a list, but we have a special section where they have special projects, and that is one of their projects, to do that. What we will have available to us when the integrated computer system program comes on line, that's the portion that will serve my end of the business, we will be in a much better position to take a look at all employers through computer printouts, bearing in mind we have 147,000 employers under schedule 1 of the act. The way we do it now, without a computer printout of every employer, it is pretty difficult, but in the future few years to come our computer people will be able to write a program to kick out of the computer the employers who are offensive beyond a certain point. We will set our own parameters and it will report to us the companies that have exceeded the limits that we have set. In the future we will have a much more sophisticated program to catch this sort of thing.

Mr. Bounsall: I assume you would apply the minimum fine in the first instance of late filing on an individual company?

[2:45]

Mr. W. R. Kerr: There are two charges. There's a $25 charge for a no-lost-time claim and a $50 charge for a lost-time claim. We haven't as yet gone above a $25 and a $50 charge.

Mr. Bounsall: When was that minimum figure last updated?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: I think about two or three years ago. What we expect to do with this computer program is if we find an employer—we're thinking on the bad side now, and we must on occasions—who is constantly an offender—this has not been discussed with the board nor has it been recommended to the board which I would have to do at the time —we feel in claims we should be in a position to say to a firm: "Show us just cause why we shouldn't charge you $125 and $150 instead of $25 and $50? But we can't do that now because we're not sophisticated enough in our computer program to provide us with enough data and detail."

We have in mind recommending to the board in due course that we apply that kind of thing within the regulations that are laid down so that if we have a constant offender we don't just charge $25 and $50 but we charge a more hefty penalty.

Mr. Bounsall: You brought up again an interesting concept. You are allowed to go and apply the $25 and the $50 assessment levels for non-filing automatically without having to get permission to so do, I gather.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: That's an approved policy. The adjudicators can do that for every case.

Mr. Bounsall: But is it the policy that they cannot go beyond the $25?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: At the present time the adjudicators are not authorized to charge more than $25 for failure to report a no-lost-time accident and $50 for failure to report a lost-time accident in every instance for that firm. That's how some firms—a few, not too many in this category—run up a fair sized charge because there are a number of medical aid claims they haven't reported. If they haven't reported 10 medical aid claims, that's $250. If it's 1,000, then 1,000 times $25 would be charged against them.

Mr. Bounsall: When you find out they haven't reported them, is this through—

Mr. W. R. Kerr: An accident.

Mr. Bounsall: How do you even discover they haven't reported a no-lost-time accident?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: In every compensation case there are at least three parties. There is the employer; there is the doctor or the person who gives the care; and there's the injured person. In a no-lost-time claim the person is being treated either at a hospital or by a doctor; therefore, that hospital or doctor will submit an account to us to be paid. That's one way we find out about it.

As soon as we receive a notification of an accident from a doctor—and about 35 per cent of the first indications we have that an accident occurred are from doctors—we immediately request a report from the employer. We have a built-in safeguard there.

When there's a no-lost-time accident, the injured employee himself is very likely concerned. So there's another check. He's looking for something from us fairly shortly; and if he doesn't hear from us within a reasonable period, experience shows that either he or someone representing him contacts us immediately. It's not left entirely up to the employer. There are checks and balances.

Mr. Bounsall: I suppose how you hear about a lost-time-accident that wasn't reported to you is that it starts to become serious, involving a lot of lost time. I guess in the first example I quoted no one thought it serious enough to report it.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: They were in error. By law, in that accident you described, as soon as the nurse sent that man to the doctor, it became a medical aid claim. The law says a medical aid claim, a no-lost-time claim, must be reported to the board. The act says that type of claim, even though there was no lost time, should be reported to us because it was a medical aid claim. We're responsible to pay the doctor for his account, as an example.

Mr. Bounsall: I want to ask your personal opinion in one area. I quite agree that the whole thrust here is to get accidents out of the workplace, but where accidents still continue to occur in the workplace you want the employers to do what they should be doing in terms of getting the man or woman in contact with the board and the people we are employing. That is achieved through higher fines.

My question is: In trying to achieve that, would it be, in your opinion, better to be able to charge a higher initial fine or a fine higher than the automatic $25 or $50? Would it be better to do that? It's an opinion I'm asking. Would you like to have discretion in that?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: This is my own opinion and doesn't represent the opinion of the corporate board, of course. I think it has to be a combination of both. There are employers who really have problems in reporting accidents to us. They have operations all around the province and they have a centralized reporting system, and with everything the way it is it just takes too long. So where we send somebody in to work it out, work out a system for them or help them if they want help, we find a number of them do improve. Okay, so I still would think in the future that we should be able to provide that kind of service to the employer.

I think also that when the time comes, and I don't think it's ready now, but when the time comes when we do have our computer system so that we are more sophisticated and can have the computer printouts and compare a company with other companies and be in a position to say: "Tell us why we shouldn't be charging you a $100 and a $150 rather than what we're charging you now for failure to report?" I think it has a role to play as well, because I think experience also shows that when somebody suffers in the pocketbook it has a beneficial effect.

So my direct answer to you is, yes, when the time comes, which probably won't be for two years, I would expect to be recommending to the board that we be given authority to increase the penalties, but I'll have to work out a basis on which it can be done and should be done. I feel there is a strong role to play there, but I also think from the humanistic point of view we have to get in there if the employer is agreeable. If the employer doesn't want to do anything with us, all right, there's only one thing to do then and that speaks for itself. But if the employer wants some help and is willing to co-operate, then I think we should be in a position to help him solve the problem.

Now you may say: "Why do you want to do that?" I think it's important for the claims services division to have a fairly decent rapport with the employers of the province in how we deal with them and how we handle them, because we count on the employers to co-operate with our vocational rehabilitation division and we count on them for a number of things in that area. I've always taken the attitude that if we can help an employer help us adjudicate claims—not the company adjudicate claims, but help us by getting the reports in earlier, responding to our correspondence earlier, getting the earnings in to us earlier—I think we can do a better job for the injured worker of Ontario.

My answer to your question is I think there's a combination of both that we should employ at the appropriate time.

Mr. Bounsall: That appropriate time may not be for a couple of years but then that would give you the capability to make the comparisons and identifications. It might take a couple of years, but that's the time at which you would have a good enough story to an employer to justify your saying to them and having the authority to say to them: "We're going to charge you higher."

Mr. W. R. Kerr: That's right, sir. I think you've summed that up nicely.

Mr. Bounsall: Just one other question if I may. I hate to be local on this—I do have examples from other places in the province, but I have more remembrances off the top of my mind about one particular situation in the Windsor area. Let me generalize it. What do you do when you have a doctor or a group of doctors in a clinic who do not keep adequate medical records of treatment? Are you aware that such things occur? Let me put it that way. Is there any provision for getting at the doctor who does not keep adequate medical records?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: I was just checking with the branch directors here. They confirm that we haven't run into that for a long time. What I have run into, on occasion, and this was years ago, was the situation where you were investigating a claim and the doctor would say: "Gee, I'm sorry; if I had known this was a compensation case I would have kept better records." So I think that when doctors know they're treating a possible compensable injury, they're inclined to keep more records because they know we'll be asking for information—if nothing more than the diagnosis, the treatment and that kind of ongoing information. So in our experience, we found that when doctors are treating compensation cases they tend to have better records. Now I'm not saying they all do, sir, but this has been our experience.

I just checked with my colleagues here. If I may continue: if we found that, I think I would immediately contact Dr. McCracken, the executive director of the medical services division. I'm sure he would probably arrange for one of the senior medical officers to have a chat with that doctor. We would not leave it without taking action. We would take action when and if we identified it.

Mr. Bounsall: Sometime over the next few months would you drop in on the Industrial Medical Clinic in Windsor? This is a medical clinic set up by companies in Windsor to which all of those who have helped to set it up send their injured workers whom the plant nurses, for example, determine need more attention. They are told to go to the industrial clinic.

You can't ever say that they don't take an X-ray because the odd time they do; but again, one cringes in Windsor when a chap comes to you and says: "I'm now losing time from work. I'm having this done to me and that done to me. I'm having trouble with my claim." Then you say: "Okay, who is your doctor?" He says: "I was sent to the industrial clinic." And you know they're going to have minimal records. They won't have looked at the ailment as a man's family doctor would.

You say: "Do you have a family doctor?" He says: "Yes." "Then why didn't you go to your family doctor?" "I'm going to my family doctor now but the company sent me to the industrial clinic." You wished you were right there at the time. The word is out in all the organized plants in Windsor: "Sure, you go to the industrial clinic because the company sent you there; but as soon as you walk out of that industrial clinic, you go to your own family doctor because his checkup is going to be in much greater depth than that done by the industrial clinic."

I'm not making any charges here. But if one wants to be paranoid about it, one would almost think that this industrial clinic, set up by the companies in Windsor, has somehow received a vibe from those companies to the effect that, "if we send you a guy from the plant keep a record, of course, but we're in the game of trying to deny any compensation. Don't take X-rays if you don't really think you have to," et cetera.

Here's a guy with an obviously displaced, dislocated, broken something or other for which no X-ray was ever taken at the industrial clinic. They say: "Put your arm in a sling and if it feels okay, go back to work tomorrow." He's got a dislocated shoulder. It's not okay to go back to work tomorrow but he goes back and tries it. He books off at the end of two hours and goes home because his shoulder is sore. Then, five days later, he realizes that his sore shoulder isn't getting any better. The only medical evidence available is a record in the industrial clinic that the guy reported in with a sore shoulder and they told him to take the rest of the day off.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Right. We'll be happy to take a look at this situation.

Mr. Bounsall: It's a fairly good-sized clinic.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: There's a large volume, I gather, from it?

[3:00]

Mr. Bounsall: Oh yes, a large volume. And it doesn't apply to every doctor there. Surprisingly, there are a couple now who seem to keep decent records and will say to the guy: "Hey, maybe in addition you should go to your family doctor." That has turned up of late—or "maybe you should go and see Dr. Bernstein; there could be something more serious here."

Mr. W. R. Kerr: When Dr. McCracken and I have a chance to talk about this, if you have some examples, perhaps you could share them with us at the appropriate time to assist us in identifying the proper personnel.

Mr. Bounsall: There is only one industrial clinic in Windsor.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: No, I meant cases with which you might be familiar and which would assist us. I'm not suggesting that you do it now but, if I contacted you later, do you think you could help us in that regard?

Mr. Bounsall: Yes; on those who have gone to the industrial clinic?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Yes, that's what I am after. Thank you very much.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. McClellan, you wanted to direct some questions to the minister.

Mr. McClellan: I won't go out of sequence; so I will save the majority of the remarks that I intended to make until I come to the item. However, there is one item that I need to raise now while the minister is here; I don't know whether he is going to be able to stay.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I understood that you made some remarks. If you think that I was not doing what is in line with the custom, I sincerely apologize. My understanding, having just confirmed it with my deputy and with the chairman earlier on, is that it was not the custom that the minister was required to be here at all times. If that is not an accurate representation of the facts as they have been given to me, then I sincerely apologize. But I have just checked that out again. I want you to know that there was no offence intended.

Mr. Bounsall: There is no legislative requirement that you attend. But I can't recall—and some of the other hearings have been much shorter than the 15 hours—where the minister has been absent for a session of it.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: You know I was here last night, and I am making every effort possible to be here as much as I can. I just want you to know that there has been no intent to slight your wishes.

Mr. McClellan: I accept that. But I do think it is useful, if you are not able to be here, to have senior officials from your ministry here.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Good point.

Mr. McClellan: Let me go straight into the matter that I wanted to raise—

Hon. Mr. Elgie: You always do.

Mr. McClellan: I would like to ask if you would give us an update on the status of the study by Dr. Gibson on foundry workers and lung cancer at Dominion Foundries and Steel Limited in Hamilton. I would like to know where the evaluation of that study is at this point in time.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: As you know, following the report, I asked the board to proceed with a review of the study. Would you mind if I asked Dr. McCracken to come over to the microphone? He has been actively involved in that. What was the name of the epidemiologist from the Canadian Cancer Society, Dr. McCracken?

Dr. McCracken: Dr. Miller.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Could you tell us what has happened since the matter was referred to Dr. Miller for his review?

Dr. McCracken: Yes. The Workmen's Compensation Board was asked to take the Dofasco document back and study it in mid-November; so we are now looking at about three and a half months. This document was an epidemiological study in foundry operations and was carried out by the medical staff at Dominion Foundries and Steel.

Mr. McClellan: Excuse me. Just so that I understand, you are talking about the Gibson study?

Dr. McCracken: That's correct. Like most epidemiological studies, it's a complicated document and not readily analysed. The day after the document was turned over to me by the Ministry of Labour, I was in contact with Dr. Miller and discussed the document with him. I told him that we were of the opinion—and Dr. Gibson, the author of the document, agreed with us—that, standing by itself, Dr. Gibson was unable, first of all, to identify what the agent might be that might be causing lung cancer; and on the basis of the study involving relatively small numbers, even though it's a large foundry operation, he was not convinced that he had sufficient numbers that he could state that there was a specific industrial disease that had been identified.

We had analysed the document by that time—the two chest disease consultants to the board, myself, the director of the medical branch, and our consultant in epidemiology, Dr. Chovil.

Mr. McClellan: I just want to understand the sequence. Who is the epidemiologist the Minister of Labour indicated in his statement to the Legislature on November 14 would be commissioned to prepare a report which would express, in the minister's words, "a professional judgement as to whether a causal relationship has been established between the working conditions at Dofasco foundry and the findings of the Gibson study concerning incidence of lung cancer among workers in that foundry"; is that Dr. Chovil?

Dr. McCracken: No, Dr. Miller. Dr. Chovil is our full-time board epidemiologist and industrial disease consultant. Having reviewed the document in the initial 24 hours after we received it, we were instructed that we indeed should immediately proceed to evaluate.

I made contact with Dr. Miller. I explained the problem to Dr. Miller and what would be required. He is totally knowledgeable in this type of study.

His first words were: "This cannot be done quickly, as you know." I said, "Yes, I agree." I said, "My greatest concern, Dr. Miller, is whether or not you are available at this time to consider accepting evaluating the study on our behalf." Fortunately, Dr. Miller said yes, that he would make time to carry this out.

The document was transferred to him. He carried out his preliminary evaluation and reported back to us approximately three weeks later, indicating he had found a number of areas in the study where he was concerned. He felt there had been errors made in the original study; which does not reflect at all on the original authors of the document, it's just due to the nature of the type of study that they are prone to develop these errors.

He subsequently met with the author of the document in Hamilton; reviewed the document and went back and reviewed the data that had been used in the development of the original document and made the corrections.

Following this, he carried out his review and he submitted his final analysis to us approximately five weeks ago. In that document he pointed out, having made the corrections, that in his opinion there were still more lung cancers in the study than what one would expect if there was not something going on which would give rise to the development of lung cancer. He still could not identify the agent of course. He felt that unless there were some other factors which he was not aware of from the study that it must be something that had occurred in the foundry operations some time during the previous 20 or 30 years.

He had reviewed the world literature—which incidentally consisted of about four or five papers which he considered to be valid, the rest he had to exclude. On the basis of the four or five other studies and on the basis of the document from Dofasco, he came to this conclusion.

Subsequent to that we then investigated the 27 claims that had been identified in all. We have obtained the work history data, we have obtained the medical data; and we are now in the position, in conjunction with Mr. Kerr and his staff, of putting it all together to make a determination as to whether or not we are able to identify an industrial disease peculiar to the Dofasco foundry operations that may be giving rise to certain numbers of lung cancers. That's where it stands at the present time.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: So the general principle of a relationship was established, but the extent of it is being considered.

Dr. McCracken: That is correct.

Mr. McClellan: I gather from what Dr. McCracken said that the epidemiologist, Dr. Miller, established the relationship.

Dr. McCracken: If I might just correct that, he established that in his opinion and in conjunction with the four or five other studies in the world literature there appears to be some factor that was giving rise to more lung cancers than one would expect. That is his conclusion.

Mr. McClellan: What does that mean? Does that mean you are applying the principle of benefit of the doubt in the situation of the Dofasco foundry and that you are now proceeding to investigate and determine entitlement for each of the 27 claims?

Dr. McCracken: You don't apply benefit of doubt to a scientific document; you apply benefit of doubt to the individual case. What we are doing now, in conjunction with Mr. Kerr and his senior staff, is looking at all of the 27 cases, the details behind those cases, the details as to the medical diagnoses which, of course, must be established. In conjunction with these, plus Dr. Miller's analyses of the documents, we are now in the process of determining whether or not we can develop guidelines and submit those to the corporate board for approval.

Mr. McClellan: How long is that going to take?

Dr. McCracken: I would estimate that if all goes well we are looking at a matter of the next three, possibly four, weeks.

Mr. McClellan: And at the end of three or four weeks you will have criteria before the corporate board; is that what you are saying?

Dr. McCracken: I would hope that we might have it before the corporate board before then. We possibly might have a decision from the corporate board in approximately three or four weeks.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: The other problem you should probably be interested in, since Dr. McCracken said the exact carcinogenic factor still remains unsettled, is, will whatever rules the corporate board approves of apply to other foundries, and that is the next problem that Dr. McCracken and the group will have to consider.

Dr. McCracken: The answer to that at the present time is no, we don't see how we can apply them. If we are able to develop guidelines for the Dofasco foundry operations, as nobody has any idea what the carcinogenic agent is, we are at a complete loss as to how we could ever hope to apply these guidelines to other foundry operations, that is, directly and as they stand. However, this matter also has been studied since we took over the document and currently we are developing the necessary plan of action to see if we can fingerprint, which is a term we have coined for this, other foundry operations in Ontario, if possible both past and present, if they have records left in the ones that are now out of business, so that we can then make identification and relate one foundry to the other, especially in relation to the material used in the moulds and the core binders. We think now that it has really nothing to do with the metal used, but it well might be it is related to the core binders.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Is there any research going on in that area?

Dr. McCracken: There is research being conducted in the United States at the present time on core binders, but we don't know when that will be completed. We have contacted the people involved and they can't give us any answer. As I said, however, our first step will be to identify what type of moulding materials and what type of core binders the foundries in Ontario have used at present and in the past.

Mr. McClellan: I would like to ask the minister to make a copy available to myself of the Gibson study and the Miller evaluation of the Gibson study.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Dr. McCracken, is that something you can comply with?

Dr. McCracken: As you can appreciate, this is essentially Dr. Miller's document, once again, and Dr. Miller has told me that he has intentions of publishing the report. I would have to check with Dr. Miller to make sure that this won't jeopardize his publishing of it.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Will you check on that? The Gibson report has been published in the Journal of Occupational Medicine, so that is available.

Dr. McCracken: That is correct, the Gibson report has been published and it is a public document.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Do you have the reference to that handy? If not, we can get it for you.

It has been published in the Journal of Occupational Medicine.

Mr. McClellan: I am not sure I understand the other, quite frankly. That was a report prepared at the request of, and exclusively for, the Workmen's Compensation Board.

Dr. McCracken: That is correct, on the specific understanding from Dr. Miller that he is doing this as an outside specialist and expert in this and, therefore, his findings. He wanted to have the right to publish it if he felt that it was of such value as it should be.

Mr. McClellan: I do not edit or publish a Journal of Occupational Medicine and I don't think the good doctor needs to have worries about infringement of copyright.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: But you never know what you might be doing shortly. There may be an election.

Mr. McClellan: I would like, and it is of enormous importance to us and to the member for—

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Well, Ross, if Dr. McCracken encounters any problem I will personally speak to Dr. Miller and ask whether there is any reason it can't be done.

[3:15]

Mr. McClellan: I would appreciate that. Let me say that we will expect this matter to be resolved with the utmost speed. I don't have to remind any of you gentlemen here, from the minister to the chairman of the board to Dr. McCracken to anybody else, about what happened in this matter. The Gibson study was produced and made available in the summer of 1977. Here we are in the spring of 1979 completing work that should have taken about three and a half to four months to complete. It is an utterly intolerable situation that I don't think, because I have a certain amount of trust in this minister, will ever be repeated. But we expect those decisions to be made and to be made quickly.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I couldn't agree more.

Mr. McClellan: If we don't have decisions within three and a half or four weeks—that was the time frame given to us—you will be asked why and I am sure you will be wanting to ask yourself why.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I probably will have asked before you ask me. I would also like just to remind you that Dr. McCracken has indicated they are now trying to see whether those rules, whenever they are drawn up and approved, can be applied to other foundries because there are difficulties. That is another process he has to go through.

Dr. McCracken: That is certainly something that will not be answered in three to four weeks.

Mr. McClellan: I am not talking at this point about other foundries. I am talking about the 27 claims at Dofasco that are outstanding. Some of them have been outstanding for a long time; some of them are death benefits. There are families waiting and depending on the processing of these claims. It is one of the sorrier chapters in the history of this Workmen's Compensation Board.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I don't think the board has to share all the blame. It was a joint problem with the ministry.

Mr. McClellan: Credit where credit is due.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: That's right.

Mr. McClellan: That was the major point I wanted to raise with you. I will want to talk at some length about vocational rehab when we get to that section and about some sections of the act. In less than three minutes, let me make a couple of comments to you about what has happened so far.

Firstly, with respect to the sodium Amytal matter that was raised last evening, Dr. McCracken has informed us that he will consult with the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons with respect to the legality of providing the medical record of the 1978 case. I expect the answer will be no from Dr. McCracken. I want to ask you, both as minister and as a doctor, to review all of the cases—I think six were cited over the last couple of years—in which sodium Amytal has been administered to injured workers at the HNRC and Downsview and to report back to us on your own view on the appropriateness of that particular treatment and of the appropriateness of the way in which that treatment is being administered at the HNRC.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I think there is nothing that prevents me from doing that. There goes Sunday but that is all right. What are you doing this Sunday?

Mr. McClellan: I am canvassing in Scarborough West.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I thought you might be.

Mr. McClellan: Secondly, I would like you to look at Hansard where we talked a little bit about the absence of statistics around current cases involving back injuries when the chairman of the board was talking about the back program. We asked some questions about the adequacy of the program in view of the demand, the numbers of people who needed the service, and it turned out from Dr. McCracken they have no statistics at all as to how many people currently being serviced by the board have back injuries that could benefit from the program.

You need to look with senior officials of the board at some fairly basic administrative shortcomings in the operation of this board. I just ask you to review the Hansard and then to pursue that.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: That's all in Hansard, is it Ross?

Mr. McClellan: Yes. Thirdly, I'd like to ask you right now, in light of a lengthy discussion that Ted Bounsall had with the chairman of the board and Mr. MacDonald, whether you intend to bring in a cost of living amendment to the Workmen's Compensation Act which will compensate injured workers for the cost of living increase in 1978-79 and will, as well, make up shortcomings in 1977 which weren't granted in the previous amendments?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: First of all, is that an assumption that there were shortcomings I wasn't here for—

Mr. McClellan: That's our assumption.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: The question of whether or not there should be some regular upgrading of the pensions on an annual basis is one that was put in the Wyatt report and that whole report has been put to two committees. One is an internal committee that's reviewing all of the items that were proposed in the Wyatt report and also the Wyatt report has been referred by me to the joint consultative committee for their views on it.

In addition to that, as I'm sure you know, the pensions committee is now sitting and their judgement is expected within the next two or three months I understand. When all of that material is before me then I'll be making a submission to the cabinet.

Mr. McClellan: All right. But that sounds distressingly familiar. I have my own version about the purposes of the Wyatt report and the causes of the problems that led to the commissioning of the Wyatt report related to the size of the board's unfunded liability and the refusal of the board to provide an assessment adequate to fund the compensation program as an insurance program.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I think they came out looking pretty good on that though.

Mr. McClellan: They still have about, off the top of my head, in excess of $300 million in unfunded liabilities.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: What was the final view on your unfunded liability? I thought that you came out—

Mr. McClellan: But let's not digress into the unfunded liability because I am not—

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I didn't bring it up.

Mr. McClellan: I am not accepting problems with respect to unfunded liability as an excuse for letting injured workers suffer the ravages of inflation. You can run it through whatever series of committees you like. My constituents who are on workmen's compensation are entitled to an adequate adjustment for the ravages of inflation. Period. That's the only thing I'm interested in.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I think that the minister responded to that last June with the introduction of legislation which did allow for those things over a three-year period.

Mr. McClellan: After a three-year wait in which enormous suffering was endured.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: All I can tell you is that—

Mr. McClellan: I understand the problems you have with your cabinet colleagues, but I would like an assurance from you that you will go to bat for the injured workers of this province and proceed, at the end of the current session at the latest—that is to say by June 1979—to bring in an amendment which will grant an adjustment for the cost of living increase since the previous amendment incorporating shortcomings in the amendments between 1975 and 1978.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: The only commitment I can give you is that I will review the studies that are going on now when I receive them, and make some representations to cabinet as a result of those. That's the only commitment I can give you.

Mr. McClellan: If I could have an assurance, and I take that as an assurance, that you will take a recommendation to cabinet, that's all I can ask you to do.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: It is one of several items that are being reviewed by committees, that's all.

Mr. McClellan: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Is there any more discussion on claims?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Close the door, will you?

Mr. Martel: Yes. We're going to be here for a while.

Mr. McClellan: I was just stalling.

An hon. member: You were just stalling so he could get in here.

Mr. Martel: Just arrived on time.

An hon. member: Does the barber know you're here?

Mr. Martel: Not yet. I had to put him off. He's looking for me.

Mr. Lane: Why not have your hair cut now?

Mr. Martel: It will wait. It's waited this long; it can wait a few more hours.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Think of me as your doctor and treat me well.

Mr. Martel: My argument is with the board. I hope they don't take offence.

Mr. Lane: They never have in the past.

Mr. Martel: Oh, they have. As late as last night. I continue to be mystified—I really do—at what's going on.

In five months—a very careful tabulation—my riding office has handled 290 cases. Those are not cases where we just talked to the individual. We didn't include those—where people came in and asked for advice and information.

In September 1978, we had a caseload of 72 cases for the month. In October we had 48 cases and in November we had 65 cases. In December we had 43 cases—we were only open three weeks. I gave my assistant a week off for Christmas. In January we had 62 cases, for a total of 290 cases. Out of the 290 cases, 164 were resolved in favour of the workers. In 76 cases we were not able to alter the decisions of the board. Fifty cases were still pending as of February 1.

I would like to divide those cases into two groups: the short-term cases and the long-term cases. Those on which decisions had already been reached, I'll call the long-term ones; the others were short-term. I was gratified that the board sent someone to my office a week ago Monday. We spent from 10 o'clock in the morning until roughly 6:30 p.m. on it—two people, in fact.

What we were attempting to do was to try to find out where it is that things get botched up. And it is not in the Sudbury office. We pulled at random some 50 claims, all of which had gone a minimum of six weeks without payment and some running to about 10 weeks. The Sudbury office was most helpful. Mr. Rorik and his staff contacted Toronto and within 48 hours most of those people were paid.

What irritates me so much is this. Why would workers have to come to us in the first place and then, within 24 hours to 48 hours, cheques for those 50 or 60 claims—we gave copies to your staff and they're trying to find out why—could be on their way to workers who had gone six to 10 weeks without pay? There has to be something wrong when that can occur. It isn't just coincidence that Garnet Rorik can phone someone in Toronto and a file can be dug out and very quickly payment can be made. I'm gratified that the payment could be made.

What irritates me is, where is it getting botched up down here and how could it be resolved in 24 to 48 hours? Why shouldn't that be happening sooner? Why should we have to draw it to the board's attention? Where are these files being mislaid or lost—or whatever is happening that prevents a worker from being paid? There's something wrong. There's something wrong in the system at the main office that allows this to go on.

I think your people agreed with me that it just wasn't coincidence. It wasn't one or two cases they were able to resolve in a hurry; it was a whole series—50 or 60.

How does a worker in this province go six, eight or 10 weeks without any income? He has house payments to make and he's got all the payments the rest of us have. What does it do to a worker when that occurs? I just can't for the life of me understand it. I just can't. There has got to be something botched up somewhere.

[3:30]

We did this careful tabulation in order to try to indicate to the board that there is something wrong. I guess that is one of the reasons I would like to see decentralization. Maybe that wouldn't occur, maybe it wouldn't get left on the bottom of the pile. I don't know if it is getting left on the bottom of the pile and new ones are being thrown on top. I just don't know how that many get lost.

What also worries me is, if this many people come to me—and my other two colleagues from Sudbury get the same sort of workload I get—Jim Hickey from United Steelworkers is handling anywhere from 80 to 100 claims a week and I know Eddie Nitchie of the Mine Mill union is handling a bunch. That isn't our job, but we do it. I don't see that as my function as a legislator and I don't see that as a function of the United Steelworkers or the Mine Mill union; I see that as a board function to make sure that doesn't happen. There is something sadly lacking somewhere when that can go on and on and on.

I want to tell you, my caseload is now higher than at any other time in my 12 years in this Legislature. That is critical. I am being critical of the board, but on behalf of the people who are having a heck of a time. That has got to be resolved somehow.

I guess it leads me to some of the problems the board has. It has problems with employers who don't send in reports. I understand that. What action does the board take if you have this ongoing process? Some of the excuses we get are: "We haven't got a medical report" or "We don't have a report of the accident." I tell you, it is time the board got tough in terms of making sure those reports are coming in, because while other people might be able to afford to sit back, workers in this province can't wait for that income. I am amazed that we have to go through this exercise when in fact once the thing is triggered in Sudbury, in 48 hours it is paid.

The second group of claims I want to deal with is the long-term claims. I get increasingly frustrated where the board has rejected a claim. I have handled quite a number of appeals, as many of the board members know, and they are frequent, both here and in Sudbury. If I can find medical evidence which changes or reverses a decision, why can't the board? If the board is truly interested in representing workers, why is it that I can find the medical evidence, and I don't have the investigation staff the board has, to get so many changed? That is the board's function.

I think of the case of the fellow from Nova Scotia—and I am not going to go into cases—where I could find three specialists' reports that were on file here in Toronto with different doctors and a couple of doctors from Nova Scotia and the board's decision is reversed. The point I am making is that if I can find it why can't the board? That, surely to God, is a board responsibility. It is not mine. I do it because that worker is in trouble.

I am saying the board should be making sure every doctor who is involved in the case is contacted and in such a way that—I can ask a question one way and get the type of answer I want, but if I take the time to ask the doctor, "Is there a reason? Is it related somehow to an original accident based on your having seen the patient and seen the history?" and if I can get a doctor to explain it in detail to me why doesn't the board do it? Surely that is the role of the board, to put together all of the facts on behalf of the worker?

I get the sensation all the time, and my colleague from Nickel Belt this morning put it to Mr. Starr, that it is an adversary system; the worker has to prove he is right. Surely the board should be interested in not proving the guy is right or wrong, but what are the actual medical facts?

It's with difficulty that members of this Legislature have to go continuously to doctors and ask for a doctor's report. We know how busy doctors are filling out reports. In the Sudbury area doctors do not want to handle compensation claims for claimants. They prefer to put it through OHIP. They prefer not to have the patient come to them in many instances if it means dealing with the Workmen's Compensation Board. That's no secret. That's a reality.

I think it's time the board, when it listens to information from the attending physicians, asked the pertinent questions. The most pertinent is, "Do you think the present condition is an aggravation of a pre-existing condition or is related to the original accident? If so, tell us why." That would get a whole series of us out of the ball game: we would not even be required to get involved. Surely, that's what we're after; the board should function—in the first group I talked about—to get the claimant paid. In the complicated cases, the board should be doing everything in its power to sort it out.

I know people are going to say, "We do that." You don't. I don't know how many claims I've got. I've got four appeals coming now in the next month. In the month of September I had five. In the month of October I had four or five. When we take the time to get the information, most of them are successful. That's what irritates me too. If I can gather it why can't the board? They could take a little more time, do the investigation more thoroughly, and render a decision that's fair.

Also in the long-term claims, I guess one of the things I find most irritating and one of the reasons—and I spoke to the minister on a number of occasions about this—is in the medical information itself. I'm tired of a system where the attending physician says this man is not capable of returning to work and some board doctor says, "Oh, yes, he's ready to resume work." Because the board then accepts, in my opinion anyway, the advice of the consultants at the board, over and against the attending physician.

I've seen this hundreds of times—not occasionally; too many times. In fact, some of the letters I write to Bob Didiuk I sometimes wonder why he answers because I become so indignant in them. If I do it's simply out of absolute frustration with the number of people who come daily. I can spend a Monday or Friday in my office when the House is sitting and nearly everyone I see is WCB and nearly every letter I have is WCB. So many times, the board doctor is saying, "He can resume work," and the attending physician is saying, "No, he can't resume work." Of course the board accepts the advice of the board doctor, but is that fair to the worker?

I said last night that maybe we should have a couple of doctors there to whom other people could turn for advice so that the worker has a fair shake. I don't think he gets the fair shake when the board says to the attending physician, "You're all wet; we're saying it's either not related or the worker is ready to resume work," and the attending physician is saying, "No."

I gave to your representative last week four or five letters. In the past five or six months I guess I've given 10 or 12 letters to the board where the physicians in Sudbury are writing me and saying, "Look, what the hell is going on? I think this man should be off," and the board is saying, "No, and I've treated him all along." That's got to be sorted out. This includes people like Dr. Bateman from Toronto; Dr. Morgan in Sudbury; Dr. MacKay in Sudbury; Dr. Lloyd Kerr.

It goes on. I'm not even soliciting or asking them to give me medical evidence. They're sending people to me with letters, asking us to sort them out. And I'm saying the board has got to sort those out somewhat better. I don't know how we do it.

If you accept the consultant's position as against that of the family physician or the attending physician, on what grounds? Frequently neither you nor your consultant has ever seen the man, just the medical reports. I'm no doctor, so I really can't argue who is right. But I find it very frustrating to find the family or attending physician coming to me to say, "Look, I think this man is being shafted."

Recently, a physician took an hour from his very busy schedule to sit in my office and give me the full details of the strangest decision that I have ever seen handed down on appeal. It was a decision which said, "You are not eligible for benefits for the past 18 months but, if you go to the hospital tomorrow and get the surgery which we have denied for 18 months, you will now be eligible for benefits." That was kind of strange. But it was the attending physician who spent an hour in my office explaining to me why it was that this man should be entitled to benefits.

I say there is something wrong in that area where the board doctors are making decisions. I don't know how we sort it out, but surely it has got to be sorted out.

There are the two areas of claims—and maybe I could get some answers on the two areas—but in the short term I would like to know what is happening, how they are getting lost and the whole thing about the complicated cases; those are the ones that I expect to be somewhat involved in, because it is difficult—I understand that—to get all of that information. But somehow your investigations have got to become somewhat improved, because I can get the medical information, and I know that it is much easier for your medical staff to approach doctors and get medical information than it is for me. There is something lacking there somewhere.

The third point, which is second only to the latter one, is that when the board doctor or Downsview says he is ready to go to work, and the attending physician says he is not, it then becomes a major battle. How do we decide what we do with that worker? There are many of those cases.

Hon. Mr. Starr: It is very difficult, Mr. Minister, to answer the general discourse that Mr. Martel has given us in all of these cases, lumping them, as he does, into a matter of procedure that is taken when adjudication is taking place. I am sure that Mr. Martel will acknowledge the fact that Bob Didiuk has been of excellent service to him in trying to sort out some of these problems that he is facing.

There is no question but that most people are faced with problems. I recall very vividly when I was a member of Parliament that, despite the fact that this is a provincial jurisdiction, I was still inundated with compensation cases about which I wrote to the Workmen's Compensation about to get an explanation.

These things are not really going to go away, because we do make decisions which in many cases are not popular. It doesn't matter what kind of a system you devise, if you are making a decision, you are not going to make a decision that will be acceptable to the person concerned unless he gets the full amount of money that is available under the act.

You stated that when there is a difference between the opinion of the attending physician and that of someone in our own organization, say directly connected with our adjudication process, that we do take their side. I'm not sure about that. In most cases, I don't know whether favouritism is played in that respect by adopting the decision of our own doctors.

I wonder whether Bill Kerr could go into more detail, or probably Dr. McCracken, as to the operation of this.

[3:45]

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Yes, I would like to make a few comments, and perhaps Dr. McCracken would like to. With respect to the 41 claims to which Mr. Martel referred, as he knows, and as arranged with him, they are being reviewed by two senior claims people, two supervisors, to find out what went wrong. The director of the claims adjudication branch and I will get a full report on it to see what we can learn from this. I believe, too, Mr. Martel, that Mr. Adamson said you would be provided with a report, so we will be in touch with you again on that.

There are some problems existing today that are coming to the foreground that perhaps didn't exist before. I think we are finding a little bit more difficulty and, by the way, may I just preface my remarks, these are not excuses, I am just sharing some problem areas with you. Since the Krever commission and the Williams commission hearings we find that a number of doctors are more reticent to give us information over the phone. For instance, if there is medical information outstanding in a continuing claim, the claim has been allowed but we need some more information on which to base further compensation payments, we will telephone either a counsellor in an area office or a claims adjudicator in head office, who will telephone the doctor's office to try and get information. They are more reticent now and are reluctant in many instances to give that kind of information out over the phone. That is one area that we are attacking.

Another development since these two commissions held public hearings is that the hospitals are very slow and, indeed, quite reluctant to give us information on local investigations from the hospital records of the individual, even though our man has his identification from the board and he has with him an up-to-date valid waiver, an authorization from the injured person to have this information made available to our claims investigator so that a decision can be made. That got so bad that Dr. McCracken and I have devised a list of hospitals to which a special letter will be sent, because we are finding that this is hindering us in trying to make decisions as promptly as possible.

I must say that not all hospitals in Ontario are like that. We are not using a shotgun approach; we are dealing with the hospitals who are giving us a problem in this area. In fact, some problems have been resolved by our staff in the area offices going out and visiting the hospitals.

Another area where I am encountering some difficulty is the length of time that it takes my staff, my claims investigators located throughout Ontario, to conduct investigations, to get the information locally to send to the claims adjudicator or, indeed, to the review branch or, indeed, to the appeal panels, which has been requested by those adjudicating bodies for adjudication purposes.

This is something that I will be discussing with the board on April 6, to see what arrangement we can make to improve our strength in that area.

In so far as our staff is concerned, claims adjudicators, we have a good bunch of people who are enthusiastic, they are people who have good potential, they are gaining experience as we go along and I think that we will find their skills will improve because of the kind of training they are getting now and I look for good things in that area.

I am hopeful that there will be fewer mistakes. The chairman and all of us have said that mistakes occur from time to time and we are doing everything we can to minimize mistakes and to improve the skills of our people.

So we are attacking these problem areas, and particularly the complicated unadjudicated claims and the complicated reopened claims, and Mr. Martel has heard me say this so often I am sure he is a little bit sick of it, but we still haven't completely solved how best to solve the challenge of making decisions on those very quickly. I personally feel the only way to do it is to have them investigated locally by a field investigator at a point earlier in time. We have this under discussion now and it is a point that will be discussed with the board. Recognizing that there are areas that we wish to improve, I hope this gives a little idea of the fact that we are cognizant of them and that we are trying to attack them with a sense of urgency so that we can make improvements rather rapidly.

Mr. Martel: Could I ask, Mr. Kerr, is there any indication where the system is breaking down here in the simple cases, the ones I handed to your people? It has got to be breaking down somewhere because those cases were all resolved, when Rourke got hold of you, within 24 to 48 hours. Most of the material had to be there.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: One of two things happened, Mr. Martel. Perhaps the material was there in some of the instances. Other things could have happened. They could have said, "This is so long, throw everything out the window and pay." Maybe it got to that point. Maybe they paid it without even any justification in view of everything that has happened.

I think my honest answer to you is that the system itself is good. When we analyse these 41 cases we will be in a position to tell you where it broke down and we will learn something from that. I do think that in a number of instances we will find that's what has happened. They have just said, "It's so far behind and we're getting no place, we'll take a chance. The man says he is disabled, Mr. Martel says he is still disabled, pay the man." I have seen cases like that where we've had the troubles that I've described to you and we've just said that we have no alternative but to pay the man under those circumstances.

Mr. M. Davidson: May I ask a supplementary to that? Are you saying in fact that those cases sat there until some pressure was brought to bear and then they suddenly said throw everything out of the window and pay them?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: No, sir.

Mr. M. Davidson: Is that what you're saying?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: No, sir, I'm not saying that. The example is that we have a case that has been accepted and payment has been ongoing, and it's quite a legitimate claim, but for some reason we haven't been able to get a response from the doctor or get the information we need on which to base further compensation.

Two qualifications have to be present before we can pay compensation. One, the claim has to be allowed, basically it has to be allowed. Secondly, we pay compensation on the basis of medical information that confirms the man is still disabled and off work as a result of the accident. In the example that Elie has, the claim was allowed but we didn't have sufficient ongoing medical information on which to base further payments.

What I am saying is that I can visualize when you get to a certain point you have to do something. If we can't get any information from the doctor and we're in this position that the man has problems, financial problems, and he's up against it, then I think there's the odd time where we have to take a chance. Where we would normally not pay until we had supporting medical information on file we have to take a chance and pay it.

I am not suggesting that we do this with all claims or that we should do this as a routine, because there are certain checks and controls that are required when we pay compensation, but I do think that you have to use a practical approach.

Mr. M. Davidson: Had Mr. Martel not brought those matters to your attention or the attention of the board, what you're telling me in effect then is that they may still be sitting there waiting for that claim to be processed.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: No, there is a regular review. Claims are reviewed every 13 weeks by somebody other than the claims adjudicator who is responsible for the handling of that claim, so that would be picked up on the next review, plus the fact that the man himself, of course, could go to our local office and share the problem with us.

Mr. Martel: Well, there's a problem though, because all the cases I gave you were just the ones we picked that were six weeks and over without pay, six to 10 weeks. Maybe that's got to trigger in much sooner.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: You see also, every two weeks we notify the man. The man is not without notification. There is a form that goes out that lets him know.

Mr. Martel: No, no, no. I'm sorry but that is not happening, Mr. Kerr; that's just not happening. You will find in those cases you are looking at that is just not happening.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: All right, we'll look for that in these cases.

Mr. Martel: I try to get from them any information they have. When they come to my office it's standard procedure they walk in and they've got a handful of envelopes. That's the standard procedure. You see the board thing on them and right away you think, "Oh, no, not another one." They've got a whole file. They just walk in. The way they walk in you know it's a board problem.

You see, contrary to what the chairman said the board image in the Sudbury area is not very high. If one looks at the ombudsman report, the ombudsman was in Sudbury just recently and out of 108 cases heard, 36 of them were WCB. They were fully one third of the ombudsman's cases. Then he went over to Sturgeon Falls and it was eight out of 51. Then he went to North Bay and it was 19 out of 82 people who appeared before the ombudsman. Their image isn't very high.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Going back to your point, Mr. Martel, we will look for that and if the notification was sent out it will be signified in the file so we will be able to identify that and report to you.

Mr. Martel: I would hope so because they tell me they are not getting it. I ask for information. I like to know what the problem is. That is one of the frustrations for me with this much volume in compensation alone—20 cases weekly. In addition to everything else we are trying to do, we are not doing the injured worker justice because we just have to handle it too darned quickly. We are not doing him justice when we have to go through it quickly and not read the information maybe as carefully as we should.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Every two weeks—just to go back to a point, Mr. Martel—as I mentioned to you, we do take action to try to contact a doctor, phone him, and send a letter. If we don't get a response, we get the director of the medical branch involved. There are occasions when we are up against a stone wall.

Mr. Watson: Had those people who came to you been to the workmen's compensation office first?

Mr. Martel: We are trying to sort that out now. We have an agreement with the Sudbury office that the first question we ask is, "Have you been to the Sudbury office?" If they have been, we say, "We are not taking any detail because we are going to give the Sudbury office time to sort it out." We have an agreement with Mr. Rourke that we will give them at least 48 hours before we phone it in.

Mr. Hamilton: How long has that been going on?

Mr. Martel: We have been doing it now for about six months.

Mr. Hamilton: Has it shown any results?

Mr. Martel: No. Because people are still coming to us.

Mr. Hamilton: I certainly agree that the caseload you reported to me today should not be in your office. We had a similar kind of reporting two or three years ago. I recall when I first came to the board the staffing in the Sudbury area office was six people. The caseload in your office was a lot lighter than that which you report to us today.

The last time I was in the Sudbury office I think I counted something like 30 bodies. I think the staffing for rehab and everybody else who works in and out of the Sudbury office is now somewhere around 30 people. I am absolutely astounded that the caseload has not been transferred from your office to the Sudbury area office because that is where it belongs.

Are you partly to blame because it is not transferred to the Sudbury office? Are you encouraging it to come into your office or are you encouraging it to go to the Sudbury office? If we have gone from five or six people in that office to 30 people and we are not doing the job we pay the dollars for the manpower to do in that office, then we have wasted our time and our energy.

Mr. Martel: We have met on a number of occasions. We have had Mr. Rourke out on another occasion where he spent the whole day going through my files again. There is a great mistrust of the board unfortunately. We worked out this agreement with Mr. Rourke that we would not touch it.

If they had been to the Sudbury office first, we would not even take information; but we would ask the worker to wait for 48 hours. That is the agreement we have with Rourke. At the end of 48 hours, usually the worker would be contacted so that we wouldn't have to get involved at all. We don't count that as showing up if the guy makes the contact but we don't take the information. We don't show that as a contact at all. We are trying to do that.

As for these other people, some of them simply hadn't gone to the office. I don't know how we can get them to go to the office because, as I say, the service I am getting out of the Sudbury office is first rate. I have no kick about the type of service I am getting, but they are coming to us.

Mr. Hamilton: My colleagues and I have got a complaint. If we have done everything humanly possible from a financial point of view and a body point of view to man the Sudbury office so that the caseload isn't in your office, something is wrong in your office or in the Sudbury office or in the head office in Toronto. Have we wasted our time and our money in manning the Sudbury office the way we have in the last three or four years? [4:00]

Mr. Martel: I think much of the problem stems right in what's happening with the files here at head office. Your man in Sudbury, your head man and his staff, are doing a good job but people just go to them when they're not getting paid and it breaks down.

Mr. Hamilton: All right, all right.

Mr. Martel: Now why should it break down?

Mr. Hamilton: Okay, let's get to the nitty gritty of the thing. Have you any concrete suggestions of how we get, with even the mistrust that you say exists—and I'll accept that there's some of that—get the caseload transferred from your office and all of your colleagues' offices in Sudbury to our office so that we can handle them?

Mr. Martel: I'm not sure how we're going to do it because I tried to meet with the USW this week and the only reason that we couldn't meet was that the minister's mediators were meeting with the bargaining team on Monday. We attempted to meet with them to see if there was a way, because I don't think the Steelworkers should be handling 100 cases a week either.

Mr. Hamilton: Of course not.

Mr. Martel: Surely we've got to somehow get them to go to the board office first and if they are turned down there then they might come to us, because the 41 cases we handled were all resolved, and successfully.

Mr. Hamilton: Now then, let me ask you another question—

Mr. Bounsall: I also want answers to some—

Mr. Hamilton: Oh, I'm sorry, yes.

Mr. Van Horne: Speaking of nitty gritty, I'd like to ask a question.

Mr. Chairman: Just a minute, I think in fairness, Mr. McClellan has indicated he wants to speak on this, Mr. Van Horne and then you, Dr. Bounsall.

Mr. Bounsall: Well this was to follow up directly to the question Doug had asked, then if anyone else wants to follow it directly too, fine. The function which is decentralized fully in the local office works well there. Voc rehab is fine in the local office because it's all there. The problem that's encountered—

Mr. Hamilton: Don't run out on me, Elie.

Mr. Martel: I just have to make a very important phone call.

Mr. Hamilton: Okay, come on back.

Mr. Van Horne: We can't get along without him.

Mr. Bounsall: He's picking up another case.

The problem with someone who has a problem with a claim, whether it's a delayed cheque or what have you, and they go to the local office, is the only thing that the local office can do is get back what they are told from Toronto, usually by the computer TWX or whatever it is, and that doesn't often tell them very much. So they go to the local office, and because the file isn't there and because they can only get back there whatever is told them either by the computer printout or if they make a call and the file can be found and information given over the phone, that's all right, but they can't usually get someone to get their hand on the file right away so they can tell them.

That's the problem. They don't have the files there, they have to rely only on what comes over the TWX, and unless they make a call to someone who will actually go to the file, open it up and be able to, from the file, tell them what the problem is, then they can't get the answer from the local office.

When you decentralize claims review to the local areas and have the files in the local areas, that's when you can use the local office.

Mr. Hamilton: I can't solve Elie's problems and wait for the decentralization of claims. It's so much more an immediate problem than that and has to be solved as he says, quickly.

Mr. Bounsall: Here's my problem: I can make the phone call to Les Liversidge, my appointee, and Les can go to the file, open it up, tell me what the problem is and the recipient knows as soon as Les gets back to me. When they go to the local office, they do the computer terminal bit and back comes something which isn't the solution to the question they've asked.

Mr. Hamilton: I was coming to your proposition and that is where the members of Parliament are assigned a person in our office who gives them as you say, fairly good service I would think by and large, why can Elie and the people in the Sudbury office where this caseload is so heavy not take advantage of that service as you have done?

Mr. Bounsall: I'm sure Elie does that.

Mr. Hamilton: Yes.

Mr. Bounsall: We do. I'm sure the person who is assigned to us is who we call or who we write.

But somehow the local officer set up not to have a person like that for them or not to have a person who can go to the file right away. All they have to rely on immediately when the person walks in is what appears on that computer screen, or make a phone call. Maybe there's the weakness. When the local office phones to get more detailed information out of the claimant's file to answer the question, it doesn't get as good service as I get out of Les Liversidge, let's put it that way. In other words, through the local office, the claimant doesn't get the information about what the hell is going on and it's not the local office's fault at all.

Mr. Hamilton: I'm not blaming anybody, I'm looking for solutions. When you were out of the room, Mr. Bounsall said he could get fairly good service if he contacts his contact man in the Toronto office.

Mr. Martel: Yes, we did that for a long time but, with discussions, tried to shift it from the Toronto office here to the Sudbury local so we could deal directly with them that way. My assistant in the north now handles all the compensation claims I get so that there is a direct liaison. The only thing I deal with Toronto with now is the second group, the much more complex cases, because the files are all in Toronto and those I put in writing and write to Toronto for. But that's one of the problems.

Mr. Hamilton: Let me make you another proposition, Elie. If you had a contact man in the Sudbury office the same as we have in the Toronto office, albeit the file is not there, and whenever anybody came into your office you sent him over to the contact man in the Sudbury office, would the effect from a service point of view not be the same to you? Then you could call him back and say two days later, "What did you do for that fellow?"

Mr. Martel: We do. We deal directly with Mr. Rorik, and he gives us good service. Those are for the ones, I don't want to say they're simple because they bog down somewhere, but those are usually the short-run type of problem where no payment has been made. For the other group we deal directly with Didiuk here in Toronto because he has to have the whole file to answer the questions we're raising. Those are the ones that have been rejected by the board and are somewhat more complex. So we put those in writing. The others we deal primarily with are the ones we think can be quickly handled; a payment hasn't been made or the cheque isn't there for some reason. Usually, it deals right away with money. So those we're dealing directly with in the Sudbury office.

We had to work that out to try to get the local office to be used, but we've gone one step further. When workers phone us we ask them if they've been to the board first. If they have we say, "Look, give the Sudbury office 48 hours to respond to you and if at the end of the 48 hours you don't have a response then get in touch with us because we're trying to get them to use the Sudbury office rather than come to us." But there's a group that simply won't go to the Sudbury office. I'm saying that if you just look at what Floyd, Bud and I are handling in conjunction with Hickey and Nitchie, it has to be almost 200 cases—let's say, about 175 cases a week.

Mr. Hamilton: I don't know how we're going to do it but I know in my bones what I have to do and that is to get them transferred from your office to our Sudbury office by some way.

Mr. Martel: Yes, and that's why we tried to make a deal on Monday to see if there was anything jointly we could do to try to get that working. What I'm saying to the Steelworkers local and Mine Mill is really, unless they're very complicated, we should somehow be getting those people directly to the board office. We shouldn't have to delve into those at all because that's what we've got at compensation. That's what the compensation board is there for, to serve the needs of the people who are coming to it. They won't go; it's that mistrust. Every time something changes quickly, it builds it up. Let me give you an example.

Mr. Hamilton: I want to touch on another problem—I had it for many years—and I want you to tell me whether I'm wrong or not. For many years at the federation office on any given Monday morning you would see the same 15 or 20 people there every Monday morning; they were the chronic compensation cases. You got to know them by name and who they were. They had been through every conceivable mill, and there was just no way the board could or would help them. They were at the end of the rope, but they came to visit us every Monday morning and reported in. I'm sure they went down the street to the member of Parliament's office on Tuesday; that was part of their hobby. How many of those will you have in your office?

Mr. Martel: Not many. After a while we sort them out. We simply say to them, "You've got to get us some new medical information, otherwise we can't do a thing to help you. It's all based on medical information. If you want to sign a waiver, we'll write your doctor." We have two or three or four who are there all the time—you're like the godfather to them—but those aren't the ones I'm talking about.

The cases I've illustrated are the ones where we actually got involved. We talked to some of these and said there was nothing we could do unless they had medical evidence. The numbers I gave you are only cases where we made contact with the board in Toronto or the board in Sudbury. That isn't for the other guys; there might be a couple in there, but not really many.

Mr. Hamilton: I want to switch horses a little bit and deal with another aspect of your proposition at the outset; that is, the relevance of the local family doctor, particularly at the appeals level. I say this carefully, because in some instances we accept the family doctor from the time the worker hurts himself until he's at the end of the road; there is never any question in my mind about that claim.

But where you have the chronic claims and they come to fruition at the appeal board level, usually there is a stack of evidence about that high in the appeal board file—the fellow has been for x-rays; he's been to a hospital; he's been to the local family doctor; he's been to the chiropractor; he's been to somebody else—but maybe he has never been to an orthopaedic surgeon or the qualification that is required medically.

I find, with pretty great consistency, that the evidentiary value of the family doctor's report in that context is not much good. I'll tell you why. He doesn't—not always; I'm trying to be careful—give you a proper diagnosis; he gives you very little medical evidence. What he says, generally, is: "Dear Jack has been a good citizen of this community. He goes to church on Sunday. He's got five kids. They're having trouble getting enough groceries. He's got a pain in the back. Will you do something for him?" That's the evidentiary value of that evidence, against a report from an orthopaedic surgeon who has done x-rays, had him in hospital and so on.

Where there is anywhere close to equality of medical evidence, when you arrive at the appeals I, and I am sure my colleagues, will accept without question the family doctor's evidence. But in too many cases it has no medical evidentiary value at all when you're dealing with the totality of the evidence. That's the first point I want to make to you.

The other point is a general one that we'll come back to when we start to talk about appeals. There are a number of ways of dealing with appeals. You simply hear the evidence that is available and attainable the day you make your pitch at the board level and you make a decision on that evidence. Then, if you need new evidence, wherever it may come from or arise, you have another hearing and get on your way.

The way we operate now, as you know very well, is that we hear all the evidence; and if there are any gaps in the evidence—if we need another x-ray or another medical opinion, or if we need to have him seen in hospital—we say we'll wait and have this investigation done. And there is the root of a lot of our delay troubles. Even with the most expeditious service from the hospital or the doctors, we have great difficulty in meeting any time schedules and that is where we get into great difficulty.

If the day I heard your plea at an appeal I could simply make the decision on the evidence that was on the table, you would have no delay because the next day or the day after you could have your report and be on down the road, wherever it might be. But you wouldn't. Usually it is an endeavour to help get some evidence to help the man and we do that constantly.

Mr. Martel: There are several problems. I won't name the doctor, but I know there is a neurosurgeon in Sudbury of whose material the board is always dubious. I guess I was before the board last fall on seven or eight cases and seven were his. Here is a neurosurgeon giving evidence and somewhere along the line it is not being accepted. Nearly every one of those cases was ultimately reversed. I don't know how that happens.

I also get frustrated. As you know, I have been before you many times. I usually come with pretty good medical evidence, or I try to. I don't go all the way to the appeal route without something to substantiate why I am there. I can get that kind of information by writing and by asking the doctor rather specifically—the specialist—when I write, "Do you think there is a relationship?" Frequently, I get letters saying yes, and he identifies it and we present it. The question is, does the board do it in that fashion? When you are looking for medical evidence in an appeal investigation are you, in fact asking those types of questions?

I am sure doctors aren't distorting the medical evidence to give to me, out of the goodness of their hearts. They are doing it because this is their medical finding. They are using their medical ethics and that is what they are doing. If I can get that much evidence, my question is, why can't the board in its investigations, which would I am sure reduce many of the appeals heard presently? I guess it ties in with the other thing that changed, once you have had a decision by the review committee you have to go the appeal route anyway. I think that is crazy. Pardon me for saying so. I think the fact that when new medical evidence is submitted—we have to go the appeal route and cannot go back to the review committee is nuts. But we can't and that takes a lot of time—I think wasted time—on behalf of the claimant.

Mr. Hamilton: Hopefully now three weeks.

Mr. Martel: Hopefully. If you have new medical evidence why should it go to appeal?

Mr. Hamilton: I am not arguing with you on that point.

Mr. Martel: OK, go back to the other point. If I can find the medical evidence, why can't the board get it?

Mr. Hamilton: We do. I am not saying we do in all cases—we don't. The pursuit of medical evidence is a question Mr. Kerr and Dr. McCracken can answer. What do they do? If you want to ask that question of them, ask it.

Mr. Martel: Certainly, because I get frustrated when I can get that type of medical evidence—

Mr. Hamilton: Ask Bill Kerr or Dr. McCracken because they would both be involved in that kind of activity.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Yes, I would be involved in that activity from the adjudication of claims. In the claims adjudication branch, when they have a case which they feel does not come within the terms of the act and they have to recommend that it be rejected as not coming within the terms of the act, that claim automatically goes to the claims review branch of our division. There, a senior claims person looks at the file and has the authority to reverse the decision if it should be reversed, agree with the decision, or direct that further information be obtained. This review takes place before anybody on the outside is advised of the adverse decision.

Frequently, our senior review specialists will insist that the claims adjudicator obtain the records from the hospital, or make sure that all the medical reports from the doctors who have treated that man are on file, insofar as we know who treated that man. Sometimes they are wrong and we find out that a doctor treated that man whom we know nothing about at that point in time. At that point the review branch in reviewing the situation makes sure that all the pertinent medical information—and, indeed, all other medical information—is on file.

Frequently, they refer cases back to the adjudicator to make further inquiries. This causes delays. It probably opens us up to some criticism, too, because it takes more time to get further information but, just as Mr. Hamilton explained why they make their inquiries, we make further inquiries at that point to try and get information on which we can accept the claim.

Let's assume we have all the information on file and the claim cannot be accepted; the claims review branch then writes the individual a letter explaining why the claim cannot be accepted. At that point in time, all of the documentation is complete, including the diagnosis, as far as we know.

I have checked this out. I was a little bit concerned about people complaining of how long it takes in this kind of claim to adjudicate. We met some time last year with representatives from the Steelworkers and other unions and I explained what we are doing. I said: "We could make decisions much more quickly from the information we have on file, but maybe it wouldn't be the best decision in the world; we may reject a claim, whereas if we obtain all of the data and take a little more time to do it, we might be able to allow that claim rather than reject the claim."

The union people said they felt that was a better approach, providing we didn't take too long to do it, of course. They did admit they felt it is better to take a little more time in the initial adjudication and make the best decision that can be made.

So, as far as the claims services division is concerned, we do get all the reports that we are aware of from the people who have treated the man or the hospital where he has been a patient. Also, there are some cases where our senior review specialist will insist that the man be examined by a consultant on the outside prior to a decision, with the idea of trying to get information that will allow us to bring the claim into the terms of the Workmen's Compensation Act. I do think that in the claims services division our folks are doing quite a bit of work to make sure we have all the medical information on file at that point in time.

Dr. McCracken: First of all, I agree with Mr. Hamilton that in the vast majority of cases we obtain all the necessary hard clinical data from the treating physicians that we require, but there is a sizeable block of cases for which we do not get this. As Mr. Hamilton has pointed out, all too often, looking at the information sent, one can arrive at absolutely no decision, including a working diagnosis, and there certainly is no hard objective clinical information in the record or in the report and this creates real problems.

The other problem, of course, is that if the treating doctor disagrees with an opinion that might be expressed by one of the board physicians, all that he has to do is pick up the phone and phone that physician and discuss the matter with him and supply to him his hard objective clinical data. This indeed, will immediately be taken into consideration because in all probability it has been lacking up to that point.

This is, in essence, what Mr. Kerr's claims investigators attempt to do when they visit a doctor's office. As Mr. Kerr has mentioned it is not only the matter of the spin-off effect of the two royal commissions where many doctors are extremely apprehensive and don't want to tell anybody any data whatsoever about their patients which makes investigation extremely difficult, if not totally blocked. Over and above that, all too often now we are finding that a claims investigator will do his best to attempt to see a doctor for even two or three minutes to obtain some rather vital clinical information and be turned away, be told that the doctor can't see him or won't see him or hasn't got time to see him, and if he wants to get some information he will have to put it in writing and send it to the doctor's office. This, of course, creates delays that we have no control over, but delays I am very much concerned about.

There are problems and we know what the problems are. Again, the problems are in maintaining communications with the treating physicians and in getting the treating physicians to supply to us what they find when they examine the patient and their opinion. That is all we ask of them.

Mr. Martel: I find in so many cases—I have just listed the names of seven or eight doctors who are now contacting me out of sheer frustration with the board.

Dr. McCracken: They should contact us.

Mr. Martel: Maybe they should, but they are sending their files to me. I have doctors who send the whole file. They get permission from the worker to send the whole file and they say, "Send it back to me when you are done with it."

These are specialists who are sending me their files. I listed a number of doctors who have written me and, lo and behold, I've got a case where the doctor has written and said, "This man is being shafted". That is one problem.

The other matter I don't think we have discussed is the decision. You change a decision here; your medical people change it. Doug alluded to it. You people change it and I guess that is where some of the mistrust workers have about the board comes in. Their doctor is saying to them, "You are not ready to go back to work." They get a letter saying, "Our surgical consultant or our medical consultant says you are ready to go back to work, so therefore your benefits are reduced."

What do you think the worker thinks? He says, "My doctor says I am not ready to go back to work but the board doctor says I'm ready to go back to work. They are putting the screws to me." You can't blame him. That is why last night I was saying somehow we have to get something where it is not only the case, but it is perceived by the public to be the case. When he gets that type of letter, the worker naturally believes the board is putting it to him.

I don't know how we overcome that difficulty, but I think that is part of the mistrust people have about the board. They think the board is simply accepting the medical advice of their own people as opposed to the workers' own attending physicians. You try to convince the public, the workers who are injured that is not the case and I think that is the nub of some of the resentment they have and the mistrust that builds up in them. I don't see how it can be otherwise.

Hon. Mr. Starr: On the other hand, I have had the opportunity to review some of the claimants who have come to see me and we usually have the file with us at the time. They vehemently maintain the doctor said they are unable to go to work. That is what the doctor told him verbally. Yet when we look at the doctor's report, the doctor says the man is available for modified work.

Mr. Martel: Modified?

Hon. Mr. Starr: That is light work. But he's been told he can't work at all. Or he can't go back.

Mr. Martel: Yes, I have seen that happen where he swears it up and down, but I am still saying—

Hon. Mr. Starr: The mistrust then is against us. They send misinformation.

Mr. Martel: There is a difference between what he is being told verbally and what the doctor is submitting as a medical report.

Mr. M. Davidson: If I could give you a prime example of what Elie is talking about, we had a case in our riding where a man fell from one roof to another during the course of his employment and landed on a peak on his stomach. Somehow that drove his whatever up and damaged his heart.

He was told constantly by his attending physician that he was not able to return to his job. He got a letter from the board, saying that the consulting surgeon or physician—or whoever it is you have down there—had made a decision that his benefits were to be cut off. He should return to work because he was capable. On the day he received the letter, the man was in the hospital, dying.

I can document that case for you—not right now, but I can get that information for you, if you like.

His wife received the letter from the board saying that somebody in Toronto had made a decision that he could go back to work and he was in the hospital, dying.

Dr. McCracken: Mr. Chairman, if I might just respond to both matters: The medical staff at the board do not have any crystal balls and they therefore do not reverse decisions or make decisions without the data in front of them. As Mr. Starr has pointed out, all too often, due—presumably due—to the fact that the attending physician does not want to alienate himself from his patient and possibly the patient's family—he tells the patient something totally different from what he tells us about the degree of recovery and whether or not the worker is ready to return to his employment or to modified employment. It is the medical information in the file upon which the medical staff at the Workmen's Compensation Board make their decisions. If they can't make a decision as to what should or should not be done, then this is when they contact the treating doctor. They suggest to him that it would be an excellent idea to have the person seen by the appropriate specialist to try to resolve the problem.

This is the way it should be. This is the way it is in the majority of instances. But I can only assure you that the medical staff do not make recommendations to terminate benefits because, first of all, we have no control over the payment of compensation. That is strictly within the area of responsibility of Mr. Kerr and the claims adjudication staff, so we have no control over whether benefits will be continued, terminated, or whether they will be partial benefits.

Mr. McClellan: You can recommend your claims.

Dr. McCracken: No we don't.

Mr. Martel: You don't recommend that he should get paid but you recommend whether or not he is ready to resume work.

Dr. McCracken: On the basis of the data that is in the files.

Mr. Martel: Sure, but ultimately it has the same effect, Dr. McCracken. If you say the man is ready to resume work, it is automatic. Then it goes to Mr. Kerr and Mr. Kerr has no choice. If the medical staff says the man is ready to resume work, Mr. Kerr can't go on paying benefits.

Dr. McCracken: Well, I think probably, Mr. Kerr might challenge the statement that it's automatic, because it isn't.

Hon. Mr. Starr: I just thought for a moment that I might discuss your concern regarding delays in payments. You said you had quite a number who were in that category and they were eventually paid. I think Mr. Kerr tried to explain to you that eventually you come to a point where you can't get the report and necessary information and you say, "All right, let's pay it."

Last fall Dr. McCracken and I had the opportunity of visiting and speaking with five medical associations throughout Ontario and asking for their co-operation in this field. Dr. McCracken specifically told treating doctors this. If a person injured on a job comes in for treatment, then instead of just reporting to us that he will not be able to return to work or that he should be out of work, they should specifically state on any such report that: "In my opinion, this person should be away from his job for approximately eight weeks." Then we can make those payments without any reports for the ensuing six weeks. Again, if a doctor reported to us: "I think now that he will be away for another three weeks," then, again, there's no delay. But that's where the problem lies.

Mr. Martel: I realize that.

Hon. Mr. Starr: We need that co-operation.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: May I just add a comment to that, Mr. Chairman? I'm glad Mr. Starr made that statement. Because it reminds me that following those meetings I took a leaf out of their book, so to speak. I guess it was about a month ago I wrote a letter to every doctor in the province, except obstetricians and those who obviously wouldn't be treating—

Mr. Bounsall: That's poor policy there, I might say.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: I wrote a personal letter—

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I could just interject for one moment. I have four copies of the Gibson report, one to file with the clerk and one for each of the parties.

I'm in your hands, Mr. Chairman, but I have an important meeting scheduled that I have to go to. I'll be here tomorrow night; if you wish me to put in some extra time, I'll be glad to, but it's a meeting with the president of the Ontario Federation of Labour.

Mr. McClellan: Will you be here tomorrow afternoon.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Tomorrow afternoon and evening.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Mr. Chairman, may I continue with that statement, please? It's very brief.

A letter has gone to each doctor asking them to give us that kind of information so that we can authorize in advance compensation when the doctor can tell us that the patient is going to be off work for a certain period of time. In return for that, of course, we promise the doctor that we're not going to request unnecessary reports from him, because they seem to think we request unnecessary reports from time to time.

We're doing something for them and they're doing something for us, and the response to that letter has been very good so far.

Mr. Martel: I have one further question. Has the board ever considered that it might be part of the solution to the problem? My office is in a community of 20,000 people, but there's no board office; they have to go to the city of Sudbury. Have you ever considered the possibility of satellite offices such as the one in Elliot Lake?

Hon. Mr. Starr: Yes, we have. We've established them in the Timmins, Sault Ste. Marie, St. Catharines, Kingston—

Mr. Martel: Valley East has 20,000 people. I've not thought about it until now, but I suspect many of my cases come from there simply because it's closer to come to my riding office than it is to drive into the city of Sudbury. There are 20,000 people in that valley.

Mr. Hamilton: Are you asking me about it?

Mr. Martel: You asked me for a suggestion, and I'm suggesting it might be a way if people didn't have to drive to the city of Sudbury.

Mr. Watson: This one problem suggests that you should resign and set up a satellite office.

Mr. Martel: No, no. You'd like to win that seat, but I'm not about to give it up yet.

Mr. J. F. McDonald: There are many other municipalities—cities or whatever you want to call them—throughout Ontario that probably have considerably in excess of 20,000 people, but there's no way, logistically, that you can set up a satellite office in every one of those areas. It just isn't feasible.

Mr. Martel: No, but you must have areas, Mr. McDonald, where the type of industry that's there—I suspect, if you were to go down through the London area, you would get a fair number of accidents. I'm not sure the incidence—

Mr. Watson: It's much safer living when we have to go to Windsor or London—

Mr. Martel: But I'm saying when you've got a work force that's primarily involved in mining—

Mr. J. F. McDonald: We don't have one in Oshawa.

Hon. Mr. Starr: Not enough pressure is put on for a satellite office there—and they have a lot more cases than you have.

Mr. Van Horne: Let me opt into this, because we've devoted considerable time to the north and, in deference to my sister, who lives in Sudbury, I continued without interrupting—that's the best reason I can offer.

Please check me if I'm wrong, but you mentioned you have other offices. I mentioned last evening some telephoning that we did to get some kind of perspective on the number of investigators that you have, the number of people on waiting lists for these investigators and the approximate waiting period.

The information that I have is as follows: Thunder Bay, one investigator, 35 on the waiting list, waiting period approximately six weeks; North Bay, one, 24 on the list, four weeks; Timmins, one, 21 on the list, three to four weeks; St. Catharines, one, 27 on the list, four to five weeks; Kingston, one, 24 on the list, four weeks; Kitchener-Waterloo, two, 21 on the list, one to two weeks; Windsor, two, 55 on the list, four to five weeks; Hamilton, six, 51 on the list, one to two weeks; Sault Ste. Marie, one, nine on the list, one to two weeks; Sudbury, three, six on the list, two to three days.

That's the information we got as a result of the telephone survey we did yesterday. I don't know if it's accurate or not, but it's interesting when I compare that to London with two investigators, 60 on the waiting list and a waiting period of approximately five to six weeks.

Mr. Martel: They need a good member there.

Mr. Van Horne: That's not necessarily true in London North or London Centre; but in London South perhaps. Of course, the London office accommodates all three ridings.

I could go on with Ottawa and Toronto. The point to the question is this: First of all, are these right insofar as you can ascertain; is this roughly the picture that you have; and, if so, how come the discrepancy between Sudbury, which has the heavy industry—we are not questioning that—but how come the difference between Sudbury and London?

Mr. M. Davidson: And Windsor.

Mr. Van Horne: And Windsor.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Mr. Chairman, if I may respond to that question: the information that Mr. Van Horne has is correct; in fact, when your office contacted Al Breward, I think they gave you that information from head office. It is quite correct.

Mr. Van Horne: We also called to see if there were any changes removing what you had—not that we were questioning you, but things do change on a day-to-day basis. How accurate your information was we don't know: two, three, four days old? So we did spot check with other offices.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Well, there could be a discrepancy if you did that. Anyway, you are accurate. I don't think there is any point in making anything out of that, Mr. Van Horne, because I accept what you say. I have a copy of the information you have.

Now, the reason why Sudbury has such a small one at the present time compared with London is because there isn't, in some sense, not quite as much activity due to the strike; although in another regard it creates more activity with the strike because there are more folks who want their claims reopened and things of this nature.

I am quite concerned about the investigation situation. I hope you were here a moment ago when I mentioned that I thought the claims investigation, as to field investigations, represent one very positive way of trying to attack the problem: that is, why does it take so long to make a decision in difficult, unadjudicated claims and with regard to difficult claims that are being reopened. We are addressing this problem at the present time. I also mentioned that there is a meeting with the board on April 6, at which time I wish to discuss this to see if we can improve it.

Mr. Watson: Mr. Chairman, on a related question. The problem that I run into on this thing—and I guess it is a matter of policy—is when you have one doctor who says he is completely disabled. Then, the other one says “partial.” Then you make a decision that the person is partially disabled. From a living standpoint, what is that person going to do, if there is no work available for him? I mean, the attitude is, “If I can't get a job, I am fully disabled.” What is your answer to that?

Hon. Mr. Starr: Well, he stays on compensation, of course, and I am sure that now—

Mr. Watson: But he is on half compensation.

Hon. Mr. Starr: No, if he is co-operating under section 41, he is on full compensation. That is providing he is co-operating with the vocational rehabilitation people in every respect and is actually endeavouring to find work. Our new reorganized employer group in vocational rehabilitation would be actively trying to get him a job.

Mr. Watson: What about the fellow on this back program? Is it you or your board who is, for instance, insisting on the back X-rays? Or is that a company policy? I have had occasion to discuss that.

Hon. Mr. Starr: I don't know. Dr. McCracken, could you enlarge on the back X-rays?

Dr. McCracken: Are you talking about pre-employment back X-rays?

Mr. Watson: Yes.

Dr. McCracken: The compensation board has nothing to do with that whatsoever.

Mr. Watson: Again, I realize you don't want to discuss specific cases but I have a fellow who is a tool and die maker and he went to get a job—he is fairly old—but found that he can't get a job. He says: “They have found out that there's something wrong with my back. I have never known I had anything wrong with my back. I have never had anything. But they won't hire me because they suddenly found out it would be dangerous for me to be working and that's my trade."

I can appreciate the company's point of view in saying: "We don't want to have this person doing that if there is a danger." But then I appreciate his point of view when he says: "I have done it for 25 or 30 years and it has never hurt me; yet the X-rays show I have maybe been living dangerously all my life."

[4:45]

Dr. McCracken: As I mentioned, the compensation board has absolutely no control over the pre-employment medical examinations or hiring practices, as you can appreciate. However, I would say if I were hiring a person with a specialized trade, and that person was middle aged and X-ray examination showed degenerative disease or arthritis of the spine, and he had a good work record and he stated he had never been disabled due to back pain, despite the X-ray findings, I would think that person would be an excellent risk having gone all that length of time. In all probability, unless some very definite and severe accident occurred, he would probably finish out the rest of his work years still not having any problem. It merely points out the unreliability of using X-rays as a pre-employment tool.

Mr. Watson: You are telling me that the Workmen's Compensation Board has no influence or jurisdiction on that policy, that that is a company policy?

Dr. McCracken: That is correct.

Mr. Watson: There are always two sides to everything, and this fellow is blaming the workmen's compensation people.

Hon. Mr. Starr: Everybody blames us for everything.

Mr. Watson: I had no reason to doubt his story.

Hon. Mr. Starr: We are used to it.

Mr. Martel: I can see why you are so touchy.

Hon. Mr. Starr: If you got it every day as I do.

Mr. Watson: There may have been other reasons why he was turned down, but that was his reason.

Mr. Martel: There is a group that is starting to gather all of the cases where workers have been turned down and they intend to make a presentation to the government on that. There are all kinds of people now being turned down, 21, 22, 23 years old.

There is a group in Timmins, your colleague might find it for you, who in fact are trying to put that data together to make a presentation to the government, to say that these people are simply being turfed out, there is something wrong.

Mr. Watson: But what is the other side of that? I am not trying to point a finger, but what is the other side of the guy who does show up and then he is injured? He is not allowed to sign a waiver of this, is he?

Mr. Martel: Dr. McCracken puts his finger on the real nub of the matter. Many people go through life with a back problem. It is there, but it never really bothers them. It shows up on an X-ray and they don't even know they have it.

Hon. Mr. Starr: The back starts deteriorating when you are born.

Mr. Martel: That is creating a very serious problem. I know in the mining industry we are now getting a lot of people turned down who have never been injured, but once they take that X-ray they are turving them out; before they get their 90 days in they are just being turfed out.

Mr. Watson: That is right. That is exactly what I am talking about. Who do I feel sorry for?

If the medical people are right, saying you have a problem, then you are probably doing the fellow a favour by saying he should not be at this job because his chances of getting hurt are great. On the other hand, if he has worked 25 years and hasn't hurt it yet, then why the heck can't he keep going? I talk out of both sides of my mouth on those things.

Mr. Martel: This is rather difficult, but—

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Mr. Chairman, another point which may be of interest to you is that we encourage employers to hire people with pre-existing conditions, maybe not a disability but a pre-existing condition, by utilizing the second injury enhancement fund.

If that individual is injured at work and it is related to the previous condition, we have a system whereby we can give the employer some financial relief. In this way we encourage employers to hire people who do have a pre-existing condition.

Mr. Watson: What kind of system is that?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: It is a formula which would take a little while to describe. If we have time we can go into it. I would be pleased to give you a copy of it; it describes it in detail for you.

We take a look at the kind of accident the man had—and this is talking about relief for the employer now, not what the man is going to get. It depends on the pre-existing condition.

Mr. Watson: In ballpark figures?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: It is a percentage. The percentage goes anywhere from 25 per cent of the permanent disability award up to 90 per cent of the permanent disability award.

Mr. Watson: If a man is injured on the job now, and I assume there is a percentage of that charged back to that employer, say it is a pensionable thing or something, is that not—

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Yes, a percentage of it.

Mr. Watson: Can you give me any round figures as to what that percentage is? If I am working at a machine and I lose both my hands or something—I am completely disabled, or whatever it is—there is a fund set up; is that right?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: If you had no pre-existing condition, the employer group bears the entire cost of that claim.

Mr. Watson: The employer group pays the entire cost of it?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: On a group liability basis, yes.

Mr. Watson: Are you telling me that, if there is a pre-existing condition and the employer hires somebody, then claims against that group are not as great?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: There is a portion of financial relief given when the accident involves the pre-existing condition; that's what I am saying in simple terms.

Mr. Watson: And there is no ballpark figure, because each pre-existing condition is different? Let's take the one that Elie and I were talking about; is that at a half or three quarters?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: It varies. It is generally a half. It can go from 25 per cent to as much as 90 per cent, but it is generally 50 per cent financial relief.

Here is a little folder for you which gives you some questions and answers on it.

Mr. Van Horne: I would like to ask what the normal time lapse might be between investigation and decision. Is there a norm that you try to strive for? What are you looking at? A week?

Hon. Mr. Starr: Is there an average of normal time, Mr. Kerr?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: At present, the length of time that it takes to complete the local investigation, in my view, is not satisfactory. It varies, on average, from three to four weeks across the province. I think that should be reduced to 10 days for claims being handled in area offices and to seven days for claims being handled and investigated out of head office.

How long it takes to make the decision after that information comes back into the office depends upon several things. The investigation can be ordered by the claims adjudication branch, the claims review branch or the appeal system.

When the claim comes back, it may be necessary—from the information on file—to refer it to one of our own surgical consultants for a medical opinion. It is very difficult to put an average on it; I don't really have any figures, but I would suggest that if it had to be referred for further medical opinion of that nature it could take another couple of weeks.

On the other hand, if it is the type of claim where a medical is not involved, where it is a question as to whether the accident arose out of employment, the investigation notes would be complete, they would come back to the adjudicating person, who could make the decision within a matter of a couple of days.

Mr. Van Horne: Is it fair to suggest that there is a problem with what you called earlier—and you have used the term three or four times—certain checks and balances, or checks and controls? Is there a problem between the check and control that exists out in the regional office and the transmitting of that information, after it has been checked et cetera, to Toronto, where it goes through almost the same process again?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: I don't think we have a problem with our checks and balances. The problem with the local investigations at the present time is that we have more than we can handle as quickly as we want to handle. That is the basic problem right there.

Transportation time for the claim to go from head office to an area office is just overnight; we use courier service, arranged by the administration resources division. When the claim comes back from the local office to Toronto, it is an overnight delivery. The transportation time of the actual file from head office to the area office and back is minimal. But the length of time it requires now for the investigation to be completed in the area office is not acceptable to me. It is taking too long at the present time because of work volume.

Mr. Van Horne: Let me go at it from a slightly different angle. Is it that the local offices really haven't got very much local autonomy?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: No, it is not local autonomy; it is not enough staff to do the volume of work. This matter, as I pointed out before, is being discussed with the board next week, on April 6, so that we can come to a resolution of the problem.

Hon. Mr. Starr: The case load is too high for them to handle it, to move expeditiously.

Mr. Martel: The question you ought to be asking is, how many cases are there per case worker in your area as opposed to Toronto?

Mr. Van Horne: I've got the numbers here. I can take London and there are two investigators and a waiting list of 60 so they're each looking at—

Mr. Martel: Refine it more than that. How much do they average? What do they consider a normal workload for a case worker there as opposed to here?

Mr. Van Horne: Five a week?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: I realize what Elie—

Mr. Watson: Your 48 hours makes that six weeks down at Chatham.

Mr. Martel: We're not talking about investigations. We're talking about where investigations are conducted.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Yes, I can add something to that. I understand what Mr. Martel is after.

The average number of claims that can be investigated during a five-day work week by one claims investigator is six claims, so we count on a production of six complete investigations by a claims investigator in one week. When he leaves on Monday morning from whatever office he's working, he takes more than that number with him because sometimes you get hung up on a claim. Maybe the man isn't available or a witness is on holiday or something of that nature. So, on an average, he'll produce six complete investigations a week. We know how many investigators we have so we can calculate what our production will be for a given period of time.

I guess I didn't answer your question, sir, about the autonomy.

Mr. Van Horne: That's right.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Under our present system of operating, where all the claims decisions are made in head office, I don't think autonomy comes into it. The system of localized, decentralized claims adjudication, as you know, is under study at the present time and, of course, there will be advantages and disadvantages.

Mr. Van Horne: I have no more questions at this point in time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Bounsall: May I just ask one question to follow up on what Doug Hamilton was asking? Perhaps I could ask it privately, but maybe it had better be on the record.

What happens when the local office phones in on whatever the problem may be? They've punched the screen and back comes, not the answer to the question asked but a blank screen or something. Presumably, then, on behalf of the claimant, the local office phones to ask why the cheque hasn't been paid or whatever the problem is. The questions that I have asked Les Liversidge are now being asked by the local office. What happens? Who receives that phone call and why is it that they seemingly don't get an answer back in the local office? Whoever they phone, is the case file not found and looked into and the details of whatever the problem is phoned back? Why doesn't the local office seem to be able to get as detailed an answer if they phone than a good assignee to one of us can?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: I think I understand your question.

First of all, the screen we have at head office and in the area offices only has limited information.

Mr. Bounsall: By and large that's often useless in terms of the question being asked.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Yes, it does not tell you, for instance, why the claim has not been paid since March 20, or whatever the date is.

By the way, in our future system the screen will give us those answers, but it doesn't help us now so we'll just forget that.

When the person in the area office calls to head office they call through to the section which normally handles the claim and the telephone inquiry clerk gets the information. If the claim file is in its place in the filing cabinet, in other words not on somebody's desk being worked on, then it's available, but this is not always the case. There are occasions when the claim file could be out of its place in the filing cabinet, and quite legitimately so. It could be on the adjudicator's desk; it could be down in the payment preparation section where they're doing work on it to process payment; it could be on a medical advisor's desk, so it isn't readily available.

[5:00]

Mr. Bounsall: But that happens when I phone Les, too.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Yes, that's true.

Mr. Bounsall: He finds the file.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Well, all right. I am coming to a very important point. You are dealing with Les. You are dealing with the counselling specialists and I must confess to you they get better service. We have such volume; we have got 40,000 active files. We have 40,000 active files at any one time. It is very difficult, and I know you are not going to like what I am going to say, but we can't give every call priority, and send somebody out and immediately grab the file.

Mr. Bounsall: That's the answer for Doug. That's the answer to what Doug Hamilton was asking. The local office can't in fact, because they don't get as good a service, get the answer for the person. A few days later, Doug, they come to our office.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Well, one thing we are doing now, and we are trying it out to see how it works, and that is trying to get—

Mr. Watson: You should switch these guys around.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: —a system whereby telephone calls come in from the area office and there will be a search for that file to try and locate it overnight. There is a great deal of advantage in locating files overnight so they can respond the next day, because the files are static, they are not moving around, because people aren't normally working after 4:30, 5:00, or 5:30, whatever it is. We think this will be a big assistance to us, and this is probably our best way of attacking the problem at the present time.

Hon. Mr. Starr: Possibly it may be practical to assign an individual, such as Les Liversidge, to each one of our area and satellite offices. They would, instead of contacting the specific section—where it may not be available and be somewhere else and you don't have this special privilege of finding the file—get the information faster. If we had someone specially assigned to that particular area office whom they would phone on all the claims, they would have the means of getting the file and the information much faster.

Mr. Bounsall: Yes, that is interesting. I want to come back to another point, though. Les doesn't often get back to me the same day; it might take one day or two days. You have talked about this overnight search for the file. Do you have a routine, when some employees pick up all of these messages that have come in either from me or Les, or from an MPP to the contact, or from the local offices, who search overnight and match up the query with the file? Is this standard routine?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Yes, the filing clerks do that, it is standard routine.

Mr. Hamilton: There is just no question that the file availability at the head office has improved tremendously in the last year.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Oh, yes, there is no doubt about that.

Mr. Bounsall: Something's happening yes.

Mr. Hamilton: There is no reason why that same availability that is available to the fellow who serves you at the head office cannot be made available to the district offices. Why not? There is no other reason for a gap.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: Well, perhaps, if I may, I would like to ask Mr. Sweeney, executive director of the administrative resources division, to address that since it is one of his many responsibilities.

Mr. Hamilton: If I haven't confused you, Sweeney will.

Mr. V. G. Sweeney: Actually, we have a staff of—I believe it is 10 girls right at the moment, and they are on a shift which starts at 1 o'clock in the afternoon and goes until 8 o'clock at night. Their purpose is to respond to all outstanding telephone inquiry slips for files. This includes requests from area offices and telephone calls that have come in on our switchboard system.

It is my opinion that what you are trying to get at here, Mr. Hamilton, is there is a difference. I honestly do not feel there is a difference in the service levels between what the counsellors get if it is put on a search and what a normal telephone inquiry gets. I don't believe there is a difference.

Mr. Bounsall: In terms of finding the file.

Mr. Hamilton: That's right.

Mr. Bounsall: In terms of the time.

Mr. Hamilton: What I am saying is we have heard an argument this afternoon to the contrary.

Mr. V. G. Sweeney: That's fine, but what I am saying is there is not a distinction. Eighty-seven per cent of all telephone inquiries received today are responded to today as far as file location is concerned. The evening shift responds only to those that could not be found or were received late in the day. Within 24 hours they all should have been serviced.

Mr. Hamilton: Is that available then to the area offices?

Mr. V. G. Sweeney: Yes. All telephone inquiries, regardless of their origination, are followed through on the telephone inquiry system.

Mr. Van Horne: Except for those you can't find.

Mr. V. G. Sweeney: Well, they are still put on the same search with the same girls who go through the locations to locate the files.

Mr. Van Horne: What does the terminology mean, "in dictation"? The file is in dictation?

Mr. W. R. Kerr: That means that somebody has dictated a letter or a memorandum and it's in the typists' section. We have a centralized typing section.

Mr. Van Horne: I didn't want to get into this until tomorrow. But there is one case, a Mr. Glenn Snider—we started working with him on March 1 of this year—going through a whole lot of exercise in dictation, was one of the comments passed on to us—but on March 26 the file couldn't be found. Let me get into detail on that tomorrow. I'm sorry I have to leave now.

Mr. V. G. Sweeney: A point at this time though gentlemen is that there are certain priorities. I'm sure you would not wish a file pulled out when we were just arranging to process a payment through the computer, or where a letter was being dictated—these are the priorities—so that we would have to go into a second search on it. We'd find it, but we could not have it released to the inquirer who had perhaps a lower level priority than processing a payment against the claim.

So we do have these issues that we have to deal with as well. The mere fact that it was located—we may not have pulled it out of the system because of the urgency that was being placed on the file at the time.

Mr. Bounsall: Maybe this relates to Mr. Starr's suggestion. There's equal access in terms of finding the files for our inquirers and the local office inquirers. There may be a difference between what happens at that point. If Les is told the file is in dictation, he probably walks to dictation and doesn't remove the file but reads the letter that's being typed at the moment and then gets back to me. Does the inquirer searching for the local office do that and find out that information and report that back to the local office?

Mr. V. G. Sweeney: The purpose of the search is just to locate the file and pass it to the individual who requested the file, not to determine what state the file is in or to make any determination within it—only to locate it and deliver it within the priorities that have been established.

Mr. Bounsall: I think probably that's the difference in service.

Mr. Martel: I have just one point on this complicated problem involving the Inco strikers who were released from Downsview and who were reduced to 50 per cent or totally cut off. That was ultimately cleared up by the board. It decided they would pay them if the doctors and the board said they could resume light duty.

Hon. Mr. Starr: Temporarily. That's the key word in that sentence.

Mr. Martel: Yes. What happened to a bunch of them, as you know, they were reduced to 50 per cent. What I've been trying to find out for a couple of months on this, because I am sure there is going to be a whole series of appeals that I'd like to head off, is what the workers were advised at Downsview when they left. We have letters which said to the men, "Are you prepared to leave your employer?" That's in writing.

Hon. Mr. Starr: A letter written by our people?

Mr. Martel: Yes. That's the most concrete evidence we have. It was actually put in writing: are you prepared to quit? So the guy said, "I'm not going to quit I've got 29 years at Inco and I've got my seniority and my pension benefits and everything else." But once he realized he didn't have to quit, he's then prepared to go and look for a job because he knows he doesn't have to quit. He can take the job temporarily. I agree with that. He has to look for the temporary job; he just can't sit. What concerns me is what the whole group of them was really told.

Mr. J. F. McDonald: You obviously have a number of cases you are talking about. I think the best way to resolve the problem is for you to identify those cases to Mr. Kerr. A review of those cases can be arranged and a discussion with you to find out exactly what was told to those individuals, because not every individual is told exactly the same thing. It depends on the case. You know that.

Mr. Martel: What the worker decided he would do at the time was dependent on what he was told at Downsview.

Mr. J. F. McDonald: The advice he is given at Downsview is recorded on file. I think the best way to approach it is to look at those files.

Mr. Martel: Some of those, as you know, are presently with the minister because they were in writing.

Mr. J. F. McDonald: Would you agree, Mr. Kerr?

Hon. Mr. Starr: What intrigues me is you said that one even had it in writing.

Mr. Martel: Yes, he was asked if he was prepared to leave his employer.

Hon. Mr. Starr: Which department was that issued by? Claims?

Mr. Martel: Claims department.

Hon. Mr. Starr: I would like to have that identified so that we can check it.

Mr. Martel: We can bring those letters to you. My concern is that I have a number of them and I am afraid they are going to want me to appeal them and I really don't want to go through the process.

Hon. Mr. Starr: You always have prepared a good precis.

Mr. Martel: I know, but they take so long.

Mr. Hamilton: We wouldn't have to go to Nova Scotia to get that evidence.

Mr. Martel: Hopefully not for that one. It would be a key matter to know what the workers were advised when they were leaving Downsview. That is the key to the whole thing. If they were told, "Look, you don't have to quit your job; it is a temporary job you have to look for," that's one thing. But we have cases where they were asked in writing, "Are you prepared to leave your employer?"

Hon. Mr. Starr: I am going to ask a question. Is the whole matter fairly well settled now? Are there any problems?

Mr. Martel: I am trying not to go to appeal.

Hon. Mr. Starr: Do you want to get the appeal for the period of time they were cut off to 50 per cent? Is that what your point is?

Mr. Martel: There are about 80 cases really where there were reductions.

Mr. J. F. McDonald: I think there are two people who would have talked to them at the time they left the hospital and rehabilitation centre, both the claim adjudication personnel and the vocational rehabilitation counsellor. I think it could involve both areas and you would have to have a review of those cases. If you could provide the numbers, Mr. Kerr and Mr. Wisocky could arrange to review them and see what is going on or what has happened in those cases.

Mr. Wisocky: I am going to touch on claims and vocational rehabilitation policies. Mr. Kerr can supplement it or correct me if I am wrong. Prior to December 15, 1978, it was the policy of the board that if an employee was discharged from HRC as fit for light work and the company was on strike so that naturally there was no light work available with the company, in that situation he was usually reduced to 50 per cent.

On December 15, 1978, the board issued a board minute which stated that in the Inco situation it will continue full compensation benefits as long as the Inco employee is willing to look for temporary work, as you have stated. As far as I know, that policy has been implemented. I personally have one counsellor up in Sudbury whose current caseload is something like 104 cases. Generally speaking, that is what we are doing.

At the time prior to the board minute, they were told what I just said. But since that time it is very clear as to what they are told.

Mr. Martel: That area you mentioned would be from when they were first released at Downsview to when that policy was altered. Those are the ones we have had problems with—if they decide to appeal.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: If I may add to that, to carry on from where Mr. Wisocky has brought us, after that board decision was made, the claims adjudication branch reviewed all those cases that had been reduced to temporary partial disability of 50 per cent. Where there was some information to indicate the man was available for temporary work, then they were adjusted.

There were some who were already on temporary partial of 50 per cent before the strike occurred. We did not adjust those because the situation wouldn't change. If they weren't available for work before the strike, the situation would be the same after September 15.

Wherever we could find evidence that the man had made himself available for temporary employment in one way or the other, any kind of information we could get to support that, we did go back and adjust them. But not all of them were adjusted, Elie, because we just couldn't do it in every case.

Mr. Martel: I understand that. My only concern was knowing what they were told; what they were advised at Downsview at the time.

Mr. W. R. Kerr: As Mr. Wisocky said, after that board decision was made that question was no longer asked; but it was asked prior to that, as explained by Mr. Wisocky. I think right now we have about 107 or so who are receiving service and benefits.

About 104, Mr. Wisocky says.

Mr. Chairman: With that, the meeting will be adjourned until tomorrow afternoon.

The committee adjourned at 5:16 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, MARCH 29, 1979

The House resumed at 8:02 p.m.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Hon. F. S. Miller moved that the Treasurer of Ontario be authorized to pay the salaries of civil servants and other necessary payments pending voting of supply for the period commencing April 1, 1979, and ending June 30, 1979, such payments to be charged to the proper appropriations following the voting of supply.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I make the comment that we have changed the period to three months. It was intended to be three months; by some error it became six months. I have understood that in the past the House has not been generally willing to extend the period to six months. Rather than argue, we settled for June 30.

Mr. Peterson: The Treasurer is quite right, Mr. Speaker. We prefer shorter periods than sometimes has been demonstrated in the past; that is why we have a preference for three months. It gives us all a wonderful opportunity to go through this enlightened debate on a far more regular basis.

I am highly tempted to vote against this motion tonight, and I would, except for the fact that I have to make a speech at 8:30 to a very enlightened group, the High Park Liberal Association. If I had the time, I would definitely stay here, and we would fight this on its merits. However, the High Park Liberal Association has saved the Treasurer for at least another three months, depending, of course, on what he does in a couple of weeks.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Who is your speech writer? Jim Taylor?

Mr. Peterson: The honourable minister just made a noise. Does he have something worthwhile to contribute? Jimmy Taylor is writing my speeches, that's right.

In many ways this debate is irrelevant because we will soon be into a very major debate on the budgetary policies of this government, whatever they are—it's been impossible to decipher them for the past six or nine months since we've had the new Treasurer. Really, nobody knows what this charming little squirt is up to, for sure.

Mr. B. Newman: Not even the minister.

Mr. Peterson: We have seen some gratuitous handouts to various people with no particular strings attached—with no particular conditions that we understand.

Mr. Hennessy: It's only the start.

Mr. Peterson: There's been a sort of ad hocery brought to this whole process that to any intelligent observer is almost incomprehensible. I'm almost tempted to allow the supply to go through for civil servants because I know the good deputy minister Rendall has been working very hard to try to make this man appear at least a little bit legitimate. But I would almost be tempted to move an amendment deducting the government politicians' salaries from this and let the civil service be paid in the normal course of events.

Mr. Hennessy: He'd have a heart attack.

Mr. Peterson: I wish you'd stop the interjections over there, Mr. Speaker, because I have several things that are important to say.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Will you let us know when you start?

Mr. Peterson: Look at them: the two senior government ministers sitting there, the two diminutive ministers sitting there, looking for all the world like two cheeks of the same behind. Look at them.

If you accept my thesis, what does that make the Premier (Mr. Davis)? I guess you'd have to ask that. Look at them. They laugh at each other's jokes; they really enjoy each other, it's quite obvious.

Mr. Speaker: I think the honourable member really is getting a little carried away.

Mr. Hennessy: That's right.

Mr. Peterson: I've been provoked, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: It has nothing at all to do with supply.

Mr. Peterson: I have been provoked. You can see that. They're trying conscientiously to provoke me. A little bit like the Premier—

Hon. Mr. Walker: He sounds like the south end of a northbound horse.

Mr. Hennessy: It's a supply of BS.

Mr. Peterson: —sometimes I get provoked and I launch into little diatribes.

Anyway, I'm sorry my time is almost up because I do have to get into my car to go to High Park. We will support the motion now. The House will hear a great deal from us in a week or two or three, whenever the appropriate time is.

I can say to the Treasurer very seriously, we are looking forward with great expectations to his performance on April 10. He has not felt rigorously bound to the dictates of the previous budget, he has altered principles substantially. It is a very difficult government to keep up to because it keeps switching ministers as it gets into trouble. I hope the present minister is able to stay there for at least a brief period of time to implement whatever he feels should be implemented in the next two weeks.

It is going to be incumbent upon him to make a little bit of sense out of these vague policies he has been putting to us and to the business community in the last little while. I'm referring to these little series of grants given on what basis God only knows, because we don't understand them and I don't really think he understands them and I don't really think he knows the conditions of the pulp and paper grant situation because they don't understand—

Mr. Sweeney: You guys don't know very much, do you?

Mr. Peterson: —and they don't know if it's viable, and the government doesn't know if it's viable, and nobody knows frankly what's going on. The Treasurer has been a contributor to the crisis of confidence if there is one at all. I know he is going to say, "It was your friends in Ottawa."

Mr. Breithaupt: Their friends in Ottawa.

Mr. Peterson: The people will have a chance to judge that in the very near future.

I just want to say this has been a wonderful opportunity to consume eight minutes of legislative time, and let me compliment the minister on his Muskoka tartan—matching tie, jacket and boxer shorts. It's a very handsome outfit.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, I too want to say, on behalf of our party, we're not going to oppose this motion before us here this evening. However, I'm not going out to speak at any Liberal rally tonight—

Mr. Peterson: They would never let you.

Mr. Swart: No, I would doubt very much if it's worth going the distance for the four or five people who will be there.

Mr. Ruston: Now the NDP have meetings in a phone booth.

Mr. Swart: Yes, but they're growing very rapidly.

Because I do not have to attend anything else this evening, but more particularly because when the budget speech comes up there probably will be two or more members on this side of the House who will want to speak in the budget debate, and therefore I may not be able to be worked in, I want to say a little about the issues involved in this resolution that we have before us this evening.

It is an all-encompassing resolution that we have, Mr. Speaker, as I am sure you recognize. It authorizes the Treasurer to pay salaries of the civil servants and other necessary payments; and that's just about all-inclusive.

We cannot let this resolution pass without questioning the voting of money to administer policies with which we wholeheartedly disagree. We disagree with the Treasurer's approach to the economy. We disagree with his restraint program, and certainly the application of it. The burden of this restraint program, which the government of Ontario instituted some three or three and a half years ago, is falling most heavily on those least able to pay, and I have no doubt that it was the deliberate intention of the government that this would be the case.

Shortly after I came into the House in the fall of 1975, there was a document tabled called the Special Program Review, the Maxwell Henderson report. I thought at that time, and I have come to be more and more convinced of it ever since, that that was the course the government was charting in the years ahead. Certainly the three years or three and a half years since that time have proved this to be the case.

Let me quote from this document in four places. It states in that document that the government should not at this time accept additional major responsibilities for public services but rather should explore the possibility of transferring back to the private sector some of the activities that it currently undertakes. That is a philosophical statement, and we all know, if we read between the lines, what that means; that some of the levelling process, some of the equality provided by the provincial government, shall be lessened.

They say the expenditures of the Ontario government as a percentage of the gross provincial product should decline. Of course, all of us in public life are anxious to see taxes go down, but I think we have to weigh that against the services that are provided to the public and examine whether a decline as a percentage will create greater inequality among the citizens of this province; of course, this is exactly what has happened.

They went on to make it very clear that that was what they intended to happen in this program review, as they called it. They stated, for instance, with regard to university and college education, that the level of government support should be gradually adjusted over a period of several years so as to allow an increase in the proportion of university and college costs covered by tuition fees. Again, this simply means that those in the lower income brackets, as we know, will be less likely and will have less opportunity to attend university.

With regard to health care, they recommended exactly what is taking place at the present time. They said consideration should be given to phasing out surplus beds and expensive treatment facilities in some hospitals, particularly those adjacent to urban centres, and public hospitals should be authorized to increase substantially the daily charges for private and semi-private accommodation. Then they went on to say this: "There [should] be a thorough examination of public hospital operating costs, with particular concentration on ways of reducing the total paid hours of the hospital staff." Certainly we see that recommendation being followed today, with rather dire results for the people of this province.

They made the same kind of statements with regard to social security. The recommendation here is that the proportion of the provincial budget that is allocated to social security be lowered from its present level. We all know the advantage of social security is to the lower income groups, not the higher income groups; and by lowering the level of social security, of course, we are making the contrast between the wealthy in our society and the poor in our society that much greater.

Even with regard to municipal government and school board financing, they recommended that the province limit its support of school boards and local government generally to the available finances as defined in the Edmonton commitment. Implementation of this proposal will require modification of the existing open-ended cost-sharing formula; and then further recommendations with regard to the limitations of transfer payments to the various types of local government, whether they be school boards or whether they be municipalities or some other form.

Of course he even went on and made some even more radical, and I use that word advisedly, radical suggestions.

Mr. Wildman: Reactionary.

Mr. Swart: They said they should limit spending to programs that meet the needs of the whole population; that was one of the suggestions. Of course that would come out as those programs which serve only the needy in our society. They went on to say that medical insurance should be returned to the private sector, through PSI, Blue Cross and similar plans; at this time we see the very real possibility in Ontario.

They said they should recover the total cost of parks, day-care centres and similar facilities through user charges. Do not establish a provincial dental care plan or finance through the Ontario Lottery, and so on. It was about as reactionary a document as it would be possible to envisage at that time. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that it is being followed rather closely at the present time.

I say to the government they simply tried to make a virtue of a regressive income redistribution in the name of restraint. They have done it; and in some degree they have been successful in getting away with it, because they have sold it as restraint, the action of a government that wants to cut back expenditure. I will have a little bit more to say about that in the very near future.

I want to repeat and give some documentation to the fact that what it has done is to shift the burden more and more on to those in the lower income brackets.

We are all aware, I think, that the consumer price index in the last three years—and whether you take it from the end of 1975 to the end of 1978, or from March 1, 1979, to March 1, 1976, doesn't make much difference, the cost of living in Canada has gone up about 26 per cent, and of course in Ontario perhaps even a little higher. But because the cost of the essentials, whether it is food or whether it is heating—and incidentally oil and gas have gone up by about 150 per cent in those three years—the essentials have gone up much higher, much faster, than the average cost of living. And of course those on the lower income have to spend a higher percentage of their income, as we all know, on those essentials—food, heating, et cetera.

It should also be said that the cost really doesn't increase by percentages, it increases by dollars and cents. Those with lower incomes, if they get a six per cent or an eight per cent increase in wages, in dollars and cents it is proportionately much less, far less.

So those increases in cost, as you well know Mr. Speaker, hurt those with lower incomes more. Not only do they have a higher percentage of increase in their cost of living, but because they have a low income to start with they are hurt a great deal more by it.

I want everybody to keep in mind that there has been an increase in the cost of living of something like 26 per cent in our society.

What has happened to minimum wages in this province during that three-year period? They have gone up from $2.65 to $3 a hour.

Mr. Wildman: And they have made a virtue of keeping them down.

Mr. Swart: Yes. That is a 13 per cent increase in the minimum wage. I don't know what percentage of the population of this province is on minimum wage, but estimates have been made of about 20 per cent. Therefore, 20 per cent, if that is the case, or 10 per cent if it is only 10, have had their incomes go up by 13 per cent, while the cost of living has gone up by 27 per cent. Average wages and salaries, as I am sure most people here know, have gone up by about 31 per cent, which is just a little bit more than the cost of living, even although in the last year they have not gone up as rapidly as the cost of living. Those people on the minimum wage have seen more and more how low their standard of living has dropped.

What about those on general welfare? A family of four on general welfare back at the beginning of 1976 received something like $460, plus $20 per child for each one over the four. That has now gone up to $530, plus $25 per child, in a three-year period. That is an increase of 16 per cent compared to a 27 per cent increase in the cost of living. A single person on welfare has seen his allowance go up 14 per cent during that period compared to 27 per cent in the cost of living.

What about those on family benefits? A single woman with two children, ages five and 13—and this is averaging selective figures for 1976—was getting $368 maximum three years ago. Now she is getting $421 maximum. That is an increase of 15 per cent, while the cost of living has gone up 27 per cent and, in fact, more than that for those on lower incomes.

Mr. Cooke: The Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton) should be listening to this.

Mr. Wildman: He is not interested.

Mr. Swart: During that same period of time, profits have gone up 41 per cent. I say there is something wrong with a system that permits that kind of thing to happen in our society. That isn't the only place where those in the lower income groups have been hurt. Let's look at a few details on this. Let's examine what has happened with regard to OHIP premiums. In this three-year period, as members are well aware, there would have been an increase of over 100 per cent if it hadn't been for the fight that was put up by the two opposition parties. In fact, the increase in OHIP premiums was 72 per cent during this three-year period.

We now find the doctors who are opting out—and there are a great many of them—are charging something like 42 per cent more than they would receive from OHIP. Obviously, with this flat fee they may say that they themselves institute some sort of means test. I suggest a means test should be conducted on some sort of scientific basis and not by the seat of the pants, if I can paraphrase what the member for London North (Mr. Van Horne) had to say.

Even such things as provincial park fees have gone up something like 50 per cent in those years.

Mr. Wildman: They are not opening them as early either.

Mr. Swart: Automobile licences went up in 1977 by 40 per cent—perhaps a little more on the average than 40 per cent. Once again, these flat fees hit hardest those at the lower income level. Old age pensioners and those with lower incomes by and large drive their cars only a fraction of the distance in any year that those with the higher incomes do—somebody like myself—and yet they have to pay that additional flat fee to take their car out of the yard. I suggested there should be some graduated payment towards our road system and into government on this. They shouldn't have increased those flat fees in that manner. It would be much better to increase the gasoline tax than impose that high levy against them.

Perhaps the hardest cut of all has been against the property taxpayers, particularly those at the lower income level. Of course, back in 1973 or 1974 the commitment was given by the government of this province—I'm not going to dwell on it—called the Edmonton commitment, whereby the province was going to transfer to the local municipalities an increase of funds every year according to the increase in the amount of the general revenue the province received.

Mr. Wildman: Who eliminated that, Darcy Somebody?

Mr. Swart: Of course, they never lived up to that. Even while that commitment was still on the books, they never lived up to it. In 1974, there was a transfer increase made of 14.6 per cent; the actual increase in revenue that year was 19.5 per cent. In 1975, which was election year, the transfer increase was 24 per cent when the increase in revenues was 10.2 per cent. The year after the election, they took it back. They only gave a transfer increase of 7.7 per cent, while the revenue increased by 16.7 per cent. The following year the transfer increase was 7.2 per cent while revenue went up 10.7 per cent. Last year, the transfer increased by 5.3 per cent while revenue went up by 8.2 per cent.

The end result of this cutting back on the percentage of increase to municipalities has been that property taxes have increased, and increased quite dramatically. According to the government's own figures and the book which it published on this issue, they showed in the three years from 1974 to 1977 the actual mill rates in this province went up 43.5 per cent. That doesn't tell the whole story, because assessment increased somewhat because of people fixing up recreation rooms and so on. The government itself estimates that assessment, not from new assessment but upgrading of assessment, went up something like 1.2 per cent each year. So, in fact, the gross tax levy, on the average, to the property owners went up something like 47 per cent.

It shows up in the transfer for education. Whereas the province was paying something like 61 per cent of the cost of education in 1975, by 1978 that was down to 53 per cent. There was also a reduction in the transfer payments to municipalities as a percentage of the expenditures. That gross tax increase of 47 per cent in three years, or if we add last year to make it a four-year period, runs to about 57 per cent, which is bad enough in itself.

But the point I want to make here is that tax, because of a variety of factors which the government failed to correct, fell most heavily on those least able to pay. All of the studies that have been done across this nation show the property tax by itself is an extremely regressive tax. It falls most heavily on those in the lower income brackets. It is obvious why that is the case. Over the years, the provincial governments across this nation, including Ontario—I give them credit for it up until about 1974—were transferring enough moneys to the municipalities, an increased amount of moneys to municipalities, so the incidence of the property tax was being relatively reduced.

Then, at about the time this document came out, there was a dramatic change, and they started to put more and more of it on the property tax. One of the methods the government had used to make the property tax less regressive, was the property tax credit related to income. A person who was the occupant of a house received a credit on his taxes or on a portion of rent which he paid related to tax. But since 1975 that has not been increased and the result is that once again the regressive nature of this tax has not only been maintained but it has increased very dramatically.

Let me give you, Mr. Speaker, and through you the minister—and I hope he will deal with this when he gets up—examples of what has happened. These figures are taken largely from his own documents.

A person who paid $500 in taxes on property in 1974 and had an income of $5,000, received a property tax credit of $253. If he had $7,500 income he would have received a property tax credit of $205; a $10,000 income a property tax credit of $155.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Those are taxable incomes.

Mr. Swart: The increases in those provide that that same person now would be getting $282 where he got $253, $246 where he got $205, and $198 where he got $155. But what has happened to the taxes? The tax that was $500 would now be $717.50; that's the increase in three years, it went up from $500 to $717.50.

So the net tax that the person with a $10,000 income paid went up from $345 to $519, an increase of 50 per cent. At $7,500 income that property tax credit went up from $295 to $471; and in the $5,000 range the net tax went up from $247 to $435. In three years the net property tax increased 75 per cent.

That's bad enough. That's the case of a person who wasn't an old age pensioner. But if he was an old age pensioner he would have got back, in 1975, $110 additional tax credit; and that still is $110 today. It means that that old age pensioner, in that tax bracket that I speak of, at $10,000, has had an increase of 74 per cent in three years; if he's in the $7,500 tax bracket it's 95 per cent; and if he's in the $5,000 income bracket his tax increase in those three years was 137 per cent.

Mr. Wildman: Shameful.

Mr. Swart: That's the kind of a shift there's been for those least able to pay in our society.

Mr. Warner: Miserable, miserly Miller.

Mr. Swart: There's all kinds of evidence that the restraint program is hurting most the low and the low middle income groups. I want to take this opportunity to call on the Treasurer, and through him his government, to utilize the staff to produce a restraint-impact study so we know where the burden of restraint is falling. I think that's a fair and reasonable request. We should know. The government should table documents to show us where the burden of restraint is falling; and it's not on those in the wealthy income bracket.

Mr. Warner: Show us who you are hammering.

Mr. Swart: We oppose the restraint program, as I've already said, on two grounds. First, because of its unfair application; I've already dwelt on that at some length. Second, because of the very principle of the restraint—

Hon. F. S. Miller: Could we deal with interim supply? I have my estimates on tonight.

Mr. Speaker: I was getting the impression that the member for Welland-Thorold was going pretty far afield, given the motion that is before the House.

Mr. Warner: But it is interesting, Mr. Speaker, most interesting.

Mr. Swart: I'm just concluding, but you would realize that this resolution covers all phases of expenditures and, in fact, covers the whole program. We are opposed to the restraint program because all the emphasis has been put on restraint. That's the only economic policy the government has. It should be taking those steps towards an economic strategy for Ontario so we have full employment.

Last year's Treasurer—and I seldom quote from last year's Treasurer—pointed out in his budget report reassessing the scope for fiscal policy in Canada that if we employed only 68,000 more people the revenue to Ontario would increase by $358 million. Think what we could do. We'd have $1 billion more revenue in this province if we put approximately 200,000 people to work. I'm quoting from the Treasurer's own document. I know he's qualified it and tried to put other arguments to us that it wouldn't be valid, but that's what it says with regard to full employment.

Mr. Warner: We know what your economic strategy is: Supply rowboats to people on the Titanic.

Mr. Swart: As I have said, we're not going to oppose this motion we have before us, but it seems to us in this party that we have to take every opportunity we can at this time and from here on to show what is really happening in this province because of the restraint program. We break completely with what the Ontario government is doing. We think we can have full employment if we have the right policy, and we think we can have fair sharing.

I want to state as strongly as I can that at a time when we are in restraint and when there's less to go around that is all the more reason we should share it fairly rather than take it out of the pockets of those least able to pay.

Mr. Charlton: I'll just take a few moments to talk about a number of things that I see in this interim supply motion and in the overall picture of government spending which bothers me a little bit. I want to talk for a few moments about the present program of the Ministry of Revenue, and section 86, equalization.

Hon. F. S. Miller: On a point of order, that has nothing to do with this.

Mr. Speaker: Let me hear what he has to say.

Mr. Charlton: The program to which I'm referring is the program by which the Ministry of Revenue has opted out of its responsibility for which it's been spending taxpayers' money for the past 10 years, the program of providing property tax reform for this province, the entire province.

Mr. Speaker: With the greatest of respect, if you're going to get into the programs of a specific ministry of this government I think you are going a little far afield. We're talking about interim supply for the purposes of carrying on government from now until the end of June. If you want to be all-encompassing and make some general remarks about the fiscal policy, that's fine; but if you want to deal with a specific program, there's a proper time and a proper place for that and it isn't here.

Mr. Charlton: Let me try to make it as general as I can. What I was attempting to talk about was government spending. I wanted to use some examples of that.

Mr. Wildman: What about the Sault jail?

Mr. Charlton: What I wanted to talk about was a situation where we're here tonight voting interim supply, which includes all the salaries of the civil service and all of the other costs of government programs and so on.

In the example I wanted to cite we have spent 10 years' worth of money—nobody even knows how much—and we have accomplished absolutely nothing. The Ministry of Revenue has spent money. The Ministry of Treasury, Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs has spent money doing studies. We have had the Blair commission. We have had a number of other examples of money spent, and we have had no results at all.

We are back to a situation now where the Premier says that the government is not trying to pass the responsibility for property tax reform back to the municipalities, and yet this province, although it has spent in now three different ministries and a couple of commissions and studies—

Mr. Speaker: You can't talk about money that has already been spent. We're talking about the money that will be spent.

Mr. Charlton: They're still spending it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: No. We're talking about the money that will be spent. You're talking about the past.

Mr. Charlton: I am doing what has been done in the past to talk to this resolution to spend it again, Mr. Speaker. The situation has not changed since last year or the year before. The only thing that has changed is the government's willingness to move on with effective property tax reform. They are still spending the money. It is still a part of this motion of interim supply. It is still a part of the budget this year. The government is still spending all of the moneys and playing all of the games with that money that it spent in the last 10 years of playing. That is the whole point of what I am trying to raise this evening. It is the approach that this government, in terms of its restraint program—

Hon. F. S. Miller: Did you ever refuse to cash your own pay cheque when you worked there?

Mr. Charlton: At the point when I worked there, I say to the Treasurer, I do recall the program having been postponed indefinitely.

Hon. F. S. Miller: It is only as good as the employees we have.

Mr. Wildman: That is about as cheap as the Treasurer's taste in clothes.

Mr. Charlton: That is a very cheap shot the minister just took at the civil servants who work in the Ministry of Revenue, because the civil servants have done an excellent job. The money they have received was paid for extremely well done work. The problem lies with the present minister, the prior minister, and many of the Ministers of Revenue. The problem is not the civil servants and the job they have done; the problem is the political games that have been played by the ministers across the way in the cabinet and in the government caucus.

The whole point of the discussion is that we are no further ahead now than we were 10 years ago, and we are progressing into probably another 10 years of expenditure for the same thing.

The problem in the municipalities is that the property taxes get worse every year; at the same time, as my colleague has mentioned, the government has gone through and is in the process of making cutbacks or reductions in the grants and transfers to municipalities. It is just not in the best interests of the people of this province. The taxpayers of this province have not been well served.

The whole program has left this province in a situation which I think is being quite aptly reflected in the press in the 13 municipalities where the government has opted out and the municipalities have taken action on their own.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member is being far too specific.

Mr. Charlton: I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Walker: That comes in a later vote.

Mr. Charlton: The taxes the people have been forced to pay at the municipal level right across this province have reached proportions which are simply astronomical. The situation is reflected, I think, by the outcries of those who now are finding out what the average levels in this province really are because, for whatever reason they have been underassessed. They are being put in a situation now which results directly from the government's restraint program, which has forced property taxes so high that they are having to look at property tax levels that they just didn't know existed.

[8:45]

We are not going to vote against this motion of interim supply, because there are so many people involved in it, but I think it's important the government understand that the policies it has followed in a number of areas and the way it has used taxpayers' money to absolutely no avail or to no benefit of the taxpayers of this province, is just disgusting.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I really have no other comments to make.

Motion agreed to.

House in committee of supply.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF COMMUNITY AND SOCIAL SERVICES

On vote 2802, Social resources program; item 2, income maintenance:

Hon. Mr. Norton: Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, I will make just some brief opening remarks.

The supplementary estimates for which I am seeking approval from the committee at this point total some $14.6 million, all of which is in the income maintenance provisions of the budget of our ministry. The explanation, in brief, for the supplementary estimates, relates to the six per cent rate increase which was approved for January of this year. That accounts for a substantial amount of the $14.6 million. The increase in the cost of the drug benefit plan for the recipients under income maintenance programs in the province accounts for part of that as well. The third significant factor was the deficit which we experienced in general welfare assistance as of the end of the fiscal year.

I wanted to make those brief comments. Perhaps the honourable members opposite have some comments to which they would like me to respond later.

Mr. Blundy: Mr. Chairman, there is no way we, in this party, will vote against the supplementary estimates before us this evening. Obviously, the people who are to benefit from them need our support at this time. Of course, we as a party do provide support to the minister in these supplementary estimates.

It is obvious to me that the matters of unemployment and inflation that are being felt by the people who are serving the recipients in the municipalities are such that these amounts for these benefits do have to increase; we recognize that.

The six per cent rate of increase to which the minister alluded a few moments ago was certainly long overdue and I am not going to go into the specifics of these supplementary estimates. We look forward to the opportunity, later on in debating these matters, to discuss the many matters which have come to our attention since we last did the estimates, and we will go into that in great detail at that time.

Right now I want to say to the minister that we certainly want to see the people who are in our lowest income brackets in the province, and particularly those people who are unable to help themselves, continue to receive the benefits we have been providing. As a matter of fact, when I look at how much it costs to live now, with the increases we have had in general household expenses, such as heat and light and municipal taxes, which have been referred to here tonight, I wonder how some of these people ever manage on the amount of money that is being provided to them.

With those few remarks, Mr. Chairman, I want to assure the committee of our concurrence with the supplementary estimates. I want also to assure the minister that we are going to be ready to go after him in much more precise terms in the coming estimates.

Mr. McClellan: I have to confess that I am a little confused about the figures in the supplementary estimates before us. Perhaps I would be better served if I were to ask the minister to give us a little more explanation about the details of the $14 million being voted.

My assumption is—and maybe the minister will correct me if I am wrong—that the bulk of the sum is not for increase in benefits granted, but rather for increase in the general welfare assistance caseload. That was certainly my interpretation of the figure which shows $11 million of the $14,600,000 being allocated for municipal allowances and benefits.

Could the minister indicate to us how far off his forecast of general welfare assistance caseload was during the estimates last fall? In the briefing book, the programs and resources summary, the minister anticipated that there would be a total of 140,000 beneficiaries on general welfare assistance for the 1978-1979 fiscal year. I would ask if he could give us an update, either in terms of beneficiaries or in terms of cases; that is the difference between the forecast and what the actual caseload appears to be, what the breakdown of the supplementary estimates is between moneys allocated for the increase on the benefit level and moneys allocated as a result of an increase in people on general welfare assistance?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I will attempt to respond to the honourable member's questions.

The general breakdown between the portion of the $14.6 million attributable to rate increase and what is attributable to deficits would be approximately this: About $7.2 million of that is attributable to rate increase for the portion of the fiscal year between the timing of the increase and the end of March; about $7.4 million is attributable to deficits.

I don't have in front of me, but expect shortly, the specific amount in terms of projections and actuals. I might point out that in the area of general welfare assistance in this past fiscal year, we have experienced a very significant increase in the number of individuals in receipt of the benefits.

The overall rate of increase last year, in terms of the number of cases—this is not the dollar figure but the number of cases—is about 11.6 per cent. That may well be attributable to a number of factors, but we think the most significant one has been the continuing relatively high rate of unemployment.

The probability that there are more people now and during the course of the past year whose entitlement to benefits under the unemployment insurance scheme at the federal level expired and who therefore resorted to general welfare assistance for their maintenance for a short period of time.

I would point out, just so no false impressions are created, that even though there has been that significant increase—and I think a significant amount of it is attributable to the termination of unemployment insurance benefits—our average length of stay is still relatively low. In fact it fluctuates depending upon the time of year because of availability of employment in the winter as opposed to the summer and so on. It still would be in the range of four to six weeks and perhaps a little higher at times during the winter. These persons are not long-term recipients, generally speaking, of general welfare assistance, that is the employable individuals.

The member asked how far we were out in terms of projections. The 1978-79 estimate for general welfare assistance was $166 million and the current requirement is $177, $178,000. Does that answer each of his questions?
